The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C. Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

Whitsuntide. What an immense difference it would make to individual and to collective Christian life if all who, on Sunday next, profess their belief in that Holy Spirit whose descent is commemorated on Whit-Sunday, really entered by experience into all that Pentecost meant for the Church! On every hand we hear complaints about the increased difficulties of Christian service, of the increasing religious indifference in the country, and of the cold-heartedness of so many professors of religion. But the difficulties of to-day are not really greater than those which confronted the infant Church, and they were surmounted by reason of the Wonderful Power from on high which came upon the disciples. A Church once more baptized with the Holy Ghost would, as aforetime, compel the attention of the world, while the members of that Church would find in the Divine Power among them the solution of most of the inner difficulties. Not less machinery, but more power, is the supreme need of the Church.

"The Key to the Missionary Problem." Dr. Andrew Murray's excellent brochure under this title (Nisbet. 1s. 6d.) has been sent gratuitously to many missionaries in the foreign field. But it is an appeal to the churches rather than to the missionaries. These, speaking generally, are working up to their power, and often beyond their power. They have suffered martyrdom in Uganda, China, New Guinea, and elsewhere; have died of fever on the Congo and the Zambesi, and of exhaustion in India. There they have assumed the charge of 25,000 famine orphans, and are face to face with another famine. Meanwhile, most of the societies are in debt, and some are driven to reduce the incomes of the missionaries because the churches as a whole take so little interest in the Great Commission to go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature (see page 12).

A Second Pompeii. The terrible news from the Caribbean Sea must have led many of the most indifferent to think of the mysterious forces which are ever near and around us, and of the tragic possibility of swift destruction overtaking populations while dwelling in apparent peace and security. By the eruption of Pelée Mountain, the prosperous town of St. Pierre, in the French island of Martinique, has been reduced to a mass of smoking ruins, and most of the population, estimated at from 20,000 to 30,000 souls, have been hurried to their final account. The neighbouring island of St. Vincent has also suffered from an eruption of the Soufrière, involving the loss of hundreds of lives. By such occurrences the mind is carried forward to the time when, not the earth only, but all things will be shaken, "that those things which cannot be shaken may remain." To the thousands of people who were cut off as described, Thursday, May 8, anticipated the consummation of all things, when "the earth and the things that are therein shall be burned up." May we learn the lesson of the transitoriness of the things that are seen. "Here we have no continuing city." The things that are must give place to the things that shall be hereafter. While solemnized by the suddenness of the catastrophe which blotted out St. Pierre, we all deeply sympathize with the thousands who escaped from the town, and are now thrown upon the compassion of Christian philanthropy.

Disasters Multiply. As we go to press, there comes news of a great oil fire in America, attended by serious loss of life; and particulars are to hand of the explosion of an airship, with the loss of the inventor and his engineer. In the one case the wealth of the earth is procured at great cost; in the other the investigation of the forces of nature is attended by the sacrifice of heroic pioneers.

The Dutch Queen. Favourable bulletins regarding the condition of the Queen of Holland have been received in this country with a sense of relief almost, if not quite, as deep as among her own subjects. The bond between Christian nations is not only illustrated, but strengthened by such times of waiting round the sick-beds of beloved rulers, and the finger of God is emphasized to multitudes whose minds are rarely occupied with spiritual things.

France and Freedom. The general elections in France having virtually left the balance of power as it was before, it may be said that the nation has unmistakably expressed its strong approval of the action of the Administration in dealing with the Religious Orders. The result, undoubtedly, makes for European peace, a condition of things by no means satisfactory to the Jesuits or to their political parasites. Of the methods followed by them and their colleagues there will probably soon be some singular revelations, for M. Waldeck-Rousseau has notified the intention of the Government to deal with some of those who, in interfering with the electors, "abused their ecclesiastical functions and the moral authority which those functions confer." France, happily, is beginning to recognize that there is a nobler freedom behind and above political liberty, and she will undoubtedly attain to it in God's own time and in his way.

The Fatal Cost of War. The tremendous expense of a modern war has been graphically proved in the new "White Paper" issued by the Treasury, which shows that the South African conflict has already cost this country over £222,000,000, which is greater than the total cost of the Crimean War, and, relatively to its length, much more than the Napoleonic contest at the beginning of last century. Apart from the thousands of lives lost, and the immeasurable sufferings caused, this appalling fact should prove a strong deterrent to civilized nations against rashly entering on future contests. That war is an anachronism, and that it must end in paralysing if not ruining the prosperity of the nations engaged in it, is growingly clear. The logic of events has proved a stronger argument than even M. Bloch's elaborate calculations in the same direction.

The Unrest in Russia. Day by day ominous reports are published in the papers concerning the ferment in Russia. It is quite clear that great numbers of the peasantry are in a state of rebellion, and they seem at the mercy of agitators. No one need be surprised at it; the wonder is that it has not come sooner. There are few countries which claim to be civilized where there is less of real liberty than in Russia; and among the peasantry in particular, the ignorance and practical serfdom is terrible. The two old elements of discord account largely for the present state of things, i.e., drink and priestcraft. All travellers tell sad stories of the degradation, through drink, of so many of the Russian peasantry. And, if possible, the Eastern Church encourages superstition of a more brutal type than even the Latin Church. Russia's grand need is liberty, of the best kind, and particularly liberty for the preaching of the Gospel. How can a country prosper when it sends men into exile for being faithful to the New Testament?

A Great Debate. The Education Bill passed its second reading by a large majority, but the real conflict will begin over the Committee stage. The second reading debate was conducted in an unusually lofty and temperate tone, and an air of seriousness pervaded most of the references to the religious aspects of the measure. Divorced from the immediate occasion, Lord Hugh Cecil's speech would have been a noble addition to the forces of reunion between the various religious bodies; its cogency was, however, very largely lost in the partizan purpose of the appeal. The Sacerdotal party cannot consistently appeal to their Protestant opponents to abstain from a conflict which that party have wantonly provoked. There was one passage in this speech that struck a note seldom heard in St. Stephen's. Speaking of those who accept everything in Christianity except its theology, the speaker went on to say—

> In the mansions of their hearts they have built a room, richly gemmed, hung round with all that is beautiful in art and literature. The sword of justice is there; the sceptre of righteousness too is there, and even the robe of loving unity and honour. Despite all these regalia, it is an empty room, for the throne is vacant.

Educating the Masses. It is doubtful if the average reader who patronises the free libraries cares much for controversial theological works, or for insidiously partisan histories, but the Catholic League of South London is about to make an effort to reach him throughout the entire country, by placing in the public libraries the works of a large number of "accepted (Roman) Catholic writers in all branches of literature," with the view of putting before the public "the teaching of the Church, in all respects, in a systematic manner." So long as the rates are not burdened in the matter, there cannot, perhaps, be any objection to this enterprise, but it is noteworthy how one-sided Rome is in regard to reading. Some time ago it was asserted that the greatest stumbling block in the way of the entrance of Roman Catholics to Trinity College, Dublin, was the fact that John Stuart Mill's little volume, "On Liberty," was included in the text books.

Hindering Sobriety. We have had much satisfaction at various times in drawing attention to the strong and healthy action of certain licensing magistrates in firmly dealing with the liquor trade. The unhappy thing is that the number of such earnest officials is so small. If the majority would only follow the grand example set by the minority, we should soon see a great change in the country. But too many men, set to administer the laws, are either compromised with the drink traffic, or they are too apathetic to take such action as the law permits them. Such deserve a castigation like that which Mr. L. M. Isitt has given to the Nottingham Licensing Justices. In a letter to a local newspaper, he rebukes the justices for leaving their work to two magistrates out of thirty, and for laying down the principle that a liquor seller may push his business in any fashion so long as he keeps within the bare letter of the law. The country needs justices who are alive to the dangers of the time, and who will do all in their power to protect the people from the clutches of men who live only for the purpose of money-getting at any cost. The recent decision in the High Court in the case of the Farnham magistrates reveals how much power magistrates possess to deal with moral evils.

A Frank Title. Men publish their "Confessions" for various reasons—good, bad, or indifferent, and an acute reader can generally pick out the real truth at the bottom of the narrative, no matter how well it may be disguised. A professional "bookmaker," who has recently published his autobiography, tries to cast a glamour over the life of the betting man, and to represent it in a very favourable light, but the title of his book, "A Wasted Life," possesses much significance. Whether adopted as a pleasantry or as a serious title, it is truthful enough. Perhaps the veil is most completely lifted when the author tells of his early days at church, and the later effect of religious associations upon him. Brought up under the late Charles Vince at Birmingham, and associated with Sunday-school and temperance work, he says that years afterwards, when he became a betting man, the strains of a familiar hymn tune, played upon church organ or street organ, would make him run away. And is not any life wasted when it reaches this condition?

The Nearness of the Saviour. In the striking sermon to Sunday-school teachers preached by Rev. J. H. Jowett a few days ago, the preacher drew attention to a point which deserved special notice on the part of teachers and parents. It was a kind protest against proclaiming to the little ones the remoteness of the Saviour's home in such lines as "There is a happy land, far, far away." Said Mr. Jowett:—

> I cannot see what we gain in our Sunday-schools by teaching children the far-off-ness of the Saviour's house. "There is a happy land, far, far away." How does that help the wooing? "Beyond the clouds and beyond the tomb—it is there, my child." Why beyond the clouds? In a child's mind the remoteness of the home tends to create a conception of the remoteness of the lover, and if the lover is away, the wooing will be very mechanical and cold.

It is a point worthy of being pondered. All the energies of the teacher need bending in the direction of proclaiming a near and present Saviour.

Poor Ministers' Libraries. It is now more than a quarter of a century since Mrs. Spurgeon's Book Fund was inaugurated. During these years poor ministers of all Evangelical denominations in country districts have reaped the benefit of this beneficent work, and it would be difficult to say how many hearts and homes have been cheered by the timely gifts of literature and clothing, which have flowed from this source. It is to be regretted that at the present time the work shows signs of being crippled through lack of adequate support. The funds are at a low ebb, and there is a note almost of despair in Mrs. Spurgeon's words: "My dear work, which the Lord has so greatly prospered for twenty-six years, seems now to be dying of want; but I try to keep up a brave heart, and hope for the turning of the tide. It may be that God will yet remember me for good, and send the help I so sorely need."

In the Midst of the Years. There are one or two faint indications in contemporary life that the craze which seeks young men for all posts of importance, and thrusts out the middle-aged as beyond the power of accomplishing anything, will pass away. The scornful attitude assumed towards those "in the midst of the years" is one of the many symptoms of the heartlessness which the rush after worldly success begets, and it is as wicked as it is foolish. A brilliant litterateur, writing on "Life at Fifty," shows how some of the world's greatest men accomplished their best work after fifty years of age. Abraham Lincoln's abolition of slavery, Boswell's "Life of Johnson," some of Handel and Beethoven's best work, Burke's greatest orations—all these took place in the autumn of their lives. It is well that attention should be again directed to these and hundreds of similar instances, as a corrective of the spirit which has ruled too long. It is particularly sad when churches, in their treatment of experienced servants of Christ, descend to the level of unscrupulous worldlings. Surely a teacher of Divine truth should be better at sixty than at twenty-six! The churches ought to reckon experience as a great asset.

Foolish Questionings. It was not without reason that the Apostle Paul exhorted Timothy, more than once, to shun foolish questionings which engender strife. If this exhortation, so necessary for every epoch, were better heeded, men would be saved from many unpleasantnesses, and from much darkness and misery. For a certain order of mind there is a great fascination in anything occult, and the mischief is that so many people allow themselves to be withdrawn from practical duties in their pursuit after hypothetical things. Too many men and women have not yet learned the simple lesson that they are not intended to know everything. The first man fell through the pursuit of illicit knowledge, and millions more have fallen in the same way. Saddest of all is it when Christian men split up into small sects over what is nothing more nor less than a foolish question. It is a triumph of folly when this climax is reached. The pure wisdom that comes from above directs men to that knowledge which is capable of being transformed into energy for the accomplishment of the best work in life. When men stray beyond this, they speedily become victims of all kinds of folly.

Past and Present Puritanism. In his inaugural address at Morpeth last week, the Moderator of the Presbyterian Church of England (Rev. A. H. Drysdale), dealing with the subject of the New Puritanism, drew an effective picture of the development following that "new breath of spring," the Evangelical Revival, and Wesley's movement. He urged that:—

> The Christian Church must realize its own higher ideal as a free, self-governing, international ecumenical fellowship, transcending racial and linguistic distinctions, with a large multiplicity of varying forms, while yet seeking to pervade and penetrate all with the Spirit of the Lord.

He foresaw, as most thoughtful men do, that the problems of the future would probably be more social than ecclesiastical, and he added:—

> These being chiefly moral in their roots, the New Puritanism should show to advantage here, without going beyond its own province or dabbling with questions not given it to solve.

Just so; but which social question does not the Gospel of Christ dispose of?

The Heritage of the Land. In a recent article in The Crisis, Miss Margaret Clark gives a very painful picture of the depopulation of the Highlands, the land having been taken for "sport," glens as well as moors having been thrown into the forests, and the tenants being looked upon as a burden, and a drawback to the value of the land. It is the same cry from the South Coast of England to the North of Scotland, though the causes of the migration of the labourers differ somewhat. Rev. Arnold Taylor has stated that, although the wages of agricultural labourers have gone up 2s. 6d. per week in the last twenty years, there are in one county acres upon acres of ground, which some years ago produced fine crops of oats and barley, "now mere boggy, undrained meadows, half-covered by furze and rushes." And there is a similar state of things in each agricultural county. Meanwhile, the labourers are flocking to the overcrowded towns. Yet the problem is one capable of easy solution if the State had eyes to see its own vital interests, and did not leave these simple questions to ferment and breed socialism and disloyalty.

The Duties of Wealth. Dean Farrar, writing in the Daily News on "If I were a Millionaire," lays down laws for the rightful use of wealth which are as applicable to those who have comparatively little as to those who have much and to spare. Every rich man should follow the old Jewish as well as the Christian law—to put aside at least a tenth of his income for charitable and religious purposes; he should give the leisure acquired through his wealth to the benefit of his fellowmen; he should endeavour to remedy the miseries of all crushing and innocent poverty which comes within the region of his immediate influence; he should liberally aid education; he should endeavour to diminish the temptations of youths by providing means of proper recreation; and he should carefully and prudently consider such applications for help in distress as seem really worthy of help. If all who have means beyond their own and their family's needs fulfilled this programme, many of the worst evils that afflict rich and poor would be mitigated, and some would be altogether removed.

Practical Papers.

SALVATION AND CHARACTER.—II.

THE thoughts embodied in last week's Practical Paper have a wider bearing than as concerning parents and their children; they lead to considerations that concern all who name the name of Christ. The high purpose of salvation touches us every one, both personally and relatively.

I. Personally. The paramount question for each of us is, "What think ye of Christ?" and upon our experimental answer, in faith and practice, our eternal future must depend. For what purpose did He come into the world? To "destroy the works of the devil" (1 John iii. 8), and to "save his people from their sins" (Matt. i. 21).

II. Relatively. We are to live not only to secure our ultimate salvation, but to win others for Christ; and we cannot lead souls nearer to Him than we are ourselves. To gain a bare entrance into the Kingdom of God, or even to win eternal reward for earthly service, is but a partial realization of the demands of true religion, to lack which, involves incalculable loss to our fellows and ourselves. We are saved to serve. "Ye are my witnesses," is the Master's word, and the worth of a witness lies in his inherent fidelity to truth, and his readiness to confess what he conceives that truth to be.

At Christmas time, we rejoice that "Unto us a Child is born; unto us a Son is given." Here we have the Incarnate Son, our Exemplar; and the Redeemer of the World, "who died for our sins, and was raised again for our justification." Therein lies the whole Gospel. What, therefore, God hath joined, let not man put asunder. This applies, not at Christmas time only, but the whole year through.

It is a favourite error, among preachers and novelists of a certain school, to attribute to Evangelical Christians (I use the term in its narrowest sense) the doctrine, that, "if we believe for salvation, it matters not how we live!" St. Paul described a similar "error" as a "slander" (Rom. iii. 8), and we like his word the best; it is more accurate. Certainly we have never heard such an obviously unscriptural doctrine seriously set forth.

At the same time, in our rooted suspicion of any teaching that may apparently savour of the Romish belief in "Salvation by works" (so forcibly contradicted by St. Paul—Eph. ii. 8-9), it is well to take heed that we do not seemingly underrate the importance of "showing our faith by our works" (James ii. 18); even as Paul also adds to his assertion referred to above, "We are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works . . . that we should walk in them."

It is here, perhaps, that an assumed difference arises between the Pastor and the Evangelist. The former is laudably anxious to foster in his congregation (to which he ministers all the year round) a desire for growth in the grace and knowledge of Christ; but he is apt, unconsciously perhaps, to lay too little stress upon the New Birth (John iii. 3, 7) as an initial necessity.

The evangelist, whose message is addressed to the unconverted, directs his thoughts, perhaps too exclusively, to that essential need, assuming that his co-labourer, the minister, will lead the converts on to righteousness of life. We do not know any well-accredited evangelist who would not gladly recognise the faithful sowing of a ministry of which he more directly reaps the harvest. Without his counterpart, neither sower nor reaper is complete.

An evangelist who has been largely used of God, as a messenger of Christ within the churches, frequently addresses his hearers thus: "Why do you want to be saved? Is it that you may have the forgiveness of your sins, and be sure of heaven? That is not the be-all and end-all of Christianity; it is only the beginning. After you have accepted Christ, you must live for Him." Here he bridges the supposed gulf between the pastor and the evangelist; and assuredly his words are only in accord with the teaching of Christ and his Apostles:—"Strive to enter in at the strait gate" (Luke xiii. 24); "So run that ye may obtain" (1 Cor. ix. 24); "He that endureth to the end shall be saved" (Matt. x. 22); "Work out your own salvation" (Phil. ii. 12). Each phrase is indicative of earnest effort, after the free gift of eternal life has been received.

Heaven is the crown of earth. To be sure of heaven is a glorious prospect, but a life on earth must first be faced; and unless our Christian faith ennobles us, and strengthens us against the world, the flesh, and the devil, it fulfils but a minimum of its Divine purpose. Our Lord himself has laid down our daily rule of life: "If ye love Me, keep my commandments" (John xiv. 15); "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you" (John xv. 14).

G.

The Great Need of To-Day.

By Rev. THEODORE L. CUYLER, D.D.

THE two agents that are to bring this sin-smitten world back to God are the Christian Church and the Holy Spirit. The Lord Jesus Christ founded the one, and made his gracious promise of the other when He said, "Your Heavenly Father will give the Holy Spirit to them that ask it."

The Church without the Spirit is as powerless for soul-saving results as a locomotive is to propel a train until a flame is kindled under its boiler. We read of no conversions by the Apostles until the gift of the Holy Spirit had been granted. When Peter received the power from on high, he brought three thousand souls to Jesus Christ by a single discourse!

That master-workman in his day, Charles C. Finney, acknowledged that his preaching was fruitless when he relied on himself. Then he had what he called a "breaking down before God;" he renounced all self reliance, besought a baptism of power from heaven, and when he became filled with the Spirit, the "weight of his spear was a weaver's beam," and his words were mighty.

When we ask for the Holy Spirit, we do not ask for a mere influence. We ask for the presence and power of a Divine Person. He is the Author of that wonderful Word whose penmen he inspired to write it. He is the Revealer of vital truth. By his power, human hearts are convicted of sin and brought to repentance. Regeneration is his work. Without the Holy Spirit we ministers and you church-members are but as sounding brass; with Him we have power to reach, to rouse, and to win souls to Jesus.

Is this a new truth? No; not any more than sunlight is a new discovery. But the failure to recognise this truth, to feel this truth, and to seek this indispensable gift of the Holy Spirit, is the real secret of so much sad failure in so many of our churches. In some cases the reliance is on a human voice; "send for Mr. A——, or the eloquent Dr. B——." In other cases the Holy Spirit has been "grieved" away by worldly living, or by contentions, or by indifference. "Quench not the Spirit" was not addressed to the heathen in Thessalonica, but to the church members there. A fire is quenched by dashing on cold water, or by neglecting to supply fuel. Sins committed, or duties neglected, by God's people, quench the Holy Spirit.

The vital, indispensable need to-day, in hundreds of churches in the various denominations, is just the need of that almighty Holy Spirit, that Divine Person, who comes when earnestly and rightly sought for. Sometimes a few persons in a church put themselves in a right attitude before God; they confess sin, there is a clearing out of selfishness and worldliness and unbelief to make room for a filling by the Holy Spirit.

A certain minister of my acquaintance, and three or four of his church officers, came before God in this attitude for several successive evenings. They shut themselves up with God, and besought the gift of the Holy Spirit to come down and heal the sin-sick souls in the congregation, and to raise the dead to life. The pastor preached "as the Spirit gave him utterance" with a directness and intense fervour that melted his hearers down. His church officers began personal efforts with the unconverted. Within a month, that church was kindled as by a flame from heaven; the conversions were deep, solid, and durable; the converts came out, in most cases, like gold from a smelting furnace.

What was done in that church may be done elsewhere. That mighty and most unspeakably precious gift of the Holy Spirit is within reach of all who so long for it as to put themselves in the right attitude to receive it. Why should we not have it?

"Be Filled with the Spirit."

(Eph. v. 18.)

One passion for the Christian! one
Supreme, o'ermastering passion;
One power to dominate alone
In unrestricted fashion!

Yea! for the Christian, no excess,
No strong intoxication,
Save as He fills with blessedness—
The seal of our salvation.

"Filled with the Spirit," we shall be
By meeting the condition;
By constant trust, obedience free,
With never intermission.

"Filled with the Spirit!" therefore full
Of Christ, whom He revealeth;
Of love and zeal insatiable,
Of wine—God's wine—that healeth!

One passion for the Christian! one
Supreme and single passion—
The love of Christ to rule alone
In uncontested fashion.

On Lead-Paint Poisoning. — The Lancet points out that France is far ahead of this country in certain humanitarian movements, setting us a good example, for instance, in dealing with lead poisoning. The French Government has taken a practical step in appointing a Commission of Industrial Hygiene, whose mandate has special relation with the danger of using lead in paints. It was then found that many of the local authorities in France had already forbidden the use of lead paint. The various ministers thereupon issued decrees that no lead paint should be used in connection with their various departments. This action has greatly decreased lead poisoning in France. It would be a merciful thing if this precedent were followed by our authorities. Already our Government departments demand that their ware should be made with leadless glaze; they might now turn their attention to paint, with great advantage to the many who suffer from the distressing malady brought on by using lead.

Preachers and teachers should read Dreams and Realities. Fourteen Practical Papers on matters of daily life. Canon Barker writes:—"I think them excellent; very likely to be of great service." (Cloth, 1s. Morgan & Scott.)

A Plea for More.—I.

"MORE! more!" is India's cry. More Christian workers, more funds, more sympathy at home, more of the co-operation of home churches in the great endeavour to evangelize India. These are the expressions that most frequently strike our ears as we go from mission to mission, or talk with those who, through a prolonged sojourn, have become familiarized with the conditions of this vast country.

India, with its teeming millions, is governed, so to speak, by a handful of Europeans, who exercise an ascendancy over the development of its population far beyond the visual reach of ordinary observation. The upper classes are fast assimilating Western civilization with all its advantages and disadvantages. In education, science has made a clean sweep of all the anomalies of Brahman wisdom, more especially of their fantastic notions of geography. His quick adaptation to imported commodities and inventions has taken the western world almost by surprise.

We never see a train that is not crowded with natives. Here the twice-born Brahman complacently submits to rub his shoulders against a Sudra or even a Pariah. He could avoid this pollution, but this would mean an expense to incur which he is neither willing nor able. Thus the observance of the caste system is persistently pushed back into its religious domain, where it still flourishes as the most formidable opponent to Christianity.

To the ignorant, who form the bulk of the Hindu community, Christianity means "eating beef" and "breaking caste." Considering how so-called Christians behave sometimes towards the natives, this is hardly to be wondered at. We saw an Englishman kick a coolie for no reason except that he came inside the door of our room. He would not have dared to treat in this manner the poorest of his own countrymen; but to abuse a dusky Indian seemed to afford him a ferocious pleasure. In a gaol the other day we saw two men of our race condemned to five and to three years' imprisonment for having beaten a coolie to death. They did not intend to kill him. If they had, the punishment inflicted upon them would have been altogether out of proportion to their crime. In order to exact a confession from the coolie, whom they suspected of theft, they tied him to a tree, flogged him at intervals, until suddenly the man collapsed and died. In the eyes of the natives deeds like this are perpetrated by Christians. They cannot distinguish between nominal and real. To them every European, whether English, or American, or German, is a Christian—a term in their minds synonymous with foreign and impure, and associated with haughtiness and pride, if not cruelty. Christianity has thus to bear the reproach of every European life that brings dishonour upon it.

There is, of course, the educated class of Indians, and those who come under the immediate influence of the lived-out Gospel, who know better; but their number is small as compared with the whole. At the last District Missionary Conference in Madras, it was stated that the proportion of the population reached by the Gospel was ten per cent. of the better classes, on educational lines, and ten per cent. of the out-castes by direct mission work, bazaar-preaching, visitation, &c. The great middle-class, the hard-working Sudras, who are for the most part inhabitants of villages, have, roughly speaking, not yet been touched.

The danger to which a passing traveller, with a set purpose before him, is exposed, is to gather one-sided impressions. The man who hunted tigers in India never came across a convert. We, in turn, by moving so much among Jesus' disciples, and seeing how the Lord has blessed the loaves in their hands, may easily see everything more or less couleur de rose, and forget the dark side of the picture. Baking under the Indian sun, it is difficult to imagine frozen pipes at home. Yet the darkness, and the cold, and the frozen hearts are as real in India, speaking metaphorically, as is the light of the Gospel shining as a candle in the darkness. When is the Sun of Righteousness to rise with healing in his beams?

Our own countrymen in India do much to help or to hinder the progress of evangelization. If all the professed children of God, who are scattered abroad, were to preach the Gospel by word or deed, what a mighty result it would have! Natives soon distinguish between the sham and the real, and well may the missionary's heart have been thrilled with joy when addressed by a Hindu: "Yes, you are a Jesus-Christian."

It must, however, be borne in mind that there is a counter-influence exercised by the torrents of infidel literature from the West with which the Eastern soil is saturated and flooded. Every Western power of darkness has representatives in this country—and the eager reader of English books reads and studies, and takes in the error sometimes more readily than the truth.

The earnest student of Christianity who keeps aloof from atheistic assertions, whose heart by a touch of the Holy Ghost has begun to yearn for the "joy unspeakable," is beset by another formidable danger. A missionary has said that twenty years ago the heathens used to be ashamed of their heathendom, but that now with erect heads they proclaim their religion to be just as good as ours. This was ascribed to the deteriorating effect of the Higher Criticism. Why should the Hindus believe where the Christians doubt themselves? Victory can not be achieved without confidence in the leader.

History records that when, in 1751, Clive led an expedition against Arcot, he only had with him 200 English and 100 Sepoys, while the garrison of Arcot amounted to 1,100 men. On approaching the fort, the assailants had to march through a tremendous storm of thunder, lightning, and rain. The enemies' spies reported the sang froid with which the English advanced under these circumstances, and that made such an impression upon the garrison that they abandoned their position. If the soldiers of Jesus Christ were to show, under all circumstances, the same confidence in their spiritual weapons, and especially in their Captain, who is the world's Conqueror, the enemies' hearts would fail at the very approach of them.

Scrip and Purse in Spain.—A reliable idea of the wealth of the Roman Church in Spain, and of its distribution, can be gathered from a very interesting paper on "Church and State in Spain," which appears in a recent issue of The Standard. The writer says:—"The State Church, under the Concordat and other laws, appears in the Annual Budget as entitled to receive £1,637,260, out of which £1,202,542 are assigned for 'cult, clergy, and cloistered nuns.' These credits, after all, represent only a comparatively small share of the real revenues of the Church. . . . This leads to a state of things in which many rectors of parishes in great towns, and particularly in Madrid, enjoy incomes of £1,000 to £3,000 a year, whilst their curates and the parish priests of rural districts would have literally to starve on miserable stipends of £24 to £40 per year, but for the charity and gifts of their flocks."

How Revivals Come.

By Rev. J. W. WEDDELL, D.D.

WHAT is a normal church? A company of worshipping believers, God's Word before them, God's Spirit upon them, Christ in their midst, constantly seeking and winning souls and constantly growing in holiness, and having grace and peace multiplied to them. What a glorious estate and privilege is this!

Take the local church, with its ordinary appointments and the ordinary facilities; plant it in the midst of a community of sentient spirits; keep it in touch with God and man; appreciate it, love it, work it, give yourself to it, pastor and people, and nothing can resist the urgency of its appeal.

Here is the engine and vehicle of revivals, a church that wholly gives itself to God and God's labour of love for souls. Take hold of it; use it; there are myriads of blessings in it, and it waits to deliver them to hand and heart.

Let no pastor or people be discouraged. The way is plain and open. Preaching and visiting, preaching and visiting, these are the appointed agencies for revival. We shall never outgrow them, we shall never get beyond them, and they are as free and ready to the use for one as for the other. This for the pastor and for the people; praying and working, praying and working. These are ways available, and practicable to us all, the paths of power for the local church.

Dr. C. L. Goodell, the model pastor, ere he was called away from his marvellously successful work in the East and West, left us this word of sage advice:—

"There are four sources from which to draw: the family, the Sunday-school, church-goers unsaved, and the great outside world. To keep four streams flowing into the church from these is back of everything. In order to do this ministers must be men of God, masters of Gospel methods, filled with the Spirit, and untiring fishers of men.

"To build a church is to take hold in God's name and build it. Every victory for Christ costs prayer and toil and blood. . . . The church will not grow in the chill air of this world, without somebody to love it and yearn over it with watchful care, as the mother over the cradle. The pastor must give days and nights to it, counting all things as gain which he can possibly do for it, whatever the loss to him. Men do this in business, and make no moan over their sacrifices. Should Christ's disciples do less? The strength put into business in this age, if consecrated to saving men, would rapidly build powerful churches all over this land."

When such a mind takes hold of pastor and people, revival follows, and all the departments of the church glow with soul-saving light. Indeed, as every faithful under-shepherd knows, the springing up of such a brooding tenderness in the heart is the sure precursor and earnest of refreshing.

"Jehovah-Shalom."

"The Lord send peace" (Judges vi. 24).

"Jehovah-shalom" is our prayer to-day,
Before thy throne, O God, we humbly bow;
Thy chastening hand is heavy on us laid,
Wilt Thou not rise and save thy people now?

"Jehovah-shalom." We would own thy power,
Thy arm is strong as in the days of old;
Purge Thou our nation in the cleansing fire,
Bring forth thy people as the beaten gold.

"Jehovah-shalom." Look in mercy down
Upon our land; our intercessions rise;
Our hopes are fixed alone, O God, on Thee,
Thou wilt not now a contrite heart despise.

"Jehovah-shalom." Many hearts are sad,
For Death has shadowed many a hearth and home;
Let not our faith in Thee grow weak and dim,
The time to favour Zion, Lord, has come.

"Jehovah-shalom." Still thy people plead,
Make Thou the strife 'twixt man and man to cease;
The olive-branch to wave from shore to shore,
Give "in our time" thy perfect gift of peace!

Samuel and Saul.

"An Evil Spirit from the Lord."

(1 Sam. xvi. 13-14.)

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

ALL great painters and poets whose works are of the first order, have availed themselves of the force of contrast—that there should be a dark background to set forth some beautiful and radiant object. The Bible excels in its use of this great law. This feature is stamped on this division of the Book. In contrast to the dark background of Eli's sons you have Samuel, and against Saul's rejection you have David's anointing. We will notice the dawn of fair promise; the darkened afternoon; and, finally, the lurid gleams of a false zeal.

I.—THE DAWN OF A FAIR PROMISE.

"Samuel cried unto the Lord" for Saul, if haply he might arrest the terrible and imminent consequences of his sin. But he learnt that prayer would not avail. It seemed as though Saul had already made the fatal choice, and had committed the sin which is unto death, and concerning which we have no encouragement to pray. The summons of the hour was, therefore, not to prayer, but action. The Spirit of God bade Samuel go to Bethlehem, and among the sons of Jesse discover and anoint the new king. Samuel was stunned by the request, and suggested that if Saul heard a whisper of such a proceeding, he would at once take measures to avenge himself, by inflicting the death penalty. So the Spirit of God bade him take his long horn of oil in his hand, leading a heifer with the other; and so make his way across the broken hill-country of Judea, until he came to Bethlehem.

When he entered the little town, the elders were filled with consternation; it was so unusual to see the great prophet visiting them without previous announcement. They asked if he had come peaceably. "Peaceably!" was the laconic reply. A sacrificial feast was at once prepared, the victim offered; but as some time must elapse between the offering of the sacrifice and the preparation of the food, Samuel adjourned to spend the interim in the house of the village chieftain, Jesse the Bethlehemite, a mighty man of valour and of wealth; and thus, in the privacy of the home, in a manner unlikely to attract the notice of the Court, David's career as king began.

One after another the stalwart sons of Jesse passed before the prophet, and, as he looked upon them in their towering stature and manly frame, he supposed that any one of them might be God's designated monarch. But his Almighty Counsellor told him that outward appearance was not this time to weigh in the scales of choice; but that the royal qualities of the heart were alone to determine his selection. And so son after son passed; all had come but one, and he was with the sheep. Samuel, therefore, would not proceed with the holy exercises until the boy was summoned.

As his brethren stood around, and the old man anointed him, it seemed as though God Almighty accompanied the outward sign and seal, by the inward grace, for we are told that the Spirit of God came upon that young life from that day forward, bathing it, permeating and filling it, so that he went in the power of the Holy Spirit to his great life-work.

You may have nothing in the outward semblance, nothing in your surroundings or circumstances to indicate the true royalty within; but if you bare your heart to God, you shall stand revealed as his son, as a priest and king unto Himself. Oh, that at this moment the Holy Ghost might descend upon you! Would that you might seek and receive an unction from the Holy One Himself! Oh, that the Holy Spirit of God, who is the true anointing oil of the soul, might be shed upon you, so that you might go forth, saying, "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, and He hath anointed me."

II.—AN OVERCAST AFTERNOON.

We have morning with David, afternoon with Saul. Here youth; there manhood which has passed into prime. Here the promise; and there the overcast meridian of a wrecked life.

You will notice that, whereas it is said that the Spirit of God descended upon David, we are told that "The Spirit of the Lord had departed from Saul." That does not necessarily mean that all the religious life of Saul had become extinct, but that the special power with which he had been prepared for his kingly work was withdrawn from him. It is abundantly sure that the work which a man does in this world is not wrought only by the force of his genius, the brilliance of his intellect, or by those natural gifts with which God may have endowed him, but by a something beyond and behind all these—a spiritual endowment which is communicated by the Spirit of God for special office, which is retained so long as the character is maintained; but when the character begins to deteriorate and decline, when there is a divorce between religion and morality, when a soul turns definitely from the will and way of God to the paths of disobedience—then that mystic power, which our forefathers called unction, and which the Bible calls the Spirit of God, seems to be dissipated, and to pass away as the aroma when scent has been long exposed to common air. So Saul lost the special endowment of power, which had enabled him to subdue his enemies, and to order his kingdom.

Here, we have the mysterious power of opening our nature to the Spirit of God, who communicates all the virtue, the energy, and the life of God, infilling spirit, soul, and body. And we have also of yielding ourselves to the forces of evil.

When we are first born into the world, the inner shrine is not, as yet, occupied; but as years go on, it is for each to choose by which spirit he will be inhabited. Some, by the grace of God, are led to open their natures to receive the most blessed gift that God can bestow, since it is Himself; whilst others resemble Judas, of whom it is affirmed "Satan entered into him"; or Saul, of whom it is said: "Then the Spirit of God departed from him, and an evil spirit troubled him." In many cases men appear to be tenanted, occupied, and infilled by the spirit of evil; and possibly even some of the worst forms of drunkenness, of lustful passion, and of jealous temper, may be attributed to possession by some demon spirit.

Others—great teachers, whose words must have due weight—say that the same Spirit may become to one man the Spirit of good, and to another the spirit of evil; that the same Spirit from God fell upon David and upon Saul, and that the nature of the soul upon which the Spirit fell determined the issue—just as the same light, the same dew, and the same rain, falling upon a stretch of country, breed here nothing but thistles and thorns, weeds and poisonous herbs, whilst yonder they will produce the sweet nurslings of the spring, corn which is good for food, and fruits which are luscious to the taste. So it may be affirmed that the same blessed Holy Spirit coming to a good man will make him better, or coming to a bad man may be perverted by the depraved soul, into an intenser malignity of sin.

Is there not this awful fear for every one of us, that we who have stood in the light of God may descend into the darkness, that we who have known the Spirit in his fulness may open our heart to the spirit of evil; and that the very blessings which have made us what we are, if we frustrate the purposes of God, and refuse them, may become our detriment and bane?

III.—THE LURID GLEAMS OF AN OVERCAST SKY.

In 2 Sam. xxi. 2 you have this:—"The king"—that is David—"called the Gibeonites—(now the Gibeonites were not of the children of Israel, but of the remnant of the Amorites; and the children of Israel had sworn unto them: and Saul sought to slay them in his zeal to the children of Israel and Judah)." Saul was smarting under Samuel's words, writhing under the sentence of deposition, and his soul was stirred to neutralize, if possible, Samuel's sentence, and still keep the favour of God. Allowing that he had failed in what God told him to do, why should he not succeed in something that God had not told him to do? Why should he not resuscitate some old command, and give it unexpected obedience?

Now there were two such commandments which seem to have occurred to him. The one enacted that when the children of Israel entered the Land of Promise, they should destroy all the people of the land; but the Gibeonites had been excepted because they made a covenant with Joshua, and Joshua sware to them; and therefore the Gibeonites had lived amongst the children of Israel for many centuries, and had become almost an integral part of the nation. But in his

FALSE ZEAL FOR GOD

Saul seems to have laid ruthless hands upon these peaceable people; and, in spite of the old covenant which bound Israel to respect their liberty and life, he exterminated them—an act that brought righteous retribution in after days on his house, for you remember how Rizpah's sons, and his own five grandsons, were hanged upon a tree, and left there until the rain rotted them. Secondly, there was on the statute-book a very drastic law against necromancers and witches, and it was commanded that these should be exterminated from the land. Therefore Saul turned his hand against them. Though in his heart he believed in them—for at the end of his life, when a man always casts aside his pretences and appears as he is, Saul sought out one of these very women and availed himself of her help—yet, in order to show his zeal for God, and to extort the reversal of his sentence, he began to exterminate them.

But as his edicts went forth, there was rottenness in his heart. His royal state was greatly increased; he wore from this time a gorgeous turban, like other kings, which was brought from the field of Gilboa to David. There was a great increase of luxury in his Court, for he arrayed the daughters of Israel in scarlet and gold (2 Sam. i. 24). A subtle admixture of Baal worship with the recognition of Jehovah appears from his naming his sons, partly from the name of Jehovah and partly by the name of Baal. He took to himself concubines in imitation of his neighbours. Thus, while on the one hand there was this outburst of lurid zeal for God, his own heart was becoming more and more enervated and evil.

Saul's is not an isolated case. Take, for instance, two examples from the New Testament, which are almost parallel. The one in which the Apostle says, of Israel, that "they have a zeal for God, but not according to knowledge. For being ignorant of God's righteousness, and seeking to establish their own, they did not subject themselves to the righteousness of God." And the other, the case of that other Benjamite, Saul's namesake, who tells us that, while he was kicking against the pricks, he had a zeal for God in the persecution of the Church (Rom. x. 2; Acts xxii. 3, 4).

Do not we know this in our own experience? When we have fallen under the condemnation of conscience, then we have plunged into some compensating work to neutralize the result of failure. It is zeal, but not for God; it is zeal for the external form; it is not the zeal of a passionate love for the Son of God, and for the souls that He has made. The Bible is not only the Book of God; it is also the Book of man, the timeless Book, the mirror of the soul, because man is always seeing himself in the experience of those that have preceded him.

Let us turn from Saul for a moment to that dear face that bends over us to-day; to that heart that yearns over us; to the Christ of God that loves us. We, too, have disobeyed, have come short, have failed to fulfil his commands, but there is forgiveness in those flowing wounds; there is pardon in that loving heart. Ask Him to blot out the past. And may the Holy Ghost kindle upon our heart-altars a fire of zeal which shall never be put out, which shall always burn for his glory, purifying our nature, making us living sacrifices unto Him.

Other Lands.

France and Switzerland.

DURING a recent journey in France and Switzerland, I heard much, in the former country, of the movement towards Protestantism. It is certainly a remarkable one. The wide distribution of the Holy Scriptures, by Bible Society colporteurs for many years past, at the Exhibition of 1900, and in other ways, has doubtless helped to prepare the soil, and much prayer has gone up for the evangelisation of the French people. In various regions of Western, Southern, and Central France, amongst the peasantry, the very class that has supplied the Church of Rome with its priests and missionaries, men and women are crowding to listen to the Gospel. There are not yet many conversions, in the deep sense of the word. Catholicism plants too many weeds for the new life to spring up quickly. Yet there are already some precious first fruits, giving promise for an abundant harvest.

Would that the Protestant churches of France were better prepared for the great work that lies around them. There are, indeed, some hopeful features; first and foremost, the character of the young men who are going out as pastors and evangelists. It has been my privilege to visit the Protestant theological faculty at Montauban, where the majority of the pastors are trained, four times within the last four-and-a-half years, and never with greater satisfaction that on the last occasion. Some whom I met there in these earlier visits are now labouring diligently and with much blessing in France; others in Madagascar, the French Congo, and Basutoland. Yet too many of the Protestant congregations, especially in the larger towns, have little or no sympathy with evangelistic effort amongst the masses of their fellow countrymen, to whom their worldliness makes them a positive stumbling-block.

FRENCH SWITZERLAND.

The contrast is very striking between Catholic France and the Swiss cantons of Geneva, Vaud, and Neuchâtel. Though the language is the same, it takes on a different set of associations in the land which Farel evangelized and in the city of Calvin. It was laid upon my heart to stir up the Swiss Christians, who owe so great a debt to these two great French Reformers, and who are most of them descended from Huguenot refugees, to do more for the great country lying close to them, whose language is their own. They already subscribe generously to French evangelization, and the Geneva Evangelization Society, with which the venerated M. Dardier has so long been associated as superintendent of colportage, is doing a noble work in France. But there are not many Swiss giving personal service. It is undoubtedly difficult for Swiss to become pastors in France, as they do in the Belgian Missionary Church; but there are many openings for evangelists, especially amongst the working populations of the French cities, already profoundly hostile to the Church of Rome. In the three great cities of Lyons, Bordeaux, and Toulouse, where formerly the M'All Mission had encouraging work, which want of funds has obliged it to relinquish, there is now no direct popular evangelistic work carried on, except a mission station in Bordeaux.

In Switzerland itself there is yet much to be done, notwithstanding the many-sided activity of the Swiss Christians. I found Geneva stirred by the visit of Sebastien Faure, the French infidel lecturer, who had been winning the frenzied applause of thousands of hearers by his audacious negations, and I heard of similar meetings elsewhere. Christians recognised in these manifestations of atheism, not only amongst the cosmopolitan populace of Geneva, but among their own people, a call to more earnest aggressive effort, as well as to greater consistency of life. I trust that in this way good may be brought out of evil.

The canton of Valais is French speaking, but Catholic; it has long been almost impenetrable to evangelistic effort. Recently, however, a revolt against some of the scandals to which priestism always gives rise has opened to the Gospel some villages of the Valois. Thus, in one Continental country after another, the iron yoke of Rome is being broken.

Tunbridge Wells. JOSEPH G. ALEXANDER.

Progress in Ecuador.

THE Master has again given me the privilege of looking into the faces of the poor people of Ecuador, and having a part for a few months in the work of the glorious Gospel in this long-closed land. Some changes have taken place here since the days of the first successful Liberal revolution in 1896, when I entered the country for the first time, and when there was elected Ecuador's first Liberal president, a man whose life had been sought for by the conservative or priestly government for thirty years. And while the towers of the Romish church buildings still seem to keep their unholy watch at the port of Guayaquil, I land this time to see our fellow-labourers in Christ publicly preaching the Gospel without let or hindrance, and in the capital city of Quito, though thronged with priests, there is yet freedom for public service.

Our Society, the Gospel Missionary Union, of Kansas City, U.S.A,, had missionaries on the field here before the revolution was ended, and last December we held our Conference at Ambato. In addition to the general work for the Spanish-speaking people of the coast and the mountain country, we decided, with, we trust, humble dependence upon the living God, to undertake a work for the poor despised Quichua Indians of the interior, who number from 300,000 to 500,000. Already God has graciously helped, so that two of our sisters are settled in their small Indian house on the mountain, fifteen miles south of this city. They have commenced the study of the language in the very midst of a great number of these neglected people. The priest has promptly preached against them, but still the people generally receive them with great kindness. We thus aim to minister to a down-trodden race of, say, three millions of souls.

ROMISH MONOPOLY AT AN END.

I notice that it has been reported that the Jesuits had again got into power in this land, but I have been quite fully informed regarding the affairs of the country for some years, and while the priests have had in the past, and still exercise, great power over many of the people, yet the Government has continued to hold a strong hand in the interests of liberty, and the public officers, the soldiers, and the police, are generally most cordial to us. One of the colonels at Quito refused to allow us to visit the soldiers of his command at their barracks; but on our reporting the matter to the Minister of War and Marine, we were courteously supplied with a card worded as follows:—"—— sends his regards to Colonel ——, and informs him that the President of the Republic has ordered that the evangelists shall be permitted to enter any of the barracks in which they may wish to exercise their mission; for which reason they must be allowed to go into the Guard of Honour."

We also called upon the President, and speaking of work which we were about to undertake among the Jevaro Indians, he very willingly gave us a letter to the Governor of the Province, requesting that we be accorded "all needed guarantees and facilities, with a benevolent reception which shall attest the liberty in Ecuador for all religions, and that the Catholic monopoly has come to an end."

We may well recollect with thanksgiving to God that these strong words are from the chief executive of the land that until so recently was securely locked and guarded by the priests of Rome. And while we rejoice in every open door set before us by whosesoever hand it may be unlocked, we must cease not to remember that above presidents and governors our God sits upon the only throne.

Riobamba, Ecuador. GEORGE S. FISHER.

Fire in an Indian Village.

IN India, the houses, which are thatched, and built of wood, bamboo-matting, and mud, are constantly in danger of fire, both from the carelessness of neighbours, and also from the fact that they are provided with neither chimney nor grate.

On Easter Sunday morning, just as we had come out from prayers with our orphan boys, someone pointed out that Nabapur, our Deshmuk's village, was burning; while the flames, shooting up in that direction, made us fear that it must be so. "Deshmuk" is the title given to some of the old landlords, and as ours is the most wealthy man in the district, he owns the largest house, keeps an elephant, and a great number of servants. He has been always kindly disposed to the missionaries, sending us presents of fruit and vegetables.

I was soon in the saddle, and galloping across the fields, now everywhere uninteresting stretches of dark dry earth. On entering the village it was a sad sight to see a family—their house already a ruin—moving off to some shelter from the fierce heat of the sun and the burning houses. Fire-engines being unknown in country districts, the only hope of quenching the flames, or of preventing them from seizing upon neighbouring buildings, is to throw water upon them with a supras—a piece of bamboo matting used by the women in cleaning and sifting grain.

It is piteous, on such occasions, to see old and young giving way to ungovernable grief and excitement, as they stand shouting, and crying, and wringing their hands; and, as no one is specially in command of the operations, all shout their directions to the general public, and, for the most part, he who shouts loudest manages to get his ideas carried out.

The Deshmuk, who had been an invalid for some time with gout, was brought out to his garden with all his belongings. The heat of the sun and the flames overpowered me, so that I could render no assistance. I knew that my wife and Mr. Brunn would be lifting up their hearts for these poor people and for me; and to my surprise and joy, in spite of all our fears, the flames never caught the Deshmuk's house!

I find that, in spite of the Deshmuk's kindness in offering to supply the timber necessary to build houses for the homeless people, some Rs.120 (£8) will be required to buy matting and grass for thatching and for labour. If this sum should reach India before the end of May, it will enable the people to purchase material, and put up their simple houses before the rains of July and August. ERNEST C. LEWIS.

Evangelical Society of Geneva.

THIS Society, founded in 1831, aims at the evangelization of France by means of Gospel preaching, the diffusion of God's Word, and by the work of its theological college, the founders of which included the world-renowned Merle-d'Aubigné and Gaussen. The Society has in its service this year ten pastors and evangelists (one of whom is in Egypt), forty paid colporteurs and thirty voluntary; and fifty students (fifteen of whom are French) are preparing at the theological college for the ministry. Besides this, the Society has temporary preaching stations in many parts of Switzerland.

Rev. Theophile Vernier, as delegate from the Society, is at present on a visit to England, seeking to interest friends in the work. He is able to report, in encouraging terms, upon the work, and the pamphlet of "Extracts from Report," which he circulates, is replete with interesting matter. M. Vernier may be addressed to the care of Pastor Du Pontet-de La Harpe, French Parsonage, 16, Kildare Gardens, Bayswater, W.

"Gambling and its Sequel."—Mr. Charles Cook's striking paper with this title has been published in booklet form for circulation at race-meetings. (3s. per 100. Morgan & Scott.) Friends undertaking work among the more reckless classes will find this booklet very useful. There is nothing else of the kind, so far as we know.

To Help the Poor.

The bitter cry of the abjectly Poor, the Homeless and Friendless, the Outcast, the Criminal, the little Children of the Slums, is in our ears and at our doors night and day. The numerous Homes of the Darkest England Scheme — the Salvation Army's Social Work—receive and assist over 6,000 such people daily, and by God's blessing hundreds are permanently reclaimed. We are now in pressing financial need, and are dependent upon the gifts of God's people. Can you send us any help, please? Inspection of the homes invited. Clothes are needed. Please address cheques — crossed Bank of England, Law Courts Branch, and made payable to William Booth—to Mrs. BRAMWELL BOOTH, 101, Queen Victoria Street, London, E.C.

HOLIDAY HOME FOR POOR AND SICK CHILDREN.

This Home, situated in the most charming part of Epping Forest, has for several years past been of incalculable benefit to many hundreds of poor little waifs and strays, many of them half famished and pent up in the narrow and stifling courts and alleys the whole year. To continue this much needed work during this season, an earnest appeal is hereby made for help to the Christian public. Last year over 500 were taken for one or two weeks, and over 5,000 for a day. Donations in any form will be gratefully received, and can be sent to the Treasurer, at the Bank, 54, Lombard Street, E.C., to the Office of THE CHRISTIAN, or to the Secretary, The Hall, London Street, Bethnal Green, E.

The May Meetings.

For British Bluejackets.

THE lower Exeter Hall was densely crowded on the occasion of the annual meeting in support of the good work, afloat and ashore, which Miss Agnes Weston, "The Sailors' Friend," so devotedly carries on for the benefit of British bluejackets. The platform, as usual, was chiefly occupied by a strong contingent of sailors and marines, who contributed much by word and song to the enjoyment of the afternoon's proceedings.

Miss Weston's yearly accounts of her stewardship are invariably marked by thanksgiving and cheery hopefulness, salted with wise sayings, and instinct with human interest. This year she was again enabled to give a highly encouraging report. At the outset she described her latest proposal, the erection of a new block of buildings in connection with the Royal Sailors' Rest at Devonport, in memory of Queen Victoria, who took such practical interest in Miss Weston's labours. The enterprise, which is to cost about £20,000, has the earnest support of King Edward and Queen Alexandra. All the departments of work make steady progress, the men co-operating with unflagging zeal. "Some of us are getting older, but this co-operation of enthusiastic hearts brings continual youthfulness of spirit." Duties of correspondence keep Miss Weston and five secretaries busily employed in answering letters from all parts of the world. Printed "Monthly Letters" have circulated to the number of 667,000.

THE SERGEANT AND THE TRACT.

One of these pithy and instructive tracts was picked up in a street at Malta by a sergeant in the Army. As a result of reading and pondering over its teaching, he first of all quitted betting and gambling; then took to studying the Word of God, and ultimately sought the Lord Jesus Christ as his Saviour. The magazine, Ashore and Afloat, retains its wide popularity among all classes of the community. Its circulation last year was close on 600,000 copies, and a recent advance is the issue of a military edition, the outcome of a wish expressed by the naval brigade and their friends in the military forces in South Africa. A printed "promise," issued with one of the numbers, undertaking to abstain from gambling, has been extensively signed.

PHYSICAL, MORAL, AND SPIRITUAL.

The Royal Sailors' Rests, delightful for cleanliness and comfort, deservedly retain the high favour of the men. No less than £21,626 was taken over the counters at Portsmouth, Devonport, and Keyham, for food, sleeping accommodation, baths, &c. A naval chaplain, speaking the other day, said that "these Sailors' Rests have convinced all thinking people that teetotal houses are more frequented by British bluejackets and marines than those that have drink in them." Miss Weston pointed out that it is not enough, by any means, merely to care for the physical nature. Simply and clearly, moral and spiritual teaching is given. Every ship in the navy has its representative of the temperance branch; the number of pledges taken at the Rests was 9,048, while 10,600 pledge cards were despatched to various ships, in addition to large quantities of temperance literature. Great numbers of copies of the New Testament have been distributed, while the helpful little book, "A Saviour for You," has also been widely disseminated. By means of Bible-classes, and through the Royal Naval Christian Union and other guilds and societies organized in connection with the work, religious effort is regularly maintained in the fleet, while ashore "there is always something good going on."

Miss Weston found encouragement in the fact that during her recent illness there was no sign of falling off in any branch, so well are the tasks of direction and administration performed by Miss Wintz, Mrs. Groser Hurd, and other ready helpers, both of the regular staff and among the Christian men of the navy.

WIDOWS, ORPHANS, AND BEREAVED MOTHERS.

One of the most touching passages of Miss Weston's address was that in which she spoke of the sorrows of the relatives of men killed in action or through accident. While not professing to take the place of the administrators of great national funds, Miss Weston gladly gives "first aid" to those overwhelmed by sudden calamity and plunged in unexpected poverty. "When the man is gone, it is not only he that has departed—the children's bread has gone also." The poor widow, while waiting for the wheels of official administration to go round, is face to face with starvation. The bereaved mother, depending on her boy for support, is in a still more pitiable plight, for, unless her son has regularly transmitted a fixed percentage of pay to her, and always through the Admiralty, she is considered to have no claim upon the country. "The Government takes the son and forgets the mother." In many such distressful cases timely help has been given. "This year has been full of light and shade; and yet, I am thankful to say, of advance in the work."

Blackgang Mission.—One of the most notable features of the year's work of the Blackgang Mission is the development of missionary interest displayed in somewhat unusual directions. The Christian Endeavour Society forwarded its first contribution of £5 towards the annual support of an Armenian orphan whom it has adopted. The Sunday-school sent its first instalment towards the purchase of a bullock and cart for itinerating purposes in Trivady; a sum of over £5 was contributed to the Society for the Relief of Persecuted Jews; and numerous other gifts were made to home and foreign missionary work. The several agencies of the Blackgang Mission continue to be maintained with many signs of growing activity and interest. A series of revival services, conducted by Miss Barbour, were marked by much blessing in the conversion of souls and the refreshment of the Lord's people. Mrs. Smith, 4, Cliff Terrace, Blackgang, Isle of Wight, continues as superintendent.

British and Foreign Sailors.

A VERY impressive gathering took place a few days ago at the Mansion House, in connection with the eighty-fourth anniversary of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society. Selections of music given while the audience was assembling, were interspersed with telling words of testimony to the grace and power of the Lord. The Lord Mayor (Sir Joseph Dimsdale, M.P.), who presided, found in the present position of the Society great cause for thankfulness to God, that in a year during which so many calls had been made on the nation on account of war and other causes, the income had been maintained at £34,230.

The great and out-standing fact in the present history of the Society is the progress made in the erection and equipment of the Passmore Edwards Sailors' Palace (known among seamen as Jack's Palace); it is, however, only a part of the work, which includes the Christian effort at some 110 ports in this country and abroad. These organizations are able and willing to receive the sailor regardless of nationality or creed, and, if he will only avail himself of the opportunities afforded, will not only provide for his spiritual and moral needs, but also look after his well-earned wages, so that he and his family may be cared for.

The report which was presented by Rev. Edward W. Matthews brought out, among other figures, the Passmore Edwards Sailors' Palace, which was to have cost £12,000, will, with the Alexandra Wing, and increased accommodation for the King Edward VII. Nautical School, call for, at least, £18,000. The sites, &c., will bring the total required to £36,000. It is desired that the school should have, in addition, an endowment of not less than £1,000 a year. Towards these £25,000 had been received.

As a landsman, the Duke of Fife described how his sympathies were drawn out on behalf of the sailor through his experiences during a series of winters spent on board a yacht in the Mediterranean and the Black Sea. Then, as now, British shipping predominated in the ports, and so impressed was he with the scenes he then witnessed, that he has ever since felt the deepest interest in any and every attempt to help Jack ashore, and to shield him from evil influences, that are far more dangerous to him than the winds and the waves.

Describing the new Palace as meeting a need which ought to have been met long ago, the Archbishop of Canterbury spoke with satisfaction of the King Edward VII. Nautical School. Referring to the many experiences of the sailor's life which draw him nearer God, he showed the need for organizations ashore, to instruct him more deeply in spiritual things, "to let him know that there is a Higher Presence which is not far off, and that even if his life cannot be saved there is One ready to receive him, to be present with him in the moment of his death, and to hold out to him all the prospects which the Gospel has been instilling into his mind."

An earnest call was made by Rev. Dr. John Watson (Liverpool) for higher training for our sailors, and especially such training as will raise the whole character. The Lady Mayoress reported progress by the Ladies' Guild, which has endowed and equipped forty beds in the Palace; and her little daughter presented a New Testament to each of the sailor-boys who had formed a guard of honour and a choir. Among others who took part in the proceedings were Rev. Edwin H. Ellis (East London Tabernacle), Archdeacon Sinclair, Mr. Alexander Scrutton, and Mr. Thomas Mason.

Trinitarian Bible Society.

PRAISE to God for having been kept for seventy-one years treading in "the old paths," was the dominant note of the report—by Rev. Dr. E. W. Bullinger (secretary)—at the annual meeting of the Trinitarian Bible Society. A substantial increase in the amount of the free contributions proved the strength of the financial position. The expenditure of £4,725 9s. 5d. had been met, with a balance of £1,077 11s. 6d. remaining over. The circulation of the Scriptures accomplished in English and foreign tongues had amounted during the twelve months to 4,539 Bibles, 19,188 New Testaments, and 82,197 Gospels or other portions, making in all 105,924 copies.

A new edition of the Society's Hebrew New Testament, printed during the year, brings the total number of copies sent out to Christian workers among Jews in various parts of the world to 287,000, with 25,000 more in Judeo-German. Interpreting the signs of the times, the committee feel that a wider field of usefulness than ever is opening up for the use of this version, and that the circulation of it, so far from drawing to an end, is really only beginning.

SCATTERING THE SEED.

The colportage work in Brittany had been more encouraging than ever. The opposition on the part of priests and newspapers controlled by them continues unabated, but "the people take little or no notice of them." Indeed, the alarm shown at the continuance of the work is convincing evidence that the labour is not in vain. Supplies of Scriptures have been sent to South Africa for British troops and Boer prisoners. The first copies of an edition of the Italian New Testament in which the late Rev. James Wall had taken a special interest, only reached Rome in time for copies to be distributed at his funeral. Other consignments were sent to Rev. Edward Clarke (Spezia), and Mr. J. S. Anderson (Florence), from whom expressions of appreciation had been received. In Spain, 315 Bibles and Testaments, with 8,367 Gospels and Epistles, had been circulated by the Figueras Mission; from which centre a special effort is being made to place copies through the post in the hands of "ministers, deputies, marquises, counts, archbishops, bishops, civil and military governors, naval and military officers, &c." Special arrangements on a large scale are in operation for supplying with the Scriptures Finnish emigrants passing through Hull and Liverpool on the way to America. Progress was reported also in connection with the Basque and Kurdish New Testaments.

From the chair, Lieut.-General Sir William Stirling, K.C.B., called earnest attention to the fact that it is only through the Word of God that the Church has any ground for expecting the Spirit to work, and to the careful guarding against anything being added to or taken from the written Word.

THE INFALLIBLE MISSIONARY.

When moving the election of the Committee for the ensuing year, Rev. James C. Smith (Willesden) said that the missionaries which the Trinitarian Bible Society sends forth are Bibles; and we have reason to trust God for the fulfilment of his promise of blessing. Among other causes for thankfulness is the fact that the Society "stands for the Bible as it is. Learned men in our day seem to live and labour as if God had never given his Word at all; but where are we to get the mind of God if not there?"

An exhortation to greater faithfulness and diligence, coupled with a cordial invitation of fellowship from all who desire to hold forth the Word of Life, were pressed home by Rev. W. T. Turpin (Eastbourne), who rejoiced to know that this Society was not only Protestant, but desired to be known as such. The Society has not only a negative testimony, but an equally clear and positive one to the power of the living and written Word.

Among others who took part in the proceedings were Revs. T. George (St. Mary's, Hornsey Rise) and C. H. Marsack Day (Shepherd's Bush).

The Gospel in South America.

AT the annual meeting of the South American Missionary Society, the Bishop of Sodor and Man presiding, a highly satisfactory report for the year was presented. Rev. E. P. Cachemaille (clerical secretary) read an interesting abstract, which stated that, excluding the amounts raised and expended abroad, the actual receipts for 1901 exceeded the average for ten years by £2,929, which was owing to the generous response made to extinguish the deficit. In reviewing the work of the year, it was pointed out that the evangelization of the Paraguayan Chaco Indians has made steady progress, notwithstanding some apparent checks and difficulties at the mission station. In the Araucanian Mission, the most important event of the year has unquestionably been the publication of a volume of Scripture portions in the Mapuche language. Thanks to the liberality of a friend of the Mission, a printing-press and outfit have been sent out, and the result is that now the Mapuche race possess a considerable portion of the Word of God in the Mapuche tongue.

The schools connected with the Palermo, Buenos Aires, Mission have made remarkable progress. At the end of little more than three years from their inauguration the number of scholars—children and young people—has risen to 1,800, and the numbers are limited only by deficiency of accommodation. The work at Alberdi, Rosario, which is primarily intended for the benefit of destitute English-speaking children—though not for them alone—continues to grow and prosper.

A VAST FIELD TO EVANGELISE.

In commending the operations of the Society, the Chairman drew attention to the magnitude of the field in which it laboured, and which it had all along sought to occupy. It was estimated that the white population of South America numbered about thirty millions. He found that the computation of the number of aboriginal Indians varied considerably. The Society estimated the number to be about ten millions, scattered over the great Continent. These Indians are among those in the interest of whom the Saviour gave the command, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." Besides these, there are large numbers of English colonists also requiring the ministrations of the Gospel.

Rev. C. A. Sadleir, superintendent of the Araucanian Mission, urged the great need for further effort, if the Christian religion is to make progress in South America. There are hundreds of tribes in the Continent who have never heard of Jesus Christ, and hundreds of languages into which the Gospel has never been translated. In relating his experience of six years among the Araucanian Indians, the speaker testified to the wide influence of the Society. From time to time he had witnessed seamen being led to Christ. English, Scotch, Irish, French, German, and Swiss settlers had learnt to know and love the Saviour. Among the Indians themselves the mission had been able to reach some of its chiefs. Another department of the Society's work was to educate the children. The object aimed at in the schools was the conversion of boys and girls, in order that they might go out among their own people, taking with them the Word of God.

Having recently paid a visit to Argentina, Mr. H. W. Maynard spoke of the results of the work as seen by him, mentioning particularly the substantial progress that is being made in the schools in the education of the children.

Rev. J. Fleetwood Berry (Galway), in supporting the efforts of the Society, believed that the more a church carries on missionary work abroad, the more it would be blessed itself.

Canon J. W. Marshall, Blackheath, emphasized the useful work of the chaplains, and the efforts among the seamen of all nationalities. The institutions which the society provides afford a safe retreat to sailors from the persistent temptations to which they were exposed. Reference to the loss sustained by the Society through the removal of Rev. A. Smith (who literally laid down his life in the Master's service) was made by the Bishop of Honduras.

Literature for the Chinese.

MORE than once during the past few weeks speakers at May meetings, particularly missionary gatherings, have referred to the chastening influence which the Japanese war and the Boxer movement have had on the life of the Chinese. At the meeting held at Exeter Hall on Wednesday, in the interests of the Christian Literature Society for China, the same point was emphasized; and it is universally acknowledged that at no period has the empire been so open to Western and Christian influence. An illustration of this is seen in the edicts issued in 1901, commanding all existing colleges to be turned into schools of Western learning. Every county is to have a primary school, every prefecture a secondary school, and every provincial capital a university.

A brief outline of the year's work was given, Rev. W. Fisher, secretary, showing that, in spite of various adverse circumstances, much progress has been made. The income of the Society has been gratifying, and the greatest need at present seems to be for friends in the provinces to quicken interest in the work of the organization.

Sir Henry Blake, Governor of Hong Kong, in presiding, bore testimony to the need which exists for introducing to the leaders of thought in China such literature as shall bring them under the influence of Western science, history, and the higher ideals of Christian principles. The Chinese are responding to the efforts of the Society, and are coming to realize that there are those in England who take more than a commercial interest in their welfare.

THE OPEN DOOR.

Speaking from observation of the Society's work in China, the Bishop of Victoria referred to its unique position. The organization is working as no other can, for the spread of Western knowledge by the distribution of literature, written from a Christian point of view, in the Chinese language. The high standard of the Society's publications must be maintained. Literature that does not point to Christ as the Saviour is not Christian.

Rev. George Owen (L.M.S., Peking) followed with a stirring address, in which it was shown that the country is open as never before to the Gospel. He pointed out that a few years ago the Chinese were a solid unit against all reform; but now the nation is deeply cleft, and there is a party of reform. The Japanese war had taught them many hard lessons, as also had the Boxer rising. The indemnity to be spread over thirty-nine years will perpetually remind China of her weakness, and be a call to her to set her house in order and to progress. The whole atmosphere of the country has changed, and a cordial feeling towards foreigners is manifested in the highest circles. "Reform and Christianize China," added the speaker, "and there is no more yellow peril, but the race will join with the nations that are working out the higher civilization of the world."

Further testimony was borne by Rev. Llewellyn Lloyd (C.M.S., Foochow), who spoke of one of the hopeful features of life in China in the widespread desire to know what it is that makes Western nations great. Mr. A. Kenmure (British and Foreign Bible Society, Korea) warmly commended the methods adopted by the Society, and cited some of the remarkable results of its activity which he had witnessed.

Vernham Dean Village Mission.—The evangelistic labours of Mr. and Mrs. Sydney Watson in the villages of Berkshire continue to bear encouraging fruit. Nearly two years ago, they erected a mission hall, and with a little help was added a reading-room. As a result of the preaching of the Gospel, many old and young have given evidence of true conversion. A correspondent writes:—"After some fifteen months of soul-winning and refreshing, there has come a terrible visitation in the worst form of influenza, such as has never been known in the locality before. Not a family has escaped. The pastor, with his wife and many of their people, are brought very low. The distress must be great for some time to come. Surely it has but to be made known for the Lord's stewards to hasten to the rescue of his sorely tried people."

Wesleyan Missions.

WHILE rejoicing in the manifold and widespread tokens throughout the Connexion of revived interest in the missionary cause, Wesleyans are naturally much exercised concerning the fact that, for more than a generation, the home income of their Foreign Missionary Society has remained stationary. Recognising the vast areas of the world still unevangelized, and the unparalleled opportunities now presented in all parts of the foreign field where the Society's agents are at work, the committee feel that the call of God is clear and loud for immediate and continuous advance.

This was the keynote of the annual meeting of the Society, held at Exeter Hall last week. It was again and again emphasized that advance is only possible by such an increase in the spirit of devotion to Christ and of loyalty to his commands as will secure year by year an adequate supply of workers and funds. The proceedings were under the direction of Mr. Peter F. Wood, of Chislehurst, and on the platform were many leaders of the Methodist Church.

In reviewing the position of the missionary cause, the Chairman spoke of some of the hopeful signs of the present day. Among these is the phenomenal increase in the number of organizations founded to stimulate the interest of young people in missionary endeavour; the revival of activity in colleges, one of the outcomes of which had been the inauguration of the Student Volunteer Missionary Union. Another hopeful sign is the growing recognition by women that there is for them a place in the work of carrying the Gospel to the heathen.

The prominence given to medical missions is another sign which goes to prove that Methodism is looking seriously to her work abroad. The cry for help from the missionary field is long and urgent, and it is for every one who names the name of Christ to respond to that cry. The promotion of the missionary cause, the chairman urged, must not be left to superintendent ministers, but interest should be stimulated by placing in the hands of members and adherents more information concerning the progress of the Gospel.

Rev. F. W. Macdonald, in a soul-stirring and eloquent address, reviewed the operations of the past twelve months. It had been, he said, a year of strenuous toil, not without its element of suffering and trial. "Yet never have we been destitute of the tokens which assure us of the presence and blessing of God, nor without those spiritual and moral results which form part of the reward of our labours."

ADVANCE IN SOUTH AFRICA.

While all was well with the missions, Mr. Macdonald acknowledged, with regret, that the Society was overtaken by a crisis. The word was not used in any sense of panic, but to bespeak the intelligent consideration of those who wish the Society well, and love the work in which it is engaged. A deficiency of some £7,000 had to be reported. Of this amount £1,200 was due to a falling off in the home income, the remainder of the deficiency being accounted for by the extraordinary expenditure in the Transvaal; and it was generally acknowledged that a war expenditure could not be covered by a peace budget. Turning to the line of policy to be followed, the secretary said that the administrators of the Society had pledged themselves to financial prudence, holding aloof from all reckless expenditure.

Two voices the Society hears among its constituency the year round. One voice says, "Do not go into debt"; while another pleads, "Do not miss the great opportunities which the Lord of the harvest has given you." The committee were doing their best to make these voices blend. As regards the work in South Africa, the speaker pleaded that no thought of going back or remaining stationary could be entertained just as the country was passing from a season of strife to a career of peace, the possibilities of which could not be conceived.

The missions in China must be elevated to their true position, and placed upon a higher scale than that which exists to-day. The Society would also have to face the question of medical missions, as never before, and thus draw into the great missionary service another section of trained and devout youth springing up within the bosom of the Church. Mr. Macdonald made an impassioned appeal for the missionary cause to be given the primary place in the work of the Church, drawing always from the fountains of Divine love and beneficence.

THE CALL TO THE CHURCH AT HOME.

The President of the Conference, Dr. W. T. Davison, followed with some forcible words on the obligations of the home churches to the foreign field. By withholding from the missionary that support which alone could enable him to carry on his work, the Church was adding a crushing burden. The ordinary income of the Society must be raised by steady, persistent effort. "We want a steadily flowing tide which shall fill the harbour and reach the vessels hitherto untouched. We are only too slow to rise to God's splendid purpose and the greatness of our own opportunities."

A cordial reception awaited Mrs. J. F. Bishop, who followed with an exhaustive survey of many missionary fields through which she has travelled. After having become acquainted with life in most of the Asiatic countries dominated by heathen religions, the speaker testified that everywhere heads are sick and hearts are faint, for want of the only Balm which can soothe the ills of the nations. She had come to see that the ancient faiths of Asia had lost the purity of any moral teaching with which they started, and no hope of reform can be found within them. Mrs. Bishop went on to speak of the utility of medical missions, and made a fervent appeal for greater self-denial and sacrifice on the part of Christians at home.

In the course of an impressive address, Rev. Henry Haigh, of Mysore, dealt with some of the pessimistic views set forth in a recent publication concerning missions in India. He showed that Christianity, far from being a failure in India, is steadily permeating the whole life of the Empire.

The Byways of City Life.

IT would not be easy to find a more enthusiastic audience than that which assembled in Exeter Hall on Thursday morning. The occasion was the sixty-seventh anniversary of the formation of the London City Mission, and the gathering was in every sense well worthy of the event.

Numerous as are the difficulties to be encountered in the evangelization of the Metropolis, the Society has cause to take courage and go forward.

The digest of the annual report, presented by Rev. T. S. Hutchinson, M.A., records gratifying progress. The widespread indifference to the claims of God, the multiplicity of various forms of amusement, and the many evidences that the present is a pleasure-loving age, have not daunted the workers, but have proved a stimulus to devoted service. In the forefront is placed the visitation of the highways and byways of the city. Many who cannot be met with in their private houses or induced to attend a mission-hall service, may be seen going to and from their place of work or loitering in the streets. Among these the missionaries labour, as well as among the thousands who are to be found in the Sunday markets. One of the workers in this branch writes:—"It is difficult to speak as to the spiritual good accomplished in this branch of my work, as hundreds of men with whom I converse I see but once, so far as I am aware, but many repeat their visits to seek spiritual instruction, and during the past year 211 have testified to having received spiritual benefit."

While individual dealings with people in the streets have thus been remarkably blessed by God during the past year, the meetings for preaching the Gospel to masses of people in the courts and alleys, as well as in the parks and open spaces, have been, so far as can be judged, still more so. Meetings of this character have been held regularly on Sundays, and in some cases on week nights, all through the summer months, in many parts of the Metropolis, and in some quarters even during the winter. The attention of the people has been exceedingly good, and many scores have testified to having received spiritual light and life.

AMONG SPECIAL CLASSES.

Frequently the hearts of the missionaries are cheered by signs that their labours are recognised and appreciated even by those who are not themselves decided Christians. The Society's work among special classes has been particularly successful. Men of the same calling and occupation in life have many thoughts and feelings in common, and the committee have been enabled to set apart missionaries to minister to the same classes to which they have belonged. By such arrangements cabmen, coalheavers, dockworkers, gasworkers, millers, railway-men, soldiers, publicans, &c., have missionaries who are acquainted with the details of their every-day life.

The total number of missionaries of the Society is 463, and one gratifying result of their efforts during last year was that 5,203 men and women were induced to attend public worship; and 1,720 of these have become communicants. So far as is known, 1,482 drunkards were reclaimed, and 171 fallen women rescued and restored to their friends. The attempt to prosecute evangelistic work in public-houses has proved successful. The Word of God has compelled attention, silenced ridicule, convinced of sin, and humbled transgressors of the laws of God.

Fifteen of the Society's staff give their time and attention to foreigners and Jews, and many cases might be cited to show how frequently "strangers within our gates" have received spiritual help and blessing.

The proceedings on Thursday were under the presidency of Sir Algernon Coote, who warmly commended the methods adopted by the Society, especially emphasizing the visitation of the homes of the people. He had been impressed by the readiness with which the missionaries are able to meet the arguments of the exponents of infidelity, and to answer anyone who challenges the reasonableness of the Christian's faith. It was gratifying to know that the Mission continues to be the handmaid of the churches; thousands who never cross their threshold being thus reached.

A TIMELY MESSAGE.

A deeply spiritual note was struck by Rev. J. Morgan Gibbon, who rejoiced to take part in the anniversary of an organization which is doing so much to bring about that great consummation when Jesus Christ shall be crowned Lord of all. The Mission is working and moving in the line of that great event which is the object of our Lord's expectation. In the focus and heart of empire, the workers are battling with sin—refined in some cases, in others, foul, coarse, repulsive. But London is not one great sore. There are finer flowers in London's slums than can be found in any country forest—flowers of human kindness and wonderful heroism. The Society recognises that none are beyond hope, and its workers seek with human love to illustrate Divine love.

Some rousing words followed from Mr. T. Cheney Garfit, deploring the readiness with which the public respond to any effort to secularize the Lord's Day. Another evil against which the City missioners have to contend is the overcrowding. Such conditions greatly handicap Christian workers in their endeavours to extend the Kingdom of Christ.

An address was also given by Rev. H. J. R. Marston, incumbent of Belgrave Chapel, who exhorted the workers to allow nothing to take the place of the old Gospel in their teaching, not forgetting to study the open page of humanity, the wide sweep of God's providences, and the times in which we are privileged to live. Mr. C. Mason, a missionary in Pimlico, recalled a number of instances in which the Society's efforts have had far-reaching results, showing how a helping hand extended in time of need is heartily appreciated by those who are yearning for a touch of kindness and a word of human sympathy.

The Seed is the Word.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN BIBLE SOCIETY.

A NEW illustration of the unity in the Spirit which binds Evangelical Christendom together was afforded on Wednesday of last week at Exeter Hall, when the annual meeting of the British and Foreign Bible Society was presided over by the MARQUIS OF NORTHAMPTON. This is one of the platforms on which distinctions of church organization are lost sight of in the presence of the Word of the Lord.

The summary of the annual report presented by Rev. A. TAYLOR (secretary) opened with a deep note of praise and gratitude to God, which summed up the feeling of the committee with regard to their experiences—many and varied as these have been—in every part of the world. In twelve months, the Society issued 5,067,421 copies of Scripture—complete or in parts—a total surpassing all earlier records. Since 1804 the Society has circulated more than 175 million copies of Scripture. Of every 100 copies issued, nineteen were Bibles, twenty-seven were New Testaments, and fifty-four were Scripture portions, chiefly Gospels or the Psalms. Over £10,000 had been expended in grants of Scriptures to different religious and philanthropic agencies at home. The colporteurs abroad—numbering 743—had sold over 1,350,000 copies, while 620 native Christian Biblewomen were supported in the East, in connection with nearly fifty different missionary organizations. Translations or revisions are in progress in over 100 different languages. The list of versions now includes the names of 367 distinct forms of speech. The income from all sources was £236,292; while the payments were £241,143, leaving a deficit of £4,851.

Among recent forward steps a new agency has been constituted for Colombia, Ecuador, and Peru. In anticipation of peace in South Africa, the committee have resolved to establish one for Rhodesia and neighbouring regions.

HINDRANCES AND OBSTACLES.

In addition to the ceaseless opposition of the Roman Church, in many countries the work of the Society has been hampered by serious restrictions arising out of laws or their administration. In parts of the Austrian Empire, licences for colporteurs are still withheld, and in the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg the selling of books in the streets is prohibited. In Greece, the Government has placed a ban on the Modern Greek Bible issued by the Society. Leave is still lacking for a colporteur to work in Montenegro. The French authorities prohibit the public sale of Scriptures in Tunis, and they have not yet allowed the Society to resume work in Cochin China. The Turkish Government resolutely forbids the issue of the Four Gospels in Albanian in native character, while colportage in the region round Bagdad has been made impossible. The Government of Persia has stopped all importation of Scriptures in the native tongue. The public exercise of any other than the Roman Catholic religion is prohibited by the constitution of the Republic of Peru.

In South Africa Dutch Scriptures have been provided for Boer women and children in various concentration camps, as well as for the prisoners of war. Numerous and liberal grants have also been made in India to the Boer prisoners in camps at Trichinopoly, Bellary, Ahmednagar, Shahjahanpur, Ambala, and Sialkot, as well as to prisoners in Ceylon, St. Helena, and Bermuda.

"To-day, while the Bible is being criticized so fiercely, it is also being multiplied and distributed on a scale beyond all precedent. God's Book speaks in more tongues, and lives in more homes, and rules in more hearts, than it ever did before. Age cannot wither nor custom stale its miraculous vitality. In this world the New Testament fares often like its own martyrs; it is stoned, it is sawn asunder, it has trial of cruel mockings and scourgings, yea, moreover, of bonds and imprisonments. Often men have left it for dead, and buried it out of sight. But in the triumphs of the mission field, and in the experience of the faithful, it is alive for evermore."

Recalling his own appeal last year that this Society should be supported by all Christians, and that none should remain outside, the CHAIRMAN asked special attention to a pamphlet, written by the Bishop of Newcastle, entitled, "Why Churchmen of all schools should support the Bible Society." The writer had begun his career with personal doubt on that point, but all such questionings were removed by actual experience of mission effort in India; and he laid the utmost importance on the need for a single translation of the Scriptures in each language, adding that in order to get this as good as possible the help of all concerned is required. Although the Society's finances were in a satisfactory condition, a great and combined effort is required in order that the Society may keep out of debt.

"LIKE THE SUN IN THE HEAVENS."

The resolution calling for greater efforts for the spread of the Word of God, especially in those lands in which it is as yet unknown, was introduced by the BISHOP OF LONDON. He did not think it should need much persuasion to induce any Churchman to "speak up for his Bible—because our Church of England services are saturated with the Bible, and forbid the teaching of anything as essential to salvation which cannot be proved from Scripture. Again, our church missionary societies feel the need of the Bible Society as much as any others do." Turning to the personal aspect of the subject, the bishop summed up his own feeling in the question, "What should I do for my own religious life without my Bible? It is like the sun in the heavens to one's spiritual life." Among outstanding characteristics of the Bible, he mentioned its marvellous diversity and unity, its testimony to the Spirit of God, its comfort and warnings, and the hope which it inspires. Referring to the fact that the strength of the position in which the Bible stands lies in the fact that it has not been afraid of light, he spoke comfort to many by saying, "It is want of faith to fear criticism."

LOOKING BEHIND STATISTICS.

The warm approval expressed by the bishop of the Society's action in taking up the Revised Version, was supported by Sir HENRY FOWLER, M.P. He hoped that the Society would go on to supply cheap editions of the Scriptures in this form. Congratulating it on opening the twentieth century with record circulation, income, and expenditure, the speaker made an eloquent appeal that all should get beyond any statistics which can be given, inasmuch as these can never represent or estimate the true spirituality of the work accomplished.

Reviewing the work accomplished during the last reign, he asked that the standpoint of the Bible should be tested by its influence upon (1) the Church and (2) the world. "We must remember that there is a united as well as a disunited Christendom; and the union rests upon the facts which the Bible records, and upon the acceptance of the Bible as the inspired record of these facts. Amid much that we deplore, there remains as a central fact that there is one united belief in the supremacy of Holy Scripture." Great advances made in the raising of the morale of the army, in legislation, and in philanthropic effort, were traced to the Bible as their source.

When proposing the election of the committee, Mr. THOMAS HODGKIN, D.C.L., recounted some interesting reminiscences of a recent visit to Bala, the birthplace of the Society, where he found many things recalling the time when Mary Jones found her way to the town in search of a Bible. He found, in thus tracing out the origin of the Society, an analogy to the need which translators constantly feel. "Very often when we mount to the source of a language or literature, we find it connected with an early translation of the Scriptures."

In a few closing words, Mr. C. E. TRITTON, M.P., testified to satisfaction with which he regarded his long family and personal connection with the Society. This arose from the fact that its single object was the circulation of the Bible, "without note or comment."

London Medical Mission.

AMID scenes of grinding poverty, the London Medical Mission maintains, with much fruitfulness, its double purpose of preaching the Gospel and healing the sick. In that grimy little thorough fare, Short's Gardens, St. Giles, and in North Street, Lambeth, medical and evangelistic work is daily carried on.

The report presented at the annual meeting held on Wednesday last week bears striking testimony to the effective character of the Mission. The sick poor receive, in addition to skilled advice and kind nursing, properly-cooked invalid food, clothing and bedding, and, when convalescent, many cases are sent to the seaside home at Folkestone. The department devoted to children proves an untold blessing to the puny sufferers of the slums, the holiday home at Sevenoaks providing a useful place of refuge from the squalor of West London alleys. In all, over 35,000 cases were attended to at the two dispensaries, and over 7,000 visits were paid to the sick in their own homes.

That the preaching of the Word has not been in vain, is shown in several interesting cases:—"Mr. H. was visited at his home, and found to be suffering from rheumatic fever. After several visits and many conversations on the love of Christ, he confessed he was a sinner, but said he wanted to understand the matter more clearly before he could give himself to the Lord. Ten days later, Isa. lv. was read to him. This greatly stirred him; it was only two days later that he came to Christ and accepted salvation.

"Mrs. L., rapidly declining in consumption, has always listened attentively to the Gospel message. Hers is a very poorly furnished garret home, but is kept beautifully clean by the husband, who spends all his spare time nursing her and the family of little ones, besides acting as cook and laundress."

After Colonel MACGREGOR, who presided, had spoken in hearty terms of the beneficent nature of the organization, Dr. HEYWOOD SMITH earnestly advocated the extension of medical mission work in our great cities. Dr. WARREN followed with a vivid word-picture of the depraved condition of many of the patients, and showed what terrible ravages are made by strong drink. Amid the discouragement of repulsive conditions, there have been bright cases of spiritual blessing.

Describing the Lambeth institution, Dr. OWEN spoke of some of the "homes" that are visited as "perfect dens," filthy in the extreme. Yet Divine grace enables the workers still to toil on. The true light shines in this deplorable district, however, and among other converts are some people who formerly were bigoted Romanists. The premises are in a most dilapidated condition, and a new hall is urgently required. The meeting concluded with an encouraging word from Dr. HENRY SOLTAU, who declared that the chief hope of the evangelization of the lowest slums is the multiplication of Medical Missions.

Monte Carlo.

By Rev. RICHARD GLOVER, M.A., Rector of Wotton, Dorking.

(From unpublished "Latter Day Ballads."

To Monte Carlo a gay youth sped
While shone the summer sun,
And his heart leapt up as he sang to himself—
"This is the way for fun!"

He thought of the music, the play, the dance,
And the fortune he should win;
But a whisper was heard within his heart—
"This is the way of sin!"

But the hope of gain that whisper drown'd,
And bade him its voice refuse;
And the voice then changed to another note—
"This is the way to lose!"

In vain; for he went and staked and won,
Then lost! till, with choking breath,
He rush'd out in despair and shot himself!
And I saw 'twas the way of death!

Then methought I saw o'er his body writ
A legend by magic spell,
And in the blue, flickering flame I read—
"This is the way to Hell!"

Evangelization by the Printing Press.

RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY.

THE power of the Press as an instrument used of God for the advancement of his Kingdom among men, was abundantly and powerfully illustrated on Friday evening at the annual meeting of the Religious Tract Society, held in Exeter Hall, under the presidency of Rev. Canon Fleming. The large audience which had assembled followed appreciatively the acknowledgments of the good hand of God, as that had rested on the efforts put forth. Never, it was shown, has the work stood higher in the esteem of the Christian public, and deservedly so.

The more important points of the year's work were pointed out and emphasized by Rev. Richard Lovett, in an interesting address. It appeared that the new publications of the year had numbered 694, of which 209 were tracts; and that the Society has already published, or helped others to publish, literature in 250 languages, dialects, and characters. The total circulation of books, tracts, &c., from the London warehouse during the twelve months has reached 32,149,810, of which 15,483,750 were tracts. From foreign depots it is estimated that twenty millions of publications have gone forth, bringing the year's figures up to 52,149,810, and those since the formation of the Society to 3,490,715,230.

Missionary contributions to the amount of £14,376 10s. 10d. had been received, and grants in money, publications, and materials, have amounted to £24,048 1s. 5d.

Among the home missionary agencies which had been helped, special mention was made of the arrangements for the promotion of Bible education in board schools. In the London schools the number of children examined was 298,524: and prizes were also sent to Bolton, Bradford, Brighton, Hartlepool, Leeds, Manchester, Newcastle, and Nottingham. Every effort had been made to meet the exceptional demands made for the benefit of troops in South Africa.

The foreign items included the publication of the "Pilgrim's Progress" in Kisi-Kongo, a language spoken on the Lower Congo. This makes the ninety-sixth tongue in which the Bedford tinker's message is sent out to the world. Evangelical workers of every name and nationality had received the benefit of the Society's resources.

WELCOMING A NEW SECRETARY.

The greatest change in the Society's staff had been necessitated by the retirement from the secretariat of Rev. Prebendary White; but, while only accepting this resignation under absolute compulsion, the committee believed that in the providence of God they had been led to the very best man to fill the vacant post in Rev. A. R. Buckland. The new secretary had come to them with a long and wide experience as a journalist, is a man of tried literary capacity, and has for a number of years been widely known as throwing the most strenuous efforts into the promotion of Evangelical Christianity. The committee look with hopefulness to his association with them in the work, auguring therefrom the brightest prospects for the future. For the retiring official the deepest affection and respect were expressed on behalf of his colleagues. His great gifts had been devoted unstintedly to the work; and as an illustration of these it was mentioned that he could read with ease in fourteen or fifteen languages, including Hungarian, Bohemian, Russian, Dutch, and Welsh.

UNCHANGED AMID MANY CHANGES.

After expressing a very warm welcome to Mr. Buckland, the Chairman referred to his own apprenticeship of twenty-five years in learning all about the Society's methods, which had only deepened his confidence. At a time when all Christian agencies are subject to the severest tests, the Society had not escaped the ordeal of criticism, but it is more than ready to justify its existence, and has now taken its place among the most venerable religious societies of the Christian Church. "Many things have changed since its foundation, but the things with which it has to deal—sin, the human heart, sorrow, the need of salvation—have not changed; and the Society has not changed its principles. The Press will never supersede the living voice, but it can go where the voice cannot yet reach. Though it may be used for evil in many cases, it is infinitely for good every year; and in the great conflict that is being waged truth must beat down all error, light dispel all darkness, and Christ be stronger than Satan." Canon Fleming referred to a legacy of £19,000 received for the publication of books to promote Protestant principles, which must be expended in ten years.

Recalling the criticisms of the Society's aims which prevailed in its early days, Rev. W. L. Watkinson declared that "the age has come round to you." The fighting maintained to vicious literature—of fashion and folly, of profanity of the flesh—called forth the heartiest congratulations.

Among a number of reasons for supporting the Society, Rev. Charles Brown (Ferme Park, N.) bore witness, for personal experience, that in many an agricultural labourer's cottage the Society's tracts are read with avidity; and bring life, and light, and comfort to many a weary worker in obscure places.

As an American, Rev. Dr. Cuthbert Hall (Union Seminary, New York) rejoiced to join in the praise of a noble British institution. Rejoicing in what is done for good by private publishers, he yet insisted on the necessity for great societies on both sides of the Atlantic to devote themselves to the production of the printed Word as an accompaniment of the spoken Word.

The Bible League.

IN its earnest efforts both to promote the reverential study of the Holy Scriptures, and to resist the various attacks made upon the Word of God by reckless criticism, the Bible League renders valuable service.

The annual meetings, held at Exeter Hall on Wednesday, May 7, were times of strengthening to large numbers of believers. In the afternoon, Pastor W. Fuller Gooch (hon. sec.) followed with a review of the year's operations. At the close of a decade of labour, it is found that the extreme critics of the Bible are increasingly energetic, and that more strenuous efforts than ever are necessary to counteract their influence. On every hand souls are being led away by the evil. A typical instance is evidenced in a request from a well-known minister: "Pray for a young relative, beguiled by 'higher criticism,' and since led into agnosticism." The past year has been the most fruitful in the League's history; good progress has been made in every department. Among other advances, many monthly prayer meetings have been established. Outstanding features were the conferences in London and at Oxford, both of which attracted a large measure of public attention, and were fruitful in blessing. Lectures by Revs. J. Tuckwell and J. Urquhart have awakened deep interest. A vast amount of instructive literature has been circulated, and through many-sided operations the cause of Bible truth has received stimulus. The Council are resolved to go forward, as heretofore, in simple dependence upon the Lord, to maintain the Divine authority of the Bible as the Word of God and the only revelation given by God to fallen man; asserting the inseparable unity between the written and the living Word, as set forth in the Person and Deity of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Speaking from the chair, Mr. W. H. Seagram rejoiced that the work of the League is meeting with much approval, as the need for its efforts becomes increasingly clear. Difficulties in the way of aggressive operations are met with in those churches which have come under the blighting influence of error, but the League has gone steadily forward, maintaining its principle of loyalty to the sacred volume.

Professor Margoliouth, dwelling on the value of organized effort in defence of revealed religion, said that religious societies whose belief in the Bible decays, decline in their spiritual and philanthropic value. The Bible League holds that the Word of God is a true guide; those who abandon it necessarily fail to make progress, for "a road that leads nowhere soon ceases to be a road." Proceeding, the speaker said that abandonment is frequently due to lack of proper investigation. "I have seen absurdities which, because of their first appearing in Germany, have received consideration, whereas, if written by unknown persons in this country, they would have been promptly relegated to the waste-paper basket. They are not less absurd because issued in Germany."

CRITICAL FALLACIES.

Professor Margoliouth went on to remind his hearers that there is no such thing as exclusive knowledge in Biblical criticism, and that all, knowing the facts, may arrive at a sound conclusion. The prevalent destructive criticism is based on false ideas, which allow for no retrogression in the human mind, and are not truly scientific. "To one who should endeavour to reconstruct English history on the basis of a continued evolution, without recognition of the ebb and flow of thought and knowledge, errors would be inevitable, for the method would be wrong. Yet this is the method frequently adopted by critics of the Pentateuch. The laws of evidence, too, are strained in order to attack the truth; but minds so fettered by prejudice cannot by any means be regarded as true guides."

Many threads of modern discussion were gathered up by Rev. John Tuckwell, who said that controversy has, at any rate, cleared the air, led believers to precise thinking, and reminded them that the infallibility of the Bible does not belong to the paper and the printer's ink, but to the Holy Spirit, the Inspirer. Mr. Tuckwell spoke with much force and cogency in contravention of arguments against the reliability of Bible narratives.

In the evening there was a large rally of friends, and the proceedings were full of encouragement, Mr. Seagram once more presiding. The first address, by Rev. R. Wright Hay, was on "The Written Word and the Living Word." The speaker dwelt helpfully on the relations of the Old Testament and the New, and contended that to destroy the one is to destroy the other. Pastor W. Fuller Gooch followed with an awakening and convincing pronouncement, in which he showed how completely the very foundations of the Christian faith would be destroyed by modern criticism, which, in spite of the absurdities it involves, meets with ready acceptance from those who are at once "broad" and but partially informed. The final address, by Rev. W. R. Mowll, on "The Ascension of Christ: Prophetically, Typically, and Spiritually," formed a fitting conclusion to a notable day in the annals of the Bible League.

Twenty-one Years in Exeter Hall.

CENTRAL Y.M.C.A.

THE celebration of the fifty-eighth anniversary of the Central Y.M.C.A. coincided with the "coming of age" of Exeter Hall as its headquarters; and the occasion was celebrated last Thursday by a deeply interesting gathering of members and friends, which filled the great hall. The appearance in the chair of the veteran president—SIR GEORGE WILLIAMS—was the signal for a spontaneous testimony to the affection in which he is held. The report submitted by Mr. JOHN H. PUTTERILL bristled with facts and figures full of highest import to the well-being of London and of the English people.

FACTS AND FIGURES.

This is only one of the 7,758 Y.M.C.A. "cities of refuge" for young men which now belt the earth, with 563,588 members. It has gathered round it in the City of London 2,179 members, 875 associates, and 165 youths in a junior section. Meetings for Bible study held weekly number eleven, with an aggregate attendance of 653; while the total number of weekly meetings for young men is forty-two, with an aggregate attendance of 1,812. Boys are cared for at six meetings, with an average attendance of 165. The number of weekly attendances at the centres of Exeter Hall, Aldersgate Street, and Cornhill is estimated at 12,000. In the course of twelve months 4,250 persons had been recommended to suitable lodgings, while situations have been secured for 238, and 420 have been afforded temporary relief in time of special need. In 1844 the Association was housed in rooms rented at 2s. 6d. weekly; at present buildings are owned in Great Britain valued at £590,000, and throughout the world at more than £6,000,000. An interesting account was given of the development of the Hall as the centre of the "May Meetings." The ninety-six such gatherings held in 1881 grew in twenty years to 279.

NEW ASSOCIATIONS ON THE CONTINENT.

A letter of hearty congratulation—addressed to Sir George Williams as the father of the Y.M.C.A.—was read from the first Russian Association just established at St. Petersburg; and equally warm expressions were presented from the Italian Association at Rome, which had commissioned a representative to attend.

In a bright and enthusiastic address, the CHAIRMAN gave an account of evidences of the spread of the Association which had come under his notice during a sojourn on the Riviera. At Cannes he had been asked to preside over the inaugural meeting of an Association; and on the invitation of the president at Nice he also took the chair at the opening of an enlargement of premises. In one place he found an ex-Roman Catholic priest helping the movement forward. The celebration of the coming of age of Exeter Hall brought back to him many memories of the men who had taken part in its establishment, but who were now enjoying the eternal rest. He was cheered to see, however, not a few who were still spared to help forward the work of grace. He praised and thanked God in his old age for all the experience of lovingkindness and tender mercy which they had enjoyed.

"ASHAMED OF THE WORD 'PROTESTANT.'"

As one of those who took part in the coming of the Association into Exeter Hall, Canon FLEMING recalled that it was then the fashion, as it is now, to call the Hall by ugly names, among others describing it as a hotbed of Puritanism and Methodism. Those who do so are the people who are ashamed of the word "Protestant." Thank God, Exeter Hall has always been a centre of Protestantism; and the Y.M.C.A. has made its home more Protestant than ever by occupancy and work. His own right to call himself a Churchman had, he said, been called in question because he dared to stand on Christian platforms with Christian Nonconformists; but "if the great battle of the Reformation should have to be fought over again, England will have cause to thank God for its sturdy Nonconformity."

Recalling a definition of the Y.M.C.A. which he had heard—"putting one hand into the hand of Christ, and stretching out the other to help some one"—the Canon said that described the history of every Christian, and Christian Endeavourer, and Christian Church, and of the Y.M.C.A. "The work is unique, because it is your own work. The Y.M.C.A. has never usurped the work of the Church. It is the friend of all the churches, and the enemy of none. We must all learn to love Christ more than any church, and truth more than any sect."

DECISION OF CHARACTER.

"Multitudes in the valley of decision" was the text on which Rev. HUGH BLACK (Edinburgh) based a searching address on the value of decision of character. "Character," he said, "is not an indefinite term, a vague generalization, an abstraction. It is the net moral result of a man's whole life, the result of the training of a man's will. For according to the character of a man's will is the character of his whole life.

"When we come to religion, we find that in no place is indecision more fatal; yet this is the temptation of the day. Suspense of judgment is necessary in many things. Even in religion it may be often useful and necessary. There are many questions—of creed, of doctrine, of church government, of scholarship—on which a man may suspend judgment, but in things of conscience as distinguished from things of the intellect we must act on the spur.

"To temporize or compromise is to give in to our own lower nature. The present is a period of indifference. Enthusiasm is more or less discounted. Passion is despised. The ideal seems to be a sort of languid tolerance. This is the ruin of all character. Such moral apathy to principle is a far lower depth than blatant unbelief; 'I would that ye were cold or hot.' All Christian decisions are summed up and follow from the one great decision, 'What think ye of Christ?'"

Summing up the lessons of the meeting, Rev. F. B. MEYER spoke with deep feeling of the example which is being set to our own land and the world by the crowds of young men who go forth, having given up churchgoing and religious observance after coming to the city with high ideals. They went down and down—the fair ideal faded. Addressing any such who might be present, Mr. Meyer declared "that to have failed once has not settled the matter for ever; and even to have gone under into a sea of ink is not to say that you shall not stand on yonder height which was the fair ideal of your youth. Because He has enabled us to do that, He will do it for you; but you must make haste to get on your feet."

Zanzibar Strangers' Rest.

THE first public meeting of this noble work was held on Tuesday, May 6, when the Lower Exeter Hall was filled with a most appreciative crowd of friends. In the unavoidable absence of Mr. Cory, the chair was taken by Mr. W. F. A. ARCHIBALD, and the speeches which followed were full of freshness and interest.

Rev. JOHN WILSON spoke of our duty towards the sin and misery of the world as the Lord's debtors, and made a powerful appeal for more workers. Mr. HENRY STANLEY NEWMAN, editor of The Friend, having visited Zanzibar, was able to describe the people, and implored the British nation to remember the great responsibilities in East Africa. Mrs. AGNEW, who is a resident on the island, gave her testimony as to the wonderful work being done by the mission. The meeting was closed by a powerful address by the Rev. GREGORY MANTLE, whose spiritual teachings about a living faith will not soon be forgotten.

Altogether, this was a most successful gathering, one of its features being the beautiful singing of the blind students from the Normal College. The new report, with photographs of Zanzibar, and an account of the Mission in the island, will be sent on application to the hon. sec., Mr. J. Theo. Isaac, 44, Coolhurst Road, Crouch End, London, N.

Christian Evidences.

THE annual meeting of the Christian Evidence Society was held a few days ago in Exeter Hall, when the BISHOP OF STEPNEY presided. Rev. C. LLOYD ENGSTRÖM, secretary, presented the committee's report, and the Chairman referred to the suggestion appearing from time to time, that there was not now the same necessity for controversial lectures and discussions as was the case a few years ago. In reality, there was not less need for the exhibition of Christian evidences; but the time had arrived when the line along which that exhibition must move had considerably changed. A little reflection would convince anyone of the comparative failure of organized secularism all over the land. The working-classes show no appetite for the old style of infidel lectures, and the so-called "Halls of Science" in many towns are closed. Allowance must be made for various influences, but the main reason why the older sort of controversy was in less demand was that secularism, in alliance with socialism, had been experimented with and failed; and there were indications all around of an awakening, in the minds of the more thoughtful working men, to a sense of the need of religion as a background and inspiring force for the realisation of even their social aspirations.

Sir DYCE DUCKWORTH referred to the indifference of all classes to the needs of the soul. There were many so-called agnostics, who took that name merely because it was fashionable in certain circles. Where real infidelity, or agnosticism, existed, it arose from a mental colour-blindness. Rev. A. J. HARRISON said that it was not mere cleverness that would enable a man to find God. The way to God was on the intuitional side of human nature. If they went to a sceptic with the consciousness that God was with them, they took the atmosphere of God with them, and captured the man before he had time to think of his arguments.

For Aged Believers.

WITH Christian sympathy and persona ministration, the Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society, for nearly a century, has carried on a beneficent work among the aged Christian poor throughout the country. Many hundreds of those to whom it ministers dwell in their own homes, while for pensioners who need shelter the Society provides a place of refuge.

The annual meeting, held at the Mansion House a few days ago, was largely attended. Sir C. R. LIGHTON presided, and paid a high tribute to the usefulness of the Society, which sought to prevent the "borderland" between life and death from being lonely, and was thoroughly Protestant in its nature.

A stirring address was given by Lieutenant-General Sir WILLIAM STIRLING, who spoke of the enormous field for such a society's operations in the provinces. The report presented by Mr. HAZELTON, secretary, showed that the income had not diminished, and in the Metropolis, Brighton, and other places the pensions were paid monthly at the homes of the recipients by lady visitors and the committee, and elsewhere whenever practicable by Christian friends. Since the formation of the Society in 1807, a sum of £318,500 has been expended in pensions. The number of pensioners on the books is 1,579, an increase of forty-four on the year. They reside in all parts of the country, and received in life pensions of from seven to ten guineas, £11,788 during the year. The secretary pointed out that an income of £14,000 annually is needed to maintain the pensions and homes.

Rev. F. S. WEBSTER urged the claims of the Society on the grounds that it was for the benefit of the aged, and formed a most remarkable testimony to the reality of personal religion. It followed the example of their Divine Lord and Master, and conserved one of the most valuable forces that belong to the Church of Christ.

Others who spoke of the Society's work in cordial terms were Revs. J. H. Hallett, E. White, and J. W. Pratt, and Messrs. W. H. Collingridge and W. J. Parks.

A Cripples' Festival.

THE fifty-eighth annual festival of the Ragged School Union, which was celebrated on Monday last week, at the Queen's Hall, was attended by an audience well worthy of the occasion, and the proceedings were instinct with enthusiasm and fine feeling from beginning to end. The spacious platform was filled by a band of bright, intelligent, cripple children, whose admirable singing aroused the admiration, as their physical disabilities did the intense sympathy, of their attentive hearers.

Speaking from the chair, the MARQUIS OF NORTHAMPTON dwelt in high terms upon the progress made during the year. The Sunday-school work, the Bible-classes, and the Bands of Hope, continue their careers of usefulness. Turning to the Cripples' Mission, the speaker rejoiced that the School Boards have taken up the education of the physically unfit, while visitors regularly go to the homes of the 6,000 sufferers on the books of the organization. The Surgical Aid Society has rendered invaluable assistance, supplying necessary instruments to the maimed and deformed.

In all the operations, the speaker pointed out, the workers are actuated by the highest aim, to lead their young charges to the feet of a pitiful and loving Saviour. No fewer than 40,000 children attend the various schools connected with the Union. Proceeding, Lord Northampton dealt with the question of the "drift children" of our streets, and said that they are gathered in, not only for recreation, but to hear the glorious message of the Gospel.

Besides the direct agencies of the Society, at the Ashley Mission in Bethnal Green, and at Doddington Grove, Battersea, no fewer than 153 missions, large and small, are affiliated to the parent society. Some of these embrace a veritable network of efforts—Gospel services, Sunday-schools, Bands of Hope, penny banks, crêches, day and evening schools, and all that tends to the moral and religious welfare of those associated. With the exception of a small staff, practically all this work is done by an army of 6,000 volunteers.

The BISHOP OF KENSINGTON, who followed, showed that the work of the Society is in its scope and influence upon the community (1) widespread, (2) pathetic, (3) spiritual. He emphasized the importance of the efforts on behalf of

THE CHILD LIFE OF THE CITIES.

"The future must be secured for the righteousness of God. What, then, is to keep the world clean? The salvation and training, physical, moral, and spiritual of the children of to-day—the men and women of the days to come."

The next speaker, Rev. Dr. GLOVER, of Bristol, made a telling appeal in the interests of the children of the slums. Comparing, in reminiscent mood, the England of the days of Chartism with the England of to-day, he sounded a note of deep praise for the advances made. Yet a vast deal remains to be done. "No political economy will prevent the sins of the parents producing suffering in the children." The children of the poverty-stricken, of the drunkard, of the gaol-bird, have to be rescued and helped, and all in the strength of God, for "if we set the individual right, he will, in his turn, soon set his surroundings right." Illustrating the efficacy of Christianity in dealing with the needs of humanity, Dr. Glover quoted Dr. Stewart, of Lovedale, who, when asked, "Do you first of all civilize or Christianize?" replied, "I object to doing the same thing twice; Christianize the man, and you civilize him." So let us deal with the boys and girls of the streets, until England is ultimately happy in the abundance of peace and in the sovereignty of goodness.

The last speaker on the list was Rev. A. R. EZARD, of Dewsbury, who related, with much force and acceptance, the story of his labours among poor children in the Yorkshire town, where he is a Congregational pastor. His account of the misery entailed by gambling was particularly forcible. Women take the clothes from their children to raise money for betting, and little fellows from the schools indulge in the vice. Mr. Ezard advocated more energetic efforts among the young, aiming, "not merely to teach them ethics, but to point them to the Lord Jesus Christ."

A pleasant feature of the festival was the presence of H.R.H. PRINCESS CHRISTIAN, who was presented with a bouquet by a tiny cripple carried forward by Mr. John Kirk. The beloved daughter of the late beloved Queen Victoria is herself the directress of a home for cripples. She gracefully distributed the "Faithful Service" prizes, earned by young people who have gained the approbation of their employers and remained in their respective situations for one, three, or five years. These all received their gifts amid the hearty congratulations of the audience.

The Church Association.

AT the meeting of the Church Association, Mr. HENRY MILLER, the secretary, told the story of much earnest endeavour to frustrate Romanizing tendencies and instruct the people in Gospel truth. Great interest attached to the details given of measures taken for the assertion of the Protestant position in Church and State; but an importance no less deep characterized the propagandist exertions of the Association. The colporteur and van work had been highly appreciated on all hands. Nearly 3,000 addresses had been delivered during the year, and nearly 200,000 publications distributed.

The chairman, Mr. JAMES INSKIP, spoke of Ritualism from various points of view. It is Romish—a borrowing and copying of practices and teachings that were left behind at the Reformation. It is unlawful; and because it is that, the Church Association has had much to do by way of litigation. Adverting to the influences that work prejudicially to Protestantism, the speaker said:—"The rising generation of the upper classes is left at the mercy of every kind of doctrine. Few even of the Evangelical clergy give careful instruction from the pulpit upon the distinctive doctrines of the Gospel. Many seem to consider that there is something unholy in controversy, and that they are more devoted than their Evangelical predecessors. They allow disparagements of the fathers of the Evangelical revival, which are repeated by High Churchmen, until the world believes them." In conclusion, Mr. Inskip found comfort in the hope that the power which wrought the Reformation in the sixteenth century, rolled back the incoming wave of Romanism in the seventeenth century, and produced the Evangelical revival in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries, will work again. As a sign of such working, the friends of the Church Association would welcome a turning-back of the Evangelical clergy in the direction of Protestantism and simplicity.

Stirring addresses were delivered by Revs. HENRY DENING, J. B. BARRACLOUGH, W. R. MOWLL, and A. A. ISAACS. The last two alluded to the Education controversy. The former was suspicious of any measure which commanded the warm support of sacerdotalists; the latter remarked that in many country schools in England Roman Catholic books have been made the basis of religious instruction. Both speakers held strongly that the Bible in its purity should be the basis of religious education in public elementary schools.

Friedenheim Hospital.—The story of Friedenheim for 1901 is a record full of praise and thankfulness. Numerous difficulties had to be encountered in the early part of the year. Owing to the illness and consequent resignation of Sister Caroline, the Home of Peace was without its charge sister for nearly six months. The circumscribed accommodation for the staff was another trial, and Miss Davidson almost gave up hope of building the nurses' home, so greatly needed. The number of patients had to be reduced for a couple of months for lack of funds. Through the untiring exertions of the Council, funds were soon raised and the difficulties overcome. The year closed with the hospital free of debt, the nurses' home roofed in, and the staff complete. Copies of the report may be obtained from the secretary, Friedenheim Hospital, Upper Avenue Road, Swiss Cottage, London, N.W.

Coalies' Festival.

FROM all parts they came—north, south, east, west—some in brakes, others in coal vans or by rail. The London coalies flocked to the number of over 1,000 to the annual festival at Mildmay on Tuesday of last week. Guests from Enfield, Woolwich, Clapham, Ealing, and other places were decorated with bright bouquets of flowers, each also receiving an illuminated text card (both given by the Mildmay Mission), and all seemed thoroughly to enjoy themselves.

Mr. FRED TITE (treasurer), presided, and gave a short financial statement, saying that at least another £100 per annum was needed to maintain the present staff of missionaries. More missionaries are also urgently needed. He spoke of the importance of living holier lives, saying that "after all the secret of true and lasting happiness is to be found in Christ, who is the giver of the water of life. Sin brings sorrow, but victory over sin may be gained by union with Christ."

Colonel J. F. MORTON was received with acclamation. In welcoming the guests to "Coalies' Hall," he said: "The secret of all happiness is the knowledge of sins forgiven, through faith in the person and work of Christ. 'Christ has redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us'" (Gal. iii. 13). He concluded by reciting a poem on the substitutionary work of Christ.

A delegate from the coalies, Mr. ROBINSON, in a racy speech, said: "I never found happiness in sin, and before conversion was a poor drunken coalie. Some people think I'm queer, but I'm not so queer as I used to be, for I do go home on my legs now, whereas it was difficult to tell how I got home before. Although I live next door to a public-house, I never go into it, and instead of paying for furnishing a gin-palace I prefer to furnish my own dwelling."

The local superintendent of the Mission (Mr. WILKS) pointed out that "the greatest of all possible blessings was within reach of everyone, and when it is remembered that the present is but a training for eternity to follow, how important it is to make the necessary preparation."

Another delegate from the coalies, Mr. GRACE, told how "for nineteen years I have found Christ a satisfying portion," and urged his mates to receive by faith the same blessing. Before his conversion he thought he was no good, but Jesus had knocked off the rough places, and it was now his privilege to point people to the Saviour.

Other addresses of a most interesting and profitable character followed, by Messrs. Clarke and Prentice (missionaries), and Misson and Goddard (coalies).

Keswick Convention.—Mr. E. C. Pitt-Johnson, of Exeter College, Oxford, hon. secretary of the Association of Cycle Campers, writes to say he will be glad, during the Convention on July 21-26, to provide tents and food for a few who might otherwise be deterred from going, on account of the expense of obtaining board and lodging in the town. He will gladly send particulars on application to him at the address given.

"To Every One—according to his several ability" (Matt. xxv. 15).—Comparatively few of the Lord's children seem to realize that the success of the Gospel depends in large measure upon them. Few Christians comprehend the solemn truth, that the responsibility for the triumph of Christ's dying love devolves upon them. Is it not time that God's children everywhere appreciated and exercised their privilege to "publish" the glad tidings of salvation (Mark xvi. 15), to "make disciples" (Matt. xxviii. 19)? Yet timid and ease-loving Christians are prone to excuse their remissness by the plea, "I cannot preach." But dare any plead, "I cannot teach, cannot publish Christ?" Let all children of the Kingdom face their solemn duty, exercise their glad privilege! Test your heart and life by the following questions:—(1) Does my life bring God down to men? (2) Does my love lift men up to God? The HOME MISSIONARY CIRCLE is an organization calculated to ensure an affirmative answer from all those who enrol themselves as members. The Ingathering of Israel.

THE ninety-fourth anniversary of the inauguration of the London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews, was the occasion of a large assembly at Exeter Hall on Friday morning. For an hour prior to the meeting, the Hebrew children from the Society's schools occupied the orchestra, and sang a number of sacred melodies. At eleven o'clock the chair was taken by the president, Sir John H. Kennaway, Bart., and an abstract of the report on the year's work was read by Rev. W. T. Gidney. One of the most striking evidences of the removal of Jewish disabilities, and an event of happy augury for the well-being of the Jews in England, is the fact that, for the first time in history, the Monarch's proclamation on accession, at the meeting of the Privy Council, was signed by Jews. The Society recognises its first duty to be to bring under Christian influence Jews who may settle in the Metropolis, as is shown by the fact that the sum of £1,000 was spent last year on parochial missions in eight different parishes in London, in addition to the outlay spent on its central missionary operations in Whitechapel. The total number of missionaries on the Society's staff is now 199, who are spread throughout the cities of Europe, Asia, and Africa, at centres where Jews are to be found in large numbers.

A YEAR OF PROGRESS.

The chief events which have marked the Society's progress during the year are the reopening of the Vienna and Alexandria stations, (the former city with its 150,000 Jews, and the latter, the port of Egypt, offering many facilities in the way of evangelization); the appointment of Rev. J. Carnegie Brown to the Jerusalem mission in succession to Canon Kelk; the erection of a new day school for Jewish girls in Jerusalem; and the acquisition of new mission halls in Liverpool, Hull, and Rotterdam. The opening of a school at Smyrna is also an event which is full of promise. An encouraging report of the Mission's operations in London is given by Rev. Canon A. H. Kelk, who states that the medical mission is invariably well attended, the full number allowed being always present. Many of them, especially the men, come almost entirely for the sake of the addresses.

The work at the mission schools at Streatham Common is bearing fruit. During the year eleven boys and girls were baptized, with the permission of their parents. In other centres of the Metropolis the mission agencies have been carried on with increasing zeal. The young Jewesses of Spitalfields not only assemble in the meetings held specially for them, but also attend gatherings organized primarily for Christian girls. The missionaries in Stepney testify to the great desire which exists, especially among foreign Jews, to learn all they can of the salvation which is by Jesus Christ. The present is a time of sowing in Whitechapel, though signs of harvest are not wanting. In the provinces many doors have opened, and the old bitterness and prejudice of Jews to Christ and his Gospel are fading away.

NOT WAITING TO BE INVITED.

One of the missionaries writes:—"It is a marvellous sight to see the Jews crowding our mission hall without being invited, listening most attentively to the Gospel addresses, and joining in our hymns with the greatest reverence." Concerning the Continental missions, there is every reason to believe that at these centres the preaching of the Gospel and the medical work are progressing with gratifying results. The Asiatic missions are conducted on lines which have been effectual. The work at Jerusalem is being prosecuted with continued vigour. During the year 20,421 prescriptions were given, and 1,042 in-patients received attention.

Speaking from the chair, Sir John Kennaway referred to the steady growth in the operations of the Society. The organization does not grow by leaps and bounds, but persistent efforts are being made to stimulate a deeper interest on the part of Christians in all that concerns the Jewish race. What had been done in the past inspired hope for the future. One of the encouraging signs of the times is the growing interest which the Jew is taking in the welfare of his own race. With regard to the great movements which are agitating the Jewish world to-day, the Chairman felt convinced that these changes are the working out of some great plan in the counsels of the Almighty. Although the Jewish question does not appeal to popular sympathy or imagination, that does not diminish the obligation of the Christian to the Jew.

THE OUTLOOK FOR ISRAEL.

The Bishop of Down and Connor followed with some sympathetic words concerning the Jewish question in the light of Scripture. One great reflex blessing which has flowed to the Christian Church as a result of studying the Jewish question is the deepening of its knowledge of the Word of God. The world has witnessed the scattering of the race, and will yet see its ingathering again. The time must come when the possessors of the land will give way to the people to whom God has appointed it. The Jews are entering into their own country of Palestine, and Jerusalem is once more a Jewish city.

From Smyrna, Rev. J. Muhlenbruch brought encouraging tidings of the progress of the mission. So eager is the reception given by Israel to the Gospel, that the chapel is invariably too small to accommodate the crowds who attend. The school for girls was opened in the autumn, and the need has arisen for a similar institution for boys. The speaker made an earnest appeal for further workers in order that the opportunities of to-day may not be lost.

Sir William T. Charley followed with words of warm appreciation of the aims and accomplishments of the Society. Referring to the persecution to which the Jews are subject in Roumania, the speaker expressed the hope that the English Government would use its influence on behalf of Israel. Rev. J. H. Adeney, B.A., who is labouring under the auspices of the Society at Bucharest, gave a description of what is being done for the Jewish population in the vicinity of the Black Sea, which numbers over a million.

Post, Telegraph, and Telephone.

THE annual conference for Post Office clerks and postmen, held in the City Temple for two days, was marked by high spiritual tone and power, the attendance being larger than has been seen for some years past. The discussion on the work of the Association was good, several of the delegates speaking of how the Lord is laying upon their hearts the need of reaching the men in their own offices individually. The afternoon prayer meetings were blessed times. The afternoon general meetings, addressed by Mrs. Penn Lewis, and the evening meetings, when Rev. Gregory Mantle was the speaker, were well attended. A deep sense of the presence of God prevailed.

At the Tuesday missionary meeting, presided over by Rev. Dunlop Smith (Mr. Albert Head being reluctantly absent through illness), Mr. Jarrett spoke of the needs of Peru, one of the South American Republics where El Correo Evangelico, the P.T.C.A. Gospel paper, is distributed; and Mr. Roberts, of the Kurku Mission, speaking on behalf of India, said: "I am so glad that you are caring for the postal officials of this vast land, for if you did not seek them, they would go unreached." At the Wednesday morning missionary meeting, with Mr. C. F. Harris in the chair, Mr. G. Braithwaite, just back from Japan, gave some interesting details of the P.T.C.A. work in the offices of that rapidly developing country; Miss Soltau pressed the need for prayer for the postal officials of China; and Mr. Hodge, of the Victoria Press for South America, told of the requirements of that continent, and the blessed work given to the Association there through El Correo. Mrs. Warren spoke warmly of the Colonies, and increased the desire to reach for Christ a far larger number of Colonial post offices.

Those two days were a pledge and earnest of much future blessing. One postman's testimony is: "I went to the Conference on Tuesday and Wednesday, and enjoyed it very much indeed. It was a very helpful time. I feel if the men are going to be won for Jesus Christ it must be by individual effort, bringing the Gospel to the men in the office. This is what I have been trying to do, and I feel the Lord is going to bless this effort."

The prayerful sympathy and practical help of God's people is desired; and any wishing for further information are asked to communicate with Miss Edmonstone, P.T.C.A. Senior Institute, 17, Bartholomew Close, E.C.

A Diamond Jubilee Festival.

ALTHOUGH unquestionably leaving much to be desired, the present condition of London compares favourably indeed with sixty years ago. At that time public amusement comprised almost every form of degrading entertainment, while seminaries of vice existed in which the young were systematically trained in crime. It was in these conditions that the Field Lane Ragged Schools and Refuges were founded, and sixty years of strenuous toil, attended by many difficulties and not a few disappointments, have not failed to leave a sacred impression upon the population among whom the work has been carried on. Daily experience emphasizes the need for continuance of the work, and among the many departments of the institution not one will be found which it would not be a misfortune either to abolish or curtail.

Happily no such measures are likely to be taken, for the attendance at this year's festival, held on Friday evening in the Queen's Hall, demonstrated afresh the hearty concern with which the career of the work is followed.

The proceedings were under the presidency of the Marquis of Northampton, and were full of interest. In the course of a happy address, his lordship spoke words of hearty welcome to Her Royal Highness Princess Henry of Battenberg, who always had at heart any efforts which are being made to ameliorate the lot of the poor and outcast. Referring to the Society's work during the past year, the Chairman stated that no fewer than 730 men and women had been sheltered in the refuges, 321 of whom had found employment from there. But the primary object of the institutions was the rescue and care of the children, in whose training no pains are spared. The question was sometimes asked, "Why do ragged schools exist?" To which it must be answered that while there is a possibility of child-life being ruined by contact with various forms of evil, the need for their existence will remain.

After two songs by Madame Antoinette Sterling, and a piece by the boys of the Field Lane Homes, Mr. B. W. Chandler read the treasurer's statement, which showed that the year closes with a balance of £158 in hand. In reviewing the activities of the society during the year, the speaker announced that thirty-two meetings had been held weekly. The work in the refuges and industrial homes had been maintained with zeal and devotion, while Sunday services in the Beggar Church are attended by 500 or 600 men and women who would not otherwise be found in the House of God.

The prizes earned by the boys and girls of the schools were then distributed by Her Royal Highness to happy recipients. After several pieces had been rendered by the scholars, and Madame Antoinette Sterling had given three solos, Rev. A. Boyd Carpenter warmly commended the work of the institutions in a stirring address. All around are men and women struggling against the vices which have taken hold of them. To these the Society holds out a helping hand. But, above all, there is the cry for protection which arises from the children. To this cry the Society, with its network of institutions, responds gladly, and has aroused a widespread spirit of philanthropy. Dr. John Hunter followed with an impassioned appeal on behalf of helpless child-life, urging that it is the Father's will that not one of these little ones should perish.

Protecting Native Races.

THE useful work of shielding native races from the demoralization which follows the importation of strong drink meets with increasing success under the direction of the Native Races and Liquor Traffic United Committee.

Speaking at the annual meeting of the organization, which was held at Grosvenor House, W., on Monday last, Dr. C. F. Harford (hon. secretary, formerly known as Harford-Battersby) told of important advances. He drew particular attention to the steps taken by Lord Milner to prohibit the sale of intoxicants to the natives of the Transvaal; the old prohibition laws being maintained and enforced under a penalty of six months' imprisonment. With reference to this question, Lord Milner writes: "The whole credit of the administration is at stake in the matter, and I feel confident that His Majesty's Government will support us in the view that no effort and no expense should be spared in carrying out a policy which, if successful, will mean a momentous triumph for civilisation in this part of the world." As to Cape Colony, the unanimous opinion of the resident magistrates is strong as to the advantage to the natives of the restrictions imposed by martial law on the sale of intoxicants, and the committee are hoping to secure the permanency of these restrictions by means of their embodiment in the law.

Efforts are also being made to secure the total prohibition of the importation to West Africa of concentrated forms of trade spirit and the prohibition of the transport of spirit by railway.

ANGLO-SAXON CO-OPERATION.

As a result of negotiations, a committee has been formed in New York under the presidency of the Hon. John Foster and already good work has been done; an Act restraining citizens of the United States from selling liquor to natives in the New Hebrides has already passed the Senate. It is anticipated also that further efforts will be made by the United States to promote international agreement on the subject of the liquor traffic.

Sir Mark Stewart, M.P., speaking from the chair, pointed out that the Committee have kept alive an important cause, through a period of general neglect, and their efforts are now bearing valuable fruit.

Dealing with the international aspect of the question, Dr. Cuthbert Hall, who followed, earnestly advocated the hearty co-operation of nations in suppressing the illicit sale of liquor to natives. Particularly he emphasized the grave responsibilities of the Anglo-Saxon peoples towards weak and ignorant races under their rule. By means of just legislation the strong must protect the weak. The speaker quoted a recent utterance of the American Ambassador: "We killed more Indians by drink than ever we shot down by bullets." America, however, has awakened to a strong sense of duty, and any British proposals to bring about united action in the matter will not be made in vain to their kith and kin across the sea.

A PENAL OFFENCE.

The important part played by the administration of Rhodesia in furthering the aims of the committee, was lucidly set forth by Earl Grey, who said that from the first every nerve has been strained to combat the influence of the traders in drink. It is illegal to introduce drink into Rhodesia without the signed permit of a magistrate, and to sell intoxicants to a native for his own consumption is a penal offence. Rhodesia has set an example which other States of Africa may well copy. Earl Grey powerfully contended that the Government should, at this time, expropriate the vested liquor interests in the Transvaal.

Other speakers were Rev. G. Taberer, Rev. Dr. Bannerman (of the Scottish Committee), and Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., who added a vigorous word in condemnation of the "forty or fifty thousand liquor shops" which exist to supply drink to the native races of India.

The Church Army.

THE annual meetings of the Church Army, held on May 7 at St. James' Hall, W., attracted large audiences. In the afternoon, when Earl Beauchamp presided, Mr. Edward Clifford (hon. treasurer and evangelistic secretary) said that during the past year, forty-three trained evangelists and forty-three mission nurses and rescue workers were added to the staff. Notwithstanding these increases, the demands for workers are so numerous that there are always posts waiting. Last year missions were held in twenty-four prisons and forty-two workhouses. The sixty-eight mission vans held 1,293 missions, and sold over £3,200 worth of Bibles, prayer books, &c. Tent missions were conducted in seventy-three slum parishes, when 3,790 services were held, and 1,000 temperance pledges secured.

Mr. Colin F. Campbell (hon. social sec.) created much interest by exhibiting a set of burglar's tools, which have been presented to him by a leading member of the "profession," who, as a result of the Church Army's influence and efforts, "has now no further use for them." Mr. Campbell reported the opening of several new Homes and agencies. A total of over 30,000 cases were dealt with last year. Of these 162 were convicts, 672 from local prisons, and 1,324 from workhouses and casual wards. "No man on leaving prison with a genuine desire to live a better life need complain that he has no chance, for the Church Army has now the means of offering every such man a fresh start."

The Bishop of Brisbane, who followed, spoke highly of the work of two Church Army officers and a mission van in his diocese. The ignorance in the back blocks of the Australian Bush is appalling, and he hoped this work would flourish out there. Words of praise regarding the Church Army operations among the working classes were added by Mrs. Isabella Bishop, and Major Knox (governor of Wandsworth Prison) in commending the prison and rescue missions, said that if such efforts continue their fruitful career, he, the speaker, would be "thrown out of work." The meeting concluded with a fervent appeal from Rev. W. Carlile.

In the evening the Bishop of Islington presided, and addresses were given by the Bishop of New Guinea, Canon Hensley Henson, and Mr. H. C. Richards, M.P., and members of the staff gave vivid accounts of the work.

At the Prison Gate.

THE ministry of the Dublin Prison Gate Mission has been, during the past twenty-five years, the means, under God, by which hundreds of poor women who had lost character and self-respect have been brought under Christian influence and helped to regain a standing in society. There can be no doubt that, in many cases, had not a hand of pity been outstretched the victims would have fallen into yet lower paths, and would have found their way back within the prison walls. The Dormitory Homes afford a safe shelter for ninety of the women and girls who work under the superintendence of the Mission authorities. They are deeply thankful for a quiet home, and the kind but firm supervision maintained becomes a discipline in habits of thrift and self-control, and in withstanding temptation, which prepares them for independent occupations. At the Cottage, over 800 poor women and young women were received during 1901 on coming from the prison gates. To some this is the one opportunity of finding a way of escape from a life of misery and sin, and the open door of the Cottage has been the strength of the Mission. Again and again the workers are cheered by hearing from those who in past years have been helped. Many of these are now settled in life, and speaking of their present happiness they acknowledge with gratitude the assistance given in their time of need. It will interest our readers to learn that the hon. lady superintendent, Miss Price, is one of the Mildmay deaconesses. The secretary of the Mission is Rev. C. F. Wilkinson, 12, Strand Road, Merrion.

Homes for the Aged Poor.

FROM time to time attention has been called to the useful purpose which is served by the Homes for the Aged Poor. This charity relieves the deserving poor from the sad necessity of passing their last years in a workhouse. To this end Homes are provided in which such persons have a room rent free, as well as the advantage and comfort of medical attendance in sickness. The only qualifications for admission are that applicants be fully sixty years of age, of unquestionable respectability, and unable to obtain from any source a larger income than six shillings, or if married, a common income for the couple not exceeding 10s. per week.

The need for such institutions has led to the establishing of fifteen Homes, which are at present full, and many applicants await admission. Twenty-six new inmates were admitted during last year, and a retrospect of the charity from the commencement shows that nearly 600 men and women have been sheltered and cared for in their declining years. The value of the institutions is proved by the inmates, whose gratitude for a haven of rest to spend the closing days of an arduous life is often touching to behold. Copies of the thirty-second annual report will be sent to friends applying to the hon. secretary, Miss Harrison, 86, Penge Road, Anerley, S.E.

The Soul and the Saviour.

"Not he that commendeth himself is approved, but whom the Lord commendeth" (2 Cor. x. 18).

"Lo, I am rich, increased with goods,"
Self murmured in its pride,
"Nay, thou art wretched, poor, undone,"
The voice from heaven replied.

"Yet wherefore? God's most holy law
Before me I have set.
What lack I?" "Poor, misguided soul,
One thing thou lackest yet."

"Yet, were it so, the Judge, I ween,
Would pass a fault so small?"
"He who offendeth once, 'tis held,
He hath come short in all."

"Then am I guilty: yet, I will,
Amend my life with care."
"Alas! poor soul, what canst thou do?
Or how the past repair?"

"I'll give my goods to feed the poor,
My body to be burned."
"The noblest off'ring, without love,
Would certainly be spurned."

"I'll wet my couch with tears; I'll pray
From early dawn till night."
"Nor tears nor prayers can ever wash
Thy sin-stained garments white."

"Too late, alas! I clearly see,
My miserable state!"
"The door of mercy open stands,
Why should'st thou say 'too late'?"

"God's mercy I have never sought,
Now am I lost, undone."
"To save the lost Jehovah gave His well-beloved Son."

"My secret sins before his face
As mountains seem to rise."
"Higher than highest mountains are,
His mercy spans the skies."

"Ah, might I only hear from Him,
The whisper, 'I forgive'!"
"Listen: his message comes to thee;
He says, 'Believe and live.'"

"How shall the past be blotted out?"
"There is a crimson tide."
"What shall I answer to the foe?"
"This only, 'Jesus died.'"

"Lord, I believe. I bring no plea,
But just my sin and need;
And that thy gracious word is 'Come.'"
"Now art thou mine indeed."

The Private Door.

"GOD enters by a private door into every individual." Like all very sweeping assertions, this is only partly true. It is true in the case of the broken, longing heart which, hungering for God after a surfeit of self, opens to Him the most private door of its inner sanctuary; and, having opened this once, closes it to all else for ever, and gives God the key. After that, only God may open, and to whom He will.

It is not true in the case of some who would, apparently, entertain God as they entertain their friends—now and then, for a change, or as may fit their mood. There is no private door here, and God is expected to go in with the crowd, having nearly an equal place with business, pleasure, amusements, acquaintances, and all the trivialities that do duty as the proprieties in the procession of worldly life.

"Not everyone that saith unto Me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven," said Jesus; not "every individual," as the Concord philosopher puts it; but only those who seek to do the will of the Father who is in heaven. Only those and all those who, by the fructifying beams of the Sun of Righteousness, the Holy Spirit, are led to "bring forth fruits meet for repentance;" that branch watered by tears and grafted by Divine love upon the Tree of Life, which is in the midst of the garden of God. "The garden of God!" Has not He Himself said of his own, "Their soul shall be like a watered garden" (Jer. xxxi. 12)? And to complete a picture of the care and watchfulness of the Owner of the garden, may we not recall words used in another connection, but none the less applicable to the present case—"I the Lord do keep it; I will water it every moment; lest any hurt it, I will keep it night and day" (Isa. xxvii. 3)?

A SECLUDED SPOT.

There is a garden, not many miles from the rush and roar of the busy life of the city, where the seclusion, the peace, the quiet, the calm, the beauty and the fruitfulness are perfect. A very old, high, strong wall surrounds it; none of its beauties can be seen from the road, but sweet odours are wafted upwards, and descend upon gentle air, to greet and to comfort the stifled sense of the wayworn, the worker, the needy, and the sorrowful. In the wall of the garden is an almost hidden private door; rose-bushes grow before it, and it is used only by one, the owner of the garden. Here, remote from the grosser cares of earthly existence, shut in from noise, and environed by life and beauty, he communes with his Maker, and learns, in this lovely solitude, "the deep things of God." This is but a poor, earthly picture; but we can gather from it something, in proportion, of our Lord's satisfaction after his admission into, and cultivation of, the garden of a human soul. We are told, "The Lord taketh pleasure in them that are his"; every flower of grace, every blossom of love, every bud and leaf of life and truth that unfolds before and responds to his divine influence, gives Him peculiar pleasure, for "the Lord's joy is in his people."

THE WAITING SAVIOUR.

A great artist has painted a picture of the Saviour standing before a door almost blocked by the tangled growths of ill-weeds and hurtful vines and creepers. The expression on his face is very sad. He has knocked and, as yet, there has been no response. He knocks again, and this time there is a little stir as of one setting the rooms in order for an unexpected caller. A voice within is heard saying: "I am very busy; there is much to do. I did not think you would come to-day. Wait a little time, and I will open to you when I have swept and garnished, and made ready for you."

The voice of Jesus is low, but full of power, as He says: "Now is the accepted time; to-day is the day of salvation. Open unto Me, for without Me ye can do nothing."

But again the voice inside is heard, and this time there is not so much stir, as if carelessness had taken the place of sudden anxiety: "Go thy way for this time; when I have a convenient season I will call for Thee."

Yet once again the Saviour knocks: "Why will ye die? Ye will not come unto Me that ye might have life!"

Tender reproach, a warning note of the danger of delay, are in his voice. Perhaps there is silence behind the door, or sounds of merrymaking and feasting, or just the dull whispers of one nearly choked by the cares of this life. But Jesus is not to be denied, his voice rises above all other voices:—

Behold Me standing at the door,
And hear Me pleading evermore—
Oh! weary heart, oppressed by sin,
May I come in? May I come in?

Who could resist such an appeal? Presently the door slowly opens, and the Light of the world, Love passing all understanding, Life eternal, enters into possession of his own. But, first, all the unholy traffickers, all the hindrances to holiness, all the friends of Death, have to be driven out of his temple—the temple of the Holy Ghost—just as he drove out the money-changers and world-mongers from his Temple of old.

These go out by the common door, over whose broad portal may be read its name—"World's gate." This the King now bolts and bars against all those who formerly entered thereby. He sheds the healing light of his presence upon every part of his new Kingdom, and garrisons it at the four corners with the Christ-Man's panoply—Life, Love, Light, and Liberty—the liberty of Christ wherewith are enfranchised all who open unto Him God's private door: all who, contrite, needy, helpless, realizing their undoneness without Him, turn to Him whose hand is upon the latch, and bid Him enter, for they can no longer live without Him.

O Jesus! Thou art standing
Outside the fast-closed door,
In lowly patience waiting
To pass the threshold o'er.
Oh, love that passeth knowledge,
So patiently to wait!
Oh, sin that hath no equal,
So fast to bar the gate!

. . . .

O Lord, with shame and sorrow,
We open now the door;
Dear Saviour, enter, enter,
And leave us never more!

Oh, the magnitude and marvel of this miracle—the rebirth of the soul; the eternal, undying miracle of the love of God by Jesus Christ, that a man may become partaker of, and heir to, the Divine nature simply by humble acceptance of the everlasting sacrifice of the Son of God! Oh, the comfort of pardon! The security of being hidden with Christ in God! The rest that for ever remains to "the people of God," as they dwell "under the shadow of the Almighty," or lie upon the breast of their Saviour, as did "that other disciple" of old.

In these early days of the earth's rebirth, let us look over our possible possessions:—

For the sinner, the Saviour, "who loved me and gave Himself for me."

For the lukewarm, "his Word was in mine heart as a burning fire."

For the Christian, "I am come that they might have LIFE, and that they might have it more abundantly." M. B. GERDS.

The Vision of God.

IT is powerful against all the ills, and toward all the aims, of life. It gives, as with Simeon and the Old Testament saints, Realization to the hopes of Faith. It inspires, as with Jacob at Peniel, and the disciples on the lake, Confidence in the Hour of Peril. It bestows, as upon Mary at the sepulchre, Comfort for the Sorrows of Life. It sheds, as upon the travellers to Emmaus, Light in the Crisis of Perplexity. It breathes, as in the Upper Room on the first Easter evening, Peace in the Time of Trouble. It brings home, as to Thomas, Certainty in the Midst of the Conflict of Doubt. It stimulates courage, even for the agony of martyrdom, as with suffering Stephen. It quickens life from the revelation of a life victorious over death eternally, as with John in Patmos. But with all these gifts there is another upon which the rest depend. It arouses, as with Job, Isaiah, and Peter, the deepened Conviction of Sin. T. A. GURNEY.

The Loss of the Ark of God.

(1 Sam. iv. 1-11.)

Yet the power appears to-morrow,
That to-day seems wholly lost;
And the reproductive sorrow
Is a treasure worth the cost.
—Houghton.

THE capture of the Ark of God by the Philistines was the sorest blow that had ever fallen upon the nation of Israel. The corrupt state of the priesthood was to blame for this national failure and disgrace. There is a closer connection between holy living and national prosperity than many in these days seem to think. The Philistines, as the enemies of the Lord's people, are always aggressive when Israel is in a backsliding condition. The lusts of the flesh are sure to prevail when the soul gets out of communion with God.

I. WHAT THE ARK SIGNIFIED.—It was the symbol of the presence of God. It was the throne on which the Lord sat, and from which He ruled and taught his people (Ex. xxv. 22). It was also the mercy seat; the medium through which He communed with Israel. What the Ark was to them, Christ is to us—the resting-place, the medium of communion, and the channel of revelation and blessing.

II. WHEN THE ARK WAS BROUGHT OUT.—After they had been smitten before their enemies, they said, "Let us fetch the Ark of the Covenant of the Lord out; it may save us" (v. 3). It is good to fall back on God in the day of defeat. But is the favour and help of God only to be sought after we have done our best to succeed without Him? Man's extremity may be God's opportunity; but why should God's opportunity only come after we have persistently ignored Him, till we are dead beat?

III. THE DREAD OF THE PHILISTINES AT THE ARK.—"When they understood that the Ark of the Lord was come into the camp, they were afraid" (vv. 6-8). So well they might, if that Ark represents the presence of that Almighty God who smote the Egyptians with plagues, and wrought such miracles in the wilderness on their behalf (v. 8). If this is so, then, battling against the people of God, they will be found fighting against God Himself. Alas, how often we Christians forget what the men of the world remember, that if Christ is with us mighty works should show themselves; and that the more closely we are identified with Him in our work and warfare, the more difficult and desperate does their own condition appear (v. 9; Luke xvi. 8).

IV. THE FAITH OF ISRAEL IN THE ARK.—"It may save us out of the hand of our enemies." It is quite clear that their faith in the invisible God had withered up into a superstitious reverence for the material Ark. They worshipped the form, but denied the power. The God-deserted Ark (Psa. lxxviii. 60) was everything, while He, who inhabited eternity, had no place in their hearts. Instead of saying, "Let us fetch the Ark," had they said, "Let us confess our sins, and return to the Lord," He would doubtless have saved them. Multiplying forms in religious services will afford no security against the inroads of the enemy. The Gospel that is not in the power of the Spirit of God is only the Ark with the glory departed (see 1 Cor. iv. 20).

V. THE CAPTURE OF THE ARK.—"The Ark of God was taken" (v. 11). The object of their confidence was taken from them, that their faith might be in God only. Let us learn from this—

(1) That ungodly men cannot preserve the power of religion. The dissolute and licentious sons of Eli had charge of the Ark of the Covenant (v. 4). What a God-dishonouring association! They must be clean that bear the vessels of the Lord.

(2) That the Lord will not protect forms when the spirit is gone. There is nothing in an empty dish to satisfy either God or man.

(3). That sin always brings defeat. If we regard iniquity in our heart, the Lord will not hear. The secret sin of Achan brought open shame on Israel. Remember the disobedience of Saul. The wages of sin is death.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

NEWMARKET.

A SERIES of four meetings, under the auspices of the British Women's Temperance Association, and conducted by Rev. Dr. J. Q. A. Henry, were held at Newmarket—the headquarters of English horseracing—on May 6 and 7. They began with a gathering for children on Tuesday, when the Town Hall was filled to its utmost capacity with young people, many of whom before the meeting closed signed the total abstinence pledge. After a short interval, the Town Hall again filled—this time with adults—who listened with deep interest and attention to the forcible and earnest words of Dr. Henry. Although many pledges were not taken, some of those who did sign occupied prominent positions in the town. The chair was taken on both these occasions by Rev. A. J. Cooney, rector of Roughton, Norfolk.

On Wednesday afternoon, through the kindness of Dr. and Mrs. Gray, a drawing-room meeting was held at Lushington House, and those present will not soon forget the solemn and impressive words spoken upon the occasion. The closing meeting of the series was held in the Town Hall on the same evening, when that building was once more filled to the utmost with an eager, expectant, and attentive audience. They were not disappointed; God's presence was manifestly with the speaker.

He gave a splendid address, full of strong argument and pointed appeal, in the course of which he said that forty years ago alcohol was believed to be the panacea for all ills. Now, modern science has established that alcohol is not a food, and does not give strength. Dr. Henry concluded by emphasizing the responsibilities of moderate drinkers, and by an appeal to all for the sake of their health, their home, their influence, their nation, and for their Saviour's sake, to abstain. The chair was taken at both of the Wednesday meetings by Rev. S. Hooke, rector of Clopton and Rural Dean.

All the gatherings were most stimulating and encouraging to the members of the B.W.T.A., who are determined, under the leadership of their indefatigable and large-hearted president, Mrs. Henry Bullman, to persevere in the war against intemperance in Newmarket, with the help that God the Holy Spirit will give. There was much prayer and preparation for these meetings; the whole town was systematically visited from house to house.

FALKIRK.

Dr. Henry's mission at Falkirk opened on May 10 with splendid promise; among other encouraging signs were great congregations, profound interest, and the securing, in the first two days, of fully 400 pledges. An esteemed correspondent writes: "The United Temperance Committee were very fortunate in securing Dr. Henry's services to consolidate the temperance work that has been going on. On Saturday last, at 3 p.m., a children's meeting was held. Immediately after, an adult procession was formed, numbering about 1,000 persons, headed by a brass band and banners. After marching through the principal streets, the processionists returned to the Town Hall and gave the missioner a hearty welcome. On the Sabbath, at 3 p.m., the hall was filled, while at night hundreds were turned away, the hall being densely crowded by an audience estimated at nearly 2,000 persons. Many stood throughout the entire service, which began forty-five minutes before time, on account of the crowd. Dr. Henry spoke on 'The Drink; the Judas Iscariot of the Modern World.' The vast audience alternately cheered, wept, and prayed, as speakers are seldom permitted to see their congregations do. It was a tremendous hour." Provision is being made for overflow meetings, and the friends who made the arrangements are much encouraged by the many manifestations of popular interest.

FUTURE MEETINGS.

May 17, Manchester Christian Endeavour Convention; 18-23, Dr. Barnardo's "Edinburgh Castle," Limehouse, E.; 25 (U.F.C. Assembly Temperance Sabbath), Glasgow—11 a.m. Rev. Dr. Wells' Church, Pollokshields; 2 p.m., Finnieston U.F. Obituary.

MR. WILLIAM GIFFORD.

THE congregation of the Talbot Tabernacle, Notting Hill, have been called to mourn the loss of Mr. William Gifford, who fell asleep in Jesus on Tuesday, 6th inst. Mr. Gifford had been a member of the church from its formation, under the ministry of Mr. Gordon Forlong, thirty-three years ago; and for a long period filled the office of elder. For twenty-seven years he was associated with the work of the Sunday school, of which for more than half that time he was a devoted and much-beloved superintendent. "The gates are opening," exclaimed this dear servant of Christ, as he lay in much bodily suffering, a few days before he passed through to be for ever with the Lord.

MR. TOM ELLIOTT.

Many will hear with sorrow that Mr. Tom Elliott, who was glad to be known as "the happy shoemaker," has departed this life. He was a familiar figure at Gospel meetings, especially gatherings of men only, and was never weary of telling the story of his salvation from sin, and his call to the service of Christ. For about thirty-five years he had been established in Westbourne Grove, where he carried on business in conjunction with two of his sons. The sad event came very suddenly, although Mr. Elliott had for years suffered from an internal trouble. On Thursday, April 24, he was in his usual health when leaving his residence at Forest Gate. During the day he was suddenly taken ill at his Westbourne Grove establishment and died on Saturday morning.

Mr. Elliott was a member of the Methodist community. In the temperance movement he was an indefatigable worker, being on the plan of the Church of England Temperance Society, for which institution he rendered extensive assistance in speaking at meetings, &c. The Pleasant Sunday Afternoon movement claimed much of his interest, and he was in the habit of offering prizes at various Brotherhoods to the member who brought the highest number of recruits. Another social work in which he was interested was the Young Men's Christian Association, among the members of which he was highly respected. He was on the committee of the Bayswater Association. Mr. Elliott was a benevolent man, and his kindness of heart and happy disposition endeared him to all with whom he came in contact. He was sixty years of age, and leaves a widow and eight children.

MR. JOHN E. O. NONNEN.

Missionary effort in South America is the poorer by the death of Mr. John E. O. Nonnen on the frontier of British Guiana, where he was engaged in mission work with Mr. George R. Witte. The mission post was near the River Tacutu, the eastern confluent of the Rio Branco, among the Amazonian Indians. When in Edinburgh for education, Mr. Nonnen enjoyed the stimulating ministry of Rev. Dr. J. H. Wilson. His heart was early given to Christ. When it was deemed advisable that the family property be sold, he rejoiced to be set free to go out as a missionary to the heathen, and that the way was providentially opened up for him to join an Industrial Mission to be commenced among the Indians in North Brazil. His day's work was short, as he joined the mission in May, 1900, but it was toilsome.

There had been a serious fever epidemic all along the Tacutu. The mission party, consisting of Mr. George Witte, Mr. Nonnen, and Dr. Luiz (their teacher), as well as two Indian boys then staying with them, had been ill with it. Mr. Nonnen had a relapse, and was being taken away for change and to get rest and more suitable food for an invalid at the home of a kind Brazilian friend at Tapuçu, when he passed away, on the night of January 1, shortly after Dr. Luiz was called home.

The following extracts are from a recent letter:—"We wish that Christians who are themselves saved by the sacrifice and obedience of Christ would see more clearly their duty to obey his last command, to spread the knowledge of salvation to every creature and to the uttermost parts of the earth. It is a great privilege to be one of those who, in a humble way, have some part in the spreading of Christ's kingdom; still greater is the privilege to make some sacrifices for the spread of the Gospel and to suffer for his name sake. Often what we should consider as a joy we take as a hardship."

LORD ROBERT MONTAGU.

The death on Tuesday of last week of Lord Robert Montagu marks the close of a career which has, at different times, claimed the close attention of active Protestant workers. Born in 1825, he was the second son of George, sixth Duke of Manchester. Educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, he took his M.A. degree there in 1848. Entering political life, he was elected in 1859 one of the members of Parliament for the county of Huntingdon; and from 1867 to 1868 held the office of vice-president of the Committee of Council on Education. He was also sworn a member of the Privy Council, and appointed First Charity Commissioner in 1867. A great shock was given to Protestant sentiment throughout the country when, in 1870, Lord Robert was received into the Roman Catholic Church, in which communion he remained for twelve years.

Various changes in his lordship's plans followed, his final retirement from Parliament occurring in 1880, after having relinquished his Huntingdonshire seat for the representation of Westmeath. When his return to the Evangelical fold took place two years later, he became an ardent advocate of Protestantism by tongue and pen. At a great Protestant Convention, held in Glasgow in 1886, he gave an important and far reaching address on "The Principles of the Church of Rome." After exposing in scathing words the state of affairs as he had found it, he summed up the lessons of the times by declaring that "the Papacy is using the Roman Catholic Church in Ireland, and the ignorance of the Irish peasants, as well as the learned and accomplished Ritualists, bishops, and statesmen in England, to spread and enforce those principles, and to form a base of operations against Europe, America and our colonies. Great Britain is to be crushed under the Pope's feet, and is then to be used as a fulcrum against the liberties and all that is pure in the religion of Christendom. Enormous issues are involved in the success of the conspirators. The overthrow of the Protestant Crown and Protestant Churches of Great Britain is the destruction of Protestantism throughout the world, and the establishment of the absolute and universal dominion of the Pope."

In another speech at the same Convention, Lord Robert gave it as the result of his experience that among Romish prelates there is an immense amount of infidelity. They all know, he said, that what they teach cannot be true, and so they are unbelievers.

Evangelical Effort in Finland.

WE have on several previous occasions drawn attention to the effort being made to provide an evangelical place of worship at Helsingfors, the capital of Finland. Mrs. Parker, formerly of Birmingham, but now for many years a resident at the Finnish capital, has been devoting her time and energy for several years towards raising the needed £4,000 for the accomplishment of this enterprise.

A site, advantageously situated, has been secured, and £2,600 is already in hand. The treasurer of the fund is Mr. Joseph Good, of Hull. Letters may be addressed to Mrs. Parker, care of Miss Mason, the House of Rest, 10, Finchley Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, May 18. Leviticus xxiii.

THIS profound chapter records the sacred festivals which composed the cycle of the Jewish year. Beginning with the Sabbath, though it can hardly be counted as a set feast, we are led from the Feast of the Passover to that of Tabernacles, whereof the first stands for Calvary, and the last for the great multitude which no man can number (Rev. vii. 9). All of these are, however, inaugurated and governed by the law of the Sabbath, because it is only as we enter into the Divine rest that we can properly appreciate the vast cycle of the Divine activity, or co-operate with God for the accomplishment of his purpose (vv. 1-3).

The Passover (4-8) is the type of our redemption by the blood of the Lamb of God, shed for the remission of sins, and for our passage with Him from the land of slaves unto that of freed men. The Feast of First-fruits (9-14) is the type of the resurrection of Christ from the dead, the First-fruits of them that sleep, representing all his saints, who have risen in the Divine purpose, and shall rise in blessed experience. The presentation of the wave-loaves (15-22) typifies the Day of Pentecost, for have we not the first-fruits of the Spirit? The seventh month, with its Day of Atonement (23-32), stands for the awakening of Israel to claim their long-lost glory, and, above all, to be reconciled with God. The Feast of Tabernacles (39-44) anticipates the blessed time when the harvest and the vintage of the world shall have been gathered in, and when the children of the Great King shall gather in the Heavenly City, with everlasting joy upon their heads.

Notice the reference to the stranger (22). It is as though the Divine heart could never forget the Gentile world, and was constantly insisting on some gleanings of Jewish blessing being left for us. It was thus that Ruth gleaned in the fields of Boaz.

MONDAY, May 19. Leviticus xxiv.

The testimony of God's people to Himself is set forth in the continual burning of the lamp from evening to morning. They would not continue thus, if it were not for the oil of the Holy Spirit, and the gracious ordering of our Great High Priest. But, as the dark night hangs like a pall over the world, and the sun has set in blood, it is meet that the world should not be left to grope absolutely in the dark. This testimony is precious to God; but it is absolutely needed by man. It was yielded once by Israel, but now by the Church.

The next paragraph (5-9) is held by the best interpreters to furnish a striking figure of Israel's condition in God's view. They are ever before Him, and their memorial can never perish. They stand in their Divine order, and are as frankincense, in spite of their many sins. It is an interesting corroboration of this view to find the apostle speaking of the twelve ribes (Acts xxvi. 6, 7), long after they had, to all appearances, been utterly dispersed. All through these weary centuries, the Divine Husband of the Hebrew race has kept them well in view. They are put away for a time only, in outward seeming, but they are as dear as ever to his heart (Rom. xi. 25-36).

The blasphemer was stoned. Yes, though the loaves stood before God, as representing the entire people, yet the individual sinner was cut off. All were not Israel, who were of Israel. We may belong to a godly family, and come of a chosen race, but we must for ourselves repent, believe, and be saved. No amount of privilege can save us, if we presumptuously and wilfully transgress against the commandments of God.

TUESDAY, May 20. Leviticus xxv.

"The land is mine"—that is the keynote of this chapter. God, for some inscrutable reason, has appropriated the land of Canaan for Himself. Though the least of all lands, how marvellously it has been honoured! And Israel was located there only as his tenants, not as actual possessors. They had no right to sell any part of it, but only to raise money by its temporary alienation till the year of Jubilee. They were never to forget that they were only strangers and sojourners in the Divine company. "Ye are strangers and sojourners with Me." Is not this true of all our possessions? They really are not ours. God loans them to us for a period, that we may act as his stewards, and if we looked at them rightly we should administer them—using what is necessary for our own maintenance, but always considering what He wishes us to do with the residue.

What a blessed type the year of Jubilee gave of that "acceptable year of the Lord" which our Saviour came to preach (Luke iv. 19). We have sold ourselves for nought, but we may be redeemed without money. Each enslaved soul may go forth out of his prison-house at the sounding of the Gospel trumpet.

Let us ponder well the command that the land should have a rest during the seventh year. To rest, to worship, to enjoy our home life is a duty, and God will care, meanwhile, for those who trust Him.

WEDNESDAY, May 21. Leviticus xxvi.

When Frederick the Great asked his Court chaplain for an argument which by itself should establish the truth of Christianity, the answer came back, quick as lightning, "The Jews, sire." It is only necessary to compare the threatenings of this chapter with the actual experiences which have befallen the chosen people, to learn the absolute fitness of the reply. While they obeyed Jehovah their power was felt, as in the days of David, to the limits of the River on the one hand and of the Great Sea on the other. But since their disobedience and rejection, history has been witness to the seven times more plagues (vv. 18, 21, 24, 28).

According to Josephus, 1,100,000 perished during the siege of the city under Titus; and from that moment, through the Middle Ages, the history of the Jews is one long series of persecutions, fines, oppressions, and martyrdoms. Take, for instance, their awful sufferings when banished from Spain by Ferdinand and Isabella, and 800,000 souls were suddenly expatriated from a country where they and their ancestors had resided in safety for centuries.

Notice that the severe pains and penalties which God inflicts are not arbitrary, but intended to bring the sufferers to repentance: "If ye will not hearken unto Me. . . ." "If ye will not be reformed by Me. . . ." "If ye will walk contrary unto Me. . . ." Words like these precede each series of denunciations. But, amid it all, the heart of their Almighty Friend would yearn over them, and anxiously await the first symptom of repentance (40, 44). But the land should "enjoy her Sabbaths." A long arrear of Sabbatic years had accumulated through the avarice and apostasy of Israel, which were wiped out by the seventy years' captivity. God's Word cannot fail, or be evaded. If we seek to escape it in one direction, it will certainly take us in another.

THURSDAY, May 22. Leviticus xxvii.

The Children of Israel might, if they chose, devote themselves, their beasts, their houses, and their fields unto the Lord; but in the event of any change taking place in their plans, they were permitted to redeem what they had devoted. This chapter fixes the amount of the redemption money, which the priest had the discretionary power to reduce, if he thought fit. For those of mature age, the redemption money was highest, because their services were most valuable; and the scale was graduated and proportioned to the means of the poor.

It is interesting to compare this graduated scale with the fixed half-shekel, which each was required to give as atonement money (Ex. xxx. 15). In regard to atonement, all stood on the same level, because we are all alike redeemed by the precious blood of Christ; but in regard to gift and service, there is an infinite variety. "According to his ability that vowed, shall the priest value him" (v. 8).

"All the tithe of the land!" What a blessing would come on us all, and what an abundance to our Christian societies, if all Christian people did only as much as the Jews! Many say that they have given all to Christ, and refuse to be under legal obligations. But if they were to count up, they would find that their total givings come to much less than a tenth. Better go back to legalism than exonerate such parsimony. I believe that we go through law to grace, through Moses to the liberty of the Gospel; and I earnestly ask all who read this page to resolve from now to give a tenth of their income, or of the average of their income over three years, to God's service. What a luxury it is to administer his share of every sovereign that comes to us!

For twelve months Israel had been encamped at Sinai. During that time, a horde of slaves had been transformed into a nation, an elaborate code of legislation had been promulgated, and the Tabernacle, with its elaborate Levitical courses, had been erected. It was now necessary, before the march for Canaan was resumed, that a census should be taken, and arrangements made for the order of the march.

The enumeration for the census was confined to those capable of bearing arms, from twenty years old and upward; and there was a careful distinction made of the tribe, the family, and the household, to which every individual belonged. There was a head for each tribe, and other heads of the various branches of the tribe, so that a perfect system united the whole people into one organic body. Order and system are Heaven's first law, and should prevail in every part of the Church of God, and in her service to men. There will be different tribes and organizations, but we should be animated by one Spirit, and directed by one Head.

Including women, children, and old men, the whole population must have amounted to about 2,400,000. What a wonderful commentary on the Divine promise to Abraham, and how wonderful the miracle by which the daily supplies of food were provided. Are we able to declare our pedigrees? Do we certainly know our lineage, our union with God's children, our birth into the family of God by regeneration and adoption? (18). Do we know our own standard? (52).

The Levites kept a register of their own, and were exempted from military service, because employed exclusively in the service of the sanctuary. But how useful that function was! How truly they earned their maintenance. Lord, give us place among thy militant hosts, if it please Thee; but one day in thy courts is better than a thousand.

The camp of Israel must have been characterized by a great variety of standards, for not only was there one for each tribe, but for each family; and every man pitched by his own standard, and each marched in his own division. Judah, Issachar, and Zebulun, pitched on the east of the Tabernacle, and led the van in the march; Reuben, Simeon, and Gad, pitched on the south, and marched next. In the march the Levites followed these two great divisions, bearing the Tabernacle. Ephraim, Manasseh, and Benjamin pitched on the west, and marched after the Tabernacle; hence it is written, "Before Ephraim and Manasseh, stir up thy strength and come and save us." The rearguard was formed by Dan, Asher, and Naphtali, who pitched on the north.

We do not wonder at Balaam's exclamation: "How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob, and thy tabernacles, O Israel! As the valleys are they spread forth, as gardens by the river's side, as the trees of lign aloes which the Lord hath planted." Have you, my reader, taken up your position in the sacramental host of God's elect? You ought to have your place in the encampment and in the march! And there is a place for you in the purpose of God; but you must discover and take it. It will never do for you to be an outsider in the great march of God's Israel, lest you be regarded as one of the mixed multitude, which accompanied Israel, but were not part of Israel, and had neither part nor lot in the Land of Promise!

"Love."

LOVE is the best and greatest thing in the world, and the strongest thing, too. Try and imagine what this world—or our own little world, our home—would be like if all the love was taken out of it! If every spark of love was gone out of your heart, what would it be like? Such a dreadful, cold, hard thing. Hell is a place without any love, all hatred and horror and fear.

I want you to think what a wonderful thing a mother's love is. Mother never thought of herself when she nursed you and cared for you, sat up night after night tending you when you were ill; there are thousands of mothers and fathers, and millions of children in this world, all with their hearts full of love; but if you could gather all the love in the world into one, it would fall far short of the mighty love of God.

"God is Love." All the love in this world came first from God; all the sin and unhappiness is caused by the Evil One, our great enemy, and he puts wrong thoughts about God in people's hearts. The heathen nations all think of God as a great, cruel Being who likes to see them suffer, and whose anger can only be turned away by cruelty and pain, and so they torture themselves and their children, thinking to satisfy God. The good God must be angry at sin; but He pities the poor sinner. He so loved the perishing world that He gave his only Son to bear the punishment which sin deserved. Oh, wonderful, wonderful love!

God's Love is Omnipotent, all powerful; no one too bad, no one too far gone, no heart too hard for God's love to reach. A ship sailing round the coast of Cornwall was overtaken with a storm and sprang a leak; the pumps were unavailing; so the boats were got out, and all but one man had jumped in, and that one was the captain's only son. "Oh! save him, save him," cried the captain, and they got the boat near enough, and the young fellow was about to spring over the side of the vessel, when a huge wave sent him backwards. "Don't trouble, father, I am saved," he cried, and was gone. That father's love was not omnipotent, but our God can save to the very uttermost.

God's Love is Vanquishing, it conquers all difficulties, subdues all evil. Man sinned, heaven's door was shut, there seemed no hope; Satan seemed to have conquered, but God's love overcame, and devised the plan by which we could be saved. And now if we will only let that love take possession of our hearts, it will make us "more than conquerors."

God's Love is Everlasting, it never ends, it never tires. Father was just starting off for business in the City, and had mounted his horse, when out ran the children to say good-bye. "Good bye, father," they shouted. "We do love you." Father checked his horse, and said, "How much do you love me?" The youngest said, "I love you all that," stretching out her arms full length. "Oh, father," said Robert, "I love you three miles long." But the eldest said, "Dear father, I love you all the way." That is how God loves us—all the way through this world, right into heaven, and on and on throughout Eternity.

How much do I love God?

"Tongue and Temper."

James iii.

Two grim monsters loom before me,
Clothed in scowls and armed with darts.
Oh! the homesteads they have darkened,
Oh! the many sundered hearts,
Oh! the words like pointed arrows,
They have launched in selfish ire!
Dealing woe, and tears, and sadness,
Rankling, while they scorch like fire:

Tongue and Temper. Adder's poison
Lurks beneath your deadly root!
Love lies bleeding where you slew it!
Fear usurps its place and fruit:
Life grows old, and tired and weary:
Discontent sits moping nigh,
In the homes that you have blighted—
Blighted daily, ruthlessly!

Reader, do you know these monsters?
Do you seat them by your side?
Do you feed them by indulgence
In your arrogance and pride?
Do you say "'Tis only temper,
Just a little nasty word,
Merely said from careless habit,
Quite forgotten, soon as heard."
Ah! my friend, such words are written
Where you'll hear them ring again,
O'er the universe of judgment,
For the hearts that now you pain!

Tongue and temper! arms of evil
Used by Satan at his will.
Lay them down in full surrender
To your Lord, and then be still.
He can fill your heart with sweetness,
He can teach your lips to speak
Words of tenderness and kindness,
Words like his, the "lowly, meek,"
He can tame what no man tameth,
Tongue and temper lull to rest;
Tune to harmony your discords!
Plant his peace within your breast!

Armenian Destitute Children.—Seventeen boys and girls are now being cared for at the Thoumaian Armenian Home, Chigwell, Essex. Some of them are learning trades outside, but all are being trained and educated for the duties of life. Most of those in the Home have acquired such a knowledge of English that they are attending a neighbouring Board School. Their day-school studies are supplemented by Armenian lessons in the Home, and special attention is given to their training in Bible and religious knowledge. The holding of public meetings for disseminating information continues to be one of the principal branches of the work for Armenia. Thousands by this means hear of the country, and become interested in her persecuted people. Unfortunately the past year has witnessed a falling off in the supply of parcels of clothing, and an urgent appeal is made for such gifts. Rev. Professor Thoumaian, superintendent, may be addressed at the Home.

SOMETIMES it seems as though the "therefore" of the first verse carries us back to the reasoning of the Apostle in the sixth chapter, for the word "present" is, of course, the same as in chapter vi. 19. It may be that the Apostle was carried away by a torrent of holy and impassioned eloquence, and that thought after thought laid hold upon him, bearing him forward to the magnificent doxology with which the previous chapter closes (xi. 36), and that now he returns to quiet reasoning for a holy and surrendered life. But however you interpret it, of whatever line of argument this is the conclusion, it is remarkable how, throughout his Epistles, the Apostle always connects his profoundest doctrine with his most practical exhortation. The doctrine is always the base of the exhortation; the exhortation is the flower of which the doctrine is the root.

We are bidden to present our bodies to God, probably as standing for the entire nature, and also because it is more easy for us to control the motions of our members than the trains of thought and emotion which pass through the depths of our being. To control the tongue is often to stay the outburst of ungovernable anger. To withhold the hand is to stay the impulse of evil. To govern the eye is to be delivered from the cause of unholy passion. The body is to be a living sacrifice. It is comparatively easy to die once, but the difficulty is to live always as those who have no aim or purpose to serve save that of the will of God. Do not expect to have an easy life, for just as often as your will meets the will of God, your programme his programme, your way his way, there will be a cross. Offer yourself upon it. Bind the sacrifice with cords to the horns of the altar. Refuse to be fashioned according to the spirit of the present age, in which the human and selfish are the governing features. Set your mind on God and his work, and as you do so a gracious transformation and transfiguration will pass over you, and you will become like Him to whom you are devoted; and two things will happen. On the one hand, your sacrifice will be acceptable to God, and, on the other, you will discover that God's perfect will is good and acceptable to you. How often people fret and chafe against the will of God, counting it anything but good and acceptable until they have yielded to it, and then they discover that it is all that the Apostle says of it.

Dr. Moule, in his Commentary on this Epistle, renders the text thus:—"Do not grow conformed to this world, but grow transfigured by the renewing of your mind, so as that you test (discerning as by a spiritual touchstone) what is the will of God, the good, and acceptable, and perfect." Again, "The Roman Christian, and his English younger brother, are called to a transaction with the Lord quite definite. They are called, as if once for all, to look their Lord in the face, to clasp his gifts in their hands, and then to put themselves and his gifts altogether into his hands, for perpetual use and service."

The chapter now breaks off into great paragraphs of duty, in which the thought of the surrendered life is wrought out in various directions.

There is, first, our relation to our brethren in the Church of Christ, which is his body (3-9). Where there is true consecration to God the gradual transfiguration of our character will reveal itself in our humility, sobriety, and self-estimate; our determination to make the most of every gift with which we are entrusted, and our tender love to all.

There is our relation to the practical business and experience of daily life. The truly devoted soul exemplifies, with all those with whom he comes into contact, the highest traits of noble character—diligence, patience, kindliness (10-13).

Thirdly, there is our relation to those who hate and injure us (14-21). The surrendered and transfigured soul goes through the world blessing, shedding sunshine and smiles, condescending to the humble and weak, pouring a gracious benediction upon those that hate, until the evil is overcome by good. Oh! for the transfigured life! F. B. M.

Remarkable Answers to Prayer.—A few months ago it was found necessary to extend the premises of the Slade Mission, Plumstead. The matter was made the subject of much prayer, and a sum of £350 has already been promised or given towards £1,000 needed, and the building is now in the hands of an architect. Another encouraging answer to prayer is the yielding to Christ of a number of frequenters of the mission who showed the utmost indifference to his claims. Noteworthy is a family of four sons. By these results the workers are stimulated to further effort amid the ever-increasing manifestations of heavenly favour. Mr. S. J. Stocks, the secretary, may be addressed 6, Sydney Cottages, King's Highway, Plumstead, S.E.

Paul at Antioch in Pisidia (Acts xiii. 43-52).

Golden Text—Acts xiii. 38.

IT was a memorable Sabbath day for Antioch in Pisidia, when Paul and Barnabas, during the course of their first missionary tour, attended the synagogue in that city, and were invited by the rulers to give a word of exhortation to the people. Paul promptly seized the opportunity to say the word for Jesus. In he opened wisely with the subject always dear to the Jewish heart, the history of their own nation; briefly recounted their deliverance from Egypt, wanderings in the wilderness, entrance into Canaan, government there under judges and kings; then rapidly led on to the promise of the Messiah in the line of David; and concluded by showing from the Scriptures that the Messianic prophecies were fulfilled in the life, death, and resurrection of Jesus Christ (vv. 23-35).

Leading Points in the Sermon.

1. Jesus and the Resurrection.
2. Forgiveness of sins only through Him.
3. Justification by faith in Him alone.
4. Danger of neglecting salvation.

Paul plainly addressed the Gentiles as well as the Jews present (vv. 16, 26, 39); and at the close, the Jews left the synagogue, while the Gentiles asked for a repetition of the same sermon on the next Sabbath. The intervening week was spent by the Apostles instructing inquirers. The news of the new doctrine spread throughout the city.

Results of Paul's Sermon.

1. Spirit of religious inquiry roused.
2. Public interest in the Word of God.
3. A crowded audience on the next Sabbath.
4. Conversions among Jews and Gentiles.
5. Envy and jealousy stirred in the Jews.
6. Glorious promise to the Gentiles proclaimed publicly in the synagogue (Is. xlvi. 6; xlix. 6.
7. "The Gentiles were glad"—fell into rank.
8. Became vigorous heralds of the truth.
9. Persecution raised by chief citizens.
10. Apostles expelled the city (Matt. x. 14).
11. The disciples left at Antioch were filled with joy and with the Holy Ghost.
12. Some accepted; some rejected. The Jews shut their hearts against the blessing of free salvation by Christ, and barred the doors of their heart with pride and prejudice. Then envy, jealousy, and evil speaking came along, and helped to rouse the spirit of persecution that finally drove the messengers of the Gospel out of the city. And who were the gainers? Not the Jews (v. 41), but (1) the Gentiles, who gladly stepped into the places left vacant in the ranks of God; (2) the people in Iconium, who had the good news carried to them; and (3) the Apostles, for they had the joy of seeing many turn to the Lord.

The Jews gave a very flimsy excuse for rejecting the Gospel, and in our day many young people give an equally empty one. They say, "I do not wish to become a Christian, because there are so many Christians living inconsistent lives." Because there are counterfeit coins in the world, shall I object to be made a genuine sovereign in the King's currency? Some very battered coins are still genuine ones. "The Lord knoweth them that are his" (2 Tim. ii. 19, and Matt. vii. 22, 23).

Oxford Notes.

THE annual meeting of the Oxford Branch of the Y.W.C.A. was held on Thursday last. Rev. the Hon. Talbot Rice, presiding, urged the importance of home influence. The number of members belonging to the branch is 126.

The Sunday afternoon men's service at St. Aldate's has recently started a string band, which not only helps the congregation singing, but has attracted many men to enter the church for the service. The Church of the Cowley Fathers has followed the example of St. Aldate's, and has a men's service every Sunday afternoon.

Bishop Cecil Wilson, speaking on behalf of the Melanesian Mission in the hall of Hertford College, gave some very interesting facts. Speaking of the obstacles overcome, he said the diocese was nearly 3,000 square miles in extent. Nearly 1,000 dialects were spoken, of which Bishop Selwyn, by indomitable perseverance, mastered more than thirty.

Foreign Sailors and the Coronation.—It is proposed to organize tea and other gatherings for the foreign sailors who will visit Portsmouth. To do this will entail considerable expense. Gifts of money and foreign literature may be sent to Rev. W. L Brimmell, 12, Victoria Road North, Southsea; or to Mr. W. Punter (Wesleyan Naval Scripture reader), 9, Lombard Street, Portsmouth.

Irish Notes.

A COMMITTEE having for its object the welcoming of strangers coming to reside in the city, and the introducing of them to Christian friends has been formed in connection with Methodism in Belfast. Mr. S. T. Mercier has been appointed hon. sec.

The Presbyterian Orphan Society has now 2,831 children on its books, being the largest number it has ever had. Its income from all sources during the past year was £14,997 12s. 11d., a decrease as compared with the previous twelve months of £3,132. This decrease has chiefly occurred under the head of bequests, a source of income necessarily very variable.

The Belfast Midnight Mission is doing a deserving work, and the ladies engaged in it are worthy of every encouragement. During the year 509 women passed through the Home, and the total income was £374 16s. 7d. The work of the Mission is necessarily very unobtrusive, but very difficult, and it merits much practical sympathy on the part of Christian people.

The annual religious meetings have been held in Cork, with the Bishop, Dr. Meade, in the chair. At these meetings the following societies were represented:—The Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews, the Church Missionary Society, the Society for the Propogation of the Gospel, the Bible Society, the Missions to Seamen, and the Church of Ireland Temperance Society. The meetings extended over a week, and among the speakers were Revs. K. E. Rhodadad, H. Clayton, J. B. Panes, W. O'Connor, F. De B. Sidley, D.D., J. B. Coates, and W. S. C. Secombe. The attendance throughout was large, and the addresses interesting and impressive.

Welsh Notes.

THE District Council of Pensarn and Abergele in North Wales have set a good example in regard to preventing the desecration of the Sabbath. At their last meeting they gave a decided refusal to an application from a brass band to hold Sunday concerts.

The North Wales Wesleyan Synod held its meetings at Llandudno on May 6-8, under the presidency of Rev. Hugh Jones, of Bangor. Several important conferences and public meetings, as well as preaching services, were held. The statistical returns showed a net increase of ninety-one members.

The South Wales Wesleyan Synod assembled at Borth, Cardiganshire, with Rev. Rice Owen, Treorky, as its president. The meetings began on May 6, and lasted until May 8. As with the North Wales Synod the programme consisted of conferences, public meetings, and preaching services.

The Cardiff Sunday-school Union have promoted a series of weekly meetings for the benefit of Sunday-school teachers. The international lesson for the succeeding Sunday is dealt with, various ministers being chosen to conduct the class. The address by the leader is followed by an open discussion.

The annual meeting of the Cardiff Y.W.C.A. was held on Wednesday last week, the Bishop of Llandaff in the chair, and the principal speakers were Miss Denny and the Hon. Miss Kinnaird. The report of the Cardiff branch was far from satisfactory. The local subscriptions do not amount to £100 in the year. The present accommodation is inadequate, and several young women have to be turned away every week.

At the meetings of the Pembrokeshire Presbytery, held on May 8 and 9 at Pembroke Dock, it was decided to hold a Temperance Conference for South Pembrokeshire in September. It was also decided to invite Rev. W. Jenkins, a returned missionary from the Khassia Hills in Assam, to undertake a tour in the county in the month of August. A considerable increase was reported in the collections towards foreign missions.

In view of the prevalence of crime in Glamorganshire, a public meeting was held recently in Swansea. After considerable discussion, the following resolution was passed:—That in the opinion of this meeting, crime, disorder, and poverty would be materially reduced in Swansea (1) when there was a reduction in the number of public-houses; (2) when there was an earlier closing of public-houses; (3) when the police should be able to give greater supervision to the actual sale of drink on licensed premises and clubs; and (4) when, by efforts, either personal or public, the masses were better housed and less crowded together."

Day of Intercession, June 25.—Application forms for the choir in connection with the Day of Intercession, at Queen's Hall, June 25, have been sent to various churches, chapels, choirs, associations, &c., but as many doubtless may have been omitted, I will gladly supply any who may wish to join the choir, if they will write to me at 159, Temple Chambers, Temple Avenue, E.C. C. J. Clapperton.

Liverpool Sheltering Homes.

YEAR by year the work of Mrs. Birt at Liverpool, in the interests of destitute children, continues to merit the notice of a wide circle of Christian friends. The report for the year 1901 is a striking testimony to the ever-increasing need for the existence of such institutions as the Sheltering Home. Boys and girls who have lost father, mother, or both parents, are received into the Home, and after a course of elementary education, Scriptural instruction, and industrial training, are fitted to take an active part in the work of life. During last year 211 new cases were admitted. Many of the children received are crushed and stunned by bereavement, others are terrorized and distressed by the scenes of drunkenness and strife amid which their days have been spent.

No stronger testimony to the thorough, practical training which the children undergo need be advanced than the constant demand for them from Canada. Last year 600 applications were received from Canadian families. Twenty-six children under eight years of age were adopted into families where there is every reason to believe that they are taken for love's sake, and will be brought up and treated as members of the family. The reports of boys and girls who have passed from the Home into active life are of a favourable nature. In the West many of the boys are now the owners of farms; while the girls have equally good prospects—some are mistresses, others are married and settled in comfortable circumstances. Friends and supporters of the Home are assured that the charity does not demoralize, but helps young people forward on an independent way of living, building up the truest bulwarks for Britannia in sturdy, loyal Colonials. Mrs. Birt may be addressed at the Sheltering Home, Myrtle Street, Liverpool.

A Needy Centre in Glasgow.

GORBAL'S Cross Mission, Glasgow, instituted in 1875 by Mr. Alexander Campbell, is one of the largest and best-known of undenominational efforts in the city. The premises—situated in a back building—are not only inconvenient, but for some years past they have been totally inadequate, so that all the agencies are handicapped, and the natural development of the work greatly restricted. The most important meeting—the Sabbath evening evangelistic meeting—has been held for many years in the National Hall, with an audience of from 500 to 600.

For some considerable time the matter has given the workers much concern, and they have been forced to face the responsibility of securing more commodious and suitable premises, from which the whole of their work could be carried on, and which would meet, and still further promote, the growing need. They feel assured that the Christian public will rally to their help. The work is favourably known in religious circles, is carried on in hearty sympathy with the church as a whole, and is well supported by ministers and Christian workers from all parts of Glasgow. Any information in connection with the work will be readily given by the secretary, Mr. Andrew MacDuff, 388, Victoria Road, Crosshill, Glasgow.

Liverpool Legislation.—The Town Clerk of Liverpool has recently stated that at the time when vigorous steps for the re-housing of the poor in that city were taken by the Corporation the number of insanitary houses was 22,000. That number has been reduced by demolition and alterations to 10,000. Each of these unhealthy dwelling-places had on an average five residents. The Corporation has erected 805 tenement houses and 1,301 are being built. Although a sum of about £600,000 has been expended in purchase and compensation and in building, the desirable work has necessitated an addition of only a penny in the pound to the local rates. At the same time the rents of the healthy homes have been arranged at a low figure which, it is said, even the poorest of the poor can afford to pay. In this labour the municipal authorities certainly are doing much to prepare the way of the Lord.

Racecourse Mission.

SOME of the friends who have, in past years, been the financial stay to the above important work of God, have been compelled, by purely business reasons, reluctantly to discontinue their support. We do not, therefore, feel justified in incurring an expenditure of, at least, £100 without the assurance of it being forthcoming; hence we appeal to the Lord's stewards to say whether or no this work, which, for the past thirteen years has been so greatly owned of God, is to stop or go forward. Several friends have already promised substantial contributions. The workers for the most part are honorary, and, in addition, pay their own travelling expenses, the chief outlay being that for hire of tents at Epsom and Ascot, provisions, and literature. As we distribute only the Scriptures this item is somewhat heavy. Our tent with its Gospel banner and texts, which are read by hundreds of thousands of people during the four days, is a grand witness in itself; and, with the exception of one year, has been the only Gospel tent upon the course, the ground being generously given us free by the officials.

Our tent is used by hundreds of the police during the week for rest and refreshment, they bringing their own provisions, we supplying them with tea, &c., for which they contribute, the proceeds going to their own convalescent home. Inspectors, as well as the men themselves, have told us how highly this privilege is appreciated. The minstrels' tea, and the meeting that follows, can only be appreciated by those who have witnessed it.

A Jewish Freethinker.

AMONG the sad perversions found in modern Jewry is a freethinking element tending to Anarchism. For years past this class has had its representatives among Jews of various nationalities in East London. A weekly paper, called the Workers' Friend, was circulated among them written in the familiar Yiddish. A few years ago, when my translation of the Pentateuch first appeared, it was noticed in sarcastic terms, freethinking Jews being advised to obtain copies so as to familiarize themselves with "the many mistakes of Moses" and "the foolish fancies of the Bible."

I am glad to know that this advice, given in hostile sarcasm, was acted upon literally in some cases. Among others who now thank God for having done so, is the sub-editor of the paper itself! He studied the Scriptures as never before, and wrote to me requesting an interview. This was some months ago; and when we got face to face, he opened his heart to me. He told me that in addition to his newspaper work, he was the general secretary of the Jewish Anarchists. By studying the Word of God, he had become convinced of the error of his ways, and was desiring to lead a more God-fearing and God-honouring life than hitherto. The result of this interview, together with my frequent and long visits to his house, has been that, by the grace of God, he has given up his position with the Anarchists, and been brought to a knowledge of the truth as it is in the Lord Jesus. The poor man is naturally looked upon as a traitor by his former associates. I am thankful to say that the Workers' Friend has now ceased to exist.

If my translation of the Bible into Yiddish has been the means, in God's hands, of the conversion of this son of Abraham alone, I should feel myself amply rewarded; but the Lord is greatly cheering me by the wonderful way that the hunger for the Bread of Life is everywhere increasing. I have nearly 3,000 letters from Jews and Christian workers among them in every part of the world, asking for these Yiddish Scriptures. My earnest desire is to be enabled to send out at least 1,000,000 copies.

Missionary Training Home,

STAR HALL, ANCOATS, MANCHESTER.

MANY requests have come to us for some record of the work of the Training Home, and we feel it may be both interesting and helpful to let our friends know something of what is being done.

We have room for about twelve students, and receive those only who seem truly called of God to definite mission work. As we give very little secular teaching it is desirable that candidates should have a fairly good English education. The training is in practical mission work and Bible study. Classes are taken daily by experienced teachers. The day is mapped out as follows:—Students rise at 6 a.m.; Bible-study and prayer till breakfast at 8; workers' prayer-meeting in hall, 9 to 9.30; housework class, 11 to 12; study till dinner at 1 p.m.; visiting, 2 to 5; tea at 6; study or meetings, 7 to 9; supper and retire at 9.30; lights out at 10 p.m.; Saturday afternoon free. Sunday: Sunday-school and various meetings from 7 a.m. till 8.30 p.m.

We prefer to receive young women between twenty and thirty. Those who can do so are expected to pay board in whole or part. No one is refused merely on the ground of non-payment, if otherwise suitable. We have no fixed time for the period of training, but generally find two years necessary, and sometimes more. We do not promise anything beyond training, yet we do all we can to advise each young worker to suitable work. We have always been able to find openings for those who are truly ready.

Nearly sixty have passed through the Training Home since it was opened eight years ago. Of these nine have gone from us to work in India; one to Africa; one to the Faith Mission, Scotland; eight to Y.W.C.A. work in England, Wales, and Ireland; nine to homes for children or rescue work, and the rest to deaconess work in various parts of our own country.

Our work is in the midst of a manufacturing part of the town, surrounded by mills and factories. But the house is well built and comfortable. We have also a delightful home of rest about nine miles out of town, and nearly every week some of the students go out for a night and day: if they desire it, they can spend their holidays there. The lighter part of the housework is done by the students, and is a relief from the strain of the mental work, as well as making them practical.

We shall be glad to hear from any young women who desire to enter mission work, when we would carefully consider their applications.

EMILY CROSSLEY,
L. WATSON (Lady Superintendent, to whom application may be made).

Forward Movement at King's Lynn.

IN connection with the Incorporated King's Lynn Forward Association, of which Dean Kitching is president, strenuous efforts have been put forth to reach and influence those who do not usually attend any place of worship.

The association is the outcome of the P.S.A., which has made such excellent progress since its inception in 1891 that large and important premises were secured in 1898. Many useful agencies have been started and well maintained. A weekly lantern mission service on Sunday evenings attracts an average of nearly 1,000 of the class it is most desired to reach.

The treasurer, Mr. C. A. Perry, Orwell House, Gaywood Road, King's Lynn, says: "The movement has been worked as an essentially religious one, each method and plan subservient to the one great central object, viz., the bringing of men and women into living touch with the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour and Example. The crowning work of the whole scheme yet remains to be carried out. The crying need of King's Lynn, with its 176 drink licences for 20,000 people, is a club-room for workingmen and women, where, clear of all the temptations connected with the drink traffic, they can obtain congenial society, news, recreation, and refreshment. The removal from our premises of the Borough Museum to a new home affords the opportunity for the establishment of a large and well-equipped institute for working men and women, open all through the week. For this purpose, and for carrying out absolutely necessary schemes of ventilation, lighting, and decoration, £1,000 is needed."

Bible-women and Nurses.

FOR nearly fifty years the Bible-women and Nurses' Mission has quietly sought to reach the heart of London's need by reaching the heart of the individual; and by a personal loving touch has tried to lead those who have strayed, back to the Shepherd of their souls. Personal service of heart and hand, personal devotion of life and energy to the furtherance of the kingdom of God, are the necessary qualifications of a worker in the dark places of the city. The work, even as the need, is limitless, increasing daily, and there is an urgent call for more workers, for more followers of those devoted women who, during the last half-century, have given their lives for others.

It was in 1857 that the idea occurred to Mrs. Ranyard to employ a woman of the people to visit in the homes of the poor. She had been for many years one of the active members of the Ladies' Bible Association; but, on coming to reside in the heart of London, she found herself powerless to reach the mass of sunken and ignorant poor who lived around her. No lady could penetrate into the cellars and garrets of St. Giles's, or win, unaided, the confidence of their inhabitants. What practical experience had she of their special miseries and troubles? Hence arose the thought that if the story of God's love could be brought to these people by one who, having an intimate knowledge of their special needs and difficulties, combined with the earnest desire to be their friend, would be admitted, and be able to tell the story of the grace of God.

The Bible-women are placed under the direction of clergymen or ministers, or superintended by the Mission direct. They are also closely in touch with district visitors, &c., and often work in connection with the Charity Organization Society, and other associations for helping the poor.

Large numbers of women have been induced to join the Mothers' Union, and in all cases the Bible-woman seeks to ensure the attendance of the children at Sunday-school. She also ascertains which are the families without a Bible, and persuades the mothers to subscribe for one. Even in these days it is not uncommon to find women who cannot read, and the Bible-woman not infrequently becomes the teacher, and by a carefully devised plan she sometimes succeeds in getting the whole family to study the Bible regularly. Under the direction of the clergyman or minister, girls' and boys' classes are held by the Bible-woman.

In early days the nurses often only received three months' training, and they had very little instruction given them. At the present time not only is the minimum of training two years in some first-class hospital, but they are then sent out into the district, and learn further details of their work under the direction of experienced sisters; they also obtain a maternity certificate, and afterwards receive constant supervision from the superintending staff. Sometimes they spend a quarter of an hour, sometimes as much as three hours, in a house, and they make their patients as bright and clean as in the great hospitals.

The story of the work clearly shows how wonderfully the Mission has been guided and sustained in the past, in its attempt to leaven some of the dark places of the city. At the present moment there is much in the condition of London which may well fill the minds of those who think with anxiety. New problems are before us, the powers of evil seem to be arrayed on every hand against the Kingdom of God, progress appears halting and slow. But to those who watch the quiet work of the Bible-women and nurses, it is apparent that, silently and without observation, the Kingdom is coming in many a humble heart and life.

The work of direction and central organization is, to a large extent, accomplished voluntarily; and by the liberality of old friends the rents of the offices and homes are provided for. But the need for workers is unlimited. Friends interested are invited to correspond with the honorary secretary, Miss Andrews, 2, Adelphi Terrace, W.C.

About Books.

REV. F. B. MEYER'S "JOHN THE BAPTIST."

LEAVING the Old Testament for the New, the volume which has been reached in the present reissue of Mr. Meyer's Scripture Biographies (2s. 6d. each. Morgan & Scott) is John the Baptist. For Christian writers and readers alike there is an enduring fascination and charm in the meteoric career of this "clasp between two covenants," who was certified to be "much more than a prophet"—"the porter who opened the door to the True Shepherd."

The facts and references are gathered and marshalled with a skilful hand. As we gaze upon the series of pictures, we feel that each has been placed at its true angle to the Light, and made to yield its full quota in the making plain of God's purpose of grace. Through all the chapters the golden thread of consecration runs, as we see this life—than which there has been no greater among men—after it had contributed all of which it was capable in witness-bearing, "decrease" like the morning star before the "increase" of the Sun.

The chapter in which it is shown that true shining for God can only be done at the cost of burning, makes plain a great truth hidden from the eyes of the world, yet far-reaching in its influence on the fuller life of the believer. The stern preacher of repentance stands out before us as an example of suffering and patience, of faithful and fearless dealing with sin; yet, as is pointed out, our Lord had a yet higher conception of human character than "to come neither eating nor drinking; to be stern, reserved, and lonely; to live apart from the homes of men; to be the severe and unflinching rebuker of other men's sins." "He that is but little in the Kingdom of Heaven is greater than he"; and so even the greatest of types pales before the substance, the forerunner before the Bridegroom.

Much help will be obtained for the study of the New Testament by a close examination of this life of the herald of the coming King. As the Epistle to the Hebrews links the teaching of the Old to that of the New in a marvellous argument, so in John we see the link between the living men of the two periods.

Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton have issued The Life of Henry Drummond, by George Adam Smith, in a new and cheaper edition. (3s. 6d.)

The first issue in enlarged form of Counties' Evangelization (1d. quarterly. 16, Paternoster Square, E.C.) contains cheering tidings from many parts of England, besides other valuable articles.

A helpful and instructive series of papers on "Foundations of the Faith," from the pen of the editor (Mr. John R. Caldwell), is at present appearing in The Witness. (1d. monthly. Pickering & Inglis, Glasgow.)

Another effort is made by Colonel J. Garnier in The Ten Tribes from the Captivity until Now (3s. 6d. R. Banks & Son) to establish the British-Israel theory; but, with all respect for the motives at work, we find ourselves unable to accept the conclusions arrived at.

Hindustani Self-Taught is another book in the series prepared by C. A. Thimm. (2s. Marlborough.) There are vocabularies and phrase lists, conversations and table of terms, military, legal, religious, and commercial. The pronunciation is indicated with precision by an easy method.

Messrs. Cassell are issuing, in fortnightly parts, a new popular work, The Butterflies and Moths of Europe (7d. net each part). It has been written by W. F. Kirby, F.L.S., F.E.S., and furnished with numerous coloured plates expressly prepared for the work. This serial will take account of nearly twice as many butterflies and moths as were represented in the author's previous book on the subject.

Modern Criticism Examined: Being a Review of Professor G. A. Smith's Lyman-Beecher Lecture at Yale University, 1899. By John E. H. Thomson, D.D. (1s. Edinburgh: Andrew Elliott). Those who study Dr. Smith's lecture should read this able criticism. Dr. Thomson is no "'prentice hand" at such work as here engages him. The lecturer can hardly remain quiet after such an exposure of his views and their grounds.

Evidence abounds in Mr. Thomas Greenwood's biography of Edward Edwards (2s. 6d. net. Scott, Greenwood, & Co.) that its preparation was a labour of love. Few who now reap the benefit of municipal public libraries have any idea of the uphill task which faced their first promoters; but the story is set down here for all who are interested, and there is not a little pathos in it.

How to Bring Up Your Children: Being Some Thoughts on Education. By John Locke (1632-1704). This is a book for every parent, and worthy of the great philosopher who wrote it. Though inspired by the needs of the seventeenth century, its pages are good for our time. The book is full of sound sense and shrewdness, and its reissue is thoroughly justified. There is a portrait of the author; and we trust many readers will benefit by his excellent counsels. (1s. net. Sampson Low & Co.)

A Memoir of the Rev. Henry Twells, M.A., Honorary Canon of Peterborough. By William Clavell Ingram, D.D., late Dean of Peterborough. (6s.) One cannot but feel deeply interested in the author of "At even ere the sun was set," and other favourite hymns and poems. Here we have a delineation of the man—schoolmaster, ecclesiastic, and hymnologist. Some of his more general poems are included in this biographical sketch, which is fully illustrated. A companion volume is Sermons on Hymns, and other addresses, by the late Canon Twells. (3s. 6d.) Twenty in number, the chapters deal with some of our best-known hymns, and they are very readable. A smaller publication is Canon Twells' Hymns and Other Stray Verses. (2s.) The versatility of the High Church parson and popular mission preacher is abundantly attested by these pages. The grave and gay alternate, and all is very good. (Wells Gardner, Darton, & Co.)

The reappearance of Archdeacon Moule's luminous and informing book, New China and Old, in a third edition, revised and enlarged (5s. Seeley), supplies an additional proof of its genuine merit as a contribution to the information at our disposal respecting "the land of Sinim." Thirty-three years of residence in the country have afforded to a naturally close observer opportunity for getting to know land and people intimately, of which full advantage has been taken. In a new introductory chapter, some of the deepest lessons of the recent Boxer movement and war are pointed out. While true missionary reticence is shown with regard to criticizing or stigmatizing persons or politics, indications abound of a statesman-like grasp of the situation, with hints which may well be laid to heart by leaders of nations. The difficulties of the missionary outlook are here fairly faced from the point of view of Christian hopefulness; and the reader who has mastered this volume will be well equipped for forming a judgment on Chinese questions.

Those who have been brought into touch with men and women deeply taught in spiritual things have often found that these servants, like their Lord, have been made perfect through suffering. The Christian knows that the sword which smites is in the hand of his Father, and there are many in whom the ministry of personal suffering is full of power and beauty to all who know them; but others are not always able to recognise the purpose of grace in the Lord's dealings. To them Rev. John Morgan's The Sacrament of Pain (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton) will be truly "a book of consolation," a well of water in a thirsty land. For the great company of the children of pain, a deep lesson in spiritual things is woven round the experience of the woman who had an issue of blood twelve years. From the lives of the great heroes of Scripture and of the Christian ages illustrations are drawn to show how truly the best gifts are only attained at great cost. The more profound truth is also brought home that they who would be shining lights for God must do so at the cost of burning. They who would lift others up must pay a high price for the privilege; "and along this line of self-sacrifice and true generosity lies the deep-rooted secret of life, joy, and blessedness. To give is to live. It is Christ-like and divine." From those who are stricken in body or in spirit this book will receive a warm welcome. It forms a valuable addition to the literature of the cross-bearing life, and to the repertory of those to whom is committed the ministry of consolation.

Workers among outcast women will be glad to hear of an excellent new tract, in neat form, written specially for their use by Mrs. Cattermole—A FRIENDLY LETTER FOR YOU (8pp. 2s. per 100. Drummond's Tract Depot, Stirling).

The compiler of "Scripture Lotto" has furnished young folk with another instructive diversion—THE FAUNA AND FLORA OF SCRIPTURE. Particulars may be had from Miss E. Tregelles Cook, 5, Rothsay Road, Bedford.

At the request of numerous friends, Rev. H. B. Macartney, M.A., has published the address on RIVERS OF LIVING WATERS, delivered at Keswick. Many who have recollections of this impressive utterance will be glad to possess a copy of the booklet. (Id. Cook, 319, Fulham Road, S.W.

An abridged edition of THE GOSPEL AND THE CHILD, by the late Mr. A. S. Lamb, has been issued from Drummond's Tract Depot (1s. per dozen). It is a valuable little book on the Gospel, and Sunday-school workers may have parcels for their classes free by applying (stating number) to Mr. John Macfarlane, Drummond's Tract Depot, Stirling.

As No. 1 of a series of sermons on "The Ritualistic Conspiracy," Rev. A. G. Whaley has given a careful examination of the dangers of the present position and the illegality of much that is done, in IS THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND PROTESTANT? GOD'S WAY OF COMFORT is reprinted from The Life of Faith. (1d. each. St. Andrew's Vicarage, Wakefield.)

A handsome Coronation Souvenir intaglio card has been issued by the Alpha Card Publishing Co. It has well-executed portraits of King Edward and Queen Alexandra, and is embellished with an effective emblematical design in silver, which includes appropriate verses by Charlotte Murray. (4d. 54, Hillfield Avenue, Hornsey, N.)—Good new portraits of the King and Queen, of a large size and ready for framing, are published by E. Marlborough & Co. at 6d. each.

Missions to Young People.

GLOUCESTER.

THE mission conducted by Mr. NEWTON JONES at Gloucester proved attractive and helpful. The Raikes Memorial School and Brunswick Road Chapel were crowded on several occasions, and at the Corn Exchange, too, there were full attendances. At one meeting Mr. Jones, with the aid of pictures, graphically dealt with "Ships' Signals" as a means of showing the danger of sin, and the place of safety in the Lord Jesus Christ.

For another meeting Mr. Jones announced his subject as the "Biblical Museum," and the children had been invited to bring any object named in the Bible, with a written reference attached to it. This resulted in a very large collection of articles, such as a pen, nail, boat, seed, lamp, oil, honey, sand, rock, salt, gate, doll, &c. To the doll was attached the text: "Eyes have they, but they see not; ears have they, but they hear not." Mr. Jones placed the articles in three groups, indicating sin, salvation, and service, and thus, by the aid of the eye as well as the ear, enforced the lessons he endeavoured to teach. A large number of children and young people were blessed, and the teachers stirred up to greater earnestness.

Mr. R. S. Bradbrook at Nunhead, S.E.

The mission just concluded by Mr. R. S. BRADBROOK, in the new hall of the Nunhead Christian Band, has been attended with very much blessing and encouragement. During these days we have been confirmed in the belief that in the opening of our new and substantial premises—after devoting nearly five years principally to open-air work—we have been Divinely guided, and that the building most assuredly supplies a sorely-felt need of the working classes of this populous district. H. COOK, President.

Christ Church, Burton-on-Trent.

A ten days' mission has been held here especially, though not exclusively, for the benefit of the young, by Mr. C. E. BARRACLOUGH. The attendance of children during the latter part of the week was somewhat affected by an epidemic of measles, but it was still very good, and the attention and interest of the little folks delightful to behold. A great number of them told us they "loved Jesus" and wanted to be his. Each evening after the children's meeting one was held for the older people, with, we believe, blessed results. Every night souls professed faith in the Lord Jesus, and to have found peace in believing. On the Sunday nights the room was crowded, and many were unable to obtain admission. At the concluding gathering Mr. Barraclough gave a farewell address on the words, "Remember Lot's wife"—a truly solemn warning to the lingering and the undecided.

Conference at Glasgow.

A fortnight's Christian Conference, under the auspices of the Evangelistic Association, has just been held in the James Morrison Street Hall. The varied subjects for consideration were carefully and thoughtfully mapped out by the able leader of this work, and were assigned to the following speakers, who faithfully and most impressively ministered the word:—Revs. John M'Neil, J. E. Houston, John M'Cracken, William Hutchison, W. T. Lister, John M'Lean, Wm. M'Kenzie, G. Gilchrist; Messrs. R. Logan, John Climie, John Anderson, A. B. Munro, John Halliday, Andrew Ferrie, and P. W. Hughes. Mr. W. D. Dunn gave the closing address at each service, dealing more particularly with the unsaved, and night after night many decided for Christ. The large audiences found it a time of deep spiritual blessing and it is believed much service for the Lord will be the outcome.

Prison Mission at Durham.

That the power has not died out of the words of Jesus of Nazareth, when they are faithfully and lovingly echoed in the present day, is perhaps seen more clearly in the case of prison congregations than in that of those who ordinarily assemble in our places of worship. Picture some 460 men and eighty women (the latter in a gallery at the further end of the chapel), a sea of upturned faces for the most part with a look of eager attention to a simple Gospel message, to which many of them have hitherto been absolute strangers.

Remember that they are the very ones whom, in the days of their freedom we would move heaven and earth to get within the walls of a place of worship, and realize that you will see the greater part of them regularly day by day in the same place, and you have one of the most unique opportunities of beginning with "Ruin," and driving home, by the power of the Holy Spirit, the lesson of man's fall and the blackness and darkness of sin. Then, in the private interviews in the prison cells, you may see how the lessons have been learned, and from no feigned heart comes forth the cry, between sobs of real contrition, "I have sinned against the Lord." Then the next step of "Redemption" is exactly that which the audience feel suited to their need, as the message, "Behold the man!" first as the Saviour, then as example, is put before them, and that it is realized is shown by at any rate one thanksgiving written on a cell slate, "I never thought that sin was so black and terrible before. I have truly cried, 'I have sinned against the Lord.' Pardon my iniquity, for it is great, and oh, sir, what a joy to know that God's words are true. 'The Lord also hath put away thy sin.'"

Then the lesson of "Renovation" comes most naturally, and a tract kindly supplied, among others, by the Religious Tract Society, was much blessed of God to enforce it—"A new start, with a new heart."

The service is over, twenty-five minutes only for hymn, prayers, and address; and as the congregation slowly file away at measured distance each from the other, one earnest grasp of the preacher's hand, and a whispered "Please take my number for a visit," show what is working in the mind, and the visit (all too short) reveals a heart prepared, like that of Lydia to receive the things spoken, and in many cases a will entirely subdued to the love and will of the Saviour.

Twenty-six written thanksgivings were returned upon the slates, the prisoners' only means of written communication, and on the second Sunday (May 4) twenty-three men and two women knelt devotedly at the table of the Lord. A more reverent and earnest band of communicants could not be desired. Prayers are asked that, in face of all the difficulties and temptations which are sure to meet them in days to come, they may "go in the strength of that meat" all their days. The preacher was Rev. W. BRYAN-BROWN, of the Church Parochial Mission Society, who conducted the mission at the cordial invitation of the chaplain, Rev. E. F. Jackson.

Mrs. Baeyertz at Newport, Mon.

For the second time it has been my joy to have the help of Mrs. Baeyertz, in my work of winning souls for the Master. The sixteen days' mission just ended at the Malpas Hall, Newport, Mon., will not soon be forgotten. The addresses delivered were instructive, powerful, and full of pathos.

Everyone who knows Mrs. Baeyertz knows well how she dreads mere excitement in her missions. The Spirit of God, in answer to the pleadings of his people, accompanied the efforts of the evangelist with Almighty power, so that not only were sinners and backsliders enlightened, but they felt also the powers of the age to come. Many were broken down under intense conviction of sin, while others were melted into pliability by the Spirit's love.

It seemed as if the speaker had experienced of late so many of the trials and troubles of life, and had been through not a few of the fiery provings of Jehovah, that her soul had been mellowed thereby, and was now able to give vent to its feelings of sympathy with, and compassion for, lost mankind, in sentences of such pathetic sweetness as to be quite irresistible.

At the commencement of the mission, a number of merely professing Christians, realizing for the first time their condition in the sight of God, simply wept for joy, when, in the after-meeting, they realized that Jesus had borne all their sins upon the cross. One man saw that Jesus was not only the Saviour of the soul from future punishment, but also that He is the Saviour from sin now. The poor fellow was so overcome by the thought that he fell weeping upon his knees, and told the Lord that he did not know how to pray, but that he would trust Jesus to save him from his besetting sin of drinking there and then. The subsequent life of this man has shown that the Lord has honoured his faith.

Many of the conversions during this mission were direct answers to prayer. One of the workers, a town councillor, had, in answer to prayer, the joy of seeing all the members of his family in age, and all the unsaved in his employ on the estate, confess Christ; while several who had attended the preliminary prayer meetings were honoured by the Lord in the salvation of those for whom they had prayed.

Certainly the visit of Mrs. Baeyertz was of God, and to Him be all the praise for the blessing bestowed.

W. T. GRIFFITHS.

A wide circle of London friends will learn with pleasure that Mrs. E. L. BAEYERTZ is revisiting the Metropolis, a mission having been arranged for her at the Conference Hall, Eccleston Street, S.W. (near Victoria Station). Mrs. Baeyertz commences her labours there on Whit-Sunday, May 18, and continues until Monday, June 2. In addition to the Sunday services at 3.30 and 7, and the night meetings at 8, there will be Bible readings each afternoon (except Saturdays) at 3. Mrs. Baeyertz's intimate knowledgt of the Holy Scriptures and of Jewish life and thoughe render her addresses on Bible subjects particularly luminous and instructive, and a very fruitful mission is looked for. The help of Christian workers will be much esteemed by the evangelist.

Mr. TENNYSON SMITH has just concluded a most encouraging mission in Holywell, North Wales. The English Presbyterian Church was crowded out night after night, and the special lecture had to be given in the Wesleyan Chapel. The lecturer conducted a mission in Holywell only six weeks ago, when 400 pledges were secured. An additional 172 pledges have been taken on this occasion.

Mr. A. W. SMART, of the Evangelization Society, has concluded a sixteen-days' mission in the St. James' Mission Room, Ashton-under-Lyne. The meetings were well attended throughout. Mr. Smart preached the Gospel in a very faithful and telling manner with the result that many—including several young men—sought the Saviour and began to give proofs of conversion, while many more went away convicted of sin. A gracious work was done chiefly among Sunday-school scholars, whilst many young Christians were manifestly quickened. Hallelujah! A. F.

Messrs. ALBERT RICHINGS and W. BILTON have been holding mission services at Wycombe Marsh. Over 100 persons have been helped in the inquiry-room, as seekers after God. The whole neighbourhood has been stirred. It was a fine sight to witness a large number of stalwart young men coming boldly forward to decide for the Lord. It was a struggle at the onset, but there is now scarcely a home in which some one of the family has not been converted. Fathers, mothers, and children are rejoicing together in the Lord. A. R.

A six days' mission at Tooting for young people and adults conducted by Mr. W. OLNEY and Mr. F. SPENCER JOHNSON, assisted by Rev. BEVILL ALLEN, has been held with much encouragement. In direct answer to prayer a great blessing has been given every night, many both old and young testifying their faith in a new-found Saviour. The Baptist and Congregational churches united in this effort. Such a remarkable manifestation of the power of the Holy Spirit working through the word has not been experienced here for many a long day, to God be the glory. Many professed conversion, while the spiritual life of many of God's people has been quickened. G. H. R.

Rev. E. PAYSON HAMMOND, for the fourth time in his career, has been holding meetings in Newark, New Jersey, U.S.A. He began at Wickliffe Presbyterian Church, holding three services on the first Sunday. About fifty sought the Saviour at the afternoon and evening services, among them the son and daughter of the pastor of the church. In the afternoon service a gentleman rose in the audience and said he was converted, when a boy of eleven years, in Mr. Hammond's meetings in 1864, at Dr. Terhune's church in Newark. It was witnessing the scenes of that remarkable revival that led Miss Etta Campbell to compose her hymn, "Jesus of Nazereth passeth by."

Church of England.

The parish church of Corby, Northamptonshire, has been reopened after enlargement and thorough restoration, by the Bishop of Leicester, on behalf of the Bishop of Peterborough.

In a recent address Dr. Wace said he had been told on high authority that at this moment there are no fewer than about forty churches in the diocese of London alone in which the decisions of the Archbishops with respect to incense and reservation are disobeyed.

The Bishop of Liverpool has dedicated a new mission hall at Orrell, an outlying district of the parish of St. Philip, Litherland. The Bishop said the rapid increase of the population and the development of Church life were attested by the fact that that was the fourth function of the kind in that parish that he had taken part in since he came to Liverpool two years ago.

A fierce fire broke out last week in a large timber yard at the back of St. Laurence's Church, Birmingham. The wind was high, and the flames and pieces of burning timber were carried over the roof. The tiling of the church became heated, the paint blistered, and since then the tiles and cement have begun to come away in large quantities, and it is now found that the whole of the church and schools may have to be re-roofed.

Congregational.

Rev. Alfred E. Garvie, B.D., has been appointed by the Congregational Union of Scotland to be its representative on the Board of Directors of the Colonial Missionary Society for next year.

The second series of Tuesday mid-day services at Bishopsgate Chapel, E.C., was inaugurated on May 6, when Rev. Dr. Clifford preached to a large audience, composed chiefly of men.

During the absence of the pastor (Rev. Albert Swift) in America, the pulpit of the Dulwich Grove Congregational Church will be occupied for the five Sundays of August by Rev. A. T. Pierson, D.D., of Brooklyn, who will also serve Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, during the winter months.

Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, during his forthcoming visit to this country, is to preach in the City Temple on the first three Sundays in August, and conduct noon-day services from Monday to Thursday in each of the following weeks in some central place under the direction of the London Congregational Union. He is also to conduct a four-days' mission in Dulwich Grove Congregational Church, S.E., and in Exeter Hall, and visit for one evening only the Congregational churches at High Barnet, Holloway, and Harringay; also Stratford Conference Hall and Chalk Farm Baptist Church. Mr. Campbell Morgan will subsequently conduct meetings in the provinces.

A new Congregational mission hall is to be erected at Swann Street, Portwood, a part of Stockport containing a population of about 10,000, chiefly artizans, mill hands, and small shopkeepers. Property has been purchased in Swann Street consisting of a number of cottages, over which it was hoped to get a suitable room at a small cost, but it was found that the outside walls were not strong enough to bear the roof. It has therefore been decided to take down the cottages, and on the site to erect an entirely new mission hall to accommodate about 250 persons. The total outlay, including the purchase of the property, will be a little over £500, towards which sum local friends have raised about £180. It is the purpose of the committee, when the hall is completed and out of debt, to place it in trust under the wing of the Congregational denomination. The pastor is Rev. John Harker, Springfield House, Churchgate, Portwood, Stockport.

Baptist.

On Sunday last Rev. John Aldis celebrated his ninety-fourth birthday. Many friends will desire for the father of the Baptist ministry the continuation of a golden eventide.

Bromley Road, Lee, S.E., having been re-named Baring Road, and renumbered, Bromley Road Tabernacle will henceforth be known as South Lee Tabernacle, and the pastor's address will be Pastor J. Waite Davies, 19, Baring Road, Lee, S.E.

Efforts are being made in connection with the cause at Cinderford, Glos., to build more class-rooms for the Sunday school work. Rev. W. Willis Wilks, pastor, writes:—"Including our two branches there are over 1,500 scholars belonging to our school. About 400 of these at present meet in the chapel, and further accommodation is necessary. My people are for the most part colliers, and of limited means."

Among the last gifts towards the Century Fund was a sovereign given to the donor by her mother as a birthday gift twenty-two years ago. Two days afterwards the mother "was suddenly called home to be with Christ," and the daughter kept the last gift of love as a cherished memento. She felt, however, that it would have given her mother joy to contribute to the Fund, and she has cast it into the treasury for use in the Redeemer's service.

The second anniversary of the church at Epsom was celebrated last week. Mr. A. E. Jennings (of Sutton) presided, and addresses were also delivered by Revs. W. Baster (of Brixton), and C. Ingrem (of Wimbledon). The secretary (Mr. A. H. Stockwell) and the treasurer (Mr. H. T. Boothman) presented encouraging reports, and the pastor (A. C. Hodgson) also took part in the meeting. Mr. Hodgson vacates the pastorate at the end of June next, after a two years' ministry.

The Baptists of Folkestone have recently held their Sunday services in the Town Hall in order that their building in Rendezvous Street might be left in the hands of the builders. The services were all through marked by an excellent spirit of reverence and devotion. The congregation has now again gathered in their beautiful spiritual home. The re-opening Sunday marked also the fourth anniversary of the settlement of Rev. J. C. Carlile. Practically the whole amount asked for to cover the cost of repairs and decorations, and the installing of the electric light—£300 in all—was subscribed in the collections at the two services.

Methodist.

During the illness of Rev. H. Howard May, excellent service has been rendered to the newly-formed Wesleyan Albert Hall Mission, Sheffield, by Rev. Thomas Champness and Mr. Josiah Nix. Much sympathy is felt with Mr. May in his forced abstention from a work to the success of which he has so remarkably contributed.

For the last twenty-seven years, with the exception of 1885, the Methodist New Connexion has been favoured with the blessing of God in the way of numerical increase in membership at home and abroad. The present year will not only continue the succession of increases, but in the English circuits and home missions will show the largest increase of all these years.

The Wesleyan Soldier's Home at Bulford Camp has been commenced, and there will soon be satisfactory premises at that important military centre. Shorncliffe Camp is also rapidly extending, and it is proposed to secure a branch of the J. B. Gough Home to meet the requirements of the new extension. The proposal has the approval of the military authorities. Rev. A. E. Raw, the chaplain, is giving himself to the work there with much success.

A convention of Bible Christian local preachers and workers in Plymouth, Devonport, Callington, Launceston, and Tavistock circuits has been held at Tavistock. Rev. E. Prowse read a paper on "Needs in Present Day Preaching;" Mr. J. Rounsefell, B.A., spoke on "The Local Preacher in the Study and the Pulpit;" Rev. D. Murley on "The Preparation of the Preacher and the Sermon;" and Rev. R. Pyke on "How to Save our Small Churches from Decay."

Presbyterian.

At the recent meeting of the Synod at Newcastle, Rev. A. H. Drysdale, of Morpeth, Moderator, spoke, in his address, on "The Old Puritanism and the New." Dealing, in a thoughtful manner, with the problems of the future, he said these would probably be more social than ecclesiastical, and these being moral in their roots—because the bulk of human misery springs from personal or domestic vices, such as indolence, improvidence, and self-indulgence, the New Puritanism should show to advantage. In its own constitutional temper and spirit, the New Puritanism must strive for the regeneration of society in all its relations, each man and woman being made a prophet, priest, and king unto God.

Much encouragement resulted from the recent anniversary services at Union Tabernacle, Wandsworth Road, S.W. At the Conference and public meeting held on May 5, Pastor W. Fuller Gooch gave a powerful address, and among other speakers who contributed to the success of the day's gatherings, were Messrs. Charles Inglis, William Grove, and other well-known evangelists, as well as ministerial representatives from neighbouring churches. Rev. D. M. Cameron (pastor) writes, "The Conference was the best of all our gatherings of the kind." Mr. Cameron in maintaining good work in a densely-populated neighbourhood, and the opening of a new hall for children's work is fresh evidence of the energy with which the operations are carried on.

Fallen Asleep.

Rev. J. D. THANE, retired Congregational minister, of Fowey, Cornwall, in his 76th year. The earlier years of his Christian labours were spent in Australia. Returning to England he laboured with acceptance in several pastorates.—Rev. GEORGE A. CURRIER, Wesleyan Methodist, of Boston, Linca. He had just attained his 46th year, and would have completed his twenty-third year in the ministry next Conference.—Mr. GEORGE SABIN, late of Windermere, a prominent Methodist, delighted in visiting sick beds, not only of his own community, but those connected with other churches, visits which were welcomed and have been of the greatest consolation to many.—The Baptist church at Morningside, Edinburgh, has sustained a deep blow by the death of the treasurer, Mr. DUGALD MACLACHLAN.—On April 25, Rev. J. S. E. SPENCER, vicar of Wilshaw, Huddersfield, after a long and painful illness, aged seventy-six. Mr. Spencer was a staunch Evangelical, a very humble-minded Christian, and greatly interested in the C.M.S. He was much beloved by his parishoners.—At Almanarre, Garelochhead, on the 9th inst, after a long and painful illness, MARIANNE SOMERVILLE (elder daughter of late Rev. Dr. A. N. Somerville), wife of Rev. G. H. Knight. Darrus, Rev. JOHN PRATT, M.A., rector of Darrus, and Precentor of St. Fin Barr's Cathedral, Cork.—At Dromore, co. Down, Rev. JOHN JOHNSTONE Methodist minister, aged sixty-three years.—At New York, Rev. ROBERT CROOK, LL.D., son of late Rev. Wm. Crook, Methodist minister, and formerly president of the Methodist College, Belfast.

Personalia.

Mr. JOHN JACKSON, organizing secretary of the Mission to Lepers, who has been laid aside since November, is resuming active service.

Mr. GEORGE SOLTAU left England by the Campania a few days ago to join Mr. Newell at Chicago for the Summer Bible School work. He hopes to be able to attend some of the large Conventions in different parts of America. His address will be 80, Institute Place, Chicago, U.S.A.

Dwelling in Darkness.—Sir James Crichton-Browne, in a recent lecture upon Sanitation and Light, has made some remarkable statements in regard to the modern employment of light in curative medicine. He referred to it as "an ally of the first power in the combat with disease," and certainly to judge from scientific reports its influence in certain diseases seems to be little short of miraculous. It is, perhaps, next to impossible to over-rate the possibilities before these new and long-deferred applications of an old fact. The Word of God, however, is full of passages bearing upon the close connection between darkness and death, and of light and life. How many are the clear promises of healing to those who place themselves under the divine influences of "the Light of the World," and how unqualified is the assurance that to all them that believe "the Sun of Righteousness shall arise with healing in his wings."

Y.M.C.A. Notes.

MR. R. D. PRINGLE, late general secretary at Bombay, recently left England, to take up work, on behalf of the English National Council, at Colombo and Singapore.

Mrs. Montefiore, of Worth Park, has given a large plot of ground to the Association at Crawley, Sussex, upon which to erect a public hall with library to commemorate the Coronation.

Through the munificence of a well-known friend of young men's work, the committee of the College Y.M.C.A. in Calcutta have just been enabled to expend over £3,000 in securing separate premises for their work among native boys.

A jubilee celebration was held on April 18 of the New York City Association, which was organized on June 30, 1852. A banquet was held in the auditorium of the Grand Central Palace, Forty-third Street and Lexington Avenue, Mr. William E. Dodge, Bishop Potter, and President M. Woolsey Stryker, of Hamilton College, being among the speakers.

The City of Cork Association has just welcomed a new general secretary, Mr. N. G. Mates. At the meeting, the president, Mr. J. C. Newsom, spoke of many young men who had been led to the Lord Jesus Christ, and were now living and witnessing for Him. Addresses were also given by Messrs. T. Wolfe, W. Hogg (Belfast), T. E. Grubb, and Rev. W. A. Bracken.

The report of the City of Dublin Association shows 297 members with 175 associates. In the evangelistic services, workers' training class, open-air work, prayer meetings, foreign missionary branch, and many other directions, excellent work is being done. The Association is, however, hampered for lack of funds, the deficit with which 1901 opened, £111 12s. 4d., having grown during the year to £149 5s. 8d. The general secretary is Mr. W. A. Boyd, 43, Upper Sackville Street.

At the annual meeting of the Pontypridd Association which was recently held, Mr. W. E. Fellows—who, owing to his duties calling him much from the town, retires from the secretaryship—gave a report of the year's work which showed that the membership has increased; more and better evangelistic and devotional meetings are held; and over eighty men have professed to decide to follow Christ a goodly proportion of whom have been introduced to the churches. The rooms are small, inconveniently situated, and poorly furnished; and it is felt that there is very much need for better equipment.

The Scottish Executive have appointed as successor to Mr. J. H. Oldham, in the secretaryship of the Lahore Young Men's Christian Association, Mr. George Douglas Turner, M.A., son of Dr. Turner, well known as a missionary of the United Free Church of Scotland at Kingston, and elsewhere in Jamaica. Mr. Turner is a native of Jamaica, twenty-two years of age, and received his education at Glasgow High School University and Free Church College. He has achieved distinction in all his studies. He has had much experience of Christian work in the mission of a Glasgow church, as well as through the Glasgow Y.M.C.A. and the S.V.M.U., of which he has long been an active member. He sails for India in October.

The Montrose Association has purchased a site for a new building. Members of the Perth Association, by special request, carry on an interesting service for male prisoners at the general prison on Sunday afternoons, the organ being played by a well-known prisoner. A year of exceptional activity in all departments is reported by the Edinburgh Y.M.C.A. In the place of the late Dr. Carment, Mr. David Shaw, W.S., has been elected president. The Kirkcaldy Association will receive the annual Scottish Conference in September. The Glasgow Y.M.C.A. is arranging on a large scale a holiday camp for young men at Ettrick Bay, Bute. Paisley reports over five hundred members, a considerable increase. A large bazaar is to be held at the close of the year, by which it is hoped £2,000 will be added to the building fund, at present standing at £1,250.

Winchester Soldiers' Home.—The excellent work among soldiers carried on by the Misses Perks, at Winchester, is well known. They have been exceptionally busy visiting the incoming troopships, where their ministrations have been very greatly appreciated by officers and men. Another branch of the work is in connection with the camp on Salisbury Plain; and now that this is to be made permanent, it will be necessary to replace the mission tent, hitherto used, by a substantial building, for use as a Soldiers' Home and Institute, all the year round. Lord Roberts has given an excellent site at Bulford Camp, upon which to erect such a Home, as he knows well the value of the work, and its influence upon the men. £5000 will be required to carry out this project, and we therefore, lay the matter before our readers in the hope that a liberal response will be made.

Notes & Comments

"Made of One." More than one unfortunate reference found place in the address of the chairman (Sir William Broadbent) at the annual meeting last week of the London Missionary Society. He gratuitously assumed that Christian people are wont to "admit that many to whom missionaries are sent can only be classed as inferior races;" or to think of some portions of the human family as "lower races, not far removed from the animal stem." When, in the course of his missionary journeyings, he reached the very centre of exclusiveness and conservatism, the Apostle Paul was led to insist that God had "made of one every nation of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth;" and thereon the Spirit of God through him based a statement of the universal responsibility which can only be met by repentance.

Mission Work in Danger. In common with all sections of the Christian Church, we are deeply concerned at the gravity of the present financial crisis in the affairs of this great society which God has so signally honoured, and is blessing so richly to-day. We are assured that the members and committee alike stand true to the Evangelical principles which had been the foundation for the building up of a great native church. We trust the difficulties of the situation in which the committee is placed will be speedily removed, and the means provided for both maintaining the present work, and taking advantage of new opportunities presenting themselves.

Heathen at the Coronation. An important question is raised by Rev. Arnold Foster, of Hankow, in connection with the coronation celebrations. Referring to the utter failure of Chinese philosophers to practise the virtues which are constantly on their lips, Mr. Foster expresses a deep longing that Prince Chun—brother of the Emperor of China—should be brought into touch with our great seats of learning, with the administration of justice, and with the great hospitals, feeling assured that the effect on his mind would be deep and abiding. Other heathen potentates will be in the country at the same time; and it is most desirable that they should carry away, after their brief visit to Britain, an impression different from that produced by theatrical performances, race-meetings, battues, and other "amusements" usually provided for visitors of exalted station. Much mischief might be prevented if steps were taken to bring such sight-seers into contact with the Christian as well as the irreligious side of life.

Among Russian Aristocrats. Many Christians in this country will join with those in Russia who mourn the loss of Colonel Paschkoff. The Word of the Lord came to him at a meeting addressed by Lord Radstock. As a member of the aristocracy, and Colonel of the Imperial Guard, he had been living in a round of society pleasures, when, to the astonishment of his friends, he gave up his position in the Army, denied himself every luxury and gave his substance regularly to the poor, threw open his palace, and invited all comers there, rich and poor, to hear the Gospel. Several fellow aristocrats were converted, and in turn held meetings in their palaces. How the truth spread, by preaching and the circulation of literature, forms a striking chapter of Russian religious history, and the ultimate exile of Mr. Paschkoff, on account of his refusal to discontinue preaching the Gospel, only added to the strength of the movement, which is still progressing. The message spoken by Lord Radstock was as the grain of mustard seed (Mark iv. 31).

France in Revolt. In a recent article in the Revue des Questions Sociales, the Marquis de la Tour du Pin, an eminent Romanist writer on subjects affecting the religious and social condition of France, does not hesitate to write very frankly in regard to the present state of things in that country. He says:—

> There are whole regions where the men never enter the church, and the women no longer comply with their religious duties. The children go to Catechism until their first Communion, and thenceforward never approach the Sacrament till it is brought to them at the hour of death. Marriages and funerals are still accompanied with the rites of religion, but purely civil marriages and funerals are no longer uncommon, and nowadays excite neither surprise nor disapproval. The priest is without any influence on the population, and lives like a stranger among his flock, by whom he is unfavoured and kept apart from social life.

The moral of this is obvious. The land is open for the Gospel.

Catholicism from Within. The movement towards "Liberalism"—in other words, independent thought—among Catholic theologians is developing a new situation in the Romish Church. The breach between them and the authority of the Pope as the sovereign arbiter of all that goes by the name of theology continues to widen. The excommunication of Old Catholic professors at Bonn and Freiburg has not prevented the Catholic faculties at Vienna and Innsbruck from following in their wake. One of these—Professor Schell—declares that, while, as a Catholic priest, he acknowledges the infallibility and universal episcopacy of the Pope, he considers that "the centralization of spiritual authority and rule in Rome always has been, and still is, the greatest danger of the Church," and is "capable of being perverted into the most unjustifiable tyranny." This is exactly what led to the Protestant Reformation. The "centralization" that is complained of, delayed the progress of Christianity in Europe for a thousand years; its perversion was the root of innumerable religious evils; and the reforging of its tyrannous bonds would sound the death-knell of every distinctive and priceless right of the individual soul.

The Critics of Conversion. A recent criticism of a well-known evangelist's mission sermons, voices a sentiment which is very popular in many quarters when it says:—

> Our point of view to-day is altered. We no longer regard salvation as our fathers regarded it. The modern notion of salvation is that of a process rather than a crisis.

We have heard of this sentiment being urged more than once as a reason against the holding of a mission for the salvation of men. But it is utterly fallacious, for it ignores psychological laws as well as the facts of life and experience. If, instead of supporting themselves upon their prejudices, men would be at the trouble carefully to read the New Testament, they would discover that salvation is there represented both as a crisis and a process. The reiterated commands to "turn" indicate a crisis in the soul's history; which is followed by a process, i.e., the continual work of grace within.

The Universal Appeal of the Gospel. A popular minister gives it as his conviction that it is not the poor quality of preaching, nor any lack of up-to-dateness in the form of service, that keeps people away from public worship; but that a large portion of the population is frankly pagan, with absolutely no interest in anything spiritual and Divine. No amount of "attractiveness" seems to win these people into the churches. The very instinct of devotion seems absent in those whose entire interest is concentrated on sport and luxury on the one hand, and the grim struggle for existence on the other. There is much truth here; but it must ever be recognised that Christ died for all, and his sacrifice is available for all; and we must take for granted that the least likely sinners are open to appeal, if only we could touch the sensitive place in their hearts. The one working assumption which the Church is justified in making is, that the Gospel is for all, and that all are or ought to be for the Gospel. This is the only truly Evangelical position.

True Modernity. In a striking paper in the Homiletic Review, Rev. Dr. Parker remarks that the temptations which beset the preacher to-day to intermeddle with things which he does not understand are "at once innumerable and overpowering," and that in many quarters there is "a mean and sneaking desire to be considered up-to-date, modern, and fully abreast with the times." He adds:—

> I hold that no man is abreast with the times except the man who lives in close communion with God, and in continual association with the spirit of Jesus Christ. . . . To Christ I go for the deepest and truest interpretations of human spirituality, motive, and immediate relationship to God. . . . Bethlehem is not a term in Eastern geography; it ought to express the place which Christ occupies in our hearts as Child and Boy and Man and Saviour. . . . If any preacher will give himself night and day to the study and exposition of the Gospel as it is found in the New Testament, he will do all that any preacher is required to do.

The Paralysis of Testimony. The New Testament has a great deal to say concerning boldness of speech on behalf of the Truth. The records of the apostolic witnessings to Christ show us men who "boldly" confronted both the élite and the common people, and, before them all, announced their doctrine. Paul gives us the secret of this courage when he writes: "We also believe, and therefore speak." A man will never speak boldly, in the true sense, unless he believes boldly—"Out of the abundance of the heart, the mouth speaketh." Why, among the rank and file of the churches to-day, is there such a marked lack of apostolic boldness in testimony? Is it not because there is often a great lack of conviction? a failure really to grasp as pre-eminent the personal truths of the Gospel? When hearts are imbued with great conviction, lips will soon be opened in testimony. But a feeble faith means a paralysis of testimony.

Preparation against Surprise. Many of the great falls in life surprise their victims. The blow comes so suddenly that there seems no time to parry it, and the injury is inflicted in a moment. The great fall of Simon Peter is a case in point. He did not enter the hall of the high priest with the intention of denying his Master; his denial was sudden—at least the first part of it; he was seized with a panic of the soul, and fell before he realised it. But it is just because this element of surprise enters so largely into our temptations that we need to be always prepared against it. He who is always ready and vigilant is not taken unawares. Peter had missed the Lord's word, "Watch and pray that ye enter not into temptation": he was off guard and so was seduced. Perpetual preparation is needed for our hearts if we are successfully to repel the tempter when he arrives. Too many count upon themselves at the moment of attack, and so fail. The same apostle who yielded to surprise, through his want of preparation, admonished all the tempted to be "sober and vigilant" in readiness against the assault of the foe.

Fashionable Religious Crazes. Those who are accustomed to observe the curious extremes to which Society alternately swings, will have no difficulty in accounting for the popularity of certain religious crazes at present in vogue. A correspondent of a London daily, in describing a huge gathering of "Christian Scientists," touches the spot exactly when he remarks:—

> And then one turned to the audience, with its silks and furs, its subtle perfumes, its faces, from the blooming maiden to the stately mother, all expressing comfort and refinement and leisure. And the whole secret of the great assembly became plain! The gentle accents, the subdued enthusiasm, the poetic eloquence of the lecturer were followed not with keen and searching criticism and minds alert, but with soft and languorous satisfaction. The whole thing to the audience was a kind of narcotic luxury. It was the West-End, suffering from the malaise of purposeless existence, unpleasantly reminded of slums that bleed rent and sweating dens that exude dividends, seeking the spiritual anodyne.

It was the triumph of our Lord's work that the "Gospel was preached to the poor;" but these modern fashionable crazes, which borrow his sacred name, address themselves only to a crowd suffering from ennui. And the absurdity of their message matches all the rest.

"Sorrowful, yet Rejoicing." It is marvellous how the daily life can be brightened by an endeavour to recognise what John Ruskin termed "the duty of delight," and by cultivating the habit of constant thankfulness for mercies and blessings. There is a bright side to most things. A very practical illustration of the development of cheerfulness under difficulties is afforded by an association called "The Guild of Brave Poor Things," which now numbers over 1,000 members, each of whom is crippled or blind or deaf. The name should be helpfully suggestive to many of those who, with much around them to make their lives happy, are despondent and unthankful. The fact is indeed an eloquent one, that at a recent large gathering of the guild, the brightness and cheerfulness of the members was more in evidence than their afflictions.

Prevention or Cure? A singularly interesting contribution to the literature of the housing of the poor question appears in the current number of The Quiver. The writer of "The Throb of London's Heart," Mr. D. L. Woolmer, writes with close practical knowledge of his subject, and the paper may be commended to those whose sympathies have already been stirred, and who desire to widen their acquaintance with the question. What is true of Finsbury and Clerkenwell unhappily applies equally to most of our large centres. There, as in districts of the Metropolis, children are the most innocent sufferers; "even the care of good parents cannot save them from being victims." Mr. Woolmer says of one poor woman, with her overcrowded, dark little room:—

> It transpires that her six children have been under treatment for deformity, and that the various charitable societies have supplied surgical instruments and appliances to the family to the value of £300. . . . It would be an interesting calculation to reckon how the economy of charity would be affected by a larger expenditure on fresh air. It is called upon to straighten limbs that ought never to be crooked, to repair the ravages of disease due to bad conditions.

Waste and Misery. In the course of a remarkable lecture upon Human Misery and the Gospel Cure for it, a celebrated French preacher, commenting upon our Lord's miracle of the feeding of the multitude, shows that in that story the principles for the alleviation of all human misery are contained, i.e., the multitude is made to repose; ordinary resources are the base of the miracle, and waste is prohibited. Speaking under the last head, the lecturer has some plain things to say about the waste which is so common amongst the well-to-do, and he goes on:—

> When you desire this or that thing, ask yourselves always: Is it necessary for me? is it useful for me? If your conscience gives you an affirmative reply, procure that which you desire; but if it makes a negative reply do not hesitate to sacrifice your desires and tastes. But how many ever consult their conscience in the employment of their fortune? Has conscience anything to do with the prodigality and the waste that abound? What waste in furnishing, in dinners, in gaming, in amusements, in trifles, whilst the poor struggle for bread and clothing!

If the possessors of fortune had only learned the elementary lesson that all the gifts of life are theirs in trust for others, there would be no social problem to solve amongst the respectable indigent.

The Value of Thrift. The Daily News, which has recently done so well in banishing from its columns all betting and gambling news, and for which we offer our congratulations, is doing well in another direction, i.e., in its publication of a "Thrift" column. We should like to see the idea extended to other papers. It would be well for working-men to have under their eyes a constant record of the means in use for the cultivation of thrifty habits. Much of the misery in the country is undoubtedly due to a want of thrift. Men part too easily and foolishly with their hardly-earned money. The publican gets far too much of it, and it goes also in other unwise directions. The discipline produced by true and generous thrifty habits would be an untold boon to the masses of the people.

The City and the Body. A report of a very significant character comes from Manchester, concerning the physical deterioration of the youths who are bred in the slums of the city. Of nearly 12,000 youths who offered themselves last year for enlistment in the army, nearly 75 per cent. were rejected by the medical examiners on account of their wretched physique. Had they been exposed to the rigours of campaigning, they would have been hors de combat within a month. These rejected are fair specimens of the residents in the poor parts of the city. The medical examiners declare that cigarette smoking accounts for this deterioration, while the Lancet goes still deeper, and attributes this weakness to the unclean places in which these lads sleep and eat, the vitiated atmosphere they breathe, and the unwholesome food they consume. Reports of this description should wake up our sleeping statesmen. Unless the slum question is speedily solved in our large cities, we shall have a race of enfeebled men to provide for. Can the country afford that?

God—Unknown—Known.

LAST Thursday, on our way to Pontypool, we read "The Unknown God"? By Sir Henry Thompson, Bart., F.R.C.S., M.B. Lond., &c. (F. Warne & Co. 1s. 6d. net.) It is the reprint, by request, of an Essay which appeared in the Fortnightly Review for March.

By systematic research into the phenomena of Nature the author has become assured, by irresistible evidence, that in "the Infinite and Eternal Energy from which all things proceed," Power and Wisdom are "associated with the exercise of an 'Absolutely Beneficent' influence over all living things, of every grade, which exist within its range."

So far so good, but we were pained to find it stated that the progenitors of Man were "Anthropoid Apes." That "the astronomical discoveries which man's own unaided labours have achieved, demonstrate, beyond all possibility of doubt, that the so-called Mosaic records [of Gen. i.] are quite untrustworthy." That of the Power, who or which is the Author of the universe, "nothing can be truly known but by the study of the phenomena around us." For "among the rising and future generations of the educated classes, many are certain to have their eyes opened to the fact that no supernatural revelation has ever been made to man."

We desire to speak with profound respect of the eminent surgeon who has devoted himself to the relief of his suffering fellow-creatures. But we cannot forget that—

> He that hath felt the Spirit of the Highest > Cannot confound, or doubt Him, or deny.

With what relief from this agnostic obscurity did we find ourselves in the presence of near 3,000 people (not mainly of the rising generation of the educated classes) gathered in the market-hall of Pontypool, to hear Gipsy Smith declare the Gospel of God, and tell the story of his own early days among the phenomena of Nature, and the supernatural revelation, to his soul and spirit, of Jesus Christ the Son of God, as his own personal Saviour, his Lord and his God.

While we are waiting for the rising and future generations of the educated classes, whose eyes are to be opened to the fact that no supernatural revelation has ever been made to man, it was most cheering to know, by their own confession, that a large number of those present had passed from death to life because the Father in heaven had revealed to them that Jesus of Nazareth is the Christ, the Son of the living God. And that multitudes of people, cultured and uncultured, are rejoicing in the same great salvation. M.

Practical Papers.

IF CHRIST WERE NOT DIVINE—I.

"Then came the Jews round about Him, and said unto Him, How long dost Thou make us to doubt? If Thou be the Christ, tell us plainly. Jesus answered them, I told you, and ye believed not; the works that I do in my Father's name, they bear witness of Me." —John x. 24, 25.

EVER since Jesus was born in the manger, men have asked, "Who and what is He?" All through the ages since, the question has filled many an anxious heart. Here in derision, there in sincerity, men have inquired, "Who art Thou? Art Thou the Son of God?" Not only from sceptics has the question come, but from many an honest mind.

The first to throw doubt upon the Divinity of Christ was the DEVIL, when, meeting Him in the wilderness, he began his temptations with, "If Thou be the Son of God—prove it." Christ hardly condescended to deal seriously with the insinuation, but dismissed him with the words, "Get thee hence, Satan. It is written, Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God" (Matt. iv. 7, 10).

Later on, MEN began to ask the same question. The Jews came with, "How long dost Thou make us to doubt? If Thou be the Christ, tell us plainly." Once more the High Priest, as the spokesman of the Scribes, repeated the query: "I adjure Thee by the living God, that Thou tell us whether Thou be the Christ, the Son of God" (Matt. xxvi. 63).

EVIDENCE AND CONSEQUENCE.

In effect, our Lord's reply was, "Consider the EVIDENCES—i.e., the works that I do in my Father's name—these testify of Me." Here was practical demonstration of Divine power. Later, when He stood before the Council, He said, in answer to the same question, "Hereafter ye shall see the Son of Man sitting on the right hand of power." If not the present, then the future would convince them. Thus a second time He enforced his argument—"Consider the Evidences."

On two occasions JESUS raised the question Himself. First He asked his disciples (Matt. xvi. 13), "Whom do men say that I, the Son of Man, am?" They answered: "Some say John the Baptist, others Elias or one of the prophets." Each a human character, mark you. "But whom say ye that I am?" Peter replied: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Again, He asked the Pharisees (Matt. xxii. 42), "What think ye of Christ? Whose Son is He? They say unto Him: The Son of David"—(a human estimate again). But Jesus, referring them to Psalm cx., said: "How then doth David in spirit call Him Lord, saying, The LORD said unto my Lord, Sit Thou on my right hand, till I make thine enemies thy footstool? If David then call Him Lord, how is He his son? ' This human conception, therefore, of Jesus as merely the Son of David, if that were all, led at once to a dilemma, out of which they could not extricate themselves—"No man was able to answer Him a word' (Matt. xxii. 46).

Here, then, is a second principle—"Consider the CONSEQUENCES"—with which Jesus meets the oft-repeated question. "Am I the Son of God? Consider the Evidences. Am I not the Son of God? Consider the Consequences." The one is positive; the other negative.

The evidences were his works. Men saw them; and "many believed on Him." We, too, see them to-day—modern wonders, in the conversion of notorious sinners. Consider them well, for no other explanation is adequate, but that He who works them is Divine.

There is not a book in the New Testament that does not assert, more or less distinctly, the Divinity of our Lord. The Gospels and the Acts of the Apostles are full of it; Paul, Peter, James, and John, in their Epistles, glory in it. God the Father asserted it—"This is My beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." Jesus Himself claimed it—"I and My Father are one." God the Spirit substantiates it—"When the Comforter is come, He shall testify of Me" (John xv. 26).

Nay, more, God the Father can only be acceptably worshipped through the Son. Those whose estimate of Jesus Christ is merely human, are always strong in their worship of the Father. Look at Phil. ii. 10, 11, "That at the name of Jesus every knee shall bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth"; now, listen!—"and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father." Do you desire to honour the Father? Do you wish your worship to be acceptable to Him? The only way to glorify Him, by his own appointing, is that you recognise and confess that Jesus Christ is Lord.

AN AUTHOR'S ROMANCE.

A popular writer has evolved the story of an Alpine guide betrothed to a Swiss girl, whom he was soon to wed. One morning, a day or two before the proposed marriage, the girl started off to visit some relatives living on the other side of the mountain. She laughed a farewell as she ascended the steep, and, with a bunch of flowers in her hands, waved them to her friends. She never returned, and nobody knew what had become of her. When her lover heard of her disappearance, he set off up the pass to seek her—but in vain. He came back alone, with a broken heart. Then he collected building materials, and, refusing all proffered aid, he bore them away up—no one knew where—fetched supplies of food, and forbade any to trace him to his lonely haunt.

In the springtime, he returned to the village, took his place among the other guides, and had his share of the business connected with the visitors who came. But although an excellent guide, he was never a favourite—a morose and sullen man, with whom none could hold much intercourse.

Year after year, for eighteen years, this went on. Next spring he did not appear as was his wont among the guides, and the elder men, who remembered his sad story, went and searched for him. They traversed glaciers and ice-tracks they had never crossed before, till they came to a solitary hut at the edge of a deep crevasse. Failing an answer to their knock for admittance, they broke in the door, and found him lying upon a couch, stark and cold.

There, standing by, was the figure of the girl he had loved long years before. The familiar colour was in her cheek, the flowers upon her breast; but a peculiar, steely kind of light enveloped her, and they thought they saw a vision. At last, one of them put forth his hand, and touched the ice that formed her coffin. For eighteen years, so the author's fancy pictures, the man had lived, unseen by mortal eye, with the image of his betrothed enshrined within a mould of ice.

'Tis but a curious fancy, yet, methinks, it has a lesson. There are men around us to-day to whom Christ is no more than that. Instead of their heart beating in unison with his, and the Divine love from his eyes streaming forth into theirs, He is void of life, encased in a frigid crystallization of human theories or ideas. The face and form are the same, the example is the same, the acts are as they appeared in the dim vista of the past; but his Divinity—the breath of his life, the soul of his being—is gone. A beautiful Christ, truly, but dead, who cannot save the erring and the lost.

THE REAL CHRIST.

We are but sinners at the best, and we need, not a dead Christ, however fair, but One whose life will pulsate through ours, whose living hands touch our own, whose words of love sink down into our hearts. United to such a Christ as that, not lifeless in the tomb, but risen again, and sitting at the right hand of God to make intercession for us, in our sin and in our weakness—in such alone can we find rest unto our souls.

If Christ were not Divine, we are yet in our sins. What profit that we have an inspiring example, if we have not followed it; or noble teaching, if we have not obeyed it? Which of us has not miserably failed to come up to the grand ideal which his glorious life set forth? If that were all—if we have in Him nothing more than an example, however good—a life, however blameless—what is to become of us, sinning men and women? If Christ were not Divine, how can we get rid of our sin? Nothing less than a Saviour who is Divine can meet the exigencies of our sorry case. As one has truly said: "Whatever may be urged in praise of honest doubt, there is something better—namely, honest faith." G.

The Road to the Ascension.

"And He led them out. . . . to Bethany" (Luke xxiv. 50).

"HE led them forth to Bethany!"
And still He leadeth there,
For evermore his chosen ones
Are 'neath his Shepherd care.
To starry crown from shame of cross,
From agony to bliss;
'Tis still the tear-besprinkled road,
Unto the Father's kiss.

'Tis still by Calv'ry's mournful way
He leads his people there;
And oft in dark Gethsemane
We sigh, and faint, and fear.
But, ah! He knoweth all our pain,
He counts the tears we shed,
And soon amid the feast and song
He lifteth up our head.

"He led them forth to Bethany!"
It is his chosen way,
Amid the pain of parting hour,
To show us vision Day;
To show us, while He blesseth us,
The stairs of his ascent;
Till, to our longing upward gaze,
The joy of heaven is sent.

Yea, Master, joy of heaven be thine,
And joy of heaven be ours,
In that all-glorious "Bethany,"
Where love her treasure pours;
Where sacred odours fill the house,
Where deathless songs arise;
Where, gathered to thy piercéd feet,
We bless Thee in the skies.

FRANK COCKREM.

The Scripture Gift Mission proposes to issue souvenir Gospel portions during Coronation week. In a circular letter just issued, the Committee says: "It is our intention to arrange for a large free distribution of Gospels among the people who will be in London at that time, and also among the 500,000 poor who will participate in the King's dinner. The undertaking has the hearty approval of Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, to whom we submitted the wording and design for the cover." The Queen has ordered copies of the "Pictorial New Testament," an interesting publication by the Mission—in every sense a handsome book. Specimen copies may be had from the Secretary of the Mission, Mr. W. Walters, 15, Strand, W.C. To produce and circulate a million of the Four Gospels (illustrated) will involve an outlay of about £2,500, and contributions in aid are earnestly solicited.

A Plea for More.—II.

THE influence which Europeans exercise on the progress of Christianity in India, illustrates the need that they themselves should live under its power. Young men come from the homeland to serve in various capacities—civil, military, as planters, business men, engineers, miners, railway men. Some of them have been regular church-goers, and readers of the Bible, while at home. They may hold on for awhile, they may even remain true, especially if they have praying mothers and sisters at home. But the majority, it is feared, come out nominal Christians, ignoring the Captain whose name they bear. They are scattered in byways and out-of-the-way places, cut off from ordinary communications and Christian influence. Temptations surround them, and instead of being an example to the natives, they become a snare to them. Many a light-skinned child brings into evidence the immoral relationships formed in isolated places, hidden from the eye of European society.

The claims of these men upon spiritual succour has long been recognised by certain Christians at home. Thirty-one years ago the Anglo-Indian Evangelization Society was formed, and, as far as its instrumentality has reached, it has worked effectively through all these years; but here also sounds the cry, "More, more!"

In proportion to the need, small, indeed, is the number of evangelists of that Society who travel over India, visiting their countrymen in solitary situations, and preaching the Gospel as they find opportunity in railway institutes, waiting-rooms, mission churches and schools, and in travellers' and planters' bungalows. Hand in hand with these brothers is a staff of honorary workers, some giving their full, some a part of their time. Much appreciated were the free services of Mr. Reginald A. Studd, B.A., and Mr. Charles T. Studd, B.A. The latter, having found the climate suited to his health, has undertaken the charge of the Union Church at Ootacamund, from which, as a centre, he is carrying on evangelistic work among the planters on the Neilgherries. His labours, we are told, are highly appreciated, and not in vain.

One of the evangelists, Mr. John McDowall, of Paisley, who works among the railway employés in Southern India, we met at Coimbatore while staying with Mr. R. Stanes. Both he and his brother, Mr. Thomas Stanes, of Coonoor, have already been very warm supporters of this mission, as they have been of others.

While at Darjeeling we saw Rev. Rylands Brown, who, being in poor health, greatly needs the prayers of friends for him and family. He travels during the cold season among the planters in the Himalayas.

There is room and need for extension. The growth of the Society has not kept step with its years. There are stations in India where only once in three months a religious service can be held, and even on those days some, on duty, are not able to be present.

The work among children and adults stands waiting to be done. Many European children in India grow up with much less knowledge of Bible truth than their more fortunate heathen neighbours who attend mission schools. A little girl about ten years of age is mentioned as never having heard the name of Jesus before, and wanting to know who He was. Sunday-schools would be a boon to little ones as well as to adults.

This is an open door to honorary lady-workers, no barrier of language intervening. There are places where climate presents little or no difficulty. Three pioneers, Mrs. Cumming, Mrs. Prime, and Miss Omond, of the Y.W.C.A., have already rendered most valuable service in their sphere of labour among railway families and others.

"The home churches, and Christian men and women who form them," says Rev. Dr. Patrick R. Mackay, the indefatigable general secretary of the Society, in his last year's report, "will, I trust, realize as they have not yet done, their responsibility and duty to those men; also their high privilege, and be faithful to claims of race and religion. Such action will do more than all other effort to brighten the lives of our countrymen of every class in India."

Contributions in aid of the funds of the Anglo-Indian Society may be sent through The Christian. W. M.

How to Help Unbelievers.

BY "A MINISTER OF THE GOSPEL."

NON-BELIEVERS fill many positions of honour in this country. They are to be found serving as Privy Councillors, members of Parliament, county councillors, and in other capacities of influence and distinction. They are men of authority in matters relating to science and education. Their ranks include historians, novelists, journalists, poets, advocates at the Bar, Judges on the Bench, Admirals of the Fleet. We cannot estimate their influence in the Press, on the platform, in society—it is simply incalculable. We must admit that a great host are their debtors for sweetness and light and knowledge.

It is not our present purpose to show that there are wiser and better men on the side of Christianity, but to notice the strength of "the enemy" in order that we may enter the battle strong enough to overcome them.

UNBELIEF IN THE CHURCH AND HOME.

Unbelief finds some support in Christian Churches, and in homes which should be Christian. Our fathers are affected by unbelief, and our children are not intelligently grounded in the Christian faith. Bishop Ellicott said, in a charge to his clergy, "Mothers, in what may be called the upper classes, may still, we may hope, teach their children their first prayers, but the fathers, for the most part, are silent. There may, however, be reasons for this. Fathers may be, in some cases, affected by the doubts and difficulties of the strange days in which we are living, and honestly feel themselves unable to teach a child the first principles of vital religion. In other cases, they may feel hindered and even disqualified by their own ignorance."

There is much truth in this. The religious life of many homes is dying through ignorance, indifference—a negative unbelief—and honest doubt. The Archbishop of Canterbury, when presiding over a meeting for the promotion of Higher Religious Education, pointed out another grave danger. He said, "When a young fellow goes to the University, and when Mill and Spencer are put into his hands, there bursts upon him with surprise, intense astonishment, and immense grief, the opinion that Christianity is open to all kinds of objections, social, moral, and others, which he had never imagined." It is no alarmist's statement we make—Faith may be no easy thing for our children's children. And we need not be surprised if working-men, who, in the best cases, have had a mean education, are considerably influenced by sceptical companions and literature.

PREVENTION BETTER THAN CURE.

What is the remedy? We ought, in the first place, to fortify Christians against the attacks of unbelief. They should be made familiar with the accumulating evidences for their faith. A course of Evidential Lectures should be delivered in every church every year.

Christians ought to be the better able to hold fast to their faith, while someone reveals its strong foundations. Christian evidences should be taught to our children. The Headmaster of Marlborough College has regularly and successfully done so. He says: "It is true that the lectures gave rise to discussions among some of the boys, in which difficulties were freely canvassed with some freedom, and it may be thought it is dangerous to introduce immature minds to questions which stimulate much discussion. But, on the whole, so far as I can gather from careful inquiry and observation, the benefit far outweighs the danger."

Christian Evidence classes for young people should be formed in every church. The novel and fascinating way of studying Christianity would engage the growing intellectual faculties and retain our young men, who, in many cases, slip through our fingers between the Sunday-school and the church. Thus the pulpit appeals, so often made to the heart, would be confirmed and strengthened. Thus adults and children would have their faith intellectually enlarged and deepened.

A MISSION TO UNBELIEVERS.

Missions should be organized to unbelievers, especially amongst the working-classes. Ferret out the unbeliever. Do not allow him to work under cover. Bring him out from the workshop, the coffee-house, the reading-room, and the club, into the open field. When will the Churches send out evidential lecturers, as they send out other missionaries? I watch and pray for the coming of a band of "Defenders of the Faith," who will command the respect of intelligent and honest doubters, who will affectionately pity the erring, and who will freely give themselves—nothing less than that—to the work God must call them to do.

It is folly for any person half convinced, to take up arms against unbelief. The difficulties encountered are depressing; the responsibilities great. No faint-hearted Christian can enlist as a soldier in this battle. Every missioner must be willing to be shocked, bored, and insulted, if only he can find an opportunity to saturate the soul of the doubter with the truth as it is in "Jesus only."

"Dwell Deep."

Embosom'd in the mighty hills—
Built in a cranny of the rock—
A cottage stood from age to age,
Secure from tempest, foe or shock.

Deep in the solid rock beneath,
The walls on firm foundation stood;
Fearless the cottars dwelt therein,
Sheltered from wind, and safe from flood.

No foe could spy this dwelling-place,
Hidden by shrub and rocky spar:
Skyward the windows—nought was seen
Save sun and moon and twinkling star.

Thus should'st thou dwell, O soul of mine!
Deep hidden in the solid Rock;
Skyward thy windows; sheltered warm—
All evil thou might'st safely mock.

Dwell deep, my soul! From danger flee,
And hide in Him whose loving heart
Was pierced therein to shelter thee
Safe hidden, nevermore to part.

Cactus.

True and False Sport.—There is a telling article in the current Westminster Review on the prevention of cruelty to wild animals, which, coming as it does upon the heels of Mr. G. W. E. Russell's criticism of the sports of Society, affords matter for serious consideration. The fate of the Bishop of Hereford's Bill last March shows that at present, anyhow, nothing will be done in the Upper House to prevent the cruelty to animals which is so common in connection with "sport." The only thing to do is to touch the public conscience by means of the Press. We have no stones to throw at Spaniards while we permit such callous brutality towards wild and partly domesticated creatures, as that which this article mentions. The wholesale massacre of birds and beasts, and the maiming of innocent creatures, is utterly unworthy of the name of "sport." If men are anxious to develop their physical courage, there are scores of ways open to them which entail no cruelty upon defenceless creatures. It will be a good thing when education includes instruction concerning our duty towards the animal creation.

Samuel and Saul.

"SIN, BRINGING FORTH DEATH."
(1 Sam. xviii. 12.)

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

NEVER has there been a truer illustration of the words in which the Apostle James describes the genealogy of sin and her fateful family than that furnished by the life-history of Saul.

Once he had begun to yield to the spirit of evil, it became a headlong passion, hurrying him to one breach after another of the Divine law. The first sin is like the letting in of water, which gradually eats away the embankment, and presently allows the entire flood of waters to inundate the land.

It befell thus. About this time, while Saul was smarting under Samuel's sentence of deposition, his attacks of depression and despondency become more frequent and severe; and at last it was suggested by his servants—tradition says by Doeg the Edomite—that the effect of music should be tried on the poor diseased brain.

Instantly the king fell in with the suggestion; and presently David's name was mentioned by one of the young men. The shepherd-lad was possessed of the very qualities which were most captivating for the king. He was skilful in playing; already he had come to be known as a man of valour, in maintaining the integrity of his father's flock; he was skilful in judgment, and eloquent in speech; manly beauty characterized his countenance and form.

This description greatly pleased the king, who was always on the outlook for promising youths. Such a summons could not be disregarded, and making up a present of the produce of his farm, the old man dispatched his Benjamin to begin to tread the difficult and intricate paths of royal favour. "And David came to Saul, and stood before him, and he loved him greatly." And whenever Saul was overtaken by one of his fits of melancholy, when the sky was overcast with the heavy clouds of God-forsakenness and despair, "when the evil spirit from God was upon him," David, then probably about eighteen years of age, took the harp and played with his hand, so that Saul was refreshed, and the evil spirit departed from him, and he was well.

Robert Browning has depicted for us, with a wonderful luxuriance of imagination, the scene when the minstrel strove with all the spell of his art to tame and exorcise the depression that mantled the royal brow: how he sang of the scenes in the valleys where the sheep were being gathered beside the brimming waters of the wells; and again of the pasture lands over which they were scattered, browsing on the tender grass. At one moment there is a strain of martial music, summoning the clans to repel a border foray; at another it seemed as though the voices of maidens were welcoming back from the fight their lovers, crowned with victory. Again, the music told of the rising storm, the rattle of the thunder, the pelt of the hail, until you became aware that the fury of the elements had spent itself, and was dying down into the cadences of a summer landscape, bathed in peace. Now you could have heard the sough of the wind through the trees, or sweeping over the meadows, and anon the music of the spheres, as the heavens declared the glory of God and the firmament told of his handiwork.

It is probable that the spell of music with which David wrestled against his king's dark moods was greatly successful, as afterwards in the case of Philip V. of Spain, who was cured of a fixed melancholy by the music of a famous player. His fits of insanity became less and less frequent, David's attendance at court was greatly relaxed, and the king may almost have ceased to think of him, amid the many suitors for his royal favour.

How long a period elapsed in this way we cannot tell, but brought Saul and David into closer and more tragical contact. The Philistines had never forgiven the Hebrews for having discarded the yoke, which for so long they had meekly borne, and at last, after a series of forays and raids on the southern borders of Canaan, the tide of invasion could no longer be restrained. It rolled across the frontiers and poured through the valleys, till the Philistine hosts were gathered together in the valley of the Terebinth, which belonged to Judah, and pitched their camp at Ephes-dammim, "the Boundary of Blood," so called from the dark and bloody encounters which had taken place there. The valley, or wady, is broad and open, and about three miles long. It is divided in the centre by a remarkable ravine, or trench, formed by a mountain torrent, which is full of foaming water in the winter, though dry in summer. It was the presence of this gai or channel, some twenty feet wide, with steep vertical sides, and with a depth of ten or twelve feet, that delayed so long the issue, for the two hosts lay watching each other for forty days, neither of them daring to face the hazard involved in crossing the valley and its ravine, in the face of the other.

The full story of the combat with Goliath belongs to the Life of David; we only touch on it here as it concerns the subject of this series of papers—the ill-fated and hapless Saul.

When the gigantic Philistine champion, whose name was suggested by his "shining armour," strode forth, and even dared to come near the lines of the Hebrew troops, clothed in helmet, jerkin, and greaves of bright copper mail, handling a mighty spear, and with a sword girt at his side; and when he boldly challenged the armies of Israel to produce a man worthy to take up the gage of battle, Saul was as dismayed and panic-stricken as any of his soldiers. It is said that he was "greatly afraid" (v. 11). Though he was God's chosen king, and in his earlier life had stood in the might of a simple faith, yet now his disobedience had cut the sinews of his power, and he had become as weak as any other.

are two aspects of the same posture of the soul; as you obey, you are able to believe; and as you believe, you wax valiant in the fight, and turn to flight armies of aliens. One can chase a thousand, and two put thousands to flight. Oh! beware of disobedience which brings a faintness into the heart, so that the sound of a driven leaf chases the fugitive! All that Saul could do, in the face of the braggart blasphemy of Goliath, was to hold out the most lavish promises of what he would do for the hero who would take up the challenge, and make the proud Gittite bite the dust.

When, finally, David was brought into his presence, his soul glowing with an heroic faith, and avowing his determination to go alone to fight the Philistine, Saul endeavoured to dissuade him. "Thou art not able to go against this Philistine to fight with him." He had no idea of power other than that which came of long usage (v. 33), or of helmets and coats of mail (vv. 38, 39). The fruit of David's narrative of his successful conflicts with the lion and bear was entirely lost on him. Saul looked on them as the result of superior agility and sinewy strength; he did not fathom David's meaning as he spoke of the great deliverances which Jehovah had wrought (v. 37). Already the young Psalmist was saying to himself:—

> The Lord is my light and my salvation,
> Whom shall I fear?
> The Lord is the strength of my life,
> Of whom shall I be afraid?"

But such boasts of the believer in God were an enigma to the king. The eyes of his heart were blinded, and he could not see. He had no idea that faith opens altogether new sources of power, touches stops in the great organ of nature which elude other hands, and avails itself of those Divine prerogatives which, like legions of angels, wait around the beset believer in harnessed squadrons.

As David went forth to meet the Philistine, Saul said to Abner, his uncle, and the trusted captain of his army, "Whose son is the youth? Inquire whose son the stripling is;" and when presently the young champion returned with the head of the Philistine in his hand, the one question the king put to him was, "Whose son art thou, thou young man?" It was as though Saul thought to account for his success on the ground of heredity. "Surely," thought he, "this youth comes of a great line of ancestry; the blood of Caleb or Joshua must be in his veins; the best of Hebrew stock must have yielded this scion." It is thus that the man of sense tries to compute and reckon up the child of faith. He has no conception of what God can be or do for the soul that wholly trusts Him.

On the ground of expediency, on his return to Gibeah, Saul set David over the men of war. The harp was exchanged, for the most part, for the sword; and as he went forth on his expeditions against the hereditary foes of Israel, he became more and more necessary to the stability of the throne, as he became increasingly the darling of the nation. "Whithersoever Saul sent him, he behaved himself wisely." Out of this popularity originated

THE GREAT SIN OF SAUL'S LIFE.

On one occasion, as Saul and David were returning from some final and decisive victory over the Philistines (v. 6, see marg.), the people crowded to meet them and the troops; and the women, dressed in gay attire, danced around and before the advancing columns, singing to the music of their tambourines and three-stringed instruments. As they performed the usual sacred dance they sang responsively, "answering one to another," an ode of victory, of which this was the refrain:

> Saul hath slain his thousands,
> And David his ten thousands.

Instantly the king was smitten with the dart of jealousy. All his soul was set on fire with the thought that not improbably David was the neighbour of whom Samuel had spoken, and was the divinely designated successor to the kingdom, which was even now passing from his hand. What if this bright young soldier, with the light of God on his life, and the love of the people already gathered to his person, was to dispossess him! "And Saul was very wroth, and the saying displeased him; and he said—What can he have more than the kingdom."

"And Saul eyed David from that day and forward." All the love and admiration that he had entertained towards him turned to gall and bitterness. The milk of human kindness turned sour. All his old malady, which had been charmed away from him, came back with more than its wonted force; and on the day after the incident, brooding over his fancied wrongs, it seemed as though his whole nature were suddenly thrown open to an evil spirit, who possessed him, and swept him on to do a deed of murderous hatred. Raving in a mad fit of frenzy, he caught up the spear that stood beside him as the emblem of his royal state, and hurled it at David, as he sat before him, endeavouring to charm away his malady. Not once, but twice the murderous weapon quivered through the air, but David avoided out of his presence twice, no doubt imputing the attempt on his life to the king's illness, and having no idea of the jealousy that was burning in his soul like fire.

Let us take care of the first beginnings of sin, when the least suggestion begins to float in the air around us, like a microbe or germ of malignant and deadly disease. Then is the time to turn to Christ with it for deliverance, securing his gracious interposition, as you exercise faith in the grace of his salvation: "Keep back thy servant also from presumptuous sins; let them not have dominion over me; then shall I be upright, and I shall be innocent from the great transgression."

SUNDAY, May 25. Numbers iii.

WHAT a wonderful thing that Levi should have been promoted to this high office. The dying patriarch spoke sadly of their treachery and cruelty, and predicted that they would be divided in Jacob, and scattered in Israel (Gen. xlix. 6, 7). The latter clause was absolutely realized, yet not as a curse, but a blessing. The penalty which they had incurred seems to have been averted and altered by the transactions at the foot of Sinai, when they dared to stand alone for God (Ex. xxxii. 26). It is very significant to notice this. The results of wrong-doing may have to run their course, but what seemed wholly disastrous and adverse may be transmuted by Divine compassion (see also Deut. xxxiii. 8-11; and Mal. ii. 4-6).

It was good for the Levites to be wholly employed in the service of the Tabernacle (7, 8, &c.). Their days were spent in the courts of the Lord's house, and their best years were full of activity directed to the highest ends. There is no reason, however, why we should not all enter into the spirit of their lives. Let us always seek to promote the interests of Christ's Church by every means in our power. In every act we may manifest the beauty and glory of true religion, and seek to secure for our Lord the admiration and devotion of others. How well would it be if all the eldest sons of our Christian families should feel that they were specially and emphatically the Lord's, and that He had a claim on them (12); and that this claim must be discharged by their becoming ministers or missionaries, or that they must find a substitute, or that they must pay a redemption price, in the form of contributions to enable some one else to be educated and maintained instead of themselves, in home or foreign service (45, 46).

Notice how definitely and distinctly God appointed the service of each man and family. There could be no overrunning of each other's spheres, no uncertainty, no jealousy. The Lord help us to await his appointment, and to stand to our service, until He as definitely opens a way out as He opened one in.

MONDAY, May 26. Numbers iv.

To the charge of the Kohathites were delivered the Ark, the golden vessels, and the altars of gold and of brass. Over the ark, which was wrapped in the great temple-vail, was cast a cloth all of blue, to represent probably the heavenly ministry of the Great High Priest, who ever liveth to make intercession. In the case of the remainder of the furniture, the inner covering was blue and scarlet, and the outer of badger-skin. In the case of the brazen altar, the inner covering was purple, and the outer of badger-skin, like the others. Was purple used because, being the royal colour, it was more in keeping with the Divine glory of Him who, on the cross, poured out his soul unto death? The laver is not mentioned in this enumeration, perhaps because it deals specially with the human, not the divine, aspect of forgiveness and cleansing.

To the charge of the Gershonites was committed the curtains of the Tabernacle and court. Is it conceivable that they were jealous of the Kohathites, because they were not allowed to share with them the charge of the sacred vessels? I think not. It was enough for the members of each family to realize that their share in the labours of the Tabernacle had been wisely and divinely appointed. Oh, that we may be content to live in the will of Christ, "content to fill a little space, if He be glorified!"

To the charge of the Merarites was given the skeleton work of the structure, down to the pins, sockets and cords. None of them could be dispensed with. The reconstruction of a whole steamer on the Upper Congo may be delayed if one box of screws is missing in the transport; so the machinery of a whole church may be thrown out of gear by the infidelity or carelessness of one of its obscurest workers. That forty-ninth verse is worthy of very special pondering, and comparison with Eph. iv.

The first paragraph (1-4) is concerned with the purity of the camp. The people were not to be tolerant of even the symbols of moral taint and defilement. How much less should we permit notorious evil-livers to remain in the visible church! Our directions are clearly given in 1 Cor. v. We are not called to judge or impute motives, but we may and must judge actions. Ananias and Sapphira, who persisted in their lies, were cut off from the Apostolic Church. The object of excommunication and discipline must always be that the sinner may be warned of the evil of his ways, and brought back to the true fold.

The second paragraph (5-10) is as applicable to ourselves as to the children of Israel. If we have sinned against another it is not enough to confess our sin. It is not difficult to satisfy our conscience by an easily-spoken acknowledgment of wrong-doing; but the reality of this is tested by the requirement to restore the amount of the wrong, with interest. Oh, that Christians were more tender in their consciences! Paul found it necessary to exercise himself with this purpose in view (Acts xxiv. 16). At the same time, we must guard against a morbid conscience wrought upon by its fears, and a scrupulous one affected by its crotchets.

The third paragraph (11-31) shows how searching the Divine scrutiny is. The Word of God pierces to the innermost parts of the nature. All things are naked and open to its scrutiny and rebuke. Alas, how many of us have been unfaithful to our true Husband, who is wedded to us by the tenderest affection!

WEDNESDAY, May 28. Numbers vi.

The Nazarite stands for those who are set apart in the Church for some very special work. The Christian man or woman who is set apart for the ministry is under extraordinary bonds. There might be no harm in the grape-juice considered in itself, but the vine stood for natural stimulant and hilarious joy, unbecoming in those who are the Lord's.

Similarily, since it is a shame for a man to wear long hair (1 Cor. xi. 14), it was a wholesome discipline for one who was under special obligations, to feel himself cut off from the rest of his fellows. Lastly, death contaminated the Nazarite and unfitted him for his high duties.

Take heed, Christian soul, dedicated to some lofty purpose. Thy God expects of thee a more careful walk than is permitted to others. Thou mayest not drink of cups of human joy which are permitted to them. Thou must be willing to bear shame and contumely, which do not fall to their lot. Thou must be specially on thy guard against the defiling contact with those who are dead in trespasses and sins. Go with them only to do them good, never to delight in their company and sins. If the Nazarite vows were vitiated, even by accident, the time which had elapsed was cancelled, the aspirant for holy orders was required to begin again. Ah, how many of our days are rendered void, and do not count! When the camp is cleansed, and the worshippers well ordered, the threefold blessing follows as a matter of course.

THURSDAY, May 29. Numbers vii.

The princes of Israel, on the behalf of the nation, were constrained to acknowledge their devout thankfulness to God for the high honour He had conferred on Israel by making his abode among them; and their expression of gratitude, in the first instance, took the form of wagons and oxen for the conveyance of the Tabernacle. In addition to this, during twelve successive days, they brought their costly gifts for the dedication of the altar. The inspired chronicler does not bulk the gifts together, as he might have done, but, with stately impressiveness, devotes a paragraph to each, as if to accentuate the truth that God does not look on our gifts in the aggregate, but singly and individually, giving each one of us credit for the pains and self-denial which they have cost.

It is foretold that the Kings of Sheba and Seba shall offer gifts for the extension of the knowledge of God; and it may be questioned whether the kings and princes of trade are awake to their responsibilities for consecrating their wealth to the service of the Saviour. We heard recently of one of the kings of modern wealth, coming to the conclusion that God's purpose was to help the world through the Anglo-Saxon race, and he set apart his millions to help God to achieve his purpose. But how much rather should we conclude that it is the Divine purpose to bless the world through the Gospel, and set ourselves to be God's follow-workers by our energy and gifts!

FRIDAY, May 30. Numbers viii.

The lighted candlestick stands for many things: for the Lord Jesus, who is the Light of of the world; for the witness of the Church, amid the darkness of the present time; and for the lighted spirit within us, which we are told is as the candle of the Lord. It is suggested that the lighting of the candlestick is mentioned here to show that all the arrangements of God's house must pass beneath the searching review of the Holy Spirit.

The ceremony of the consecration of the Levites was as significant as it was solemn. They were cleansed from all defilement, so far as the washing of water and the passage of the razor over their skin could make them, and then they were waved (Heb.) before God—not actually, of course, but by the laying on of hands. It is a moot question whether this was not the original conception of the laying on of hands—not that anything was supposed to be imparted, but that the persons thus designated were offered to God on the behalf of their fellow-worshippers. Surely this was the significance of the solemn act described in Acts xiii. 1-4, when the little group at Antioch laid their hands on the first missionaries. It was as though they presented Barnabas and Paul to God in lieu of their own going to distant lands with the Gospel. But when we have offered ourselves to God for this service, take what care we may, there is always need for the atonement (21). O Christian workers, do not simply preach the Atonement, but bathe in the sacred influences that stream from the Cross.

At fifty years of age the Levites ceased from active service, though they were still associated with their brethren in keeping the charge (25). It is blessed when towards the end of life we can slacken our pace and rest somewhat, whilst never relaxing our love for God's service.

SATURDAY, May 31. Numbers ix.

While the camp was being prepared for its onward march, the anniversary of the departure from Egypt came round, and the Israelites, by Divine direction, celebrated the Passover for the second time. What sacred and triumphant recollections it excited! What marvels had transpired in the interim! With what holy rapture did this great congregation celebrate the deliverance through the blood of the lamb! It is well for us to have festivals in the history of the soul, when we recall what God has done for us, and renew our vows to Him.

It is beautiful to notice that the exceptional condition of these men (6-8), who were temporarily disqualified from participation, was met by special provisions. God knows our frame, and is willing to meet our need by a gracious leniency towards everything but wilful and presumptuous sin. If only those that are troubled with crotchets of morbid scrupulosity would remember this incident, what a deliverance it would achieve from their fears!

Now, the march from Sinai must begin, and directions are given for its direction. God Himself led the march, in the cloud, where dwelt the Shekinah fire, the emblem and token of his presence. What that cloud was to Israel, the Lord Jesus is to his Church, and it is probably this that He referred to in John viii. 12. Let us be absolutely subservient to the indications of his will, leaving Him to make it as evident to us as the progress of the pillar of cloud through the sky; and when there is no token of his desire for us to remove, let us abide for two days, or a month, or a year, or a lifetime. The one thing to aim at is to keep the charge of the Lord.

The Lost Half-Sovereign.

"MARY, I should like you to go out this afternoon and do the marketing. There are a good many things wanted, and Christmas will soon be here."

"But do you think you are fit to be left?" Mary asked, looking at her mother, anxiously.

"Oh, yes, dear, I have been coddled long enough," Mrs. Burns said, a faint smile lighting up her white face. "Baby is quiet, and you can take Lily with you."

And then ensued the making out of lists and various careful directions about the choice of meat, vegetables, and groceries to Mary, who, though only sixteen, had been the little house-mother during Mrs. Burns' illness.

The Burns were fairly well-to-do people in their class, but the mother's delicateness and frequent illness among the children made economy a much-needed lesson in the house; and it was one that Mary had thoroughly learned, for the Christianity of her parents was happily of a very practical kind, and to owe no man anything one of the most rigidly-enforced rules of the household.

Mary soon dressed her little sister, and they sallied forth, Lily chatting eagerly of the lovely toys they would see in the shops, and Mary quietly important with a sense of responsibility.

In about an hour they were home again, both faces brightened by the keen air and pleasant sights, and Mary proceeded to settle her accounts with her mother. But the newly-gained colour quickly faded when they found that ten shillings were missing! Again and again they went over the separate items, but always with the same result, everything balancing, minus one unfortunate half-sovereign!

"I must have dropped it, mother!" she exclaimed, in great distress. "My fingers were so very numbed with the cold; but, O mother, we can't afford to lose it just now, and what will father say?"

"I know it will trouble him a good deal," Mrs. Burns said, tremulously, "for he has been worrying a bit about the doctor's bill. I think, dear, you had better leave Lily, and hurry off again to all the shops and inquire, and you'll be back before he comes in to tea; but just let us ask our Heavenly Father about it first," and with a simple directness that told of frequent errands to the Throne of Grace, she laid before God her trouble, and then let her child go. And Mary's feet seemed winged as she sped from one shop to another with eager inquiries, but always with an answer that made her heart sink with discouragement—until the last, and then the man looked significant, and questioned her closely, and finally told her that just after she and her sister left the shop, one of his poorest customers came in and made a small purchase, and as she was going out again she stooped down, and, picking something up, brought it at once to him, saying eagerly, "Just look! here's half-a-sovereign. Somebody must have dropped it."

A POOR WOMAN'S HONESTY.

"I was really amazed at the woman's honesty," the shopkeeper said, "for she has a hard life with a wretched husband, and is miserably poor. I told her if no one inquired about it during the week, it should be hers; and poor thing, you should have seen how her face brightened at the possibility."

Mary asked the woman's name, and then raced home with a thankful heart and the tightly-clasped half-sovereign. She and her mother recognized the name of the finder, as that of a poor charwoman living not far from their street, and whom they knew by report as a down-trodden wife, fighting most bravely to keep from the door the wolf that her husband's drunken habits had let loose on herself and her children; and they shared the shopkeeper's wonder at her magnificent honesty.

In her wretched home that evening Janet Shaw, after she had put the children to bed, sat near the half-empty grate with hands clasped and knitted brows. Father Christmas was coming, but with no gracious aspect to her. She remembered the old days at home when, though her parents were poor, sobriety and plenty and love and goodwill reigned supreme. She thought of the Christmas stockings, the special Christmas fare, and the carol-singing, and she shivered as she realized that her only Christmas music this year would be the deeper baying of the wolf at the door.

"It was singular about that half-sovereign to-day," she mused. "I must not tell Jack, or he'll be vexed I didn't keep it. Poor Jack, he doesn't understand! how could I grieve my Heavenly Father, even to get a treat for the bairns, and He my best Friend!" Into the poor, careworn face there came the dauntless look of one who, in life's roughest paths, can lean upon her helper, God.

HOW GOD CARES FOR HIS OWN.

Just then there was a step outside, and she started up nervously; but it was not the stumbling, uncertain approach of her husband, but that of a visitor who, when the door was opened, proved to be Mary Burns, bearing a basket, and who lost little time in making known her errand.

"It was our half-sovereign you found this afternoon, Mrs. Shaw; I lost it, and I was in such trouble about it, and it was there all right when I went back. My mother is so much obliged, and father too, and they hope you will accept a few little things for the children, and perhaps they will help with the Christmas stockings." For John Burns, when he came in to tea and heard the story, had his great, big, kind heart so stirred by the pathetic nature and nobleness of it, that he must needs go out again as soon as tea was over, and make a few purchases on his own account; and though on his return his wife and Mary criticised some of them—and thought good substantial food would have been better for the children than pop guns, a gilt gingerbread horse, nuts, and oranges, and even crackers—he was unshaken in his conviction that he had chosen wisely, and that it did every child good to have a bit of real Christmas once a year.

And Mrs. Shaw thought so too, and tears that she had bravely withheld in her trouble fell freely now at this unexpected joy.

"We thought it so very good of you not to keep the money," Mary blurted out somewhat tactlessly, but in the fulness of her heart.

"My dear," Mrs. Shaw said, wiping her eyes, "I was not even tempted to do it, but if I could have done such a thing, how different the devil's provision would have been from the Lord's supplies."

Mary Burns herself told me this incident a few weeks ago, and said that each year since it occurred it had been a family custom to send a Christmas parcel to Mrs. Shaw, so the good woman has had still further proof that, even for this world, it is a good thing, in time of sorest distress, to "rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for Him." A Growing Evil.

DEAR SIR,—I believe the custom of selling periodicals at the close of meetings on the Lord's Day at places of worship has much increased of late years. I also believe that in many cases the practice has been commenced without due consideration, chiefly through an example set elsewhere. Such was the case recently by the action of one or two persons at a country mission hall with which I am acquainted. But on the matter being brought before the committee of the Mission, a minute was adopted recently in the following terms:—"The sale of copies of —— at the close of our meetings on Sabbath evenings has received our serious attention. Such sale is unanimously considered undesirable. . . . Attention has been given to the detrimental influence upon children of being brought into contact with the sale of papers on the Lord's Day at a place of worship, as tending to lessen in their minds a right regard for the sanctity of that day, and to predispose them to slight it in reference to the purchase of other articles. . . . We conclude that no publication of any kind be offered for sale at the mission hall here on the Sabbath Day."

I hope these and other considerations may lead to thought, and a discontinuance of the custom in other places.—Yours, faithfully,

Aldington, Kent. ALFRED S. DYER.

On Monday, May 26, at noon, in Room No. 6, and at 7.30 p.m., in the Large Hall, there will be preliminary Prayer Meetings, with short addresses. At 7 a.m., in Room No. 4, there will be the usual early Prayer Meeting, on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday. On Friday, May 30, at 11 a.m., there will be a PRAISE MEETING in the Large Hall.

Day of Prayer for Israel.—In connection with the work of Mr. D. C. Joseph among West London Jews, a day of prayer was held on Thursday last in Union Hall, Carlisle Street, Edgware Road, W. Brief addresses were delivered morning and evening on Gospel work among the Jews and the Messianic claims of the Lord Jesus. Such as sympathise with Mr. Joseph in his labours may write him at 138, Clifden Road, Clapton, N.E.

Progress and Prospects in China.

CHINA INLAND MISSION.

THE anniversary meetings of the China Inland Mission were held last week in the light of a year of new beginnings. The dark cloud of persecution and martyrdom had in the good providence of God given place to a revelation of his gracious purpose. Fewer missionaries than last year were at home to take part in the celebrations; and therein lay the cause of much thanksgiving, because the way had been opened up for the return of many to China, and they were back at their posts. At the afternoon gathering on Tuesday, the chair was taken by Sir GEORGE WILLIAMS; and on the suggestion of Mr. Theodore Howard, special prayer was offered at the opening for Rev. J. Hudson Taylor.

LETTER FROM REV. J. HUDSON TAYLOR.

A letter was received from Mr. Taylor, in which he expressed the joy with which he had recently paid a visit to England, meeting many friends. Though the condition of his health did not allow of his remaining for the gatherings, he desired to send to all a message expressive of his grateful love. "We cannot but rejoice together," he said, "in the wide and effectual door which our Master has reopened in China, and thank Him for restoring so many of the dear workers to their loved field of labour." He then proceeded to sound a note of praise for the sparing of so many of the native helpers, after the withdrawal of all the European missionaries; and asked for much and earnest prayer that the members of the native church may be led, by the season of fiery trial through which they have passed, to lean in the future more immediately than ever on the Lord. Referring to the practical withdrawal of himself and his brother-in-law (Mr. B. Broomhall) from the direction of the Mission, he expressed deep gratitude that the responsibility was being borne by such fellow-labourers as Messrs. Howard, Sloan, Wood, Hoste, and Stevenson.

Many hearts were touched as the CHAIRMAN strove to comfort those who had been bereaved during the massacres. Pointing to the manner in which members of a family rejoice in worldly honour conferred on one, he said, "Lift up your heads and rejoice. The Lord has put great honour upon you. He will enable you to look forward to the time when you will see your dear relatives in the glory wearing their honours."

CHINA OPEN AS NEVER BEFORE.

In an address marked by much force and power, Rev. EDWARD PEARSE illustrated from his personal experience in the provinces of Kiang-su and Kiang-si, the fact that "the Lord Jesus Christ is working to-day in the same ways as He did in the days of the Apostles."

Comparing the position of affairs in 1876 with that at the present day, Mr. Pearse showed how real the progress has been. At that time the Mission was at work in five provinces, and there were nine provinces wholly unoccupied. Eighteen missionaries were appealed for and obtained to go in and possess these provinces, and now the twenty stations of the Mission had become 178. "Then the missionaries had a very different story to tell. China is open as never before. Not only can we enter cities which were closed to us, but the people are coming in large numbers to hear the Gospel. Many of them have other aims; but great good may come of the movement. The prejudice of the people has been largely removed, and it is this prejudice that has hindered our work."

THE STONY PARTS OF THE FIELD.

Believing that "the ropes" which support missionaries are more firmly held up by prayer than by money-giving, Mrs. STOTT (Wun-chau) pointed out several special directions in which the Lord's remembrancers may take a definite share in the work. "There are some parts of China that are still dark, and it is so easy to get into sympathy with those missionaries who, because they have gone into parts of the field that were more easily worked, have seemed to be more successful. There are other parts where the missionary has laboured for long years, and yet no sheaves have been gathered in, or very few. I bespeak your earnest prayers for those places where the labourers' hearts are almost fainting.

"There are some difficulties facing us even more than they did before. There are the great difficulties of opium smoking and growing, which are spreading over China like a black pall. The churches in China have taken firm ground with regard to opium. We will have nothing to do with it. We will not allow the opium smoker nor the opium grower to have a place in our churches."

TESTIMONY FROM ELDER HSU.

Reviewing the events of the past two years in Shan-si, Mr. E. J. COOPER said that when he left his station of Lu-cheng the Mission had in the province twenty-seven stations, twenty out stations, 1,358 communicants, and 103 missionaries, the number of missionaries altogether being about 150. Then he recalled how the storm burst, and touched on the terrible story which has been graphically told in Mr. A. R. Saunders' book, "A God of Deliverances."

MR. WALTER B. SLOAN.

From Photograph by Barclay Bros., London and Glasgow.

"At the end of 1900 that fair church was in ruins, its leaders and some of the best of the natives gone; but it is rising from the ruins glorified and beautified. It has its martyrs and its living witnesses, for there are in that Church of Shan-si to-day some who have passed through the fire, and have been delivered just as really and wonderfully as our own party, and others who are bearing a noble testimony. A commission, including Mr. Hoste and Mr. Orr Ewing, went into Shan-si, and from that time work of reconstruction has been going on. Mr. Ernest Taylor, son of the beloved founder and director of the Mission, was the first to live in the province.

"The present condition is summed up in a letter from Elder Hsü, who has come forth as gold seven times purified. He has stood out full of sincerity and honesty, as one who can be perfectly trusted. 'Thank the Lord the church is in a most hopeful condition, and there are signs of great interest and prosperity. Wherever we preach the people are willing to listen to the Gospel. Numbers have given up idolatry and earnestly worship God. There are, moreover, signs of advance inside the church also.'"

FACTS AND EVENTS OF THE YEAR.

From the financial statement read by Mr. WALTER B. SLOAN, it appeared that the income in London during 1901 had been £46,392 16s. 7d., with £7,240 4s. 9d. from China, America and Australia, making in all £53,633 1s. 4d., an increase of £267 16s. 6d. on the amount for 1900. No less than ninety missionaries were able to return to their work, and thirty-three new missionaries were able to go out. "We can say that practically our missionaries are back in every place from whence they had to flee, and have found entrance to not a few places where in the past they were unable to go. There are only two restrictions at present. Our unmarried ladies are not allowed to go back to Shan-si, and the same applies to Kan-suh. But after what we have seen of the hand of the Lord working and opening up the way, we cannot but believe that ere long these will be also withdrawn.

"Two very important events have happened during the past twelve months. The first was the return of the Chinese Court to Peking. People ask, What is the attitude of the Chinese Government? Well, so far as we can tell, they are conscious that for China's own sake they made a terrible mistake when they lent themselves, in 1900, to the movement to expel foreigners, and that it is hopeless to make another attempt. They seem to have said to themselves, "If we must have the foreigners among us, the better we treat them the better will they treat us." This attitude to missionaries and other foreigners is reflected in all the provinces.

"The second event was the treaty between our own Government and Japan. We cannot but think that the completion of this agreement will give a sense of stability to the Chinese Government themselves that will be helpful in maintaining matters as they have been.

"The Chinese now to a large extent know that the Protestant missionaries have in many cases accepted no compensation for their losses, and universally no more than was reasonable; whereas the Roman Catholics have extorted the utmost they could, and far more than was fair or just. This has led to a sharp distinction being drawn between Protestants and Roman Catholics.

"You can be co-workers with us to the very fullest degree, and in the true exercise of the ministry and prayer that belongs to every one of us. Will you join with us in praise that the Lord God who was at the beginning of this work in his infinite mercy and compassion remains in it to-day?"

At a second large meeting held in the evening, Lord KINNAIRD (chairman) spoke on the need that we in Britain should realize that God has not given us our great spiritual gifts to possess them alone; and showed that what had seemed a great perplexity was now evident as the fulfilling of God's blessed Word.

Deep interest attached to the account given by Mr. A. GRACIE of the experiences of the party which travelled through Honan with a view to the reopening of the work.

The complexity of the problem in Yunnan through the presence of many tribes speaking different languages was explained by Mr. J. GRAHAM (Ta-li-fu), who asked prayer for an increase of good native evangelists.

The great call for everyone to be in the line of God's will, was the burden of the message from Miss L. SEYMOUR (Ning-hai, Shantung), who also showed that there can be no comparison between Confucianism and a living Gospel.

"Are you willing to go, if it is as sudden as that?" was the question asked by Rev. A. T. POLHILL-TURNER, after recounting the circumstances under which he and his brother sailed within four weeks of hearing the call. Rev. J. GREGORY MANTLE closed with an address full of spiritual power and fire.

THE LATE

Henry Lankester, M.R.C.S., J.P.

OF LEICESTER.

By Rev. J. D. CARNEGIE.

FOR well-nigh half a century the whole community of Leicester has been singularly blessed by the Christian life and testimony of Dr. Henry Lankester, recently called home. As an invaluable legacy to the deepest needs of the town to which in his lifetime he gave of his best, the elevating influence and impulse of his high Christian character will not soon be spent. Manifestly Christian in all his relationships, both private and public, Dr. Lankester lived as one who had "sanctified in his heart Christ as Lord," as one whose aim ever was—"To me to live is Christ."

Born at Poole, on November 3, 1825, Henry Lankester had, in all spiritual respects, the best possible start in life. The traditions and atmosphere of family grace were with him from his birth. His ancestry was distinguished for an enlightened and active piety. His immediate relatives graciously maintained the same spiritual distinction. His father, Mr. John Lankester, a Justice of the Peace, and Mayor of Poole, carried religion with him into all the offices and engagements of life. Closely identified with the Congregational Church, the father, like the son after him, cherished kinship with all fellow-workers in the Gospel.

Enriched and fortified by the sacred influences of a Christian home, and by personal consecration to Christ, Mr. Henry Lankester, as a youth, went up to the great open world of London. Here, with all the temptations to the contrary which beset a medical student, he kept the faith and grew in grace, while steadily pursuing an arduous and distinguished course at St. Thomas' Hospital. Among other prizes, he obtained the Cheselden silver medal for proficiency in surgery, and also the coveted gold medal given by the President.

It was altogether a good day for Leicester when, in 1854, the young practitioner was led thither. Henceforth for nearly fifty years, his path was "as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day. In all the spheres in which he moved, Dr. Lankester lived and served as one to whom life was a Christian mission, a manifold opportunity and obligation sent of God, a sacred trust from and for eternity. One felt that "the power of an endless life" was with him, in private life, in professional circles, in church life and work, in evangelistic, philanthropic, and missionary effort, in civic offices and public service generally—in the whole round and witness of his life. There was a unity of Christian purpose and practice in all he was and did. "He was the most saintly man I have ever known"—thus publicly testified one who had been intimately associated with him throughout his Leicester career, and who shared with him the distinction of serving the community in the capacity of its Mayor.

His high Christian character in the home-life—perhaps the most revealing scene of spirit and character—is best reflected in his family. With a partner in life after his own heart, and altogether with him in his Christian aims and ends, he had the joy of seeing one after another of his children following in their parents' footsteps. Said one of his sons, as he stood by his father's remains "asleep in Jesus";—"That expressive word piety, now largely in disuse, was exactly applicable to him;" and he added, "After all these years, I cannot recall any un-Christian word or act of my father, in all our home-life."

The grace and wisdom in the home-training and influence are also worthy of note. A letter recently received from Dr. Arthur Lankester, in Peshawar, says, "His method was never driving, but quietly guiding and leading." In two particular directions this was strikingly illustrated by the general results. To the cause of Temperance, and to that of Foreign Missions, the lamented parent was pre-eminently devoted. Temperance principles, however, although illustrated in the home, were not actively instilled. And yet this method of training was so efficient that his six sons and daughter, and also their respective wives and husband, are pronounced total abstainers. Then as to missionary faith, and gift, and enterprise. The missionary atmosphere pervaded the home, and with remarkable results. The eldest son gave up a lucrative and rapidly-growing practice in the West End of London to become physician to the Church Missionary Society, and now serves it, in addition, as secretary of its Medical Mission Auxiliary. Says the "Centenary History of the C.M.S.": "The whole work of medical missions has received immense impetus through the activity of the new medical department under Dr. Herbert Lankester."

Moreover, two other sons are medical missionaries, and are doing splendid work at Peshawar, North India (C.M.S.). Yet, again, a fourth son is hon. treasurer of the Leicestershire and Rutland Auxiliary of the London Missionary Society, and magnifies his office by his zeal and corresponding liberality. Then, as showing the same missionary spirit, the other members of the family send our thoughts back to the quiet, guiding influence and systematic training of the home life. The only daughter is married to a brother of Mr. Albert Lloyd, C.M.S. missionary, and well known as an African traveller.

In his profession as a medical man—surely a profession which puts a severe test on Christian faith and character—Dr. Lankester ministered abundantly to spiritual as well as to physical troubles. No argument is needed to show the great and varied good a doctor may do beyond the strict limits of his profession, while faithfully attending to its distinctive calls. In more than one home the writer has been told of the strange and welcome sight of Dr. Lankester offering up fervent prayer in the presence of the sick, the dying, and the bereaved.

It is also noteworthy that it was largely by what the Doctor saw of the broken constitutions, broken hearts, and broken homes through intemperance, and with the compassion of his Master in view of such woes, that he became one of the most earnest exponents and unwavering advocates of total abstinence ever known in Leicester. He was for many years president of the Leicestershire Band of Hope Union, a constant and able speaker at temperance meetings, where he usually dealt with the medical aspect of the question, and the duty of abstaining from intoxicants for the sake of others. For the same reason, he wore the blue ribbon for many years, and adhered to this, as of course he did rigidly to his temperance principles, during his year of office as Mayor of Leicester. His whole-hearted pursuit of his noble calling as a medical man, was in harmony with his whole-hearted pursuit of his "high calling in Christ Jesus our Lord."

There was no parting of the ways between the practical and the spiritual. Though living a very busy life, he was a man of prayer, and a diligent reader of his Bible. Only a few days before his last illness, he completed the Bible-Searching Almanac for the previous year. With the distinctive life and witness of the Christian Church, Dr. Lankester was constantly and actively identified. A Congregationalist by early training and personal conviction, he was Evangelically catholic in his sympathies and service.

Shortly after his settlement in Leicester, he joined the Bond Street Congregational Church. Soon called to the office of deacon, he held that office, by virtue of successive elections, till the "home call" came. His Evangelical faith and zeal, his humble and reverent spirit, his high ideal of the fellowship and the mission of the Christian Church, his natural abilities and varied knowledge of men, his large-heartedness and abounding liberality—all these did much to mould and direct the Christian life and testimony of the particular local church in which his lot was cast. Much helpful service was also rendered to the associated churches of the County Union. In addition, his services were heartily given, according to opportunity, to Evangelical churches of all orders. To the furtherance of all movements and institutions with evangelistic, philanthropic, and kindred ends in view, he ever gave of his best—in faith, in counsel, in energy, and means, and in every respect at his command.

He loved and worked for the good of men, because he loved his Lord. In this connection we may quote the words uttered by Rev. W. Y. Fullerton before representatives of the different causes and institutions that had received good at the hands of the departed doctor:—"There are no words in the whole Bible that so adequately express the life of Henry Lankester as those written about his Master. I hesitate to apply them to him, fearing a half protest from the dead:—'He went about doing good.'"

In closing this brief account of the Christian life and testimony of Dr. Lankester, we would remark on his religious trust and calm when passing through severe trial. On retiring from practice some years ago, he was suddenly and unexpectedly called upon to sustain heavy financial loss. This was received with beautiful submission, nothing being felt so much as the limits now put on his powers of giving. Similarly his last illness, a very trying and protracted one, was received as from God with a singular resignation of spirit. On January 30, 1902, the gentle spirit was "gently translated."

"To him it was not so much as even the lifting of a latch;
Only a step into the open air
Out of a tent already luminous with light that shined through its transparent walls.
O pure in heart!"

Blind Children in India.

DURING the recent famine in India, I was impressed with the large number of blind children in the various famine relief camps and mission orphanages, and knowing no institution for that unfortunate class of children in all Western India (though a few classes have been formed for a very limited number of children), I intimated my willingness to take any such who should be sent to me, feeling that they too should have some of the advantages given to the blind in other countries. Almost immediately some were sent, and as soon as it became known others applied for admission, until there are now over thirty boys and girls from five to eighteen years of age. The school was opened with the desire of rescuing blind children, and especially girls, from a life of beggary on the streets, and from those (in many cases not even parents or relatives) who make merchandise of their blindness for their own ends.

Here, in the East, begging is considered the legitimate occupation of the blind, and that they can learn anything by which to earn their own living is altogether a foreign idea. This school is, therefore, a constant source of surprise to all classes of the community, hundreds of whom have been to visit it. The children have thus won many friends for themselves, even among the non-Christian people of Bombay. One Hindu gentleman, a barrister, who recently came to see them, was so interested that he sent a present of one dozen cots, with entire furnishings of mattresses and blankets. At another time, he asked to be allowed to give them Sunday suits for church, as he said he wanted to see them all neatly dressed alike for Sunday.

LIFE HISTORIES.

Some of these little ones have had such sad but interesting histories. One of them when asked about her mother, said, "Do not speak to me of her; she left me by the road side to die, and I do not wish to think of her any more." Another, quite a young girl, was deserted by her husband during the famine, because she had become a blind and useless burden. Still another, whose eyes were destroyed by gazing at the sun, was left at the road side by her friends, and not until night came on and she heard the wild beasts roaring about her, did she realize that she had been left alone to die. She was, however, finally rescued and carried to one of the Mission orphanages, from which place she was sent to the blind school. Besides being taught the regular school lessons, Braille reading, writing and arithmetic, their little minds are being filled with Scripture and hymns, which latter they sing most sweetly. Several of them have decided musical talent.

A PROPOSAL.

The Lord has signally blessed this beginning of work for the blind in Western India. It has grown so rapidly in the year and a half of its existence that we have been obliged to move into larger quarters three different times. Thus far the school has been entirely supported by subscriptions. A permanent building, well equipped to accommodate 100 boys and girls, is the need of the hour. An advantageous site is available for £2,000 if secured immediately. A like amount will also be required for the necessary building, when the site is secured. A Christian architect and others competent to judge regarding the cost of such a building, have been consulted and this estimate has been received from them. Should this project meet with success, the property will be placed in charge of the trustees of the mission with which I am connected—The American Board (offices: 14, Beacon Street, Boston, Mass.).—Yours, &c.,

(Miss) Anna L. Millard.

The Broussa Orphanage.

THE Protestant Armenian Orphan Home at Broussa, Asia Minor, was founded twenty-seven years ago by Pastor G. Baghdasarian. Over one thousand children have passed through it, and are to-day esteemed Christian fathers and mothers, pastors' wives, governesses, tradesmen, doctors, lawyers, public officials, skilled workmen, &c. There is reason to believe, too, that the Christian teaching imparted in the Home has borne fruit in the honourable and consistent Christian lives of these men and women.

The institution at the present time shelters seventy-two poor orphan Armenian children, of whom more than one-half lost fathers or both parents in the massacres of recent years. Here the children are carefully nurtured and instructed by the pastor and his devoted wife, and what is of the utmost importance, receive Evangelical training.

A visitor writes:—"Pastor Baghdasarian, a former pupil of the Bâle Training College for Missionaries, is a gentle, affectionate man, blest by the Holy Spirit with faithfulness, love of order, and unlimited self-abnegation. This man knows nothing of what is called personal pleasure—his one happiness is the institution, which he rarely leaves, even to take a walk! His faithful wife, a native of Esslingen, but brought up in French Switzerland, and educated as a teacher, is theoretically and practically a perfect master of German, French, and English. She speaks Armenian as well, and some Turkish. Regardless of the fact that she has eight children of her own, she not only superintends the kitchen and laundry on the huge domestic side of the institution, but teaches in the school, and conducts the singing-class in a remarkable manner."

With the view of enlarging the circle of friends in this country, Pastor Baghdasarian has issued an English translation of his report, the pages of which are embellished with portrait groups of the orphans, for which foster-parents are sought—the maintenance of each orphan costing £10 per annum. Communications may be addressed to the pastor, at the Orphanage, Broussa, Asia Minor; or to Miss A. Brooke, 11, Herbert Street, Dublin.

Our Soldiers in South Africa.

DEAR SIR,—Your readers who are kindly supplying us with literature for soldiers in South Africa will be interested to hear that their gifts are greatly appreciated. In the Transvaal a commanding officer promised the superintendent of our Camp Home there that a non-commissioned officer should be sent to the blockhouses with the packets of reading. At Pretoria and Johannesburg members of the S.A.G.M. are receiving parcels from us and distributing the contents.

A soldier writes to the publishers of the "Grace Pettman Stories," on behalf of his regiment, which is stationed along a lonely line of blockhouses. Expressing their appreciation of this kind of reading, he says:—"We find your stories quite bright and interesting, and they pass many a long, weary hour away."

We have deputed the late manager of one of the Camp Homes to visit the lines of blockhouses regularly, giving all his time to this and the distribution of literature. He writes of blessing and encouragement at the Home he has lately superintended. (Mrs.) M. S. Osborn Howe.

Forgiving Persecutors in Italy

AT Carunchio (province of Chieti) some forty of the inhabitants asked the evangelist of Schiavi to visit them. He went, and was begged to return; but meanwhile the priests had succeeded in rousing the fanatical spirit of their most bigoted adherents. When the evangelist was preaching to forty-two persons in a small room, 100 poor peasants, whose courage had been stimulated by something to drink (!), surrounded the house, and began literally to bombard it with large stones. Hearing their outcries of "Down with, Death to the Protestants!" the syndic and marshal of police ran to the spot; but for several hours all their efforts to calm the infuriated mob succeeded only in preventing them from forcing the door. About forty of the assailants were arrested, and condemned to fine and imprisonment.

Then the assailants signed a petition to ask grace from the King. The King's answer was that he was disposed to give grace, but could not do so unless they had obtained pardon from the evangelist. Then the men sent the mayor to the minister asking him to forgive them. The minister signed a declaration saying that he and his followers, although offended in their rights of free citizens, very willingly pardoned them. When the petition of grace was laid before the King with the minister's declaration, his Majesty signed the decree of grace. The people who had thus been pardoned went to the preaching hall to give a kind of ovation to the minister and to the Protestants, and so, instead of saying "Death to the Protestants," they changed their outcry into "Long live the Protestants!" and some of them now attend our Gospel meetings regularly.

Martin Frobisher.

From Western China.

IN a recent letter to The Record, Bishop Cassels says that in the province of Si Ch'uen there is in progress "an extraordinary movement towards Christianity.

"In connection with my own work here more idols have been destroyed during the past six months than in the six or eight previous years, and more money given for church purposes than in the ten previous years.

"During the previous years many tracts, Christian booklets, and Gospel portions have, of course, been sold; but recently the demand has been for whole Bibles (well-bound copies, too), prayer-books, and hymn-books, a demand greater than we have been able to meet at once. And whereas, in the past, it has often been most difficult to get houses for dwelling, preaching-rooms, or temporary churches, now houses are being pressed on me in many directions, sometimes even being offered free of charge, if only I would send a preacher to occupy them. Further, in contrast to past years, it is the gentry, the scholars, and the wealthier people who are wishing to enter the church.

"I use advisedly the words 'enter the church,' because that pretty well describes the situation. These people are not crying out, 'What must I do to be saved?' In many cases they know little or nothing about salvation or the Saviour, and cannot, of course, be said to be actuated by the highest spiritual motives.

"But the fact that such different and opposite reasons are given me in different places for the people wishing to join the church, seems to show that, whereas there may be superficial local movements at work, there is also a deep underlying movement upheaving the soil, destroying the old foundations, and preparing the way for the setting-up of the Kingdom of God. This, at any rate, is clear—the opportunity is an extraordinary and unprecedented one."

Troops in India.—The Home for Soldiers has been reopened at Dalhousie, Punjab, and gifts of illustrated papers and magazines, &c., will be much appreciated. Parcels may be addressed to Miss J. Tylor, at the Home.

The May Meetings.

Protestant Reforms.

AFTER seventy-five years of steady and continuous effort the Protestant Reformation Society still displays great vigour. The report of last year's work, presented at the annual meeting at Exeter Hall last week, was received with a sense of profound gratitude to God for the unfailing direction from above which has been experienced. Among other objects, the Society seeks to arouse, meet, direct, and satisfy a spirit of inquiry into the essential differences between Romanism and Protestantism. The workers of the organization realize that Rome has not slackened her efforts in propagating her deadly heresies, and that England is in no less danger from the encroachments of Romanism in 1902 than she was in 1827. At the various centres the work of the Society has been maintained with unvarying success, while a new station has been opened at Leyton. Among theological and other students, advantage has been taken of opportunities for delivering lectures and sermons, and distributing literature, in advocacy of the cause for which the Society exists.

PROTESTANTS AND ROME'S INTRUSION.

The desire to promote unity among Protestants has been hailed and encouraged, and it is the earnest hope of the Society that all well-meant endeavours to organize and unite the Protestant spirit of India, and of all the "Britains beyond the seas," may be linked on to exertions in the mother country.

Viewing with much concern the arrival in Great Britain of a large number of members of Romish monastic and other orders, who have refused to submit to the laws of France for their due regulation, the Society is determined that every effort must be made to resist the illegal intrusion of such orders, and to counteract their efforts for the overthrow of the Protestant faith, and their undue influence in the political concerns of the empire.

Mr. W. J. FRASER, who presided, referred to the fact that the Society is the oldest organization for the defence of apostolic doctrines secured by the Reformation, as well as a mission to our Roman Catholic fellow-countrymen. Alluding to the number of Romanizing elements in the Church of England, the Chairman spoke of the refusal of the Bishop of Chichester to sanction Evening Communion, and the Lord's Supper being celebrated at the time it was originally instituted. The speaker's protest against this action was warmly endorsed by the audience.

MISSIONS TO ROMAN CATHOLICS.

In the course of a stirring address, CANON CHRISTOPHER deplored that so little is being done in England in the way of missions to Roman Catholics. Compared with other countries, England is far behind. In the province of Quebec the Presbyterian Church alone has thirty-six missions to Roman Catholics, who are only half as numerous there as in England. Referring to the progressive labours of the Society's missionaries during the year, the speaker expressed the hope that it will be possible to retain the services of Dr. Wright as clerical and general superintendent.

Touching reference to the death of the veteran missionary, Mr. Flanagan, was made by the secretary, Mr. WALTER A. LIMBRICK, who afterwards spoke of the aggressive and defensive work of the missionaries at Balham, Kingswood, Totnes, St. Helens, and other places. Mr. W. H. WHITEHEAD followed with some interesting details of his forty-five years' labours under the auspices of the Society, particularly among Roman Catholics; and Messrs. C. GARDNER and W. MAYO, two other workers, added their testimony to the need which exists in many parts of the country for refuting the heresies of Rome by vigorous pronouncements of Protestant principles.

At the evening meeting the chair was occupied by Colonel SANDYS, M.P., who, in his presidential address, reviewed the efforts which had been made by Protestants to stem the tide of Romanising influence in this country. Rev. G. A. SOWTER, M.A., deprecated the idea of leaving the Romanizers in the Church alone, on the plea that they were conscientious men; and an appeal for greater union among Protestants was made by Dr. WRIGHT. Others who addressed the meeting were Rev. H. J. R. Marston and Mr. George Couch (the Society's missionary at Bromley).

Irish Church Missions.

WITH a record of fifty-three years' vigorous and persistent effort among Roman Catholics, the Irish Church Missions continue a widespread propaganda with tokens of increasing activity and success. At the annual meeting in Exeter Hall, the clerical secretary, Rev. N. F. DUNCAN, read an abstract of the year's report, which at the outset mentioned the loss the Society had sustained by the death of Mrs. Smyly. It is impossible to record all that Mrs. Smyly was to the work of the Society, and to the cause of the Gospel in Ireland. Her name was, most deservedly, a household word wherever the work among the lambs of Christ's flock was cared for, and her loving, gentle, wise influence was of the utmost value in the whole work of the Society.

A YEAR OF PROGRESS.

During the year ten adult converts were publicly received into the Church of Ireland in the Dublin Mission Church. The committee had appointed Rev. P. B. Johnson to the new post of General Organizing Superintendent, for the purpose of consultation and co-operation with the various superintendents of the Society and with the clergy generally; and had decided on the appointment of a successor to him in the superintendence of the Dublin Mission, in order that Mr. Johnson may be set free to meet the increasing aggressiveness of Rome in different parts of Ireland. After a reference to the case of Dr. Long, the report stated that the Society had established three Mission bookshops in three of the towns, and in those during the year the sale of publications reached the total of 24,268, as compared with 15,340 the previous year. The total output of I.C.M. missionary literature for free distribution or for sale had attained a yearly average of 300,000.

Rev. CANON GIRDLESTONE, who presided, in the course of a stirring address, deplored the fact that Ireland was spoiled by an ignoble religion, and asked, What is a nation without a true religion? What would England do without its Protestant religion? One religion pointed to Jesus as the King; the other to a human being—the Pope. All men had some religion; they should have the true religion. It was not the question, Where shall I find a perfect Church, but Where a perfect Saviour? This Society had its work cut out for it. It was a much-needed, loving, growing work.

Words of hearty appreciation of the Society were uttered by Rev. G. A. SOWTER. While on a visit to the Sister Isle he had been impressed with the care taken to promote reverence among the thousands of children in the mission schools. It was absolutely impossible to do work in Ireland without being controversial. In England, a Protestant country, there was no one in their churches to controvert. In Ireland the barest word quoted from the Bible was controversy. Ireland was, however, opening up for open-air preaching, and the work of the Irish Church Missions was being crowned with success. He asked a preacher if the people at the fairs listened to them. "Listen!" he replied, "they listen by the hour."

Addresses were also given by Dr. J. J. LONG, medical missionary at Limerick, and Rev. PHILIP B. JOHNSON, superintendent of the Dublin Mission.

The Christian Community.

COMPRISING as it does members of all evangelical churches, the Christian Community unites in one common effort workers of many folds who are seeking the lost sheep. The Society was founded as early as 1685, and while not seeking to form churches, is essentially a home missionary organization, taking lodging houses, workhouses, mission halls, shelters, and the open air as its field of operation. The workers, who are all voluntary, rallied in large numbers at the conversazione in Exeter Hall on Wednesday of last week, and the public meeting which followed was memorable for the heartiness with which the proceedings were entered into.

A CHEERING RECORD.

The report of last year's operations is a record of varied and extensive endeavour. No fewer than 450 voluntary labourers of both sexes gave their spare time to the work, with the result that 15,000 inmates of workhouses, infirmaries, and casual wards were visited every week, as well as 2,000 lodging-house inmates. Seven mission halls and twenty-one open-air stations have been sustained. Twenty thousand breakfasts, teas, and suppers were given, and 13,000 children's dinners and breakfasts provided; 1,228 homeless men were sheltered for the night, and 1,021 bread, lodging, and other relief tickets distributed. Some thousands of workhouse inmates and children and adults have been taken to the country and entertained in the institutions at Christmastide.

A summary of the report was read by Mr. JAMES ATKINSON, the venerable secretary, who spoke of the cheering signs which had been witnessed in the prosecution of their labours, the most notable being the remarkable change which is seen in the lodging-houses, where a higher tone of life exists. Reference was made to the death of Dr. Gritton, whose counsel and help were so highly appreciated by the Society.

Mr. F. A. BEVAN, in presiding, referred to the testimony from mission workers in the Metropolis to two facts. On the one hand, there seems to be a greater respect for religious movements generally, with a readiness to hear what the messengers of the Gospel have to say; yet against this must be considered the neglect of the means of grace by a large section of the community, and the desecration of the Lord's Day. To meet this growing indifference to the Lord's Day and Word, no new methods will avail; there must be adherence to the old paths.

NO SUBSTITUTE FOR THE GOSPEL.

A stirring address was given by Rev. FLEMING SHEARER. The Society has answered the question always being asked by ministers—How can the churches attract the masses and get hold of the people? The method of going to the people when the people will not come to hear the Gospel, has proved to be the right course to adopt, because it is in harmony with the example set by Christ. While being thankful for the progress which it is possible to record, it must be remembered that the most permanent and fruitful is that which can never be expressed to the eye and ear of man. Nothing must be allowed to take the place of spiritual religion, and there must be no substitute for the Gospel. The one solution of the various problems which are perplexing the minds of men, is to be found in the Gospel of Christ.

Words of hearty encouragement to the workers were also spoken by Rev. JOHN BOND, showing how near to the Master's ministry of going about doing good, come the varied endeavours of this Society. Every such effort bears witness to the fact that Christianity is not "played out," but remains the one hope of the race. Take out of the world the institutions which Christianity has conferred, and nothing worth having will remain. Dr. D. A. AITKEN followed with a timely and inspiring word.

A Grave Missionary Situation.

LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

THE interest of the gatherings held in the early part of last week seemed to culminate at those of the London Missionary Society, and on Wednesday evening the Queen's Hall was crowded with a deeply interested audience. The opening hymn, "Crown Him with many crowns," supplied the keynote of the proceedings. In his address from the chair, Sir WILLIAM H. BROADBENT, M.D., K.C.V.O., declared that the broad catholic spirit of the Society appealed to him. "It has no denominational prefix. Its tenets are simple, its objects right and good. No doubt special forms of ecclesiastical organization and church government are necessary, but I do not consider any of them of vital importance, and in missionary work they should be lost sight of altogether. It is surely sufficient to teach the great central verities of Christianity."

The brief summary of the report, submitted by Rev. R. WARDLAW THOMPSON, showed conclusively that the year had been one marked by many signs of the working of God in and through the missionaries. The decennial review of last year abounded with evidence of growth and development from all parts of the field, and there is no indication of any check in this progress. The signs of blessing are seen in distinct spiritual movements, in fields so unlike each other in all their conditions as Central China and Matabeleland. In other cases they appear in the silent power exerted by preaching, teaching, and the diffusion of Christian literature, and also by the rise into new and serious prominence of important questions affecting the life of young Christian communities. The statistics of the decennial review were exceptionally full and careful. The returns for the present year are not complete, but they show an increase of 6,659 in the membership of the church, making the total 64,718. This growth is spread over all the field, but is most remarkable in China. It is not yet possible to ascertain the number of converts left in the North China Mission after the massacres, but in the central provinces progress has been phenomenal. There are now upwards of 90,000 boys and girls in the schools of the Society, as compared with 76,000 a year ago, and the Sunday scholars have grown from 46,678 to 54,249. The large growth in the number of day scholars is, however, mainly due to the resumption of elementary teaching in Madagascar, representing a increase of upwards of 11,000. The reports contain abundant proof that while the bulk of the converts are still very ignorant and weak, the grace of God is working effectually among them to make them what they ought to be, and that the real growth and progress are full of promise.

A GREAT DEFICIENCY.

The total available income was £121,000, while the expenditure was £153,700. Fortunately, the directors were able to withdraw from special investments for the Awemba Mission in Central Africa, and for work in India and China and elsewhere, and from a reserved legacy fund, nearly £6,100. But this still left a deficiency of £26,600, to be added to the £36,600 brought forward.

A very serious decrease had taken place in the amount received from legacies, and a great effort had been organized with the object of clearing off this deficiency of over £63,000 in connection with the anniversary. The sum received and promised was £40,000, and an earnest request was made for the £23,000 which would entirely balance the accounts.

A POLICY OF RESTRICTION.

"The responsibility incurred in refusing to respond to cries for help is great, but that for imperilling the very continuance of the Society is still greater; and the directors have had no alternative but to decide that until the receipts have once more come up to the level of the expenditure the growth of expenditure must be stopped:—they have resolved that during the next five years they will not exceed the average expenditure of the last two years unless additional contributions are provided, and then only to the extent of such additional contributions. This can, however, only be the prelude to a persistent campaign of appeal to Christian hearts and consciences for more adequate provision for the work which their Lord and Master has entrusted to their hands.

"The work, the need, the great opportunities of the present hour, appeal with irresistible force. God has richly blessed the work of his servants. Their responsibilities continue to increase, as the result of this blessing; yet the joy of participation in their Master's work, and the evidence of the blessing which 'abounds where'er He reigns,' inspire them with a readiness to attempt the larger and more exacting service which his call demands. His call has not been in vain in the past. Once and again the supporters of the Society have been required to make great and special efforts to meet great and urgent needs, and they have responded heartily. The directors are confident that the same spirit is in the churches still."

Mission work, said Mr. Thompson, had been increasing at a much greater rate than the Church has expected, and the time had come when the directors must have a clear declaration from their supporters. "What is to be done? I am thankful that the deficiency is in process of being dealt with: but shortage of income has become chronic. We are spending £500 a week more than we receive. There comes a point at which, even at the risk of injury to life, restriction must take place; and that point seems now to have been reached. This will be received with a cry of despair in the mission field." But to meet even the limited expenditure, it was shown that it will be necessary for the churches to raise the income to £150,000 a year. "To withdraw from the fields will mean ruin. Not ruin to the work, for if chaos be produced the Spirit of God will reduce that to order somehow; but ruin to those who are responsible."

THE CROWN RIGHTS OF THE REDEEMER.

When making a passionate appeal for the meeting of the requirements, Rev. C. SILVESTER HORNE asked whether we cannot do with fewer Coronation festivities and ephemeral decorations, "and try to realize the truth of the old Puritan phrase about the crown rights of Jesus? What I am asking for is sacrificial giving. Puritanism came to its throne in England by the way of the Cross, and it can only hold its throne as it holds by the Cross. You can only advance to the salvation of the world as you advance by the way of his Cross. We have built up the Puritan fabric by sacrifices. What about the 236 who, in one district of China, chose death rather than deny their Lord? Shall we, dare we, murmur because we are asked to turn our sovereigns into guineas? Dare we, in the face of what they have done, deny the opportunity? Christian people outside this hall do not know enough of British missions, enough of British history, to know how they ought to give."

A message of faith, love, and hope was brought from the Paris Missionary Society by its secretary, Rev. A. BOEGNER, who spoke of the warm fellowship subsisting between the two Societies. "Our Society is carrying out the same principle as yours, and is uniting all the forces of French Protestantism. We have taken your place in Tahiti, and are taking it in the Loyalty Islands. Largest of all, we are sharing your work in Madagascar, where we now are as large a part as your own. The word of faith is only a relation of what God has done for us—not our work, but God's work. Our income ten years ago was £13,000; last year it was £45,000."

WHAT THE NATIVE CHURCHES WILL DO.

"I am thankful that you have got into these difficulties," said Rev. J. DUTHIE (Nagercoil, Travancore), "because when I go back to India I shall be able to tell the Christians there that the people of England and Scotland have become so poor that they cannot carry on this great enterprise, and so we must not look so much to that side of the world. We must try to do more for ourselves; and they will do it."

Speaking of what he knew, he said, "Go to the Government if you want to know about the progress of Christianity. The Christian population is upwards of half a million greater than ten years ago." There were no ordained native pastors when he went out forty-seven years ago; but he had taken part in thirty-one such ordinations. "These are the leaders and teachers of great multitudes."

New Guinea was represented by Rev. J. H. HOLMES, who vividly illustrated, from the history of persons whom he had met, the wondrous change which has come over the cannibal savages of the island through the preaching of Jesus Christ. A special word of praise was spoken for the men and women who, for Christ's sake, have gone from other islands to New Guinea, and have there suffered and died.

Tower Hamlets Mission.

THE Great Assembly Hall, Mile End, E., was filled to its utmost capacity on Wednesday, last week, for the celebration of the thirty-second anniversary of the Mission.

In the course of an introductory address, Mr. E. H. KERWIN, secretary, referred to the continued encouragement which attends the many-sided operations of this strikingly fruitful Mission.

Mr. F. N. CHARRINGTON followed. At the outset, he thanked the strong force of helpers for the ardent support they had given, and, proceeding, spoke of the continued need for consecrated effort in preaching Christ amid the toiling populations of East London. "At the very beginning of the Mission I was strongly impressed by the fact that theatres and music halls were open every evening, yet no place could be found where ennobling truth was nightly proclaimed. I then conceived the idea that the doors of this Mission should never be closed, and, thank God, for over a quarter of a century the effort has been sustained night by night." Mr. Charrington said that for no fewer than 9,500 consecutive nights the Gospel of God's grace has been preached, and the cause of total abstinence proclaimed.

Last year 253 new members were added to the roll, and 1,800 persons passed through the inquiry room. It should be remembered that the hall is probably the largest of its kind in the world. The largest Sunday school in London is held within its walls; it now numbers nearly 2,000 scholars. Then, in the Children's Hall a numerous assembly gathers for the children's service, and the Band of Hope is also remarkably successful. The "Men's Own" exercises a widespread influence for good, and the Forest Cottage Home, under Mrs. Kerwin's direction, has been much used in ministering to the bodily and spiritual needs of weak and delicate children. The members of "The Crusaders" (the Gospel Temperance Society) have been indefatigable in their labours; meetings have been held, pledges secured, and visits paid to the homes of those who signed. "In fact, every branch of the mission is in a flourishing condition."

A WONDERFUL RECORD.

Speaking from the chair, Mr. T. A. DENNY paid a cordial tribute to the earnest character of the work maintained, and said that they had listened to a wonderful record. He often passed the Great Assembly Hall, and invariably, on looking in, found the workers full of industry and energy.

After Lady HOPE and Rev. J. RUSSELL COUTTS had added their testimonies to the value of the various agencies, and addressed words of counsel and guidance to the people, Mr. GEORGE NOKES and Rev. J. E. WATTS-DITCHFIELD spoke briefly. The meeting concluded with hearty words from Mr. THOMAS RICHARDSON, and a forcible address to the unconverted by Mr. JACK COOKE.

Ramsgate Fishermen.—In addition to the new effort being organized at Ramsgate by the British and Foreign Sailors' Society, there is a sailors' home under the care of the thoroughly Evangelical vicar (Rev. C. L. Williams), in connection with which earnest missionary work is carried on, the clergy being frequent preachers.

Deep Sea Fishermen.

ENCOURAGING tidings of fruitful work, both ashore and afloat, were given at the annual gatherings of the Royal National Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen, held at Exeter Hall, on Tuesday of last week. Tastefully decorated with flags, trophies, and mottoes, the hall presented a pleasing appearance, while the audiences were large and enthusiastic. As usual, there was a contingent of representatives of the fishing community.

In the afternoon Sir ROBERT ANDERSON, who presided, recognised the great value of the medical work among the fishermen of the North Sea fleets. But for the Mission, the men, whose life is one of continuous danger, would be destitute of medical aid or spiritual ministry. In these days we have learned that religious efforts are none the less valuable because they benefit physically as well as spiritually. It is the deliberate purpose, however, of this organization, that its philanthropy shall be Christian, and it is on this account that it secures and retains the large-hearted sympathy of Christian people.

A SUMMARY OF WORK.

Some of the outstanding features of the year's work were tersely set forth by Rev. JOHN RADFORD. The Queen Alexandra hospital steam trawler has been constructed at a cost of £12,000, and is shortly to be dedicated, while another vessel is in course of construction. When these are completed and launched, each of the great North Sea fleets will have its hospital ship. By means provided in the Queen Victoria Fund, an institute has been opened at Brixham, and a new wing added to the premises at Grimsby. At Aberdeen, too, an institute is almost ready for occupation.

A summary of work done at the shore institutions shows:—Religious services held, 142; attendants at services, 19,085; missionary visits to vessels, homes, and hospitals, 811. On the North Sea the figures show:—Patients treated, 6,372; missionary visits, 3,450; services held, 2,300; temperance pledges secured, 615; copies of the Scriptures sold or given away, 1,954.

After Rev. R. COTTERALL had borne earnest testimony to the efficiency of the Society's operations, Mr. FRANK WILSON gave a genial and characteristic address, in which he showed that further provision is necessary on shore, in order to encourage home-coming fishermen to walk in right ways, and to afford a counteracting influence to that of the public-house. Mr. Wilson also spoke of the need for a mission vessel among mackerel fishers using the port of Tralee, where injured men have at present to go over nine miles for treatment. The speaker gave hearty praise to the bright, attractive institutes.

FOR DISTRESSED FISHERS.

Dr. GEO. H. SIMPSON, who labours with Dr. Grenfell in Labrador and Newfoundland, after showing the great value of the hospitals, gave a vivid account of the conditions which prevail during winter. One-third of the revenue of the country is swallowed up in relieving distress. To combat the truck system, a supply store has been opened by the Mission, and has proved a great help to the poor fishers and their families. "Spiritually, all is well." Dr. Grenfell is busy in many directions, building a new vessel, making roads, erecting a mill, and supervising the hospitals. Evangelistic meetings are held in places where services have been unknown for many months. In one place visited by Dr. Simpson "the people had no hymn-books and knew no hymns. I had to sing alone." In order to meet the needs of such spiritually destitute places, Dr. Grenfell has organized a force of travelling preachers.

Other speakers included Mr. T. B. MILLER and a number of fishermen and mission workers, who gave the audience great delight by hearty recitals of personal experiences in evangelistic labours. Another meeting was held in the evening. It was also of a fervent character, and vigorous addresses in advocacy of the Mission were heartily received by a large audience.

British Jews' Society.

FRIENDS of Israel rallied at Exeter Hall on Thursday to participate in the happy proceedings of celebrating the fifty-ninth anniversary of the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews.

The President, Sir ANDREW WINGATE, K.C.I.E., occupied the chair, and the report presented by Rev. ISAAC LEVINSON was full of evidence of the interest which the Christian Church is taking in the work of the Society. Realizing that the West End of London presents a unique field for Gospel effort among Israel, the Society has for some time turned its attention in this direction. In order to carry on the work satisfactorily, suitable premises are required, and the council and committee have resolved, after mature deliberation, to meet the need by erecting a Mission House; and they hope to perpetuate the memory of two honoured pioneers in missionary work, by designating the building "The Wingate-McCheyne Memorial." Part of the house is to be used as a residence for the missionary, and the remainder for the general work of the mission, as well as serving as a home for the young converts, many of whom are foreigners, and need educational help. The Mission House will also be a training home for young men who are seeking opportunities for preparing themselves as ministers of the Gospel or missionaries to the Jews and the heathen.

EXTENSION OF WORK.

The Society's operations have been extended during the year both abroad and at home, and the secretary voiced the experience of the missionaries when he declared that there has been but little difficulty in persuading Jews to accept copies of the New Testament. Among many centres from which tidings of progress had been received, Hamburg, Rome, and Vienna were mentioned. The last-named city had yielded twenty-seven converts, while the entire attitude of Israel towards Protestantism and Christianity is becoming more and more favourable. The homes for the aged are supported from separate funds, and are occupied by old Hebrew Christian men and women, forming a shelter and retreat for the Lord's own people in their declining years.

Having only returned the previous evening from a visit to the Holy Land, the CHAIRMAN spoke from observation of the numerous signs to be witnessed there that the scattered nation is returning to its own land. All Christians must rejoice in the blessing which is attending the labours of those who are seeking to enlighten and win the Jew for Christ before he turns again to his own country. The number of Jewish converts has grown so considerably that the Hebrew Christian community is becoming a great power in the world. It must be remembered that the Jewish inquirer has to overcome, not only the hatred and contempt with which he has been trained to regard the Lord Jesus Christ, but also the possibility of losing his nationality. The sons of Israel will be won to Christ by love, and no other power will lead them to embrace the One they despised.

TIME-WORN OBJECTIONS.

Referring to some of the objections to Jewish missions often raised, Rev. C. H. IRWIN spoke of the chilling effect which criticism has upon those who are working among Israel. Surely it is no insult to go to a Jew and tell him that we have found him of whom Moses and the prophets spoke, and acknowledge the glorious heritage which has come to us through Israel. Many take upon themselves to say that it costs so much to convert a Jew. Even if this be correct, would not such men as Adolph Saphir, Rabinowitz, and Neander, be worth all that Christianity has brought to bear upon the movement? "Let us be done with this kind of reckoning; it is not the arithmetic of the Kingdom of God." The Jew must not be omitted from the range of the Christian's service and prayer. No scene can be compared with that of the rejected Redeemer looking down and weeping over the city of Jerusalem.

The problem of Jewish missions, said Rev. R. WRIGHT HAY, is part of the larger problem of the evangelization of the whole world. The prejudice of the Jew to the Gospel is more or less natural to the human heart, but too often is intensified by the persecution he receives at the hands of those who profess the name of Christ. The joy of being permitted to write the name of Jesus on the heart of the heathen, is not so great as being able to write it on the heart of the Jew.

An impassioned appeal by Rev. J. P. THIMANN followed. The attitude of the Jew to Christianity must be viewed from two points—external and internal. Nation after nation has found in the Gospel of Christ its deathless hope and ceaseless inspiration, and has bowed before its Author. The Jew almost alone has defied its influence. On the other hand, no nation under heaven has been more permanently affected by Christianity than Israel. From the days of Pentecost right down the centuries the finest intelligence of Judaism has passed over to the Christian Church. Christianity has triumphed, for no other religion has been able to make converts from Judaism. The age of miracles has not passed away, and the greatest miracle that happens is when a Jew, by force of truth, is led to yield to Him who is not only the light to lighten the Gentiles, but the glory of his people Israel.

The closing address was given by Rev. J. W. EWING, who recalled his impressions of a recent visit to the Holy Land. He urged that the obligations of the Christian world to Israel, and obedience to the command of Christ, constrain the Church to greater activity in preaching the Gospel to God's ancient people. A choir of children from Stockwell Orphanage added much to the enjoyment of the meeting, by the hearty singing of sacred melodies.

Lord's Day Rest.

DURING the past year the Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association has laboured assiduously to combat the evils of Sabbath desecration, and labour on the sacred day.

At the annual gathering, held on Monday week at the Holborn Restaurant, Sir MARK STEWART, M.P., presided. In the absence of the secretary (Mr. Charles Hill), with whom, in his serious breakdown in health, much sympathy was expressed, the treasurer, Mr. J. HALFORD, stated that among the Association's educational efforts arrangements were made in April of last year for the preaching of 1,004 sermons. Free grants of literature were offered to all the preachers, and 970 parcels of documents, containing 75,000 publications, were sent. In all 1,155 free grants of tracts, amounting to 117,529 copies, were made during the year. The illustrated periodical, the Pearl of Days, has a total circulation of 121,000 copies. One of the vice-presidents (Mr. Cameron Corbett, M.P.) had introduced a Bill into Parliament to limit Sunday trading. Regret was expressed that the Society's efforts are greatly hindered by the example of many of the highest families in the land, who use Sunday as a day of mere amusement, disregarding the Divine character of the day, and the necessity of rest for the toilers they do not hesitate to employ.

The Sunday opening of the Alexandra Palace, with concerts, has occupied much of the attention of the committee; a careful statement, showing the gross violation of the law and the terms of their six-day music licence, was presented to the trustees of the Palace, but in vain. Endeavours have also been made to influence the London County Council to withdraw the permission it has given to the holding of Sunday concerts. There are no fewer than fifty-six metropolitan theatres and halls in which such concerts are regularly held. Sunday building operations have also been checked, and clauses in contracts forbidding Sunday work have been suggested in a letter inserted in many newspapers, and the Brighton Town Council have resolved to adopt such a clause in future.

The Moravian Missions.

THE story of the Moravian Missions is one that never fails to appeal to the sympathies of Christians of every denomination, hence the large gathering which attended the eighty-fourth anniversary of the London Association held at Exeter Hall. The report presented by the secretary, Rev. W. Wetton Cox, stated that, though the annual increase of £4,000 so sadly needed has not been reached, there has been advance, the income of £13,000 for 1900-1901 having been exceeded during 1901-1902 by the substantial sum of £1,100—viz., £14,100. "Human probability and calculation may regret; but faith, recognising God's Sovereignty in the provision for, as well as in the success of, his work, gladly leaves the way to Him. And as we recognise the truth of this promise, once more fulfilled, we can look beyond the why and the wherefore, and say with grateful hearts: 'The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad.'"

PRESENT POSITION AND PROSPECTS.

The report further announced that the names of the Bishop of Durham and the Dean of Peterborough had been added to the list of vice-presidents. In commending the work of the Association and the interests of the missions to the sympathy of God's people for another year, the committee ventured to reiterate the two pressing needs which most seriously affect the present position and prospects of Moravian missions, viz., the general fund, which requires an annual increase of £4,000 if all the work is to be maintained and deficiency averted; and the additional fund to provide £2,000 annually for the special emergency in Labrador for a few years, until, if it may be, the Mission can be re-established on its old self-supporting basis. For these things earnest, united, individual and definite prayer was asked.

A strong case for further support to the missions of the Moravians was made out by Mr. J. H. Buxton, who presided. He spoke of the rigid adherence of these Christian pioneers to foundation truths, and the determination that wherever the agents went they should proclaim the doctrines of Scripture. In this strong adhesion of the Moravians to the Word of God the Chairman saw a lesson for Christians to-day, and ask the pertinent question: "Is it not a fact that some of us are getting a little less careful to keep up the steady reading of the Bible? It is the Bible-reading people who make the best missionaries, and who are able to walk close with God."

A STRIKING COMPARISON.

The work of the Moravian Church was referred to by Rev. Hubert Brooke as the best example of obedience to our Lord's last command. The speaker went on to institute an impressive comparison. The Moravians formed the oldest Protestant Missionary Church, and the Church in Uganda was the youngest, yet these two combined to give the Christian world an idea of what obedience to the Lord's command really meant. The Moravians gave one in sixty of their number to the foreign field, but the Church in Uganda, not content to receive the Gospel itself, but anxious to tell it out to others, had beaten this record, for the latest figures showed that in Uganda one in fifty was the proportion of native missionaries. Here the lesson for other Christian bodies was obvious and pointed. Referring to the S.V.M.U. motto—the Evangelization of the World in this Generation—Mr. Brooke showed that this was absolutely and easily within the compass of the Christian Church, if only the Lord's command were obeyed.

Rev. Henry Dening enumerated a number of reasons why the Moravian Missions should be supported, and as incentives to further effort spoke of (1) The love of a dying Christ, (2) The command of a dying Christ, and (3) The joy of a coming Christ. Rev. A. E. Barnes-Lawrence spoke with earnestness and sympathy of the work of the Missions. He claimed it as an honour to be allowed to say a word on behalf of so apostolic a church as the Moravians—apostolic, not because of its succession, but in its obedience and self-sacrifice. These three things—the open sepulchre, the coming kingdom, and the intercession of Christ, lie at the bottom of the success of all modern missionary effort, even as they did in the Apostolic age.

An interesting address followed from Dr. Simpson, relating to the Missions at Labrador, where he has been working for two years. He pressed home with much earnestness the need for further support, in order that the Mission may be properly equipped.

Congregational Union.

THE seventieth annual assembly of the Congregational Union of England and Wales was held last week, Rev. G. S. Barrett, D.D., acting chairman, in the absence through illness, of Rev. Principal Caleb Scott.

In his opening words on Monday evening, Dr. Barrett expressed the conviction that whatever might be the result of the discussions which have taken place in the churches, he thought this at least was clear, "that we are already of one mind and one opinion that the time has come for our churches, without sacrificing anything of that independence which has made us the power for good we have been in England, for drawing together in a closer federation that shall reverence our common brotherhood."

UNION FOR EFFECTIVENESS.

After an abstract of the annual report had been read by Rev. W. J. Woods (secretary), Rev. Thomas Robinson congratulated him on his résumé of the work that has been done from the commencement of the Union in 1831 to the present day. "I myself am a critic of this Union, and an advanced reformer, but I can say 'Amen' to every word that Mr. Woods has spoken of the achievements of our predecessors. I do trust that the re-organized Union will embrace within its fold every Church of England and Wales, and not a beggarly half of them, as at present. I hope also that it will embrace every county union, and, so far as possible, every existing Congregational society, for in so doing we shall ensure effectiveness in working, and I take it that this unifying of our forces will be the touchstone by which we shall judge best the proposals, both of individuals and committees."

The ballot for the chairmanship for 1903 having resulted in the election of Rev. Dr. R. F. Horton, he referred to several interesting topics when acknowledging the honour: (1) The organization or re-organization of our own denominational churches; (2) the relation of the churches of our denomination to the Protestant Churches of our country and our empire; (3) the duty of our Congregational Churches to the great commission of the Master to preach the Gospel to every creature, with "the position that we occupy in reference to the London Missionary Society, which is the only expression of our missionary zeal in any way connected with our Union."

THE COLLEGE QUESTION.

Reports were received from the ten colleges —Nottingham, Mansfield, New, Western, Yorkshire, Cheshunt, Hackney, Lancashire, Bala-Bangor and Brecon Memorial—to recommendations (1) urging the importance of special care in the selection of candidates, and of vigilant attention through the whole college course to the fitness of students for the ministry; (2) advising the formation of a College Board to regulate the admission of students; and (3) counselling the adoption of some scheme of amalgamation which, without impairing the efficiency of ministerial training, would effect important economies. The general committee was, therefore, instructed to constitute some of its gravest members a special committee to inquire into these subjects; the provisional report to be submitted for consideration and suggestion to each college authority, and after these have been carefully examined, a report to be presented to the Assembly.

On Tuesday morning an address, which had been prepared by Dr. Caleb Scott, was read by Rev. J. R. Bailey (Eccles), the subject being "Christ and Criticism: The Open Mind and the Adoring Heart." Beginning by recognizing that there are defects in the system of church government, he touched on current questions by saying, "We are all anxious that those defects should be remedied, and that Congregationalism should be made a much greater power in the country than it has been, by any changes which can be made in its administration without surrendering the fundamental principle which it has safeguarded in the past."

Accredited delegates were welcomed from Scotland, Ireland, the United States, South Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, and Canada—whose presence was regarded by the chairman as "an illustration of that larger empire, the empire of spiritual truth, of which we form a part in this country."

EXTENSION AND ORGANIZATION.

On behalf of the Church Aid Society, it was reported by Mr. Gerald Ford (treasurer) that in 1901 £4,000 had been distributed in grants; and that 368 churches, 148 mission stations, 218 pastors, and sixty-two evangelists had benefited thereby. The number of contributing churches had risen from 131 to 165.

The interest in the gatherings culminated with the report on Dr. Parker's proposals for federation. An analysis of the returns showed that very many of the larger congregations approve of the idea of closer relations, but did not commit themselves definitely to the scheme proposed; but there was much division even on that fundamental point. Eventually, after prolonged discusssion, it was agreed, on the motion of Mr. Albert Spicer, that the general committee be requested to prepare a scheme which may serve to unite Congregational churches more closely for common purposes; and authorized the appointment of a special committee of twenty-four, not more than sixteen of whom shall be members of its own body, to draft proposals for its consideration.

Strangers' Friend Society.

THE 116th annual gathering of the members of the Benevolent, or Strangers' Friend Society, took place on Thursday at Finsbury Pavement, when the chairman of the Society for the year, Mr. Henry Swaffield, presided, and the report of the Executive was adopted. A second meeting was held in the Lecture Hall of the Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate Street, under the presidency of Mr. Edmund Hughes. Various speakers testified to the great good effected in the course of ministering to the necessities of the sick poor, met with, in many of the dark corners of the metropolis, by one and another of the 150 voluntary visitors.

In the annual report it is pointed out that the real tragedies of life are not confined to the very poor—so called—there being very many of a higher grade who, amid the most untoward circumstances, are endeavouring to keep their heads above water, until the most stinging poverty has to be confessed. The work of dealing with such as these needs delicacy and tact, where gentle and consoling words must charge the lips and kind and thoughtful actions guide the hands; that, while ministering to the necessities of the body, a message may be given to the soul, thrilled with sympathy, akin to that of the Master Himself.

Convalescent Home for Epileptics.—The National Society for the Employment of Epileptics have built at Chalfont St. Peter (in connection with the epileptic colony there) a special Home for twenty-four male patients convalescing after illness, or for other reasons needing temporary care and treatment amidst healthy country surroundings. The need for such a Home is well known, and arises from the fact that patients subject to epileptic fits are excluded from admission to any of the ordinary convalescent Homes. The entire cost of the building—about £3,500—has been defrayed by one donor, but there are at present no funds available for furniture, the cost of which is estimated at £450 to £500. When furnished, the Home will be ready for immediate occupation. The secretary to the National Society is Mr. G. Penn Gaskell, 12, Buckingham Street, Strand, W.C.

Foreign Mission Week.

THIS week we are going for a long journey together to a mission station in Western China. Sin-tien-tsï it is called, and is situated near one of the tributaries of the river Yang-tse-kiang, which you read of in your geography books.

My special reason for taking you all this way is to introduce you to Mrs. Uen. If you could see her portrait, I dare say you would exclaim, "Oh! what a fright!" But it is such a happy old face, and perhaps when you have heard her story, you will wish you could be like her, in spite of her "plain" appearance.

Mrs. Uen did not hear of Jesus Christ until she was seventy years old! One market day, as she was selling her wares, she heard a Bible woman talking about a God who loved and cared for people of every race and land. She was much interested, and commenced to attend the Sunday services held by the missionaries, although she had to walk four miles each way. At last she decided to become a Christian. That meant a very brave and difficult thing. She knew she must give up her idol worship, which would bring upon her persecution and hatred. She was living with her son and his wife and children, and it grieved her to see their idolatrous practices. When the time of day came to burn incense to the heathen gods, Mrs. Uen would go out until it was all over. One day she even went so far as to carry all the idols into the courtyard, telling her son that if he must worship them, he could do it there! This made him very angry, and after treating her cruelly, he finally went away with his wife and children, leaving the poor old woman to get on as best she could.

One of the first things Mrs. Uen did after her son had gone, was to pull down the idolatrous pictures from the walls, and burn the idols. But in the centre room was a tablet to "Heaven and Earth," which she dared not touch, because it belonged partly to a nephew of hers whom she was afraid to offend. One night she had a wonderful dream. She thought she saw Jesus Christ coming across the valley to her house, and she cried out, "Saviour of the people, I am a sinner, come and save me." But though He drew near her house, it was only to look sadly in, and pass sorrowfully by. On awaking, she could not forget her dream, and every time she looked at the idolatrous tablet she felt that perhaps this was keeping Jesus out of her house. At last she determined, at whatever cost, to get rid of it, so she wrote to her nephew and told him she must obey God first, and saying that if he would not take the tablet away, she should burn it. At last he gave her permission to do as she would with it, and the following Sunday, with great delight, she brought it up to the missionary's house and burnt it there.

A few days later, she expressed a desire to have her house whitewashed, but the missionaries tried to dissuade her, because she was very poor, and the process was expensive. What do you think she replied? "I must have it whitewashed, because I want my Lord Jesus to live with me there, and it must be clean for Him; and am I not expecting Him to come back from heaven at any moment? I would not like Him to smell any trace of the incense."

So the missionaries let this dear old lady have her way, and she is now doing all in her power to help them in their work, though she has to suffer a good deal of persecution from her relatives. She is very poor, but the first of all her crops and vegetables she brings to the missionaries. One day, hesitating to take her first basket of new peas, the missionary said, "Why do you give us so much?" Mrs. Uen answered, "Have you not brought me the Gospel, and told me of the love of Jesus? By giving to you, I feel I am giving to God also."

I think this is a very beautiful story, and it teaches us great lessons. Are we as eager to put away from our lives all wrong thoughts and wishes (as the old lady was to destroy all traces of past idolatry), so that they may become fit for Jesus Christ to dwell in? "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the spirit of God dwelleth in you?"

Are we as eager to stand up boldly for Christ, and to do all we can to spread his love amongst those who know Him not? The presence of Jesus became such a reality to old Mrs. Uen that she was quite upset when asked if she were not lonely living among the mountains. She answered, "How can I be lonely when my Lord is always with me? I talk to Him, and He speaks much to me."

May Jesus Christ become "a living, bright reality" to you, as He was to that old heathen woman, who had so few advantages, and who had not the joy of hearing his name until she was seventy years of age! Then you will find out the truth of what she said, with her wrinkled face all smiles: "The years in which I have known Jesus have been the happiest in my life." Also, you will pray and work (perhaps some of you even going out to the foreign field) for the day when "the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea."

"God speed the day when those of every nation
'Glory to God' triumphantly shall sing;
Ransomed, redeemed, rejoicing in salvation,
Shout 'Hallelujah,' for the Lord is King!"

KATE HOPKINS.

* This story is taken from a beautiful book AMONG HILLS AND VALLEYS IN WESTERN CHINA: Incidents of Missionary Work. By Hannah Davies, of the China Inland Mission (3s. 6d. Partridge). There are many illustrations, and Mrs. Isabella Bishop writes an introduction. Made up of excerpts from the journal of a devoted worker, this volume is replete with striking incidents, and vigorous missionary sentiment.

The Good Shepherd.

Other sheep I have, which are not of this fold; them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice, and there shall be one fold and one Shepherd (John x. 16).

"HE was not willing that any should perish;
Jesus enthroned in the glory above,
Saw our poor fallen world, pitied our sorrows,
Poured out his life for us—wonderful Love!

'Perishing! perishing! thronging our pathway,
Hearts break with burdens too heavy to bear.
Jesus would save, but there's no one to tell them,
No one to lift them from sin and despair.

"Perishing! perishing! hark how they call us:
'Bring us your Saviour, oh, tell us of Him!
We are so weary, so heavily laden,
And with long weeping our eyes have grown dim.'

"Perishing! perishing! harvest is passing,
Reapers are few, and the night draweth near,
Jesus is calling thee, haste to the reaping,
Thou shalt have souls, precious souls for thy hire,"

Kingston, Jamaica. — Mrs. Denniston, the widow of a minister who laboured for many years in Jamaica, pleads the cause of the Sailors' Rest, which she was led to open over two years ago in Kingston, the chief port of Jamaica. There had never been any place in which European sailors might find friendly shelter and fellowship while ashore. A temperance bar for cool drinks is attached to the rooms, which are more numerously visited every month. The men enjoy reading, playing games, and writing letters, and at the close of each evening there is a short service of singing, with music, Scripture, and prayer. Sailors of all nationalities call at the port. Mrs. Denniston cannot get much help in Jamaica, owing to the very depressed state of the island, by the withdrawal of the sugar trade from England. She hopes to return to her part of the work in the autumn. She asks the Lord's people to remember Kingston in their prayers. Her address is 50, Charles Square, Notting Hill, W.

Our Denominational Mission Board (Acts xiii. 1-3; xiv. 19-28).

FROM this point the interest of this book centres round Antioch and the great missionary movements that emanated from that city. Why did the Holy Spirit transfer the focus of his operations from Jerusalem to Antioch? Was it not because, in spite of the indications of God's will communicated through the Apostle Peter (Acts x. and xi.), there had been so evident a disinclination on the part of the mother-church to give herself to missionary enterprise? And was it not a fact that in Antioch there was a greater alertness to know and to do God's will? The fact that in these opening verses we find a number of godly men gathered together before God, seems to indicate that their hearts were aglow with missionary zeal, that they had been impressed with the necessity of ministering to the great Gentile world, and that they were only waiting for further direction from the Divine Spirit. The Jerusalem Church ceased to be in the forefront because she was lacking in missionary enterprise, while the Church at Antioch replaced her because the leaders there were so keenly alive to the importance of missionary work. The Church which is not full of missionary zeal will soon lag behind, and be left out of count in the movements of the Holy Spirit. It is only as we enter into God's desires for the whole world that we shall be as vessels ready for his hand.

Notice that our prime desire must not be even the work of the Lord, but Himself. It is as we minister to Him, and wait before Him, that the Holy Spirit will impart his loftiest commissions. Perhaps we are in danger of losing sight of the Saviour in our zeal for his service; but the latter will only prosper in proportion as the former is recognised.

Note the personality of the Holy Spirit—"Separate Me . . . . I have called." The little group of prophets and teachers laid their hands on the two first missionaries, treating them as a wave offering (compare Num. viii. 10, 11). When we send missionaries out, it is as our representatives. We, so to speak, wave them before God, to be accepted for our inability to go ourselves. Notice also how God calls for our co-operation. He designates his workers, but He calls upon us to separate and send them forth, and follow them with our prayers.

When God calls us it is always for some specific work, but He does not reveal this supernaturally to us at first; only as we advance on the path of obedience is his further extent made known. It is enough for us to recognize that God has a plan, which may include success or apparent failure, the welcome of those who love, and the animosity of those who hate and oppose, storm and shipwreck, the climbing of sharp ascents, and the descent into smiling valleys; but it is all foreknown by One Who is prepared to go at our side, to help us in every hour of need, and to use us marvellously for the salvation of men. The scenes of the next two chapters were in the mind of Christ before they took place, and their events were all anticipated in the work to which the Apostles were called.

It is very assuring to notice chapter xiv. 3, where we are told that the Lord Jesus corroborated the words of his servants by the signs and wonders which He permitted them to work. It will be always so in Christ. The promises of God are yea and Amen. He is always granting the affirmation of his sanction to those who faithfully serve Him. Never for a moment are they left without witness.

It is thought by some that during this stoning Paul was caught up into the third heaven, as he tells us in 2 Cor. xii. 2. Whilst his body was being battered, his spirit was in Paradise. It may be that the sufferings of God's saints have always had a similar heavenly anodyne. How wonderful that the Apostle should start off on the morrow, for his face and body must still have borne marks of the stones; but nothing could damp his ardour or restrain his spirit.

It was a remarkable missionary meeting when they got back to Antioch. They told how God had wrought "with them," and how hundreds of Gentiles had stepped through the open door of faith into the Father's house. Let us remember that that door has never been closed, and in co-operation with the Spirit of God let us spend our lives in inducing others to cross his threshold. F. B. M.

Golden Text—2 Tim. ii. 3.

A ROUGH and difficult journey lay between Antioch, whence Paul and Barnabas had been expelled, and Iconium their next resting place, ninety miles through a mountainous district; and yet, with freshly-inspired courage "both together, they went into the synagogue, and so spake that multitudes believed." "Both together"—there is no link in comradeship like the love and service of Jesus, forged in the furnace of "suffering for his Name's sake."

The enemy followed close on their track. Evil reports, misrepresentations of them and the doctrine they preached, injected into the minds of their hearers, soon wrought mischief. Party feeling ran so high, that one section joined with the unbelieving Jews in laying secret plans to make a rush on the Apostles, and stone them. But they escaped to Lystra, the home of Timotheus and his mother Eunice, and where doubtless that young man first heard the Gospel from Paul's lips, for on the second tour Timothy was mentioned as already a disciple (xvi. 1).

As in Iconium, "they spake boldly in the Lord," and "He granted signs and wonders to be done by their hands;" so in Lystra God honoured the word of his servant, and healed a man who had been born a cripple. The Lystreans, seeing this miracle, concluded, according to the legend of their city, that their patron-God (v. 13) had indeed come among them in person. Jupiter, the father of the gods, and Mercurius as his attendant orator. Barnabas was probably older than Paul, and of more imposing appearance; Mercurius, the god of eloquence, the spokesman of the gods, small in stature, and alert in speech and action. "The speech of Lycaonia" was a local dialect, and not the Greek universally spoken; therefore the applause and preparation for sacrifice to them as gods were not understood by the Apostles until the oxen and garlands were actually brought before them. *Con*trast Paul's action under the circumstances with that of Herod (chap. xii. 22), "Them that honour Me I will honour (1 Sam. ii. 30).

Do we ever take to ourselves the glory of such gifts as God has graciously bestowed on us? The Lystreans worshipped empty myths, Paul preached to them the "LIVING GOD," and some turned to serve Him.

"I may as well kneel down
And worship gods of stone,
As offer to the living God
A prayer of words alone."

Again the enemy "dogged the steps of the toiling saints." 130 miles were not too many for these persistent Jews to travel in order to carry out their designs of relentless hatred. Their hearts were set on stoning Paul somewhere, and they succeeded at Lystra; but the Lord raised him up again.

Timothy was most probably in the group of disciples which stood around Paul (v. 20).

(Did Paul remember Stephen while the stones were striking him (viii. 58)?

The memories of Lystra remained with him till his last days (2 Tim. iii. 2).

"What Persecutions I Endured!"

Fickle, misguided Lystreans, where was their gratitude? Of what worth was their applause now? (2 Tim. iv. 8).

DERBE was the last town on this mission plan. "Made many disciples there" (R.V.) Gaius, chap. xx. 4. Then with faith in God, supernatural courage, and loving care for the new converts, these true-hearted missionaries called back at each city where there had suffered most, to comfort and confirm the souls of the new disciples; not forgetting the tribulation and the kingdom.

C.E. Coming of Age.

THE twelfth British National Convention of Christian Endeavour Societies—which is being held at Manchester as we go to press—marks the coming of age of the movement. The first Society was established by Rev. Dr. Clark at Williston Congregational Church, Portland, Maine. The figures presented on Tuesday show that during the last twelve months 532 new societies had been enrolled in England, thirty-one in Scotland, sixteen in Ireland, and forty in Wales, in all 619. A point of considerable interest lies in the fact that 150 of these Societies are classed as "junior."

Returns received from 5,291 societies show 148,046 active, 55,373 associate, and 20,601 honorary members; and the whole membership for Great Britain and Ireland is estimated at 196,514 active, 72,683 associate, and 25,794 honorary, making a grand total of 294,991. Among other figures given in the report, we find that 15,409 of the members were received into church membership during the year, and that 10,210 were transferred from the associate to the active list.

The spread of the movement on the different denominations is shown by the fact that 113 of the new Societies are returned as Baptist, ten Church of England, 113 Congregational, nine Friends, five Independent Methodists, twenty Methodist New Connexion, forty-one Presbyterian, 153 Primitive Methodist, sixty-six United Methodist Free Church, nineteen Wesleyan.

At the Manchester Y.M.C.A. on Monday, an interdenominational meeting of students was held, under the presidency of Rev. Dr. Leach, when representatives were present from the Lancashire Independent, Baptist, Wesleyan, Primitive Methodist, and United Methodist Free Church Colleges.

OXFORD.

THE Oxford branch of the London Society for the Promotion of the Gospel among the Jews held its annual gatherings last week. The Bishop of Connor and Down was the special preacher at St. Clement's and St. Aldate's churches. At the public meeting it was realised that so rapidly are the Jewish people increasing that soon the Turkish power in Palestine will be but nominal.

Speaking at the annual meeting of the Oxford House Mission, held in New College Hall, Mr. F. H. E. Cunliffe, Fellow of All Souls', pleaded for men to carry on the work of the Mission in East London. The fight was against inferior literature, terrible ignorance, and misery, for which Christian University men were greatly needed.

At the annual meeting of the Gleaners' Union of the C.M.S., 245 young Gleaners presented the Hon. Mrs. Talbot Rice, wife of the rector of St. Peter-le-Bailey, with a book, silver inkstand, and candlestick, in remembrance of her great work among the Gleaners of Oxford. Mr. Rice commences his duties as vicar of Swansea on the first Sunday in June.

CAMBRIDGE.

LAST Sunday at St. Columba's Church, Rev. G. A. Johnston Ross commenced his ministry. He preached from Rom. xii. 6, "According to the proportion of faith." With these same words he had commenced his first ministry in Scotland, and they were also the motto of his father's life and ministry.

The new secretary of the Cambridge University Prayer Union, in place of Rev. C. Lisle Carr, who is leaving Cambridge, is Mr. W. G. Hardie, Ridley Hall.

At the Emmanuel Congregational Church, Rev. Dr. P. T. Forsyth preached, and announced that Rev. W. B. Selbie, of Highgate, had accepted the invitation of the congregation to become their minister. Mr. Selbie, who is expected to come to Cambridge during the summer, is assured of a hearty welcome.

Last Sunday the anniversary sermons were preached on behalf of both the Church Missionary Society and the Baptist Missionary Society. For the former the deputation were Rev. G. T. Manley, Fellow of Christ's College, who was Senior Wrangler in 1893, and Rev. H. S. Mercer; and for the latter, Revs. D. L. Donald, J. R. M. Stephens, and Dr. T. R. Glover.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

FALKIRK.

DESCRIBING the remarkably fruitful campaign of Rev. Dr. J. Q. A. Henry at Falkirk, Rev. James Hunter writes from the U.F. Manse, Laurieston, Falkirk:—"Another week of temperance work has come to a close. It has been a record week. The way had been prepared by the previous work of Rev. Leonard M. Isitt and Rev. W. W. Miskimmin. But this concluding week brought the interest to an intense white heat. In all my experience of temperance work, I have never seen anything comparable to it. The audience night after night filled the Town Hall to overflowing. It was a sight never to be forgotten to look from the platform on the sea of faces of men who were drinking in the stream of truth flowing from the lips of Dr. Henry.

"For fulness of information, for a thorough grasp of his subject, for directness of speech, and for the power of interweaving with temperance truth the deepest truths of salvation and appeals to the highest motives, I have never heard any orator who equalled Dr. Henry. When he dealt with the 'Industrial' and 'Physical' aspects of the question, statistics and medical testimonies, which in the hands of most speakers are felt to be dry, came forth as if they were on fire—a living stream of burning eloquence. But he is at his best when he deals with the Church aspect of the question. He goes to the core of it. He makes every Christian hearer realize that this is a moral question of eternal importance to the life of the Church and the extension of Christ's Kingdom. Even the most active temperance workers often felt, under his lucid expositions, that they had hitherto scarcely touched the surface of the question, and that a great deep was being opened up. One often felt ready to say with Nehemiah, 'I am ashamed, and blush to lift up my face'—so great did the work appear in comparison with what had been attempted.

"One valuable result of the mission has been the deepening of the convictions of temperance people. Sentiment has given place to conscience, and the deep sense of the great question of righteousness which lies at the root of the temperance movement. Though I do not remember that Dr. Henry ever spoke of expediency, many who heard him felt that that was a most inadequate basis; that there was a question of right and wrong on which they must come to a decision, and take their stand on the Lord's side. It has thus produced not only a revived and deepened interest in the temperance movement, but an awakening of interest in the salvation of men and the extending of the Redeemer's Kingdom. Besides this reviving of those already engaged in the work, many have been led to take their stand for the first time.

"Among the large numbers who have signed the pledge, over 3,200, there are many moderate drinkers, who have seen the slippery path which they have been treading, and many drunkards who have been rescued from the snare. Will the reader pray that they may be kept from falling, and brought into the fold of Christ? Dr. Henry does not spare himself. The audience often listen with the feeling that he could not stand long the intensity of the strain under which he spoke. His whole body, soul, and spirit seemed to be on fire."

The latest figures show that no fewer than 3,335 pledges have been secured out of a population of 30,000, with about 100 pledge books still to come in.

MANCHESTER C.E. CONVENTION.

At the opening session of the Christian Endeavour Convention, which commenced at Manchester on Saturday last, Dr. Henry gave the first address, speaking in the St. James' Hall to a vast audience. The subjects announced for the session were "Civic Righteousness" and "International Brotherhood." Dr Henry spoke on "The Redemption of the City." He showed that 80 per cent. of the population of Great Britain are dwellers in the cities and large towns, and that in reaching them lies the supreme problem of national peace, prosperity, and power. Proceeding, Dr. Henry dwelt with much force and eloquence on "The two fundamental elements in the salvation of the city—(1) reformation by law, (2) regeneration by love." Rev. Dr. Clark followed with an address on "International Brotherhood."

EDINBURGH CASTLE, E.

Dr. Henry's mission at Dr. Barnardo's popular and capacious hall, the Edinburgh Castle, Rhodeswell Road, Limehouse, E., which began on Lord's day last, has aroused keen interest, and large audiences came together for the three meetings which were held. There were many signs of encouragement, and up to Monday evening 500 pledges had been taken. Further particulars will be given next week.

FUTURE MEETINGS.

Till May 23, Dr. Barnardo's "Edinburgh Castle," Limehouse, E.; 25 (U.F.C. Assembly Temperance Sabbath), Glasgow—11 a.m. Rev. Dr. Wells' Church, Pollokshields; 2 p.m., Finnieston U.F. Church (Rev. D. M. McIntyre's formerly late Rev. Dr. Andrew A. Bonar's); 6.30, Dowanhill (Rev. W. Dickie's); 26, Ladies' Association of the Church of Scotland, Edinburgh; 27, Church of Scotland Temperance Breakfast, The Café, Edinburgh; 28, 11 a.m., Mildmay Conference Hall; 8 p.m., East London Tabernacle, Burdett Road, E.; May 31-June 6, Belfast; 8, Sheffield; 10, Maryport; 29, Sheffield.

Obituary.

CAPTAIN KEARNEY WHITE.

AN important gap is left in the ranks of Christian workers in Ireland by the death of Captain James Kearney White, of Dublin, who after serving with much distinction in the Royal Navy, was so long and honourably known as the secretary and moving spirit of the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland. He died at his residence on the 15th, after an illness of ten days, being then eighty-two years of age. We hope to give further particulars of his career in a future issue.

BISHOP WILLIAM TAYLOR.

At the age of eighty-one the long and useful missionary career of William Taylor, first Methodist Bishop of Africa, has been closed by the welcome summons into the more immediate presence of his Lord. Entering the ministry in 1842, he devoted himself to street preaching and other aggressive work among the indifferent masses. The measure of blessing which followed caused him to be sent to California, where he laboured for seven years among the gold-seekers. After an evangelistic tour in Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa, Mr. Taylor visited India in 1870, and his preaching was fruitful in conversions among the English-speaking people. This work spread to such an extent that a South India Conference resulted, with many pastors supported by their congregations. Efforts to found self-sustaining missions in South America were also crowned with success; and in 1884 came the appointment as first Bishop of Africa. Years of pioneering and foundation-laying followed. This was largely experimental, and on industrial lines; but difficulties and discouragements were encountered which in the end led to much disappointment. The name of "Taylor of California" will, however, long live as that of a missionary enthusiast and leader. For some years he has lived in comparative retirement.

Young Men's Foreign Mission Society.—The annual report of this organization gives evidence of the steady growth of the work and of the influence it continues to gain. The Society seeks to promote among Christian young men a direct personal interest in foreign mission work by sending out and entirely supporting missionaries. At the native mission, Ikwezi Lamaci where Mr. and Mrs. Aitchison, the Society's missionaries are labouring, there are many signs of a spiritual awakening, even among the tribes who are the most difficult to reach with the Gospel.

About Books.

A SURVEY OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

AMONG living writers on missionary enterprise a place of high authority must be assigned to Rev. James S. Dennis, D.D., well-known as a member of the American Presbyterian Mission at Beirût, Syria, and the writer of several books of first-class importance. Dr. Dennis was chairman of the Committee on Statistics, Ecumenical Conference on Foreign Missions, New York, 1900. Two volumes have already appeared of his great work, "Christian Missions and Social Progress"; and while we are awaiting the third, there comes out, as the product of his organizing ability and missionary enthusiasm, a Statistical Supplement bearing the title Centennial Survey of Foreign Missions; being a Conspectus of the Achievements and Results of Evangelical Missions in all Lands at the Close of the Nineteenth Century. (21s. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.)

The cause of Missions has engaged the heroic devotion of many writers, and some of the most devoted are still with us. In England we have been told the story of several of the largest societies; in America the lessons of the past have been gathered up so as to illumine the path of future labour; while in Germany the work and the field have been studied with scientific precision in the light of great facts and principles—religious, historical, and geographical. In the work before us, Dr. Dennis follows many but imitates none; he has built on no other man's foundation. The plan is his own, and the performance also. All the same, he has sought and received the advice and help of missionaries in many lands, as well as of a host of secretarial workers and other organizers.

This is a volume of its own kind. It is not a collection of bright chapters having attractions for the general reader; it appeals rather to the missionary enthusiast, and consists of lists, tables, and other data set forth in the plainest and most matter-of-fact manner. The amount of information conveyed is vast; the labour entailed in collecting it, and serving it up in this compact form, must have been prodigious. The contents are arranged under such headings as Evangelistic, Educational, Literary, Medical, Philanthropic (Reformatory), and so forth. Under the first heading one is greatly impressed by the number of missionary societies, churches, and agencies in all the continents; the full details of American and European organizations—including, of course, German, French, Swiss, and Scandinavian—are very welcome. The Literary section gives statistics and other details of Bible translation, and the multiplication of general literature, and is rich in information at once curious and useful. A very considerable portion of the book is devoted to a Directory of the Protestant Foreign Missionary Societies of the World. The particulars are well set out, and as auxiliary committees are given in many cases, with addresses of secretaries, &c., the book should prove of great service for purposes of reference.

It is clear that an immense amount of labour has been expended upon this work. We are informed that the author has brought it out at his own risk; having launched it, he became so absorbed in its production that he determined to spare neither time nor expense in its completion. Maybe his recompense will be deferred until "that day." Whether that be so or not, the work is one which will have great attractions for those who make a serious study of foreign missions. It will answer thousands of questions, and, beyond that, it will impress the least imaginative mind with a sense of the variety and scope of Gospel endeavour in the largest sense of the term. The data may seem commonplace, but, taken as a whole, they have a glorious bearing upon the progressive fulfilment of the purpose of God in human redemption.

The book has also an apologetic value. In the words of Dr. Dennis, at the close of a very modest preface:—"If this grouping of data, although tracing only in suggestive outline the present status of the Kingdom of Christ, and recording only fragmentary hints of its extensive and intensive advances in the world, shall aid Christians to a fuller discovery of its reality, and shall make the conventional cavil at the alleged failure of missions more than ever inept and untimely, the service will not have been rendered in vain. That the value of such a conspectus is, in some of its aspects, transient, representing as it does only a passing phase of a vast and expanding spiritual movement, need not occasion regret. However temporary may be the practical usefulness of this compilation, it may at least stand as an inscribed milestone on the pathway of the advancing Kingdom at the close of the working century."

Some pictorial groups and missionary maps add to the interest and utility of this very valuable work of reference.

Evangelistic.

Missions to Young People.

ABERGAVENNY.

A VERY encouraging mission has just been conducted in this town by Rev. W. J. Sears, of Willesden Green. The meetings were held for the most part in Frogmore Street Baptist Church. A workers' meeting was held at the Y.M.C.A. Room on Saturday evening, April 26. On the following afternoon all the Sunday schools in connection with every Free Church gathered for Mr. Sears' first address. In the evening the adult meeting was held. For the next eight evenings the meetings (attended by both young and old) improved and increased daily, and the interest was sustained throughout. The first to enter the inquiry room was the daughter of one of the esteemed superintendents, and the last Sunday saw her only brother take the decisive step. From one firm, a son and daughter, three young people, and two servants, came out for the Lord, and much rejoicing was in the hearts of all when, at the praise meeting last Monday, the converts, at Mr. Sears' desire, came up the aisles and stood in a group on the platform. All the Free Churches have felt a blessing from the mission. Altogether over 200 names were taken by the workers, 20 per cent. of whom were over fifteen years of age.

Blackpool.

The Alhambra Theatre, Blackpool, has been taken by the local Y.M.C.A. for Sunday services during the season. The theatre is situated on the Promenade. On Sunday last Mr. W. M. Oatts, of Glasgow, rendered valuable service by addressing some three thousand people who gathered at the morning, afternoon, and evening services, winding up this most encouraging start with an open-air meeting in the centre of this busy and populous resort. Y.M.C.A. members and workers are urged to rally at these services.

Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Sims at Cork.

The work in Ireland which Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Sims began in Limerick, is being continued in Cork. A mission was started in the Palace Theatre, on Sunday, May 11, under encouraging conditions. The afternoon meeting brought out about 600 people, and in the evening the audience numbered 900. As in other places, the limelight views with the accompanying Scripture texts seem to rivet the attention of those present, and brought home Gospel truths with telling effect. Blessing has followed. Christ is being uplifted, and souls led to decision. The work in Cork continues for a month.

Gipsy Smith at Southampton.

Describing the mission at Southampton, which was recently held by Gipsy Smith, a correspondent writes:—"Not since Moody and Sankey days have I seen such 'great things' as we saw here with 'Gipsy.' The hall, seated for 2,500, was packed nightly, and on the closing Sunday evening hundreds were turned away. The general appearance of the building also reminded one vividly of the Agricultural Hall. 'Count your blessings,' did duty every night, and, although it has not quite ousted a certain popular ditty, yet one did hear a butcher boy at times whistle it as he went along. . . . People of all sorts flocked to the inquiry rooms." An inspiring mission has since been held at Pontypool.

Canon Aitken at Lurgan.

An esteemed correspondent writes:—"A most remarkable work of Divine grace has been going on at Lurgan, in the North of Ireland, during the last fortnight. Canon Aitken visited this town five years ago, and God was pleased to give a great blessing to his labours then. Quite unexpectedly the way opened for him to pay a second visit, and once again the showers are falling. The church is said to be the largest in any country town in Ireland, and night by night crowds have gathered within its walls, and, so far as man can judge in such matters, scores, and perhaps we might truly say hundreds, of souls have been seeking salvation. It is no exaggeration to say that the place is greatly stirred, and the hearts of the workers have been cheered and filled with a great joy at a work that has indeed been the Lord's doing, and is marvellous in their eyes. The results of the previous mission have proved in a large number of cases permanent, and very satisfactory, and some of the most zealous of the workers in the present movement are themselves the fruit of the former mission. Dr. O'Loughlin, the rector, may be congratulated on his success in following up the previous effort, and all are full of hope for at least equal, if not greater, results from this."

The Weaver Brothers at Windermere.

An institute, with reading and recreation rooms, together with a beautiful mission hall, which has been erected in Heathwaite, Windermere, was opened on Saturday, May 3, by Captain Rigg, M.P. On the Sunday, the Weaver Brothers commenced a ten-days' mission. From the first interest was aroused. Although the time of the year was an exceedingly bad one for the district, the mission proved very fruitful. At the invitation of the committee the mission preachers extended their stay three days longer. On the second Sabbath, in the afternoon, a meeting for men only was held, when the hall was filled. There were men present at that service who do not attend any place of worship. There has been a gracious ingathering of souls.

Queen Street Baptist Chapel, Erith.

A five-days' mission was conducted at the above church by Mr. W. Olney and Mr. F. Spencer Johnson, from Sunday, May 4. From the first meeting it was evident that Divine Power was with the Word spoken and sung. After each meeting considerable numbers of children and adults went into the inquiry room for further instruction in the Way of Life. So evident was the blessing of God that Mr. Olney and Mr. Spencer Johnson prolonged their visit and conducted several services besides those at first announced. The closing meeting of the mission on Monday, May 12, was one long to be remembered. The chapel was crowded in all parts to hear Mr. Spencer Johnson's address—"Does the stage door lead to ruin?" In the course of this address, Mr. Johnson told the story of his conversion. A deeply solemn feeling pervaded the large assembly, and at the close many went into the inquiry room. Over 170 decision cards have been signed by young and old, and a great reviving has come to many of God's people. J. E. W.

Dr. Harry Guinness.

[FROM A CORRESPONDENT.]

We had the pleasure of hearing Dr. Guinness preach once while in Sydney. I was greatly helped by his message, and felt strongly the Lord wanted him in New Zealand. We asked the Doctor; he said it was an impossibility. The Lord gave me distinctly, as we stood together, "All things are possible to him that believeth," and we told the Doctor that we should pray him into New Zealand. Three weeks afterwards he received a cable from England, telling him to go on to New Zealand, and home through America. We knew nothing of this, and kept on praying—we prayed in every meeting, and then we wrote again.

The letter was delayed several weeks, but the Lord's servant came. And such a mission has never been held in Christchurch—the immense masses of people, some 2,500 attended meetings for men only on Sunday afternoons. At one meeting, under the auspices of the Y.W.C.A. 1,500 young women attended, and there was a large harvest of souls. The inquiry rooms have not revealed a tithe of the blessing. Golan has been like a bee-hive from morning till night with all sorts and conditions of people from far and near.

The young men's mission band has been greatly blessed. We have had the great joy for a long time of seeing a very work of grace in the lives of many of these bright young men. Some have their faces towards the mission field. The prayers of years are being answered on every hand.

Golan, March 14.

Mr. Bob Johnson has again visited Exeter for a Gospel temperance mission. The hall has been crowded night after night, and the missioner preached the Gospel with faithfulness. Many pledges were secured.

An encouraging mission has been brought to a close in the Poole Methodist circuit by Sister Alice. Night after night the various chapels have been full, and many souls have sought peace in believing. Over 100 persons passed through the inquiry rooms, and many who made no open decision were deeply impressed. The spiritual life of the churches, too, was deepened. A. A.

An eight days' mission has been conducted at Howard Street Gospel Mission, S.W., by Rev. R. Copp and Mr. John Soames (hon. superintendent). Mr. Soames writes: "Much blessing attended each meeting. Pastor Copp spoke with power. The earnest spiritual appeals have borne fruit in awakening sinners. The valuable aid rendered by Messrs. Charles Gilbey and N. A. Soames in singing the Gospel, was highly appreciated."

At Holy Island (Northumberland) a series of evangelistic meetings, extending over three weeks, was recently held. Rev. Mark N. Robson, formerly Presbyterian minister at Willington, co. Durham, was the missioner. From the first the meetings were well attended, and the deepest interest was manifested in the earnest Gospel addresses. On the last Sabbath of the mission the Lord's Supper was observed, and seven young communicants were added to the membership. There is reason to believe that many more were benefited by these special services.

Mr. James Smith, one of the evangelists of the Perthshire Christian Union, has just completed a five weeks' mission in the district of Atholl. Commencing in Moulin schoolroom (kindly lent for the occasion by Major Stewart, of Balnakeilly), he gradually extended his sphere of operations to the little village of Balnald, and after a time transferred his services to Blair Atholl. After concluding there he returned to Pitlochry, and secured the United Free Church, where he faithfully presented the Gospel night after night to large and increasing audiences. Wherever he went Mr. Smith enlisted the sympathy and cordial help of all denominations, and the result has been a quickening of believers, and some hopeful cases of decision. J. H.

Welsh Notes.

AT the meetings of the Wesleyans of the Cardiff and Swansea District on May 13-14, at Cardiff, a resolution was passed condemning the Education Bill of the Government. The Home Mission reports were satisfactory. Especially was this the case with regard to the London Square Mission, Cardiff.

The result of the voting of the North Wales and the South Wales Welsh Wesleyan Districts for the appointment of a superintendent of the work-room of the Connexion was made known on May 16. Rev. Hugh Jones, chairman of the North Wales District, was elected. His predecessor was Rev. J. Hughes, D.D., known throughout Wales by his bardic name of "Glanystwyth." The appointment of Rev. H. Jones also includes the post of connexional editor.

The statistics of the denomination at home for 1901 were decidedly satisfactory. The converts last year numbered 4,750, as compared with an average increase during the years 1887-1900 of 3,660. Of this increase 1,619, or one-third, was amongst the English churches. The Presbyteries reporting the greatest increase were East Glamorgan (Welsh), Glamorganshire English Presbytery, and Monmouthshire. At present the total membership of the denomination is 160,333, with 323,951 adherents. There are 834 ministers, and 390 preachers.

Several reports of importance were submitted at the various sittings of the Assembly. Not the least important was the one dealing with the foreign mission work of the denomination. The mission on the Khassia Hills in Assam is one of the most successful in India, the increase in membership last year being 398. Unfortunately the financial support accorded to the Khassia Mission is by no means adequate. The deficit amounts to over £5,000.

The General Assembly of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodists met in Liverpool on May 12-15, under the Moderatorship of Rev. Cynddylan Jones, D.D. Several important conferences were held, and public meetings, largely attended and successful, helped to make up the programme of the Assembly. Amongst those who took part were some of the most distinguished ministers and laymen of the Connexion. The address of the Moderator on the expiration of his year of office dealt with "The Theology of the Connexion." The address was one of marked ability and power.

Church of England.

Owing to ill-health, Rev. W. T. McCormick has unhappily been obliged to resign all ministerial work, and he is about to quit the incumbency of St. Matthew's Church, Kemp Town, Brighton, which he has held for the last twenty-two years. During that period, in a place where Romanism abounds he has maintained a staunch Evangelical ministry.

The annual report of St. Andrew's Church, Lambeth (Rev. G. Robinson Lees, vicar), tells of a great amount of good work. In addition to the regular services of the church, there are many agencies for the benefit of the poor. "Every organization is worked by a committee, and all clubs are under the management of our own Christian working men and women. The clergy may look on, but the work is done by others. There are thirty-six services and meetings every week in winter, exclusive of clubs. We have a weekly prayer meeting with an average attendance of thirty-eight. Besides this, every important organization has its own prayer meeting."

The Bishop of Ripon has issued a pastoral to his clergy in which he says: "I trust that all our people will use this opportunity for joining together in intercession on behalf of our King and Queen at this solemn period of their lives. In the natural and laudable joyousness of the time I hope that all will recognise in the occasion a call to earnest prayer on behalf of our Sovereign, and of the great Empire over which he is called to rule. The great reign which closed last year has vastly increased the responsibilities of Empire; we need more and more God's guidance; perhaps we are in danger of forgetting Him by whom alone kings reign and princes decree justice."

Trampdom and how to decrease it is a problem in many districts. The Plymouth Mendicity Society in their annual report state that "tramps still continue to decrease. The enforcement of the labour test at the Church Army Home, whereby each applicant has to perform certain labour for about fifteen minutes before obtaining lodgings or refreshments has a most salutary effect in reducing this class of medicant." The chairman mentioned that the number of tramps had decreased from 2,042 in 1889 to sixty-three last year. This seems clear proof that the establishment of a Church Army Labour Home in a town is calculated to effect a saving in the rates.

Portland Convict Prison has just been visited by Mr. Colin Campbell (hon. social sec. of the Church Army), who has arranged for the assistance of a considerable number of men about to be discharged on licence, as well as the relief of the families of several others. By means of quarterly visits to all the convict establishments, and frequent missions in the prisons, the Church Army is enabled to get into close touch with the criminal class, and to show, by practical help and sympathy, that there is a fresh start to be had by any ex-prisoner. A man recently tramped all the way from Knutsford Prison to London (180 miles) to the society's headquarters to beg for a fresh start.

Congregational.

It is hoped to begin the new mission of the London Congregational Union at Claremont Chapel, N., in the early autumn. For several months the builders have been busy carrying out the necessary work of reconstruction.

The retirement of Rev. John Chater, ex-chairman of the Lancashire Congregational Union, after forty-three years' service as a Free Church minister, is to be marked by a general recognition on the part of the people of Southport of a "life lived in the public service."

Park Church, Camden Town (Rev. John G. Binney), reports that about forty members were received into the church during last year—a net increase of fifteen; and that the total income of the church was £1,723, which included £306 for the Twentieth Century Fund, and £154 for the London Missionary Society.

At Bowdon Downs Church (Rev. Dr. Mackennal), it was recently proposed to undertake the responsibility of raising a definite part for the L.M.S. deficiency, and it was agreed to attempt to raise one-fiftieth part of the £50,000, a sum which had been specially mentioned by the directors. In response to this suggestion, the church has raised £517, in addition to gifts amounting to over £700 which had been previously made.

Baptist.

The Principal of Manchester College, Rev. J. T. Marshall, M.A., will complete twenty-five years' official connection with the college at the close of the present session.

On Sunday week Rev. Thomas Fisk began the forty-first year of his ministry at Kidderminster. His subject was "These Forty Years." At the monthly church meeting of the Baxter Church a resolution expressing the congratulations of the church to Mr. Fisk and his people, and showing the esteem in which Mr. Fisk is held, was passed and sent to the secretary of the sister church.

Westbourne Grove Chapel, W., is one of the largest Nonconformist places of worship in the metropolis. It is in the heart, too, of a teeming population of all classes. Remarkable progress has been made since Rev. Geo. Freeman accepted the pastorate four years ago, and the anniversary of his settlement, which was celebrated recently, attracted large audiences. Revs. W. Cuff and Archibald G. Brown took part.

Rev. Dr. McLaren recently unveiled a tablet which has been placed in the West Street Baptist Chapel, Rochdale, to commemorate the martyrdom of Mr. T. W. Pigott, Mrs. Pigott (son-in-law and daughter of Mrs. Kemp, of Beechwood), and their son, which occurred in the city of Tai-Yuan-Fu, Shansi, China, on July 9, 1900, during the Boxer troubles. It will be remembered that a sketch and portraits of the martyrs appeared in our columns at the time.

The congregation at Devonshire Square, Stoke Newington, is celebrating the 264th anniversary of its foundation in 1638. The books, in the possession of the pastor (Rev. G. P. McKay), contain minutes and rolls of membership back almost to the beginning. At present the congregation numbers over 700 members, with a Sunday-school of over 800; and supports its own missionary in Central Africa, besides having former members in Spain and China.

A large gathering took place on Thursday, May 15, at the East London Tabernacle in connection with the Missionary Society of the Tabernacle Sunday School. Pastor Edwin H. Ellis, who presided, spoke warm words of encouragement. After the reading of the report dealing with the past twelve months, addresses were given by Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Bobby, now home on furlough, and by Mr. F. Marcus Hood, of the China Inland Mission, who gave a most interesting account of missionary operations in China.

The fourth anniversary of the Bunyan Church, Stevenage, was celebrated recently. In the afternoon Rev. F. B. Meyer preached on the conditions of salvation, and in the evening Professor Hackney, of Pastors' College, took for his subject, "The Possession of God and the Consciousness of God's Presence." The statistics, read at the social meeting, showed the growth of this flourishing church since its formation four years ago by a handful of believers. During the year the site for the church has been paid for, and contributions raised for the various denominational funds.

Methodist.

At the Children's Home, Bonner Road, E., it will be possible this year to receive at least 100 additional children, and extensions are already in progress at Farnborough, Edgeworth, and London. The committee has also resolved to make special provision for an increased number of crippled and otherwise disabled children.

Two prominent Wesleyan ministers have been laid aside by sudden and serious illness. Rev. Henry E. Gregg, superintendent of the Leeds (Woodhouse Moor) circuit, must rest for at least one year, and Rev. Lancelot Railton, superintendent of the St. John's circuit, Sunderland, is suffering from a paralytic attack. It is feared he will have to retire at Conference.

The Grove Wesleyan Mission, Great Guildford Street, Southwark, S.E., has completed its sixty-fourth year of work. At the anniversary celebration, the hon. sec., Mr. Thos. Brotherwood, reported a number of encouraging advances. The organization, which includes many thriving agencies, is a branch of the London Mission. The hon. superintendent is Mr. J. W. Weston, 19, Southwark Bridge Road, S.E.

Nineveh Wesleyan Chapel, Birmingham, has been redecorated in a remarkable way. "All who have seen the work find it difficult to believe that it was not done by professional decorators. Yet the work was accomplished, under the directions of an expert, who generously gave his services, by a band of clerks, artisans, business men, and young ladies, who worked for nothing but the love of God's house."

Rev. Thomas Waugh, speaking recently at Alford, on "Individual Soul-Winning," said that one thing that has greatly impressed him is that the work of the Christian Church is practically carried on by a small proportion of Christians. This is not as it should be. Mr. Waugh said that, although he is an evangelist, and intensely loves the work, yet he maintains that those who secure individuals for Christ by personal influence and appeal are doing a glorious work, that requires more tact, patience, perseverance, and "sanctified gumption."

Presbyterian.

Rev. J. B. Meharry, of Crouch Hill, N., has conducted services at Heaton, Newcastle-on-Tyne. Each of his sermons had an eminently practical bearing on present-day life and needs, and was received with profound attention and much appreciation. The evening congregation was the largest that has ever been accommodated within the church, and hundreds were unable to gain admission.

Speaking at the recent Synod meeting, on pioneer work, in the Yorkshire Presbytery, Rev. J. J. Mackay (Hull) said four new congregations have been formed in that county. Twenty other new charges could be formed at once in the densely-populated towns of Yorkshire, with every prospect of success. He recommended the appointment of a church extension agent. The Synod empowered the Home Mission Committee to set apart a minister for a limited time to carry on pioneer church extension work.

Society of Friends.

A series of Gospel meetings has been conducted by William Hobson in the Friends' Meeting House, Copford. The attendance was good throughout, and the addresses earnest and to the point.

J. M. Gardner, of Leeds, has visited Settle meeting, being present at both morning and evening meetings, and two of the Sabbath classes. Esther Davis, of Leeds, also visited the meeting at a later date, and was present morning and evening, besides attending three of the Sabbath classes. Both visits were by arrangement of the Monthly Meeting Interchange of Visits Committee.

The annual gathering of Hereford and Radnor Monthly Meeting at the ancient Meeting House at Almeley, was marked this year by the presence of Willis R. Hotchkiss, Edgar T. Hole and Arthur Chilson, of Cleveland, Ohio, on their way to East Africa. The address of the first-named in the meeting for worship will not soon be forgotten, thrilling, as it did, those who heard it with its deep spiritual power and earnestness, and touching them with the pathos of the incidents related of pioneering experiences among the benighted tribes of East Africa.

Salvation Army.

Brigadier Cooke, the officer in charge of the Army's work in Southern Ireland, has been badly assaulted by roughs in Waterford.

The Council of Beatrice City, U.S.A., has voted 40 dols. to the local corps, in recognition of its work on behalf of the poor of the city.

Twenty-two stations have been opened in Germany during the last nine months. The number of officers, soldiers, publications sold, and social institutions have also increased considerably.

The efforts of the Army's Midnight Brigade, who visit the lowest purlieus of London, the casual wards, &c, resulted in 250 destitute men attending the Sunday morning free breakfast at Blackfriars, eighty of whom had spent the previous night in the open.

The first anniversary of the opening of the Central Hall, Ferndale Road, Leytonstone, was celebrated on Sunday week. The building was crowded, many having to stand. A message of encouragement from Sir George Williams was read. In the evening Mr. Clement Boardman, of Stratford, addressed the meeting. The Messrs. Borton Brothers led the services as usual, and an appropriate hymn, written for the occasion, was sung with much feeling by Miss Borton.

Union Hall Mission, Carlisle Street, Edgware Road, N.W., has been established forty-one years. The work in Union Hall itself is carried on with continual evidences of the seal of God upon the efforts put forth. There are tokens of the saving power of God in the midst, and a greater desire for revival. There is also great cause for thankfulness with regard to Hope Hall. Mr. Edward Simmons, who gives his time entirely to the Mission with much acceptance and blessing, writes: "Backsliders have been restored, and a much happier spirit displayed among the Christians. During the year there have been many conversions." The treasurer is Mr. William Holmes, 156, Alexandra Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.

The second annual meeting of the Claremont Mission, Cricklewood, N.W., which was founded in May, 1900, was held on Tuesday evening, May 13, at the Mission Hall, Midland Brent Terrace. The chair was taken by Mr. C. D. Johnson, L.C.C., and stirring addresses were given by Mrs. Payne (of West Hampstead), Rev. J. Anderson (of Christ Church, Harlesden), and Mr. R. W. Nixon, secretary of the Railway Mission. The work of the Claremont Mission has progressed so rapidly and satisfactorily that it has been found necessary during the past year to enlarge the buildings. This has entailed considerable expense, which has been partly covered by a temporary loan from the Sunday School Union, and further enlargement will soon be necessary, it is confidently expected. The hon. treasurer is H. E. Newton, 5, Rockhall Terrace, Cricklewood, N.W.

Fallen Asleep.

Mrs. WILLWAY, wife of Dr. Willway, of the Royal National Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen. The esteemed lady was a devoted worker. In the words of Mr. T. B. Miller, treasurer of the organization, "She laid down her life in the service of the Mission."—At Crosspatrick, Coagh, Mr. JAS. SLOAN, an elder and Sunday-school teacher in Coagh Presbyterian Church.—At Cookstown, Rev. J. K. LESLIE, aged ninety-three years, the oldest minister in connection with the Irish Presbyterian Church, and a devoted, godly man.

The Y.W.C.A.—Satisfactory progress has been made during the past year in connection with the Convalescent and Holiday Department. An increasing number have helped themselves by saving in the Holiday Club. Touching letters have been received from several who have received help in the hour of need. Invitations to seventy-two garden parties were hailed with delight, 2,077 persons receiving the benefit. Friends interested are invited to correspond with Miss Butler, 13, Onslow Square, S.W.

Irish Notes.

THE Irish Presbyterian Missions to the Jews in Damascus and Hamburg continue to prosper. The Jews in Damascus are not nearly so bigoted as formerly, and in Hamburg forty Jews attend public worship.

In spite of the climate, the Qua Iboe Mission in West Africa continues to prosper. On Mr. Bill's station thirty baptisms have taken place, and deputation after deputation is coming in from outlying stations asking for teachers. As the result of repeated attacks of fever Mrs. Bill has had to return to Ireland.

Dr. Gavin is being sent out by the Presbyterian Church as a medical missionary to India. Rev. Wm. Park, M.A., who has acted as Convener of the missions for years, has, on the ground of health, been obliged to tender his resignation. This will be a serious loss to the Mission, as Mr. Park is greatly beloved by all who know him.

On Thursday last an important conference of Magistrates was held in the Mansion House, Dublin, under the presidency of the Lord Mayor, for the purpose of considering the licensing question. The conference was undenominational and non-political, and was organized by Captain Shaw-Taylor, of Ardrahan, county Galway. It was very largely attended, and was the first of the kind ever held in this country. Resolutions were passed protesting against the increase of public-houses, and approving of the Bill to restrict the issue of new licences now before Parliament. It was also decided that meetings of magistrates in each of the counties of Ireland should be held on the subject. The conference cannot fail to do good, and is a long step in the right direction.

Personalia.

DR. BAEDEKER, after a happy and profitable time in Wiesbaden and Stuttgart, had the privilege of attending an International Alliance Conference in Prague. Brethren from Bohemia, Moravia, and other Slavonian races were present, and during three days there was helpful intercourse. Dr. Baedeker has since gone to Norway, where he hopes to be labouring for several weeks. He relies on the prayerful remembrance of Christian friends.

New Forest Gipsies.—Being far removed from the usual channels of Christian ministry, it is to be feared that the Romany tribe is too seldom made the object of care and solicitude on the part of the Church. The New Forest Gipsy Mission, however, under the management of the committee of the Country Towns Mission, has carried on for thirteen years a much-needed work. Referring to last year's efforts, Mr. G. R. Shaw, the missionary, writes:—"During the year we have held many Gospel meetings, especially on Sundays, which is the best day to meet whole families. I find the gipsies are, as a rule, willing to listen, and the children will sometimes help with the singing. If we are to do these people good, we must go to them, as gipsies do not care to leave their tents to go to church." While the mission looks first to the spiritual needs of the people, their temporal necessities are not overlooked. Through the help of friends many gipsies have been cheered with gifts of blankets, tent covers, boots, clothing, grocery, meat, &c. They find in Mr. Shaw a friend in their time of need, and large numbers of them seek his counsel and aid. Parcels of clothing and materials for distribution, and other help, may be addressed to him at Ashurst, Lyndhurst, R.S.O., Hants.

Notes & Comments

"Peace at Hand!" Such is the predominant headline in the daily papers as we go to press. God speed the day! Long have we prayed for this blessing, and if God sends it, it will be stable and lasting; good for the South African Colony and for the Empire at large.

Reverence for Holy Writ. The proceedings of Friday last in the Assembly of the United Free Church of Scotland can hardly be said to lead us far. It is gratifying to read in the resolution that was passed such sentences as these:—

The Assembly desire to give expression to the unabated reverence cherished in this Church for the written Word, as the lively oracles through which the voice of God reaches his children for teaching, for comfort, and for admonition; and they declare their unwavering acceptance of it as the supreme rule of faith and life. And while they do not feel called upon to interfere with serious discussion of questions now raised, unless the interests of Christian truth should plainly seem to require it, the Assembly call upon ministers and professors who may take part in such discussions to take care that reverence for holy Scripture should be conspicuously manifest in their writings, and to treat, with the consideration that is so plainly due, views hitherto associated in the minds of our people with the believing use of the Bible.

As it was not on these affirmations, but on points of procedure regarding Dr. George Adam Smith and his book, that the division took place, we may fairly conclude that these sentiments express the general conviction of the U.F. Church when speaking in a responsible manner.

Unbelieving Questions. How sad it is that in these days—at the beginning of the twentieth century—it should be necessary to give such assurances, and thus to appeal to authors of books designed to represent the teaching of the Church! The critical spirit has been responsible for much mischief. The fact that in its various manifestations it has led to disorder in churches and confusion among Christian people, calls for humiliation before God. Again and again, apparently with honest intentions, good men have echoed the old serpent's question, "Yea, hath God said?" regarding parts and passages of the books which the Lord Jesus Christ and his Apostles described, without doubt or hesitation, as "the Scriptures," "the Holy Scriptures," "Scripture given by inspiration of God."

The "Strong" and the "Weak." Such a reverence as the resolution quoted desiderates would not only become the Christian scholar, but render him and his work helpful to such as he might deem "weaker brethren." And assuredly it is the weak rather than the strong that should claim our attention and support. Our Lord pronounced a blessing on such as should refresh one of "these little ones"—his disciples; and he uttered no more terrible curse than on such as should "cause one of these little ones which believe on Me to stumble." Let those who, in intellectual things, regard themselves as "strong," learn to "bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please themselves." If Scripture is to be criticized irreverently, let "them that are without" do it—they will not carry it far with such defence as the Church of Christ is able and ready to present. It is not for the Church to anatomize the body of revelation, but to guard it, and bring all mankind under its beneficent influence and power.

Jesus Without the Christ. Year by year, as the Unitarians assemble for their annual meetings, we have from them the same worn statements about the superior beauty of a creedless Christianity, and the superior excellence of a Jesus who is not the Divine Lord of all. This year one of their leaders set out to give "a constructive view of Jesus" which should "fill a large and unique place in the religious affections," and yet be a Jesus who is simply and solely a man. The ground for this is that Jesus Brought men to a more living sense of personal communion with God and trust in the Father's love; that Jesus stood "alone" as causing the ideal of Divine Sonship to shine in the darkness of the world; and wherever faith in him was simple and true, that ideal worked as a redeeming power in the heart.

It is extremely pathetic to see these laboured attempts to resist the most direct and logical of conclusions, i.e., that the One of whom they can say these great things can only be, par excellence, the Son of God. There is an Unitarianism which employs all the great language about our Lord, whilst it carefully denies his deity. To us it appears to be a twist of an incomprehensible kind. If Unitarians could only see what everybody else sees, they would know that their position remains to-day, as ever, a piteous failure in its moral effects.

The Christ of History. We do not believe that there is any real good to be gained—on the contrary, we believe there is much real harm done—by the ever-increasing concessions which so many are disposed to make to the rationalistic critics of the Gospels. Too many have been seduced by the specious plea—"Well! if the history of the Gospels is all discredited, we have still the present Christ with us, and criticism cannot touch Him." Which, in a sense, is true enough; but it is far removed from the whole truth. The present rests upon the past, and both explains the past and is in turn explained by it. A Divine Saviour now must have been a Divine Saviour in history; and if He was not Divine then, He is not Divine now. The present Christ and the historical Christ are one. So far, the rationalistic critics of the Gospels have advanced practically nothing but hypotheses for their position; besides which, they quarrel amongst themselves as to their data. To admit these contradictory hypotheses as against the whole life and testimony of the Church, is an act of supreme folly

Light in Darkness. A thoughtful writer has suggested as a suitable outlet for Coronation philanthropy the foundation of a large, free, circulating library for the blind; and has pointed out that in Canada all literature for the blind is passed free through the post office. The development of local libraries for these afflicted ones is a very happy feature of these days. At Liverpool, where, it would seem, Moon's system is most favoured, there are 800 volumes in circulation, and Stepney library has nearly 400. The writer in question adds:

In the mission-field, more and more attention is being paid to the education of those who cannot see; and on the occasion of the coming centenary of the British and Foreign Bible Society it is proposed to publish Scriptures for the blind in all languages. A missionary lately returned from China tells a remarkable story of how Braille may be used as a medium in teaching the heathen. A blind Chinese girl, having learnt to read in Braille, was set to teach a class of sighted natives. They used an ordinary printed book, and she, working from her own volume, taught them all to read. Surely, there could be no more striking proof that the blind have a future before them, and are destined to do good work in the world.

The Spanish Throne. All eyes are turned towards the youthful King, who, a few days ago, took from his mother's hands the reins of the Spanish monarchy. In more than one sense it is a critical time—both for the young monarch and for his country; and, humanly speaking, the policy of the King during the next few years will determine whether Spain is to remain permanently among backward nations, or whether she is to recover something of her ancient glory. The report that the King has decided to rid her of the clerical incubus, which for so long has weighed upon her and crippled her, is probably premature; but when the boy has become a man, he will have to address himself to that work, if his country is to be saved. At present Spain is alone amongst European nations. She has lost her fleet, and remains without an ally, and the cause of most of her ills is priestly domination. It will require a very strong hand to deal with the question, and it is to be hoped that Alfonso XIII. will prove equal to the task.

Youths and Morality. The Church everywhere is alarmed, and with good reason, at the rapid deterioration of morals among the youth of both sexes. The ministers of America have recently held conferences upon the subject, and the Berlin correspondent of the Daily Chronicle writes of the discussion that has occupied the Church Synod there, concerning the down-grade to which such a vast number seem committed. It is distinctly startling to read that one marriage out of twelve contracted in Berlin is followed by divorce; whilst in America, as is well known, the untying of the marriage knot is rendered quite easy. If things with ourselves are not so bad as this, we have at any rate to deplore the lowering of the moral tone which is apparent everywhere. The Berlin clergy point to the low plays which are permitted as being largely the cause of the decadence referred to. With us the same may be said, with the addition that "problem" novels are also in part responsible for the relaxed moral tone. It is time that some check was put upon novels which openly proclaim the Seventh Commandment as obsolete.

Parental Control. In the course of an excellent paper on "The Altered Conditions of our Sunday-Schools," read at the recent meetings of the Congregational Union, the writer touched a vital point, to which sufficient attention has not been given, but which is one of the most serious things in the whole question. Speaking of his own youth and the conditions which prevailed then, the writer said :—

When we were boys we had to go to school; no choice was allowed us. And we had to go to service, under compulsion and authority. But now the atmosphere is one of free choice, and boys and girls, say over fourteen, assume the right to decide whether they will go to Sunday-school, church, or chapel, or not.

The consequence is that the Sunday-school stands as a candidate for the suffrages of the young people, as it did not thirty years ago. The real question, however, is behind this. How comes it to pass that children of fourteen not only possess a liberty to decide about these things, but a liberty to parade the streets in groups, and a liberty to form irresponsible friendships with the other sex, often with the tacit consent of the parents? The truth is that the notions of authority and submission are unwelcome to the many. Too many parents are careless or fearful of exercising authority. We know that authority needs to be wisely exercised; but the neglect of it is fatal to the young. No truer words were ever spoken than the inspired dictum—"It is good for a man that he bear the yoke in his youth."

"My Sheep which was Lost." The question of the decrease in the number of attendants at Divine worship in the synagogues on the Sabbath is giving much anxiety to the Chief Rabbi and the various Jewish ministers. Dr. Adler is inclined to attribute the decadence principally to "the weakening of the religious sense," and to "the increasing stress of business competition"; but others regard it as the inevitable result of the younger Jews becoming imbued with modern culture, and a consequent destruction of sympathy with the old ritual and the old methods of worship. The Chief Rabbi has suggested a remedy which doubtless might, with great advantage, be followed in other quarters outside the Jewish community. His ideal is "a house-going parson," who, he says, "makes a church-going people;" and he adds that when he was minister of Bayswater Synagogue, his large congregations were due in some degree to the fact that when a member was absent from the service he made a point of calling to inquire the cause. The bearing of the parable of the lost sheep is too often lost sight of, as also Christ's distinct command to "compel them to come in," that his "house may be filled" (Luke xiv. 23), for this applies alike to Jew and Gentile.

"When the Evening was Come." The interesting correspondence, which has for some weeks past been appearing in the Press, on the subject of Evening Communion, will do much to enlighten the public mind in regard to the dogmatic spirit of sacerdotalism. It almost goes without saying that the point of view of those who have upheld the practice has been that of the inspired writers of the New Testament, as opposed to that based upon stray references to the "traditions and decrees of mediæval times." No amount of sacerdotal sophistry can set aside the simple fact that the hour of the institution of the Lord's Supper was "when the evening was come," and that St. Paul, who states definitely that he received his commission from the Saviour Himself, says that it was on "the same night in which He was betrayed" (1 Cor. xi. 23). In a recent article on the question, Rev. William Bullock, rector of Ore, Hastings, quotes these words from the late Dr. Thorold, Bishop of Rochester :—

The blessed Lord instituted Holy Communion in the evening, and I would eagerly fling all the traditions and decrees of mediæval times into the Dead Sea sooner than rob one humble soul for which Christ died of the blessed Sacrament. God forbid that I should discourage it where the people value it.

In referring to this correspondence, the Church Times sneers at those who will "put the Bible before the traditions of the Church." But such contempt will do no harm, except to those who indulge in it.

Doctors and Alcohol. It is undoubted that doctors possess much power in the direction of discouraging or encouraging the use of alcohol for their patients. For the majority of patients a doctor's word goes a long way. On this account we welcome with great heartiness the International Manifesto of medical men, which it has been decided to publish to the world at an early date. The keynote of the Manifesto, which should appeal to all reasonable people, is in the following terms :—

In view of the terrible evils which have resulted from the consumption of alcohol—evils which in many parts of the world are rapidly increasing—we, members of the medical profession, feel it to be our duty, as being in some sense the guardians of the public health, to speak plainly of the nature of alcohol and of the injury to the individual and the danger to the community which arise from the prevalent use of intoxicating liquors as beverages.

If all who, by reason of their position, are "in some sense guardians of the public health," would realise their responsibility to speak plainly about our national evil, at least all the frivolous excuses for drinking which men are so fond of employing would be removed, and a new era might be commenced.

"Money for Strong Drink." In several recently published volumes of general literature, attention has been drawn incidentally to the excessive number of public-houses and drinking shops in certain Cathedral cities. Rochester, so far as we know, has not thus been dealt with, but it appears that the Dean and Chapter of the Cathedral there are owners of public-house property, and, therefore, far from occupying a high position in the warfare against intemperance, they are pecuniarily interested in the development of the wretched traffic. The statement that—

The Rochester magistrates have formally considered an application on behalf of the Dean and Chapter for permission to pull down a beerhouse, of which they are owners, and to build new licensed premises on the site, is, on the face of it, as painful as it is brief. It is a strange sign of the times, that while doctors denounce drinking habits, spiritual physicians should increase their incomes by them.

In the Midst of Life. The Board of Trade report as to accidents upon railways during the year 1901, which has just been issued, shows a slight decrease of seventy-nine in the number of killed, and of 613 in the number of injured, as compared with those of the previous twelve months. The figures, 1,171 and 6,740 respectively, are, however, sufficiently startling, especially when it is considered that a large proportion of the accidents were of the preventible class, and might have been averted if a contrivance largely used upon American railways had been adopted here. It is stated, however, that economy stands in the way, and meanwhile, until there is compulsory legislation, the injuries to, and deaths of, goods guards and shunters must continue in the same ratio. Surely the matter is one for the consideration and combined action of Christian shareholders.

Reclaiming the Criminal. The Home Office is about to undertake an experiment, the value of which has been urged for many years by leading reformers. It amounts to a revolution in prison methods, and it seeks to make the punishment of the hooligan class remedial as well as penal. For this purpose the Rochester prison will be turned into a reformatory for youths under eighteen, where they will be compelled to learn a trade. When the term is up, police surveillance will be replaced by the more kindly supervision of the court missionary and the Prisoners' Aid Society. Those who wish to break entirely with their past will be sent to Canada or South Africa to start life honourably. We shall be greatly interested in watching this new scheme. Mere punishment has failed to reform; the discharged convict simply resumes his old ways at the expiration of his sentence. We must not forget that many youthful criminals, thanks to their parents, have simply had no chance to learn good ways. The State is now going to give them one, as an experiment; if it succeeds, it will doubtless become universal.

The Policy of Masterly Inactivity. In a communication to the Alliance News, Mr. Moncrieff has stated that the cost to the State of thirty-eight prisoners recently convicted at the Assizes at Liverpool, whose offences were due to drink, was no less than £1,600, and he asked, "What will be the cost for the whole country for a term of years?" In these matters the real bearer of the burden being the tax-paying section of the community. The State, or in other words, the executive and the legislators, simply look on with apathy at the wholesale manufacture of criminals by the wealthy purveyors of drink. Yet some responsibility rests upon each member of the community, and especially upon every Christian who abstains from bringing his personal influence to bear upon those who are entrusted with the making of the laws.

The Open-air Opportunity. We do not apologize for urging once more upon Christian workers the necessity of making the most of the opportunity afforded by the summer months of preaching the Gospel in the open air. It ought not to be a matter even for debate. If we are really in earnest about the salvation of our fellow-men, and sincere in deploring the non-attendance of the majority at the house of God, then we shall seize the opportunity which brings the multitude right to our doors. We are aware that many congregations, professedly Christian, look with some contempt upon open-air work. Would it not be well to take the charitable course with such, and show them how Christlike a work this is, and to seek to bring them into sympathy with it? At present the Church, as a whole, is simply playing with open-air work; only a mere handful of its members ever engage in it. But it is an opportunity which, on every ground, ought to be utilized to the very full. The command of our Lord is not yet abrogated —"Go out, and compel them to come in."

Practical Papers.

IF CHRIST WERE NOT DIVINE.—II.

HAVING pondered, in last week's Practical Paper, some of the positive indications of our Lord's Divinity, let us now look more particularly on the negative side. "Consider the CONSEQUENCES" if Christ were anything less than the Son of God.

It is a light and easy thing for the doubting mind to say: "I do not accept the view that Jesus Christ is Divine." But whither does the alternative lead? That is the pointed argument with which Christ faced his questioners. Any other conception of Jesus than that of a Divine Saviour, led them at once into an intellectual darkness, an obscurity of reasoning, from which they could find no outlet (Matt. xxii. 41-46). Neither can we to-day. Peter never did a wiser thing than when, in answer to the Saviour's plea, "Will ye also go away?" he faced the alternative and replied, "Lord, to whom shall we go?" (John vi. 68). We must do the same.

I. HIS VERACITY IMPUGNED.—Our first difficulty is that a denial of His Divinity at once impugns His veracity. Some admire Jesus Christ as a Man, as a grand Teacher, as One who led the thought of the world, so far as ethics and morals are concerned. Yet, at the outset, we are face to face with this: that our Saviour claimed unmistakably and absolutely to be the Son of God. Were He anything less, this claim falls to the ground, and the whole fabric of his veracity, and therefore of his morality, crumbles into dust. How is He then a good Teacher? Where is the high example we are bidden to follow? Assume the negative position, and neither intellect nor reason can escape from the dilemma into which such reasoning leads.

II. HIS MENTAL STABILITY DENIED.—"Oh, but," protests the Unitarian, "we do not hold that Jesus Christ was, in any sense, wilfully a deceiver. He was self-deceived, a dreamer, a victim to delusions. Have you not yourself known men of unimpeachable integrity who, on some one point, were not to be taken seriously? So with Jesus. It was a delusion—very real to Himself, but none the less a delusion—that He was the Son of God."

What an alternative! Surely blasphemy could no further go! Dare we accept this as a sufficient and adequate estimate of our blessed Lord, or entrust our eternal salvation to a dreamer and illusionist? Would a man of business have in his office a cashier who was subject to hallucinations, who might have a delusion one day—very real to himself, perchance!—that his employer's money was his? Would he entrust him with his cash-box for a single hour? Let us at least apply as sound reasoning to heavenly things as to those of daily life, and not introduce theories into spiritual matters that we would scorn to bring into those of infinitely less importance. Consider the consequences!

III. HIS HUMILITY CHALLENGED.—Men of every shade of orthodoxy, or of none, who acknowledge the Christ of history at all, agree that He was the world's greatest embodiment of humility, in life and character. In Philippians ii. 5-8, St. Paul presents to his readers what was admitted to be the best-known illustration of a lowly life. Yet, as thoughtful writers urge, can this estimate be confirmed if He were not Divine?

Consider (a) His claims: "I came out from God. I came forth from the Father" (John xvi. 27, 28). "I and my Father are one" (John x. 30); (b) His demands: "Ye believe in God, believe also in Me" (John xiv. 1). "He that loveth father or mother more than Me, is not worthy of Me" (Matt. x. 37). "Whoso forsaketh not all that he hath, cannot be my disciple" (Luke xiv. 33). "Follow thou Me" (John xxi. 22). (c) His assertions: "I am come that they might have life" (John x. 10); "The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost" (Luke xix. 10). (d) His promises: "Come unto Me, and I will give you rest;" "Ye shall find rest unto your souls" (Matt. xi. 28, 29).

Is this the language of humility in a man? Regarded only as such, is it not rather that of despotism, arrogance and pride? He, a homeless wanderer, void of possessions, without a place whereon to lay his head, sat within another's boat, rode upon another's colt, supped in another's room, was buried in another's tomb. All his disciples were better off than He, with their fishing-nets and boats, or a business, or a garden and a fig-tree. It indicated no humility to associate with such, were Christ a man and nothing more.

But when we recognise Him to be Divine, the Heir of the eternal throne and glory, who "emptied Himself," and "though He was rich, yet for our sakes became poor, that we through his poverty might be rich" (2 Cor. viii. 9)—herein we see a marvellous humility indeed.

Anything short of these essential characteristics—his veracity, his mental stability, his humility—robs us at one fell swoop of all on which our eternal hopes depend. Sacrifice these, and we shall walk the earth with a heavier heart than that of Mary Magdalene, as she wailed in the anguish of her soul: "They have taken away the Lord, and we know not where they have laid Him" (John xx. 2).

IV. APOSTOLIC ZEAL, A SHAM!—Again, what about the zeal of the Apostles as recorded in the Book of Acts? Was it madness or a sham? Were they fools or knaves? Would they have gone through all they did, had they believed in anything less than the absolute Divinity of their Lord? Read in 2 Cor. xi. 24-27, the wonderful epitome that Paul gives of all that he passed through. Would he have endured so much had he believed so little? Could the Apostles' zeal have reached the sublime height it did, if they had held less than a Divine conception of Jesus? Peter crucified; James, the brother of John, slain with the sword; John banished to the Isle of Patmos—would these have undergone all this for any less reason than because they believed that Jesus was in truth the Son of God? If so, they were fools indeed! To such a conclusion we are forced if Christ were not Divine.

V. MIRACLES, A FICTION.—How shall we explain them upon any other theory than that Jesus was Divine? Their solution lies in his Divinity. Once admit that He "came forth from God," that all power is committed unto Him, and there is no miracle that He is not able to perform. Here is the only key that fits the lock in its every ward. Let go the one, and you lose the other; nor can you undo the one without the key which the other affords.

VI. HIS RESURRECTION A MYTH.—We have it as an indisputable historical fact, attested by unwilling enemies who had everything to lose by admitting it, that He had risen again. Their own characters were at stake. The soldiers who had been set to watch and had gone to sleep, gave forth the lie that, while they slept, Christ's disciples came and stole his body away, so that it might not be admitted that He had risen from the dead. His resurrection is the foundation of all the teaching of the Apostles. "Jesus and the Resurrection" rings out again and again as the reiterated burden of their song, and the whole fabric of Christianity rests upon it, as proof that He was Divine.

These are some of the consequences we are bound to face, and explain away, if we can, if Christ were anything less than Divine. We may grant that there are intellectual difficulties in the acceptance of his Divinity. Finite minds cannot fully grasp infinite truths. But are there none—nay, are there not greater and more numerous difficulties—upon the other side? Denial of his Divinity produces a "remedy worse than the disease"!

I assume that the great majority of those who read these lines have passed beyond all doubt as to the truth with which they deal. Yet the considerations thus briefly stated may prove helpful in meeting the doubts of others. And let us, further, ask ourselves (if our own feet are firmly planted): Are we living as if this truth is real indeed? Is Christ an actual living force in our daily life? Do we feel his presence near, as

> A living, bright Reality,
> More dear, more intimately nigh
> Than e'en the sweetest earthly tie?

Note St. Paul's parting words to the Corinthian Church:—"Though He was crucified through weakness, yet He liveth by the power of God. . . . Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves. Know ye not, how that Jesus Christ is in you—except ye be reprobates?" (2 Cor. xiii. 4, 5). To such a searching admonition, the best of us may well give earnest heed. G.

A Painful Retrospect.

A CORRESPONDENT, well advanced in years, writes in pathetic corroboration of the admonitions to parents and teachers contained in a recent "Practical Paper" (May 8), addressed to those who have the care and training of the young. He draws a sad picture of the treatment he received as a lad from those whose injustice and impatience he was powerless to resist, bitterly though he resented it in his heart. He says:—

> I am a very old man now, and write from the remembrance of a miserable childhood, always misunderstood. Not only in my own case, but alike in that of my companions, no allowance was ever made for ignorance or inability to comprehend; nor was credit given for one single good motive, or wish to learn or please.
> Like many a child, then as now, I sighed for kindness, and could love and be grateful, disliking lying and deceit, quick at learning, and willing enough to obey; but faults were magnified and punishments constant. The result was a brave boy made into a liar and coward, a sneak, and wicked at heart. . . . Sent to bed dinnerless, or beaten with the rod, "as Solomon commanded," because I told the truth in denying some false accusation. Long service in India, increasing years, a study of the Holy Scriptures, and a happy home of my own, have dispelled any feelings of anger or desire to be revenged, formerly existing. I have forgiven, but to forget appears impossible; and knowing this, added to an intense love for the happiness and holiness of the rising generation, induces me to beg all having authority or influence over the young to remember that they themselves once were young, that it is easier to rule by kindness than by fear; and "as bends the twig, so grows the tree."

These are words that strike home. It is a terrible responsibility in teacher or parent to be the author of painful memories such as these.

The Church and Missions.

By Rev. JOHN STEWART, M.A., Madras.

How Best to Organize Home Efforts, and Generally Increase Interest in Foreign Missions.—I.

In any consideration of this subject three things must be kept in mind:

1. The existence of a strong and vigorous spiritual life is essential to any real interest in the subject. Unless we have been brought into living union with the Lord Jesus we can have no real interest in the extension of his kingdom; and, might we not also add, where there is no interest in foreign missions, and no desire to give effect to the command of Christ, the presumption is, that there is either no real living faith in him, or culpable ignorance as to what he requires of us. The chief remedy, therefore, for the lack of interest in foreign missions is a revival of spiritual life in the Church.

The responsibility for bringing about an awakened interest in this great subject must always rest primarily on the pastors of the different congregations; and while it may not be correct to say that where the pastor has little or no interest there will be no interest in the church, the converse is certainly true, that, given a pastor who recognises that the chief end for which the Church of Christ exists, is to extend the kingdom and give effect to the command to go into all the world and preach the Gospel, and we certainly have, sooner or later, a Church also that will make this its business. Organisation itself, however, will never create life; it is only the channel through which life manifests itself. But it is well that the channel should be clear of obstructions.

2. The compulsory nature of the obligation resting upon the Church. It is essential that we recognise and acknowledge the fact that this business of foreigns missions is not in any sense optional, but in the highest degree compulsory. Missions are the chief end of the Church, as Duff said sixty years ago. Unfortunately, in the majority of our congregations, this is not the accepted view, if we are to judge by the practice of the churches. The whole question is looked upon as an optional one, and as if we were doing a favour by undertaking the work at all. It is not sufficiently realised that obedience is essential to the very spiritual existence either of the church or of the individual. Sustentation and augmentation funds, home missions, Temperance effort, &c., are all important, but not for a moment to be compared to foreign missions in this respect.

THE EXAMPLE OF THE MORAVIANS.

As has been said by some one, the first duty of every child of God is to give the Gospel to those who have it not. A non-missionary Christian will be a missing Christian in the great day of reckoning; and yet amongst all the churches of Christendom the Moravian Church alone has recognised the great truth that the gathering in to Christ of the souls He died to save is the end for which the Church exists. It alone has made missions its chief business. Its three fundamental principles have been stated as being (1) the Church exists only for extending the kingdom, (2) every member must be trained to take part in the work of witnessing; (3) personal experience of the love of Christ is the power that fits for this. The result is seen in the fact that it has 1·58 of its members a foreign missionary, and a Church membership abroad twice the size of that at home. The abridged history of that remarkable church, given in Murray's "Key to the Missionary Problem," is one that will well repay perusal.

3. The task to be accomplished is quite within the power and resources of the Christian Church during the present generation. For the accomplishment of this great work the Church has men enough and means enough to do it twice over, and the responsibility and blood-guiltiness resting upon the Church if it fails is correspondingly great. Are we not in danger in these days of repeating the very mistake made in the days of Haggai, and does not this explain not only the slow progress abroad, but the lamentable failure of the multitudinous efforts of the Church at home—efforts that in the U.F. Church of Scotland resulted in a nett gain of less than ½ per cent. to the membership for the year 1900, while 90 per cent. of the increase of population in the large cities has gone to swell the number of the lapsed masses?

The terrible consequences to the Church of its failure to recognize the Gospel as given to it only in trust is seen in the case of such churches as the Abyssinian in Africa, and the Syrian Church of South India. One writer says, the greatest hindrances to the evangelization of the world are those within the Church, and "the present attitude of the Church and the plans of her leaders are certainly not consistent with a deep conviction that in our day all men should be given an opportunity of knowing Jesus Christ." "If the churches of Christendom sent forth their missionaries in the same proportion as the Moravian Church, there would be on the field and if only a quarter of the members and adherents of the Protestant Church gave ½d. per day, the amount raised would be £25,000,000 instead of £4,000,000."

As it is, the Church is at present in touch with less than one two hundredth part of those for whom Christ died, and 30,000,000 a year are dying without the knowledge of salvation. The work will certainly never be done unless a very different and higher standard of conservation to God is adopted by the Christian men and women of our land. As someone has put it, "The urgent need, the absolute duty, the unspeakable blessedness, and actual possibility, of living wholly for God, is the ground on which not only our responsibility but our appeals for the evangelization of the heathen world must ever rest."

4. Our present accomplishments and methods, and wherein the latter fail. How best to supplement them.

It has been stated on good authority that only one third of the members of one of the most missionary of British churches, the United Free Church of Scotland, take any real interest in Foreign Missions; and the average contribution through the usual congregational channels of the whole membership, is less than ½d. per week per member, some of the churches averaging not even a quarter of that amount. In connection with the U.F.C., there were in 1900 267 missionaries, male and female, on the field; but if even the one-third of the total membership of nearly 500,000 were in thorough earnest in the matter, and supposing them to be divided into bands of 100 (after the fashion of the Protestant hundreds formed for political purposes, as suggested in a pamphlet some may have seen), and, if each hundred were to send out one of their number, the U.F.C. of Scotland would at once have its missionaries increased six times over, and even if half of those failed, there would still be 880 missionaries on the field instead of 267 as at present.

If the small Moravian Church is able to send out more than one in sixty of its members, it ought not to be an impossible task for a vigorous church like the U.F.C. of Scotland to send out one for every 600. When the very best has been said on behalf of what is already being done, we are forced to admit that there is something wrong somewhere. Even when money is given, it is frequently from very mixed motives, and in some cases very unwillingly. The consequence is, that there is not only no possibility of churches developing new work or taking advantage of opportunities for extension in the foreign field, but there is even difficulty in providing for the carrying on of old and well-established effort. In reality, for the giving of the Gospel to the heathen; but in practice we find that this is far from being realized.

EVERY CHURCH MEMBER IS RESPONSIBLE

The ideal method, of course, is that the Church itself should be the missionary association, and if the Church fully realized its responsibility, that would be the case, but the majority of Church members, we fear, know practically nothing about the subject, and are very much in the position of the minister of an important congregation who said, "I know nothing about foreign missions, and take no interest in them."

The fault lies not so much with the people or with the collectors who gather in the contributions, but with the system. It is a system based on impulse instead of on principle. Efforts are prompted by feeling rather than knowledge. Gifts are spasmodic instead of systematic, and are the outcome of appeals to pity, desire to please, &c., rather than Love to God and a desire to honour and obey Him. There are many noble exceptions, but I believe the state of the majority of church members and their relation to Foreign Missions is what has been described, and the system adopted in most cases tends to foster the continuance of the present state of things. However necessary collectors may be, and however useful impulse and feeling, if prompted by right motives, may be, it is clear that the present methods need to be supplemented if they are to accomplish the end in view.

In our next paper we shall consider some methods of doing this.

Destruction of St. Pierre.

St. Pierre, with thy thirty thousand souls,
In three brief minutes, as a shadow, gone!
Earth quakes, the lightning gleams, the thunder rolls;
Mont Pelée gapes and belches from its cone
The fiery sea, retched from the world's sick core—
A red tornado, veiling the wan cheek
Of morn in the dread clouds of flame that pour
Rivers of liquid fire on Martinique.

They were preparing for their festival,
Thoughtless perhaps of meeting God that day,
When; swiftly folded in the burning pall,
St. Pierre and her children passed away.
Aghast, we gaze on that now silent scene;
We think how weak is man, how strong is God!
We kneel—for we have also sinners been—
And hide anew behind our Saviour's blood.

Industrial Martyrs.—The interesting volume upon Dangerous Trades (John Murray, 1902) just issued, under the editorship of Dr. Oliver, Professor of Physiology, Durham University, throws a lurid light upon the loss of health and life attendant upon a number of occupations in these islands. The question of the due regulation of such injurious trades, with their consequent occupation diseases, and their martyr rolls, ought to be a national one, but unhappily the force of Parliament is expended in less worthy directions, and it is difficult to create even a passing interest in the public mind in regard to the sufferings of those toilers who do so much to secure our comfort.

Samuel and Saul

THE SIN OF JEALOUSY.

(1 Sam. xviii.)

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

AMONG the most terrible of human sins is jealousy—the parent of the darkest and blackest crimes which have disgraced the annals of our race. And of all the delineations of it, which are frescoed on the walls of history, none is more absolutely true to life, and terrible in its graphic colouring, than this portraiture of the first king of Israel.

1. Jealousy opens the door to the devil. In Saul's case the interval was the briefest possible. On the morrow after the song of the women, which first aroused in his heart the feeling of jealousy towards David, we learn that "an evil spirit" came mightily upon him.

There are, as we believe, evil spirits which tenant the atmosphere around us, and are therefore called "the spiritual hosts of wickedness in the heavenly places" (Eph. vi. 12, R.V.), whilst their leader is known as the prince of the power of the air (Eph. ii. 2). Every time we yield in thought or act to the temptations which are perpetually accosting us, we expose ourselves to the entrance of demon influence, which adapts itself to the outward mould of our sinful desires, but invests and fills it with an intensity of passion.

A VERY SOLEMN THOUGHT.

This evil spirit, in Saul's case, is said to have been "from God"—a phrase which can only be interpreted on the hypothesis that God permitted it to come, and that this tragic result transpired in direct pursuance of the immutable fixtures of the universe. If a man tampers with his soul, God cannot save him from the inevitable results. Obey the law of fire, and it will obey you like a dutiful slave—this is God's will and appointment; but it is also his will and appointment that, if you disobey it, it will devour your towers, palaces, treasures, and homes, with merciless fury. When men rebel and vex the Holy Spirit, He turns to be their enemy and fights against them. "God," says one, "must be something to us; what He shall be, depends on what we are to Him."

2. Jealousy defeats its own good. David had suddenly become the darling of the people. With almost a single bound, he had leapt into the throne of universal homage and affection. "All Israel and Judah loved David" (16). In this common affection for one who was so accessible to them all, the people forgot their ancient feuds. Not only they but the court was enamoured of him. He was set over the men of war, and went out with them whithersoever Saul sent him, and his promotion was good not only "in the sight of all the people," but also "in the sight of Saul's servants," while Jonathan loved him with a love passing the love of women. There must have been something of a spell in the influence of that pure bright soul over all who came into contact with it.

Besides this, the Lord was evidently with him. Note how constantly the sacred chronicle touches that note:—"Saul was afraid of David, because the Lord was with him" (12); "David behaved himself wisely in all his ways, and the Lord was with him" (14); "And Saul saw and knew that the Lord was with David" (28).

Moreover, he behaved himself wisely, or prospered (5); wisely in all his ways (14); very wisely, so much so that Saul stood in awe of him (15); more wisely than all the servants of Saul, so that his name was much set by (30).

Under these circumstances, how wise it would have been for Saul to have bound the son of Jesse to himself! Admitting frankly that he was his designated successor, and that he was enjoying the special favour of Jehovah, Saul might have used David for the rehabilitation of his waning fortunes. It was evidently impossible to reverse the Divine choice, but he might have postponed the infliction of the inevitable sentence. Nothing could have made the King himself more popular than to have identified his fortunes and those of his family with one who could have rendered conspicuous and inestimable service to court and kingdom. Nothing could have been easier, nothing more politic. But instead of this, Saul allowed his mad passion to smoulder always, and sometimes burst into a flame, until it broke out in irresistible fury.

A PASSION OF THE MIND.

In the case of the higher passions of the soul, it is often easy to curb and restrain them by the introduction of considerations of self-interest and personal prestige; but it is not so with jealousy. At the shrine of this passion, which differs from the lust of the libertine and the drink-crave of the inebriate, in being wholly a passion of the mind, the jealous soul is prepared to repeat the act of Palissy the potter, who tore up the very boards of his home, after having destroyed every atom of furniture, in order to prosecute the design by which he was consumed. The peace of the home; the success of some great enterprise; the happiness and prosperity of some loved one who has been the unwitting cause of jealousy; the service of God; the prospect of long, happy years of high respect if only the passion is resisted and extinguished—I have seen these, and more than these, sacrificed because jealousy has demanded its revenge.

(3) Jealousy is very inventive of methods of executing its fell purpose. Its shape is protean. Sometimes it uses the stiletto, whose edge is so fine that you do not know you have been struck till afterwards; and sometimes the bludgeon, that fells to the ground with one murderous blow. The poison cup, or the fine meshes of a subtle stratagem, which leads the victim to inflict his own doom—such are the methods which jealousy employs.

Trace this in the history before us. First Saul, under the excuse of his malady, attempts to take David's life with his own hand. He knew that the murderous deed would be imputed to the deranged condition of his mind, and therefore, with impunity, twice launched the javelin at the minstrel who sought to charm away his ill.

A SUBTLE PLOT.

Then he sought to throw him into positions of extreme peril, by inciting him to valiant deeds on the field of battle, and in border warfare. For a bribe he promised him his elder daughter, Merab, as the reward of heroic deeds; and to this added the appeal of religion, than which no motive could be more potent with this devout and chivalrous soul. "And Saul said to David, Behold, my elder daughter, Merab; her will I give thee to wife: only be thou valiant for me, and fight the Lord's battles." And then, with unsparing hand, the sacred writer draws aside the veil, and recites to us the secret thoughts that were passing in that dark and evil-haunted nature—"for Saul said, Let not mine hand be upon him, but let the hand of the Philistines be upon him." We do not know the heroic deeds to which these allurements led, but it was not for want of them that the royal promise was unfulfilled, and Merab given to Adriel the Meholathite.

The stratagem had failed, but it seemed too likely to realize the royal purpose, to be abandoned without being put to one further proof and Michal, who really loved David, at this time, at least, was made the guerdon or prize to allure the young unsuspecting warrior to fresh encounters with the Philistines. The sure evidence that a hundred of these doughty foes had fallen by David's hand was the only stipulated dowry which would be required; and the honour of becoming the king's son-in-law was the theme of many a hint, suggestion, and open conversation, between the courtiers and the young soul on whose career so much attention was being concentrated. To his servants, Saul must have seemed to be sincerely attached to David, and to have desired, with genuine earnestness, to enrol him in his family, so that he played a game of unusual adroitness. On the one hand, his servants really believed that the king delighted in him, and wanted the alliance; on the other, "Saul thought to make David fall by the hand of the Philistines."

It was only after the plot had failed, and it seemed as though David was possessed of a charmed life through the providence of God, that Saul spoke to Jonathan his son and to all his servants, that they should slay David; again hurled his javelin at him with such force that it stood quivering in the palace wall, and pursued him, first to his own home, and finally to Samuel's home in Naioth (see chap. xix.).

Not otherwise is it with jealousy. When a wife is jealous of another woman, who may be absolutely guiltless of any attempt to influence the husband's affections; when an elder minister becomes jealous of his assistant, or of a neighbour; when a person becomes jealous of the influence which another is obtaining over his friend—it becomes almost impossible to enumerate all the unkind suggestions, all the insinuations, all the wrong constructions on conduct, all the perversion of words, actions, and looks, through which the soul will vent its spleen.

(4) Jealousy of the innocent is unable to avail against God. Everything that it does has a reverse effect from that which was intended, and so far from overwhelming the rival, extends his influence, and more thoroughly establishes this throne.

It was remarkably so with David. Saul was bent on alluring him to his ruin. Through God's interposition, however, each murderous intent was foiled, and became the cause of still greater popularity to his rival. If he is set over the men of war, he prospers wherever he is sent; if he is separated from the immediate proximity of the king, and permitted to go in and out before the people (xviii. 13, 15), the whole nation loves him. If he is sent to fight the Philistines, he slays not one hundred but two, so that his name is much set by (30). If Saul urges Jonathan to slay him, he drives his own son to a closer friendship, and to plead the cause of the twin soul with which his own was knit. Everything that is meant for ill, turns out for good. Saul digs privily a pit, into which he falls himself.

If only jealous people would ponder such a story as this, surely they would see the uselessness of their malignant attempts to injure those who may seem destined to take their place. It is not thus that the peril can be met. The stars in their courses fight against Sisera. Balak may bribe Balaam with his wealthiest rewards to come to curse Israel, but how shall he curse whom God hath not cursed, and how shall he defy whom the Lord hath not defied?

There is a Nemesis in life which will certainly return on the evil-doer. The Lord will not leave his Davids to the cruel mercies of a Saul. He will raise up Jonathans to warn them of their peril, will give Michals to ward off the molesting blow, will overpower with spiritual influences the murderous bands, and will still the enemy and avenger.

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, June 1. Numbers x.

THE two trumpets differed from the jubilee trumpets, which were of horn, while these were of silver. Their clear and musical note summoned the congregation to great assemblies or to war—the especial note that was sounded indicating the object. The 9th verse clearly indicates that the wars which Israel was to expect were not for aggression, but for defence; and much comfort is to be derived from the thought that whenever the Church or the individual is summoned to repel attack, the Lord remembers and saves. The sound of the trumpet was also associated with scenes of festive joy (compare v. 10 and Psa. lxxxix. 15). May we not take the silver trumpet as an emblem of the cleansed and purified soul, through whom God gives his messages of alarm and comfort—or at least, of the entire group of the Gospel ministry?

Hobab, the son of Jethro, remained in the camp after Jethro had left it, and as the Israelites were now removing from the vicinity of his own people, he too, desired to be released. But Moses put in an earnest request for him to give him the invaluable assistance of his knowledge of wells, pasturages, and camping-grounds. Though there was the general guidance of the cloud, this did not render needless the use of experience, prudence, and wise human counsel. The way of faith does not invalidate the use of means, when these are absolutely subordinated to the Divine guidance.

Notice the beautiful words with which Moses was wont to celebrate the setting forward and the resting of the ark—is it not thus that the Greater than Moses accompanies each movement of his Church? (Psa. lxviii. 1, 2.)

MONDAY, June 2. Numbers xi.

The fatigues and trials of the desert-march were a severe test to the people's patience. We do not know ourselves in days of ease and prosperity. It is the desert which reveals us. Yet God is there, supplying all need, and leading us as a flock.

The mention of the mixed multitude of camp followers, and perhaps Egyptians (Ex. xii. 38), indicates the origin of the spirit of murmuring; and reminds us to take care of our associations, lest we be tempted to imbibe the spirit, and repeat the rebellious murmurs, of the half-hearted and ungodly. The counterpart of this outbreak is not infrequently found in churches and families where considerable laxity prevails as to worldly associations. The congregation is sometimes too powerful for the church. Their worldly friends make the children of Christian families discontented. Something is sought for more savoury and appetising than the manna which God has provided. The worldly novel, the ball, the theatre, are the leeks, onions, and garlic of modern times! (5.)

The provocation of this outbreak was more than Moses could sustain. Is it not wonderful how one servant after another breaks down, and reveals his weakness, while the Lamb of God is always without spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing? Moses was very meek, but failed in his strong point. He forgot that God never lays upon us a burden without being prepared to carry both it and us; and his grace is always more than sufficient.

The result of the outbreak was very sad. For Moses there was a delegation of power to seventy elders; for the people there was provision for their heart's desire to surfeiting; and finally there was the infliction of a very great plague. Amidst it all, like a pearl shining in a heap of pebbles, how beautiful that unselfish desire of the great Lawgiver, that all the Lord's people should be prophets. May we not echo it, and ask that the Spirit may be poured on us also?

What a beautiful tribute God gave to the character of his servant, notwithstanding the outbreak of the previous chapter. He described him as faithful in all his house. The one trait for which God searches in each of us is fidelity. 'Well done, good and faithful servant." Do we deserve this encomium? We may not be successful or prosperous, but are we faithful, and are we faithful in all God's house? See how God describes Moses as being pre-eminently his servant, and places on him the distinguishing honour of speaking with him face to face. Oh, if faithfulness can conduct to such an honour as this, who would not endeavour to be absolutely true to all the confidence which God may repose in us? And in the Son of God we have the right to be something more than servants; we, too, are sons! (Heb. iii. 1-4).

Moses cherished no unkind animosity against Miriam, who had watched him in his ark upon the Nile; he was glad enough to intercede for her—but, notwithstanding, it seemed necessary that for some time (however brief) she should be excluded from the camp. If she had incurred the displeasure of her father, Amram, by an act of indiscretion, she would have been subject to some penalty, however slight, such as seclusion in her room, and was not some such mark of Divine displeasure befitting? We may be forgiven, but we cannot enter into the Divine fellowship quite as though nothing of the sort had happened.

WEDNESDAY, June 4. Numbers xiii.

It is desirable to read Deut. i. 22-25 as a comment on the opening verses of this chapter. It there appears that the proposal to search the land emanated from the people, and was due to a latent spirit of unbelief. What had they to do with searching the land? Was it not God's gift to them? Did it not flow with milk and honey? Was it not promised that none should stand before them? That the thing pleased Moses did not make it right or wise, because his senses were not perfectly exercised as yet to discern both good and evil. God commanded it, as we find more than once, because the people were set on it. One of the principles of Divine government is to teach us by allowing us liberty to follow a course on which we have set our hearts—though it may not be the best—that He may instruct us by results.

It is a little disappointing to find Moses using the words of verse 18. What did it matter whether the people were strong or weak, few or many, and whether they dwelt in camps or in strongholds? It did not fall within his province to stay considering questions like these, when it was so absolutely sure that whatever the verdict was, God would be found to be absolutely enough, and able to carry out his own promise. Abraham himself would not have reached his high position as the highest type of faith, unless he had kept his mind fixed on the word and promise of God (Rom. iv. 20, 21).

As might have been anticipated, the report was favourable as to the land, but discouraging as to the difficulties of obtaining it. The cities were impregnable, the people were mighty, and the giants many. When we look downwards our enemies are always giants and ourselves as grasshoppers; when we look up, our enemies are as grasshoppers, and ourselves as well able to overcome them. But to be a Caleb, it is necessary to follow the Lord fully.

THURSDAY, June 5. Numbers xiv.

Some happy souls know how to put God between themselves and any circumstances whatever—their one thought is his All-sufficiency. But others allow themselves to look only on their difficulties, which shut God completely out of sight. In Him there is a solution for every complication; only we must dare to believe it so, and that we have been brought into the difficulty in order that we may see that He is all-sufficient, and appropriate the saving strength of his right hand. The one question to ask is, not, Wherefore has the Lord brought us hither? but, Does God delight in us to bring us in? For if the Lord is with us, we may be sure that our adversaries shall be overcome.

The next paragraph (11-25) is very striking. It is not that God was really less merciful than Moses, but that He seemed to put the suggestion before his servant with the object of leading him out in supplication, and of forcing him to take up a position of humble importunity. So Abraham, in his prayer for the cities of the plain; and the Syro-Phenician woman; and the Apostle Paul over his thorn in the flesh. When you know that your motives are absolutely unselfish, when your one passion is for the glory of God's name, when you can base your prayer on a clear word from his own lips, then take no denial, but rise to the holy importunity which cries, "Father, Thou canst not deny me; remember the covenant."

At the same time, unbelief, which shuts us off from God's help, renders it impossible to bring us into the Land of Canaan, which stands for rest. Only when we trust can we rest (Heb. iii. and iv.), and, therefore, there was no alternative except to let the unbelieving die on the desert sands, a fate from which their own activities could not deliver them (40). Canaan is God's gift to faith; our strivings cannot procure its rich treasures and delights.

It is very helpful to come on this chapter between two such chapters as xiv. and xvi. In those we read of aggravated and heinous sin, but here of sweet savour, of forgiveness, and of life in the land (17), which seemed then so far away. Yes, we may have sinned so as to have incurred the sentence of Divine wrath (Psa. xcv. 11), and yet we may be forgiven.

But notice the distinction between the sin of ignorance and that of presumption. If we persistently sin against our better promptings, we become so hardened and blinded that there can be no forgiveness. Forgiveness is obviously contingent on the attitude of our conscience and heart towards God.

With repentance and faith there is abundant forgiveness — forgiveness according to the riches of God's grace (Eph. i. 7); but for such sin as this man was guilty of, in violation of the express law of the Sabbath, there was condign and summary punishment.

The injunction that the Israelites should wear a cord of blue that they might remember and be holy, reminds us of that blessed provision for short memories, which is supplied by the Holy Spirit, whose office it is to bring all things to our minds. Oh that He may keep us from spying out after our own heart and eyes, that we may be kept from infidelity to our Husband, Christ (39).

This formidable conspiracy began with Levites, who were not content to be Levites, but sought to exercise the office of the priesthood. It may be quite true that the whole congregation is holy, but God has given some to be apostles, and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers; and it becomes us to recognize that the Divine Head of the Body has set the members in the body, each one as it has pleased Him, dividing to each severally as He would. When your work or place is challenged by jealousy and emulation, be at peace, your Master will vindicate you, and show whom He will cause to come near unto Him (Psa. lxv. 4).

Our position is assured, not by our own talents and activities, but by the direct arrangement of the Saviour. It is not for us, therefore, to feel that we have to hold it by contrivance or energy on our own part, but ever to present ourselves to God for his service, sure that if we are fit to be used, He will graciously use us. Let us not seek to be someone else, to take his place, or be jealous of his influence. "Wait on the Lord, and keep his way, and He will exalt thee to inherit the land."

In spite of the great provocation that Moses and Aaron had received, they pleaded for the people, and the ringleaders only perished. Remember, as Jude says, that that pit still devours (Jude 11).

What an exquisite emblem is given in the last paragraph, of the efficacious interposition of our Lord, as Great High Priest, as He stands between the living and the dead, arresting the progress of corruption and death, and staying the plague. O Saviour, stay that plague, ere it touches us! F. B. M.

Livingstone College.

THOUGH unfavourable weather last Thursday deterred some who had hoped to be present on Commemoration Day at Livingstone College (Leyton, E.), the lecture hall was filled with interested friends. Advantage was taken of the opportunity to exhibit in several rooms a variety of clothing, food stuffs, medicines, and accoutrements specially adapted for the use of missionaries and of travellers in tropical climates.

The principal (Dr. C. F. Harford) prefaced his statement for the year by explaining that, in the change from Harford-Battersby to Harford, he and his brothers were reverting to the old family name. Desiring to do honour to the memory of Dr. Livingstone, it had been decided to hold a special Commemoration Day on or about May 23 each year.

The roll of the college shows that 131 students have passed through the course of training, of whom thirty-five are in Africa, thirty-six in Asia (including seventeen in India, and twelve in China), three in North West Canada and Labrador, three in South America, one in Australia, four in the islands of the Pacific. Seven have been called to the higher service, a few have not yet gone out to the field, and others are at home for furlough or invalided.

PRACTICAL RESULTS.

The reports received from all parts of the world furnish the best proofs of the need for the training given. The knowledge of fevers has enabled many to escape from infection, though living in malarious districts, while others have been able to treat malaria successfully. The knowledge of dentistry has proved helpful, while a large number of surgical emergencies have been dealt with, including one of cut-throat which made good recovery.

The College has collected information concerning the preservation of health in such matters as housebuilding, the provision of suitable clothing and foods, and other matters of general hygiene. The Missionary Societies in general have not seen their way to make use of the College to any large extent, and a crisis has now been reached. Continuance is dependent on a sufficient number of students applying for training each year, and on the Societies making use of the advantages offered. For the purchase of the property £3,500 is still required, with £500 to meet the needs of the present year.

Warm testimony was borne by Bishop Tugwell (of Western Equatorial Africa) to help received from a missionary trained by Dr. Harford, as well as to the high opinion he had formed of the institution during a few weeks' residence. "I feel," he said, "that those of us who go out to malarious climates ought to have some such training."

PLENTY OF STUMBLING-BLOCKS.

The interest of the occasion culminated in the appearance of Mr. Frank Wilson, who, with Mrs. Wilson, daughter of the late Dr. Livingstone, is about to proceed to Sierra Leone in connection with the Church Missionary Society. In a few hearty sentences Mr. Wilson told of the joy which they felt at the prospect of being able to give themselves to foreign effort, and especially in Western Africa, which had long occupied a warm place in their affections. The last call had, he said, come not of their own seeking; and, while emphasizing the duty of every young person to face the question, this fact had been a source of special delight. More difficult than anything else to stand against had been the loving words of friends at home who cast doubt upon the wisdom of the step. "There are plenty of stumbling-blocks in the way of any one who wants to be a missionary." In addition to the rubbing away of corners through the meeting of students from different denominations, Mr. Wilson spoke enthusiastically—from his own experience among the fishermen of the North Sea—of the value of the medical experience gained at the College in Christian work.

Representing the missionary sentiment of America, Rev. Dr. Cuthbert Hall (Union Theological Seminary, New York) said that there are three English names — Moffat, Hannington, Livingstone—which his countrymen have long since canonized; "and the last of these names has a far deeper hold on American life than any other." In the closing prayer Dr. Hall dedicated Mr. and Mrs. Wilson anew to the work to which they have been called.

The Southern Homes of Rest.

YEAR by year the Lancing Homes for the ailing and convalescent poor, for which no subscriber's "letters" are needed, have been increasingly made use of by the more needy and friendless of the working classes. Hundreds every year, whose frail barques have suffered shipwreck on the stormy ocean of a necessitous life, have been refitted and strengthened to face once more the exigencies of life. At these Homes they have found the "life-line" thrown to them with the happiest results, awakening praise and thanksgiving. The inception and development of these Homes make an interesting story. Few would recognise the old and dilapidated Lancing Grammar School of the early "nineties" in the beautiful block of premises which now provides beds for about 200 patients.

About a hundred friends and visitors gathered last week for a praise and dedication meeting, which was held in a marquee in the grounds. Mr. Willett, from Brighton, presided, assisted by Mr. W. Taylor, from Clarendon Hall, Hove, and other friends. Mr. Chorley, the director, gave a few particulars of the Homes, and read a grateful letter from a poor working man, who had only a few days before returned to London, so much improved that his friend who met him at the station did not know him: the spiritual help received was a further cause for thanksgiving. A missionary atmosphere is encouraged throughout the four Homes, which are conducted on strictly Evangelical lines. Little was said about the financial side, but the burden is not a light one. There is a substantial balance due to the builder, while the furnishing of the new wing will need considerable help. Mr. Chorley's address is 6, Clephane Road, Canonbury, N.

Strangers Within Our Gates.

NUMEROUS and varied are the branches of Christian ministry which emanate from the French Reformed Evangelical Church in Bayswater. The thirty-ninth annual report is a record which will be read with deep interest by Christians throughout the country who are upholding, by prayer and sympathy, those who are seeking to evangelize French-speaking foreigners in London and Great Britain.

The year was notable as the one in which the freehold of the church was purchased, thus securing for all time this Protestant Evangelical place of worship for the ever-increasing French-speaking population of the metropolis. This ensures the continuance of a work which for nearly forty years has been owned and prospered of God. Another gratifying feature of the year is the opportunity given to the pasteur of holding services and preaching in French in the Parish Church of St. John's, Fitzroy Square, the Archbishop of Canterbury having authorized the Bishop of London to give the necessary permission.

In the educational work progress has been made. The upper day and infant schools have been attended by pupils of thirteen different nationalities, while the Sunday-school has a roll of 117 scholars. The Bienvenue Home continues to serve a highly useful purpose by sheltering poor governesses, forlorn and in shattered health, and finding for them situations when able to resume employment. No fewer than 348 governesses availed themselves of its advantages during the year; while situations were found for 156 girls through another agency of the church.

The Medical Mission remains closed through lack of support; meanwhile the sick are visited in their homes and hospitals. Rev. Du Pontet-de La Harpe, who continues to superintend the work, may be addressed at 16, Kildare Gardens, Bayswater, W

Mr. Jowett's L.M.S. Sermon.

NOT readily will lovers of Evangelical religion forget the sermon on Paul's words, "I . . . . fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ," preached in the City Temple, in connection with the London Missionary Society's anniversary by Rev. J. H. Jowett, of Birmingham.

In his introduction, after carefully making confession as to the completeness of Christ's atoning work for human sin, Mr. Jowett showed that such very good news needed someone to proclaim it, since even God works by ambassadors. The spirit of the ambassador is of the essence of the work—"when we cease to bleed we cease to bless."

The main body of the sermon consisted in the placing of the words of Paul in juxtaposition to the words of Christ, and in instituting a reverent comparison of the same. Three main divisions were chosen, to each of which a significant pair of texts supplied the topic: (1) "In all their afflictions He was afflicted;" "Who is weak, and I am not weak? Who is offended, and I burn not?" (2) "Who, in days of his flesh, when He had offered up prayers and supplications, with strong crying and tears;" "I would that ye knew how I agonize for you;" (3) "Master, the Jews of late sought to stone Thee, and goest Thou thither again?" Paul "returned again to Lystra."

These three topics—keen sympathy with others, agonizing prayer for others, suffering at the hands of others—were developed by apt quotations culled from the biographies of later Apostolic men. And how well chosen were the references to these men—to Samuel Rutherford, to David Brainerd, to Henry Martyn, to James Chalmers, to David Hill, and to the converts and missionaries in disaffected China! We were reminded of the too-long-neglected classics of Christian experience. May the earnest resolve then born in many a heart, to make the familiar acquaintance of such Christian worthies, prove to be more than a merely passing resolve. These men had a spiritual craving that nothing short of the Evangelical faith could satisfy; they did mighty works that the Gospel alone can explain; they have left an experience that is the best of all commentaries on the deeper doctrines of grace.

Mr. Jowett's sermon was worthy of a Christian preacher, worthy of a congregation composed largely of Christian preachers, and worthy the traditions of the great London Missionary Society, in whose behalf it was delivered. The Evangelical tone of the discourse is a sign of the times. Many of us would welcome from Mr. Jowett a further pronouncement on the experimental side of "sanctification by faith," a subject that, sooner or later, secretly but irresistibly clamours for treatment in every sincere soul, and the failure to realize which is the real source of so many defections from Evangelicalism.

A Grateful Pastor.

Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff Highway.

AS usual on Bank Holidays, we invited our sailor friends to the Rest on Whit-Monday, and a very enjoyable time was spent. In the afternoon we held a bright open-air meeting, followed by a singing meeting indoors. About 120 men accepted the invitation to tea, and listened to the sacred solos sung by various friends. Meetings were afterwards held in the Scandinavian, German, and English languages, and an earnest spirit was manifested. Many were deeply touched, and we believe that several who professed decision for Christ will prove by their lives to be new men in Christ Jesus.

Gospel meetings are held every night in the week; the average attendance lately has been greatly increasing, and at every meeting there are some new faces. The working expenses amount to about £300 per annum, and, although our funds are practically exhausted, we are looking to the Lord to send in the wherewithal to continue the Gospel testimony that has been maintained for the past twenty-four years. The treasurer is Milton Horner, Esq., of Reigate.

A Friend of the Blind Poor.

Rev. J. PULLEIN-THOMPSON.

IT is given to few ministers to maintain with vigour and fruitfulness the work of an important parish, and at the same time to direct the operations of a philanthropic society promoting the welfare of hundreds of afflicted poor people. This dual position is filled with much acceptance by that staunch Evangelical clergyman, Rev. J. Pullein-Thompson, Vicar of Christ Church, Chelsea, and honorary secretary of the National Blind Relief Society.

PREACHER AND ORGANIZER.

Mr. Pullein-Thompson first attained distinction as an ardent advocate of the Colonial and Continental Church Society. His abilities and devotion marked him as eminently suitable for parish work, and he was soon appointed to St. Stephen's, North Bow, where, in the course of nine years of earnest labour, the various departments of parochial organization were brought to a high level of efficiency. The vicar, it was quickly realized, delighted to enter with zest into the needs and sorrows of the great population of plain, working-class people around him; the church became an attraction, and its manifold agencies powerful factors for good. Mr. Pullein-Thompson was one of the pioneers of that revival of Church of England effort to "catch men," which has done so much in certain London districts to secure from "the man in the street," first, a hearing, and then a warm interest in the Gospel. At St. Stephen's the Lord's Day afternoon services for men only, hearty in method and evangelistic in aim, proved at once a source of strength to the church, and of encouragement to the officers and congregation. A service for women was held simultaneously, in the church-room. Spreading his nets in the streets, Mr. Pullein-Thompson likewise organized open-air gatherings at prominent street corners, where the striking addresses of bands of missioners were richly rewarded in the "arrest" of many hearers. Mr. Pullein-Thompson and his helpers were in the habit, too, of visiting, not only the cellars and garrets of the slums, but the public-house bars, speaking words of exhortation and wise counsel. "The vicar was in the Joiners' Arms last night," was an astonished comment. "Yes, and the curate in the Red Lion!"

Evangelistic services in a mission chapel were crowded; at the Sunday-schools, with an attendance of 1,200, fresh comers had to be turned away for want of room, although additional classes were started in various parts of the parish, in schoolrooms and private houses. Next, the church buildings were renovated, and a church-room and class-rooms built, the improvements involving an expenditure of £6,000. Mr. Pullein-Thompson had the satisfaction, ere leaving North Bow, of seeing the Sunday-school work centralized in a splendid block of new buildings.

CHRIST CHURCH, CHELSEA.

From the artisan population of the teeming East to the heart of Chelsea "flatland" was a striking change; but an equal opportunity for aggressive operations was found in the fashionable West. On accepting the charge of Christ Church, in 1899, the new vicar immediately commenced to make the church a centre of religious activity. First of all, improvements were carried out in the sanctuary, the building being practically transformed and rendered much more attractive, yet, of course, without any savour of Ritualistic adornment. It is no easy task to fulfil the obligations of such a parish. In it are found representatives of all classes of society. The elegant town residences of the aristocracy are in close proximity to squalid and dilapidated cottages inhabited by the very poor, while there is a large middle-class population of shopkeepers. Amid all the vicar is indefatigable in prayerful effort to revive the cause of spiritual religion among such widely differing sections of the community, and to inspire his congregation with a healthy sense of Christian responsibility. Evangelical fervour has already done much for Christ Church, and will do yet more. The growing strength of the Communicants' Guild, of the parish weekly prayer-meeting, and of the Bible-classes, foreshadows a future of remarkable fruitfulness. The extensive character of the work is evidenced by the fact that no fewer than 400 meetings of various guilds and societies connected with Christ Church are held during the year in the new parish room.

THE BLIND POOR.

Although Mr. Pullein-Thompson has to cope with heavy financial responsibilities at Christ Church, he steadfastly maintains his labours in connection with the National Blind Relief Society. There were elements of tragedy in the founding of the organization. One of the inventors of lucifer matches lost his sight by an explosion of material, while engaged in preparing the composition used in the process of manufacture. Abounding in wealth, he had many friends; reduced to poverty and want, he was left alone. This misfortune becoming known to men in whose hearts love to their fellow-men beat high, the result was the formation of the "Blind Relief Society." The organization passed through periods of trial, and Mr. Thomas Clarke, who in 1862 became honorary secretary, himself became afflicted with blindness. His esteemed wife took up the work and carried it on for years, until she was overtaken by the same sorrow. In her extremity, she turned for help and advice to Mr. Pullein-Thompson, who, although pressed with many duties and demands at North Bow, accepted the honorary secretaryship—at first for one year only. That was some thirteen years ago. Since that time about £50,000 has been raised, to provide the blind poor with regular pensions in their own homes. The work has now attained national dimensions; there are about 670 pensioners on the books.

The mere condition of blindness, with consequent poverty, constitutes the constant appeal that can only vary in details of each case; but it is often the details that bring out the need. One of many touching applications reads:—

I am writing to you on account of Miss E—— F——, who is so nearly blind as to be quite unable to earn her living, and being entirely dependent upon herself, she is almost on the verge of pauperism. For the past two and a half years, whilst her sight has been gradually failing, I have done what one poor person can do for another. I have given her a share at our meals, and just what else I could do; but with an increasing family of little ones, and only a poor man's wages to do with, I find it impossible further to support her, so I am asking your kindness and interest in her case, and trust, by God's help, you will find it convenient to put forth a helping hand to one who is really a deserving case.

HEROISM IN HUMBLE LIFE.

The cause of blind sufferers is taken up by Christian friends in all parts of the country. A lady writes on behalf of

A poor woman of a farmer family, who is deaf as well as blind, and a great invalid, and entirely dependent on a sister, who also has the aged mother to support single-handed. She is a housekeeper, and nothing can be more heroic than the lives of these three, who ought to be in comfortable circumstances. As it is, life is a continual strain and trial.

A country rector lately wrote respecting a poor blind woman:—

She and her husband had a little farm, and saved enough to build a cottage. A few years ago he died, and she—blind for many years in one eye, and in the other for three or four—has lived on money obtained by sale of reversion of her cottage, of which she has the use for life. This money has come to an end and she is destitute; she has been very ill, but is recovering. She has managed to keep her home going till now, with aid of neighbours, but can do so no more after this illness. She is just on 79 years of age, has a blameless character, and is, I believe, a truly Christian woman.

A BLIND ORGANIST.

Concerned regarding the welfare of a worthy man who was once organist at a church, a friend recently addressed Mr. Pullein Thompson as follows:—

I am much interested in a blind man named C—— H——. He was by profession an organist, but owing to serious illness in recent years has been unable to follow that profession. He has lost his voice. He has a wife and two children, and is at present trying to earn something by keeping a cow, which has been given him. I have known him for many years, and can give you any further particulars.

BLIND FROM BIRTH.

A pathetic case is of a brother and sister:—

Both have been totally blind from birth. The names are A—— and B—— H——. The former is in receipt of 5s. 9d. per week, but I have hitherto failed to obtain help for the latter. They live together, and an unmarried sister takes care of them.

Much anxious thought and toil are being devoted to an effort to supersede the pensions of five shillings per month on the ground of the insufficiency of this small sum, and to make the lowest pension ten shillings per month, with a prospect of increase to fifteen or twenty shillings according to the need of the recipient. In order to carry out this beneficent scheme the sum of £5,000 is needed. Both in his energetic labours to provide for those who have to bear blindness as well as extreme poverty, as well as in his evangelical work in Chelsea, Mr. Pullein-Thompson will assuredly have the earnest sympathy of Christian people.

Mildmay Conference.

THE Coronation having been fixed for the last week of June, Mildmay Conference is being held this week, a month earlier than usual. The opening gatherings were largely attended, the liveliest interest being manifested in the "Things touching the King," for meditation on which the days had been set apart. Evidences abounded of fellowship and communion with the Lord Jesus Christ, as well as of deep longing and expectation for fuller realization of his presence. Following much personal waiting upon God for an outpouring of his Spirit, the arrangements included united services on Sunday last, conducted by Mr. P. S. Badenoch and Rev. H. L. Moir (Strichen, N.B.), with noon and evening prayer meetings on Monday.

THE KING—PREDICTED.

The general subject set down for the Conference was "The King"—"The kings of the earth set themselves. . . . Yet have I set my King" (Psalm ii. 2, 6). At Tuesday's gatherings special attention was directed to "The King—Predicted" (Hebrews ii. 8)—as Son of Man, Heir of dominion in the earth; as Son of Abraham, Heir of the land; as Son of David, Heir of the throne; as Son of God, Heir of all things. The early morning prayer meeting was presided over by Hon. R. Moreton, who also (in the absence of Lord Polwarth) took the chair, at eleven o'clock, when a goodly company had gathered from many directions. The keynote was given to the proceedings by the singing of "All hail the Power of Jesu's Name;" and thereafter, thanksgiving for the prospect of peace in South Africa having been voiced in the opening prayer by Rev. D. B. Hankin, the doxology was sung with deep feeling.

In the opening address, Rev. Dr. E. W. Bullinger dwelt on the importance of turning all attention during the days of the Conference to the Person of the King. After considering different aspects of Scripture truth in successive years, "we are to have the King Himself; and we shall have the blessed privilege of forgetting ourselves, of getting away from ourselves for a little while, and being occupied with his glorious Person. The subject has been divided so that to-day it brings before us the prophetic aspect of things, so that we have to see and learn what is predicted concerning this King, especially as the Son of Man.

"Have you ever noticed that prophecy is always connected with failure? It was not required till man had failed, and it is in the midst of the Fall that we have the first prophetic announcement. There was no place for the prophet at first among God's people, until the priests failed by losing sight of the end, and being absorbed in the means."

All hope after the Fall being centred in the Seed of the woman and the Son of Man, Dr. Bullinger traced down through the Old Testament the proofs of Satan's enmity to the line of that Seed in every generation. "The time was coming when Satan, the instigator of all this evil, and the originator of the Fall, with all its curse and sorrow, was to have his head crushed; but Satan was not looking forward to having his head crushed, and he did everything to prevent the Seed of the woman coming into the world. He has succeeded in clouding over the two books of the Bible—Genesis and Revelation—in which his downfall is spoken of.

SATAN'S DEVICES FRUSTRATED.

(1) Tracing the evidences of Satan's plan, it was shown that his first aim was to corrupt the whole race of mankind, and the great fact remains that, in all the families of the earth at the time of the Flood, there was only one untainted. The word "perfect" applied to Noah's family is used of sacrifices, and meant that this family had been preserved pure as to pedigree. "All the attempts of Satan to frustrate this first prediction needed and received Divine frustration. Man knew nothing of the great conflict that was going on. God alone could see the working of Satan. He alone could frustrate them, and that He did upon every occasion by direct and immediate interference. This first attempt was defeated by the destruction of all mankind except the family which had been kept pure."

(2) The same working was traced in the history of Abraham. "Many wonderful and important events must have happened during that life; yet those that are recorded are mainly connected with the preservation of this Seed in which the promise of God was centred. Why did Abraham twice deny Sarah? May we not say a Satanic attempt was being made to avert the promise of Genesis iii. 15?

(3) "Then we can see in the great famine that came over the land. It is not recorded till Genesis xli., but the Lord had provided in chapter xxxvii. a man 'to preserve life'—the life of the Seed of the woman that was coming into the world."

(4) The very determined attempt in Exodus to destroy all the male children was the outcome of the combined wisdom—"let us deal wisely"—of Egypt and of Satan. "The tears of the babe (Moses) were sufficient under the guiding of God to overrule the wisdom and frustrate the plan."

REV. JOHN WILKINSON.

From Photograph by Messrs. Elliott and Fry, 55, Baker Street, London, W.

(5) The next point was the entanglement of the people in the land (Exodus xiv.).

(6) When the seed was centred in David's line, a determined attempt was made by Satan to break that line. On the death of Jehoshaphat, Jehoram began by killing all his brothers; and the Arabians came and killed all his sons.

(7) When Ahaziah destroyed the seed royal, if the Lord had not interfered again the line would have been ended. When the time was ready Jehoiada went out to proclaim that "The king's son shall reign, as the Lord had said of the sons of David."

(8) The attempt through Haman to destroy the whole race of the Jews was frustrated so marvellously that in the day when their enemies hoped to triumph the Jews had rule over all that hated them.

(9) Special attention was given to the attempt to induce Joseph to repudiate Mary; (10) to the carefully laid plan to reach the seed through Herod, aided by the priests and the calculations of the wise men; and (11) to the two storms on the lake.

All was summed up as a great demonstration of the faithfulness and power of God. Under one aspect we are hid with Christ in God—not in any earthly chamber as Joash. Again, like Jehoiada, we witness to-day that the King is not dead. The One who "showed" is the One who fulfilled; and as that was true with regard to the prophets, so will it be with the prophecies that testify that "Christ shall reign."

THE SON OF ABRAHAM.

Concerning the phase of the subject allotted to him—"The Son of Abraham: Heir of the Land"—Rev. John Wilkinson felt that it was only possible rightly to understand the King, by taking account of his surroundings, and in pursuing this line of thought, dealt with—(1) A Separated People; (2) An Appointed Place; (3) A Predicted Person; and (4) A Revealed Purpose. Israel was (1) the separated people. "This people have I formed for myself; they shall show forth my praise." We are told that in millennial days ten men out of every nation shall take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew, saying, "We will go with thee." This elect people is to be preserved until all that God has spoken concerning them shall be accomplished. (2) The place was Palestine. "I will appoint a place for my people Israel." God has promised that they shall possess the land. A conditional covenant was made on Mount Sinai; but at length the people were driven from the country. They have now only 30,000 square miles of the Promised Land; but when the time comes for them to occupy from the great river of Egypt to the Euphrates, they will possess 300,000 square miles. And it is this that God calls "a land large and good." They will yet have every inch of the land God has promised them, and will say to the Gentiles, "Give room; the place is still too strait for us." They will cross the border only to return and be a blessing to the whole earth. Speaking of Palestine through one of his servants, Jehovah saith, "It is a land which the Lord thy God careth for." The eye of Jehovah ever rests upon that portion of this planet.

There must be some reason for this Divine watchfulness. It was because the land was to be the birthplace of his beloved Son. It was to be here that the Son of God should settle the question of sin for the human race, where He should be buried, rise from the dead, and leave our earth, wrapped around by clouds; and it is here again that He will return, and take up the thread where it was broken nearly 2,000 years ago.

Besides the separate people, the appointed place, there is (3) the predicted person and (4) the revealed purpose. To Abraham and his seed were the promises made. There are in the Scriptures three applications of the word "seed." It is applied to Christ, believers in Him, and to all the descendants of Abraham, whether converted or not. The first application of "the seed of Abraham" is to Christ, who is the procuring cause of all the blessings that have come to the human race, and which, in millennial days, will flow to the ends of the earth. God made a covenant with Abraham, saying, "To thy seed will I give this land, and thy seed shall be as the stars of heaven, and the sands upon the sea-shore."

The calling by God of Abraham to offer up Isaac was typical of the sacrifice of his own Son. The voice of the angel of God was heard by the patriarch: "By myself have I sworn, saith the Lord, because thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld thy son, thine only son, I will multiply thy seed," &c. Why did God swear? When he adds to a promise an oath, there can be no change for ever. Anything God intends to be temporary and to pass away, He never swears to. The Aaronic priesthood was only temporary, and God never swears to it. There is no priesthood on earth but that of believers in Christ. The Jew will yet fulfil the purpose of God. The nation will be restored, become a blessing to the whole earth, and the Messiah will rule in righteousness and peace.

Benares to Calcutta.

ON leaving for the "holiest" of Hindu cities, we were told by a friend that a day was sufficient to see all we wanted at Benares. If it is to get sickened at heart and dizzy in head by the revolting sights of hideous idolatry and animal worship, and the effluvia in the "sacred" places, a day is certainly more than enough.

Seen from the river in the early morning, Benares presents a painfully fascinating picture. Above the bathing-ghats, thronged by thousands of pilgrims from all parts of India, tower temples, palaces, and mosques. All along the river, under large umbrellas, sit the priests of the Ganges, an exalted Brahmin caste, selling powder and other things to devotees whom they fleece. Near the burning ghat, corpses are lying uncovered, with their feet in the river, while the funeral pile is being made ready. In passing, a sharp breeze carries on its wings the unpleasant odour as far as our boat.

A large number of fakirs or holy men congregate within the city's walls, and their contempt for cleanliness and decency, and their love of begging, are characteristic of the Hindu ideal of holiness. The man who refuses to work for his self-maintenance will, nevertheless, submit himself to all kinds of torture and hard labour for the sake of merit. We saw a man, almost nude, on a bed of spikes; yet at the falling of a few drops of rain he looked quite distressed, and beckoned a friend to hold an umbrella over him!

Oh, how one realizes in all this the deadly foe to Christ's teaching! It was like emerging from a subterranean dungeon into pure mountain air, when, after a day spent in such sight-seeing, we attended the united prayer meeting at the L.M.S. High School. Thank God that in Benares, the heathen, the benighted city, there is a Christian element which does not faint, notwithstanding manifold discouragements. The agencies at work are the C.M.S., the L.M.S., the W.M.S., and two women's societies, the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, and the Baptist Zenana Mission. The B.M.S. commenced in 1816, the C.M.S. 1817, the L.M.S. 1820, and the Wesleyan 1879. There is a perfect unity of aim and purpose among them, and united Bible-readings are held week by week in the different mission houses during the winter months.

The greatest work is done on educational lines. The general report of public instruction in the N.W. Provinces and Oudh for the year 1899-1900 says:—"The schools managed by British and American mission societies continue to do most useful work, and some of them are of the best schools in the Provinces."

During the last decade much progress has been made in women's education. There is a splendid high-school for girls of the C.M.S., where children of Christian parents are educated for teachers. The superintendent, Mrs. Barr is a lady of high qualities.

Christian teaching, we were told, can be traced in the many reforms of Hinduism which have been attempted during the last century, either in the way of inspiration or provocation. "A few years ago," says Rev. William Cutting, "a lecture was delivered at Benares on 'The New Hinduism,' which might have been called 'Christianity without Christ.'" Many, again, of the educated Hindus show a sincere respect, yes, admiration, for Christ, but only as a great teacher and example.

Among the missionaries, we had the pleasure of meeting Miss Beatrice Hurditch, who went out about a year ago. She seems to be altogether in her right sphere of work. I believe she has now been removed to Allahabad. Frequent communications from her, and her sister Ruth in Uganda, may be found in Footsteps of Truth.

Calcutta, our next stopping place, boasts of being the City of Palaces. It certainly has some remarkable buildings, but also its due share of Eastern narrow thoroughfares and mud-dwellings in the native part of the town. It is said that one-third of the Indian trade passes through its gates.

This great educational centre of India abounds with Government, missionary and private colleges and schools, among which the Free Church College, founded by the late Dr. Duff in 1832, still occupies a prominent position. We had the pleasure of meeting with several missionaries of the many missions stationed at Calcutta; but our time was too limited to get an insight into their much varied and undoubtedly useful work.

Miss Esther Kerr, a young missionary of the Church of Scotland, accompanied us one day to the Government Leper Asylum which she used regularly to visit. She had only been a year in the country. Her beaming, lovely face was an inspiration to us, as she spoke of her Indian sisters. All in her seemed to be love and sunshine, combined with an intense longing for the salvation of souls.

On her landing in India she had written to her sister Nora, who is working in the Figueras Mission, Spain: "I can hardly believe I am really and truly here. The very sound of India means so much, and one does feel so humbled and so glad to think that India's daughters are to have one's life-long love and care. Somehow as I looked out the other day on the Flat Hooghly Banks, I could have knelt down on deck and thanked God for bringing me here. I felt I loved the very land." When I asked her: "When do you expect to go on your first furlough?" she replied, "Never! I want to spend my life in India; I am so happy here."

Three months later, on April 11, her rosy face ceased to beam upon her dusky sisters. Through an attack of cholera and after an illness of only twelve hours she was summoned into the presence of Him for whose sake she had left all in the homeland that she might follow Him. She was the first to go before, of a family of ten, kept unbroken for forty years.

One less on earth!
Its pain, its sorrow, and its toil to share;
One less the pilgrim's daily cross to bear;
One more the crown of ransomed saints to wear;
At home in heaven.

Martinique and St. Vincent.

THE West Indian islands which have recently been the scene of devastation through volcanic eruptions, are very dissimilar in one sense: Martinique is a stronghold of Roman Catholic superstition, while in St. Vincent Protestantism prevails. In natural characteristics the islands have many attractions; yet even alongside paradise, as it were, one has glimpses of the lake of fire. Travellers who have peeped into the craters, which a few days ago belched forth destroying elements with woful consequences, describe sights which were charming to behold. Those who have gone among the people tell of a condition of life—busy men and women occupied with "the daily round" all regardless of impending doom—by no means affected by fears of the awful calamity which was about to overwhelm so many of them.

It is interesting to know that during recent years something has been done to preach the Gospel in its purity in the ill-fated islands. Mr. and Mrs. Perry (known as Poirier) have had varied experiences in Bible colportage in Martinique and Guadeloupe. On a visit to the latter island, about a year ago, M. Poirier spent a fortnight at Basse-Terre, and for a few days his sales were very good. At length the priest became acquainted with his proceedings; he threatened the people with excommunication for buying Bibles, and ordered them to burn the books they had bought. Some obeyed the order; but others were obstinate, seeming determined to read the Word of God for themselves.

Martinique is wholly given over to Romanism. At St. Pierre, the town which was recently blotted out, Mr. Fataccy has done good work as an evangelist, giving his whole time to the circulation of the Scriptures. In a letter to the Bible Society, Mme. Poirier gives interesting evidence of the solid character of the work. She says:—"We hear that the people in St. Pierre gathered together in each others' homes to read and discuss the Bible." Apparently they were not allowed to do this without hindrance, for the writer adds:—"The priest at François has burnt a number of Scriptures, and has excommunicated some people who would not give up their Bibles." Nevertheless it appears that "in the places where Bibles were first sold the people are growing less and less prejudiced."

As to St. Vincent, the people were very poor. During the past few years the population on the slopes of the Soufrière has been open to Scripture teaching. After the hurricane of 1898 the people were alarmed, and have ever since been ready to consider Divine things. The Scriptures have been circulated among them by colporteurs, who have gone over the district which has just been swept away. It would appear that active work among these extended over a period of about three years. Those that became enlightened had not many days in which to serve Christ. Solemn thought!

At the present time information is being awaited as to the fate of M. and Mme. Poirier. They were settled in Martinique. Did they escape the catastrophe of St. Pierre?

Among the Poor of Rome.

MANY who mourned with Mrs. E. J. Wall, in the loss she sustained by the death of her devoted husband, a few months ago, will rejoice to know that the Medical Mission and work among the poor in Rome continues to be used of God for the ingathering of many benighted Italians and the extension of the kingdom of Christ. It is a cause for the deepest gratitude that every branch of the work is being vigorously carried on, due in a large measure to the faithful and persevering labours of the Bible women.

Writing of the meetings for the very poor, the embryo from which the rest of the work developed, Mrs. Wall says:—"Twice a week about 260 of the poorest of the population gather together in a large hall to sing Gospel hymns, learn verses of Scripture, join in prayer and praise, and to listen to words of warning and encouragement. At the close of the meeting each one receives a loaf. A personal interest is taken in each individual as far as possible. A large proportion of those who frequent these meetings take shelter at night in the public dormitories, from which they are sent out in the morning without food or help. Not a few of these poor, despised, destitute ones God has chosen to become heirs of the kingdom of heaven, and to witness to all, by the firmness and courage of their faith and the brightness of their hope, that the Gospel of Christ has to them become the power of God unto salvation."

Much encouragement has been experienced in the Medical Missions. Every week, in three of the most populous parts of the city, the sick assemble for medical advice and medicine, and to attend a short, bright service; and many of these, after being healed, continue to attend the meetings for the purpose, as they say, of "learning more about the Gospel." At six different centres mothers' meetings are held; and, in spite of much opposition, the work has not been without fruitful results. The efforts made to win the children for Christ have not been in vain. Every Sunday and Thursday they are gathered together and instructed in the Word of God; while over 100 little ones are taken daily by their mothers to the two infant schools. Many of these poor women are the breadwinners of their families. Their lives are indeed a weary monotony of work and hardship, and they are not a little relieved by knowing that their children are lovingly cared for, and that when evening draws near they will hear, from the lips of their dear ones, words of divine comfort and hymns of praise.

The importance of visiting the people in their homes, praying and reading God's Word, is duly recognized, and results in bringing under Christian influence many who otherwise would remain untouched. Friends of Mrs. Wall's work may communicate with her at 35, Piazza in Lucina, Rome.

The May Meetings.

In West London Slums.

THE festering slums which are wedged in among the palatial dwellings and imposing thoroughfares of West London afford a vast field for evangelistic operations, although these are beset with many difficulties. On the one hand there is extreme squalor and grinding poverty amid the miserables—English, French, Italian, or German—of Soho; on the other, there is the fashionable and flaunting wickedness which turns the midnight streets into pandemonium.

SISTERS OF THE PEOPLE.

The story of the labours of the West London Mission in these dark surroundings was told with much force and pathos at the annual meetings, held at St. James' Hall a few days ago. In the afternoon Mrs. BURNETT SMITH, who presided, showed that the work of the "Sisters of the People" begins with the very commencement of things, in the Babies' Home; at the same time it deals with the end of life, smoothing the dying pillows of the aged poor. Mrs. Smith made a stirring appeal to women who live a do-nothing life, to devote themselves to the work of God, and to the cause of the needy and suffering.

Mrs. HUGH PRICE HUGHES, reviewing the sisterhood work, said that there are now twenty-four ladies devoted to this branch of the Mission. The past year has been one of difficulty, but the work has gone steadily forward. In a few pointed words Rev. HUGH PRICE HUGHES paid an earnest tribute to Rev. J. Gregory Mantle and the bands of workers who have laboured with so much devotion.

LONDON'S "CHILD-WOMEN."

The sorrows of poor children were touchingly spoken of by Sister JOYCE, who, describing the condition of her young charges on being gathered in by the Guild of Play, said that it is shocking to hear blasphemies from little lips that know not their meaning, while the impurities from older ones make one shudder; but we must remember that by their circumstances and environment these children are deprived of innocence. In the playroom they are helped to forget much that they should never have learned. Classes are also held for singing, physical drill, and Bible-study. One outcome has been that far fewer children from the district have gone on to the pantomime stage, while the obstinate prejudice between professing Christian and Jewish children has been broken down. Sister Joyce related a moving story of a young girl of fourteen, living with another of the same age, without control, but subsequently rescued from a drunken and dissolute career, and guided into the way of Life. One of the most difficult problems is to keep such "child-women" from sinking into the depths.

WON BY A BUNCH OF FLOWERS.

The lights and shadows of life in the garrets or cellars, streets or mission halls, were further described by Sister ELIZABETH in a telling address. Sister LILY, who followed, spoke of a visit to a ballet dancer, dying of consumption, but glorying in a number of photos of herself in various characters. "Leave the acting a moment and tell me your real self," said Sister Lily. "It is impossible," replied the girl, "I have been a shame all my life, and I shall be one to the end." The case typifies the desperate condition of young women in the district, who multiply evil, for they never tread evil paths alone, but drag others with them. As a happy contrast, Sister Lily told of a girl who was handed a posy of flowers by one of the Sisters on Piccadilly at midnight. The girl angrily flung them to the ground; but, when the Sister had passed on, turned and picked them up. She sauntered on, pondering on her evil behaviour. This poor girl, when but twelve years old, had been taught to drink in a public-house by her own father. Having a gift for singing she became one of the regular attractions of the place, and, going from bad to worse, grew up a companion of evildoers. Ultimately she was sent to prison, and on discharge took to the streets. Some time after the midnight incident referred to, a letter was received from her, dated from an infirmary, and asking for aid. She was placed in a Rescue Home, and passed out to a situation, where she gives every satisfaction.

"THIS TERRIBLE LONDON."

The meeting was described by Mr. Price Hughes as one of the best on record. At night the hall was crowded. Mr. SIDNEY KELLETT, of Ilkley, presided, and Rev. CANON HENSON gave a striking address, in the course of which he said it is a portentous fact that where the Christian Church has been established and at work for at least 1,300 years, there should be an admitted need for such an aggressive missionary work. A strange tendency is sweeping people out of the country districts into urban centres, and notably into this terrible London, where increasing numbers are spiritually homeless and socially friendless. The speaker was prepared to say from his heart, "God bless your work," and to tell his fellow churchmen and fellow citizens it is their duty and their interest to help it forward.

Canon Henson concluded with a fervent appeal for Christian unity. Other addresses in support of the mission were delivered by Revs. HUGH PRICE HUGHES, Dr. J. H. POPE and Dr. ROBERTSON NICOLL.

Lord's Day Observance.

FRIENDS of the Lord's Day Observance Society found much encouragement in the annual meeting, held recently at the St. James' Restaurant, W.

Rev. Dr. PEAKE, secretary, said that the committee have during the past year sought to strengthen the hands of those who are striving loyally and patiently for the due observance of the Lord's Day. The Society's publications and their widely extended circulation form a very important part of its work, enabling it to exert a potent influence in many cases where any other form of intervention would be partial and uncertain. Efforts have been made to stop Sunday traffic, Sunday amusements, and Sunday meetings, and the Society will continue as hitherto to forward the fitting employment of God's great Sabbath gift to man, and to repel every encroachment on its sanctity.

Rev. Preb. H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE, speaking from the chair, referred to the enormous amount of Sunday traffic and Sunday pleasure that goes on at the present day, and urged that we should use our efforts to prevent such desecration. He was in favour of a definite and carefully drawn-up appeal being made throughout the country that would touch the feelings of the people, making them feel that they must act, and thus through them touch the Legislature.

Rev. F. S. WEBSTER, who followed, said there is nothing more vital to the interests of religion than the preservation of the Lord's Day. He doubted the possibility of spiritual religion prospering, growing, and remaining truly spiritual without a Sabbath. It was necessary in the days of old, but it is still more necessary in these days of rush and turmoil. The Society defends the interests of the Lord's Day in all departments of national life.

Rev. Canon PEREIRA, vicar of Croydon, referred to the enormous spread of pleasure-seeking on Sunday, which is descending from the upper classes down to the lowest stratum. He urged the importance of united efforts on the part of the clergy and their Nonconformist brethren in the various districts. This has been tried in the Croydon Rural Deanery with satisfactory results. Other speakers were Sir MARK STEWART, M.P., and Mr. W. R. PLUMMER, M.P.

The Evangelization of Seamen.

THE valuable ministry of the Seamen's Christian Friend Society received cordial recognition at the annual meetings held at Exeter Hall on Thursday last.

The annual report, presented by Rev. G. J. HILL, the esteemed secretary, tells of continued blessing. In London alone upwards of 1,390 English and foreign services and meetings have been held. Many have been brought under the sound of the Gospel, have believed it, and, believing it, have been transformed by it. The work carried on in London comprises very much besides religious services. There are well-attended reading rooms, and a coffee bar, while temperance gatherings and other interesting functions prove helpful as counter-attractions to the public-house and the music-hall.

THE COAST STATIONS.

Rarely have the coast stations afforded so much encouragement. The work at Southwick, on the Sussex coast, has been attended with blessing. Fowey Home maintains its reputation for homeliness and spirituality, and the North Devon branch is a power for good. Good work has been carried on at the temporary Bethel at Lynn, on the East Coast. Encouraging tidings also come from the west coast stations. The Rest at Whitehaven is more largely attended than ever, and the new Bethel and Institute at Workington is answering admirably. The Irish and Isle of Man branches have also been the means of accomplishing much good. A summary of the general statistics reads:—Bethel services and other meetings held, 5,287; conversational meetings, 8,424; estimated attendances at meetings, 144,200; missionary visits to ships, boarding houses and families, 51,180; tracts, periodicals and books distributed, 141,690; Bibles, Testaments, &c., given away or sold, 495.

Illustrating the essentially evangelistic character of the operations, Mr. Hill told a thrilling story of the reclamation of a pilot who, through drink, had gradually descended "from the bridge of a steamer to the London gutters." Passing the headquarters hall, he entered, was deeply impressed, and ultimately was led to decision. He is now a devoted Christian, and occupies a useful position in the employment of one of the great steamship companies.

Speaking from the chair, Mr. GEORGE LIVESEY set forth reasons for supporting the Society. He pointed out that a converted sailor becomes a missionary, and we have only to think of the vast number of British seamen to realize the importance of so influencing them that they may become true representatives of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Mrs. H. W. MAYNARD followed with an enthusiastic address on the London work, in which she showed that in addition to direct efforts for seamen, there are many agencies for the people ashore. Mrs. Maynard told of cases of blessing which have resulted from the devoted efforts.

A PLEA FOR "POOR JACK."

Mr. FRANK T. BULLEN made an eloquent appeal for "Poor Jack," to whom we are indebted not merely for luxuries, but for the necessaries of life. As a class, seamen are sadly neglected, and, considering the extent to which the very existence of the nation is dependent upon them, both the Government and the people at large should do more for their spiritual and social welfare.

Rev. CANON BARKER spoke of one seaport in which there are no fewer than seven public-houses side by side. Canon Barker rejoiced that the workers of this Society believe so firmly in the power of the Gospel, and are enthusiastic for the conversion of the men.

The last speaker was Capt. G. A. WISELY, R.E., who, having inspected the work, gave it hearty commendation. A largely attended meeting was also held in the evening.

In Country Towns.

THE country towns and large villages of the land, many of them spiritually neglected or but partially influenced by the labours of the evangelical churches, afford many openings for Gospel work. Of these the Country Towns Mission is quick to take advantage; it has long maintained vigorous evangelistic operations with fruitful effect, its missionaries toiling assiduously to win souls for the Master, by Gospel meetings, by the distribution of awakening literature, and chiefly by house-to-house visitation and personal dealing.

SOUL-WINNING WORK.

At the annual meeting, held on Friday last at Exeter Hall, Mr. G. H. Mawer, secretary, gave an encouraging report of the year's operations. The missionary who labours in the Hillmorton district of Warwickshire refers to the revival which commenced a few years ago at an ordinary service. "It is cheering," he says, "to see those who were once our scholars coming now to the services in the mission hall. Some have joined churches, some are teachers with us." At Bourne Bridge, an isolated place in Essex, a small mission hall has been erected, mainly through the efforts of the missionary and a young doctor who was resident for some time in this district. Open-air meetings were first held, then services in a farmhouse, and now this hall has been erected. Good news comes, too, from Northampton, where, in the shoe factories, the Gospel is preached to thousands of men, while, during the factory holidays, the villages round about have been visited. Important work has been maintained at Cheltenham, where a hall has been taken and a band of earnest workers organized; they stand outside and endeavour to induce some of the hundreds who promenade the High Street to come in to the service. A man who was invited in by the missionary refused and passed on. A little later he returned and said he would go in. He had been standing some distance off watching the missionary continuing his efforts, even though rebuffed so often. He said: "There must be something in this if you can stand all that." The man's conversion soon followed.

A STONEBREAKER'S CONVERSION.

The devoted workers record many varied experiences as they sow beside all waters. One writes of "an old man—a stonebreaker. I stopped and spoke to him about the hard work, and how hard the stones were to break. He said, 'Yes, harder than they look.' In reply I said, 'Your occupation brings to my mind a portion of God's Word—"Is not my Word as a hammer,"' &c. I said, 'Your heart is the rock. Has the Word ever broken that?' He said, 'I am afraid not.' This led to an earnest talk. I gave him a small book, feeling sure the Holy Spirit would own and bless our conversation. After some months I met an old man in Bideford. He stopped and said, 'I think you are the one who spoke to me on the roadside and gave me a little book.' I looked at him and said, 'Yes.' 'Well,' he said, 'I want to tell you that that was the means of my salvation.' He is over eighty years of age, and still hearty and well, and serving the Lord."

Another says:—"Mrs. R. found peace by coming to the Mission Hall services. She sent her two children to the Sunday school. Her husband was a great hindrance to her by his habits, and the wife was on the point of leaving him, when God in his great love and mercy used me as the instrument to get hold of him and lay the consequences solemnly before him. He gave up the drink, attended the hall, and was saved. It has been cheering to see both husband and wife and the children attend the Sunday services regularly."

A feature of the meeting was the presence of a number of representative missionaries of the Society, who gave striking accounts of their labours, while hearty words of counsel and stimulus were given by Sir George Williams, who presided, and other friends. The meeting was a time of realising anew that the Lord's arm is not shortened that it cannot save.

A Missionary Rally.

PATHETIC and powerful were the stories of Christian heroism and self-sacrifice in the foreign mission field which were told at the "rally" held at Exeter Hall on Saturday last, on the occasion of the annual gathering of the Mission to Lepers and the Missionary Pence Association.

A STIRRING RECORD.

Mr. W. ROGER JONES (secretary M.P.A.) gave an epitome of the year's work, telling of many missionaries helped to proceed to their stations, of substantial aid given to missions in various parts of the world—on the Tibetan frontier, in Matabeleland, Argentina, the New Hebrides, China, and among the Abors. Pandita Ramabai was helped with her invaluable work for Hindu widows and famine orphans, and Dr. Edwards was enabled to dispense relief to the needy in Shan-si, as was Dr. Nottrott to starving lepers at Chandkuri. New efforts embraced the building of an M.P.A. orphanage at Raipur, C.P., India, and a new mission hall at Singapore. The Association is supporting fifteen blind orphans in Bombay, thirty Korean orphans in Seoul, and a great number of tainted and untainted children in leper asylums and homes, as well as other orphans in France and Tangier. Thousands of garments were despatched to India for clothing famine children, and to Orizaba, Mexico, a printing press was sent, which has proved a great blessing.

Sir GEORGE WILLIAMS, who followed, speaking from the chair, made an earnest appeal to his hearers to do the very best they could for the extension of the Kingdom, not only with their means but with themselves.

LEPER MISSIONARIES.

The superintendent of Almora Leper Asylum, Rev. G. M. BULLOCH (L.M.S.), reminded the audience that in India alone there are half a million sufferers from leprosy. To comfort and instruct some of these poor creatures much has been done at Almora. When they first hear the Gospel they seem bewildered at the story of redeeming love, for they have been thrust away from native temples by their priests, with the assurance that their disease is a curse from their gods. Happily, many have been led on to become servants of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the simple faith of some of these humble believers is most touching. Five have gone forth from Almora as missionaries to their fellow-sufferers in other asylums.

RAVAGES OF THE HEATHEN.

The terrible Boxer atrocities in Shan-si, where, it will be remembered, 159 European missionaries and their loved ones laid down their lives, were recalled with much force by Dr. E. H. EDWARDS, who told the moving story of the martyrdom of Miss Edith A. Coombs, the devoted lady who, after saving the lives of two little Chinese girls at the wrecking of the mission hospital at Tai-yuen-fu, was thrust upon a burning pile, gathered by the rioters with the object of setting the buildings aflame.

After Mr. Jones had read a letter from Mr. John Jackson (who was prevented by ill health from attending the meeting), pleading the cause of the lepers and the M.P.A., Pastor R. WRIGHT HAY drew stimulating lessons from the earnest labours of ex-slave converts in West Africa.

A meeting was also held in the evening, at which Mr. R. C. MORGAN presided, and when, in addition to fervent addresses from missionaries, lantern pictures were given, depicting scenes of work among the lepers.

Kilburn Hall was largely attended on the occasion of the Whit-Monday Conference. At the afternoon meeting, Mr. C. Russell Hurditch asked prayer for the wonderful work that is going on in Uganda. Pastor Turner followed with a searching address, based upon 1 Cor. ii. 14; iii. 9; and Jude, 10th and 19th verses. Rev. Darlow Sarjeant also spoke upon Col. i. 8. At the evening meeting, Rev. George Hanson, D.D., gave an eloquent address, taking as his theme St. Matthew xiv. 15-21. Mr. J. E. Taylor gave a helpful word, showing the foolishness of going anywhere or doing anything for God without being divinely prepared and sent.

Scripture Readers in the Navy.

PRESIDING at the annual meeting of the Royal Naval Scripture Readers' Society, Admiral the Hon. Sir EDMUND FREMANTLE, G.C.B., pointed out that three-quarters of our ships have no chaplain. He testified to the thrift, morality, and higher standard of living which obtain, as a result of the efforts of the Readers; but among the 100,000 men and boys there remains much more to be accomplished.

Personal testimony to the value of the Readers' efforts was given by Rev. S. KENAK, who said that the Society's agents were able to do what the chaplains could not. Captain H. J. MAY, R.N., C.B., spoke of the work as he had witnessed it in the hospital at Malta and at Esquimault. It was much to be regretted that lack of financial support prevented the Society from settling Readers at centres where they are much needed. An interesting account of his experience as a Reader at Malta, Hong Kong and Walmer was given by Mr. COAN.

The report for the year is one of distinct encouragement. Constant testimony has been given to the readiness with which the men will often lay aside their games to listen to the message of eternal life. The Readers, by increasing their knowledge of the Word of God, and by constant practice in dealing with the men of the naval service, win their confidence and gain their attention in a most encouraging degree.

One of the Readers writes: "I had to follow a yeoman of signals to the after bridge the other night, and do part of the first watch with him that he might further inquire about Christ and his salvation; and, thank God, before I left him he promised me that he would then and there seek the Lord. I had given him three words to consider: 'I ought,' 'I can,' 'I will.' He very readily accepted the first two, and after an hour's reasoning he accepted the third."

A Missionary Breakfast.

THE twenty-fourth annual Whit-Monday Missionary Breakfast, convened by Pastor Frank H. White, was duly held at the Talbot Tabernacle, Notting Hill. The gathering was more largely attended than in any previous year, and the testimonies and appeals of the speakers were accompanied by gracious tokens of the Holy Spirit's presence and working.

Addresses were given by Pastor White, Pasteur Lecoat of Brittany, Mr. R. L. Hodge, of Buenos Ayres, Mr. Ernest J. Cooper, of Shan-si, North China, Rev. John Wilkinson, of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, Pastor R. Wright Hay, representing India, and Rev. J. Gregory Mantle. An interesting letter was read to the meeting from Rev. S. J. Bowskill, of the Baptist Missionary Society (who was an announced speaker, but was unable to be present), describing some of the results of missionary work on the Lower Congo.

In addition to the missionary speakers, there were sixteen workers from different parts of the world outside the United Kingdom present, representing Switzerland, France, West China, North Africa, and Tibet; and a very deep sense of the greatness of the Lord's work in, as also of his redemptive work for the world pervaded the meeting. An encouraging feature of the gathering was the number of young people who were present, several of them candidates under preparation for missionary service in "the regions beyond."

Students' Summer Conference.—Arrangements have been made for holding the tenth annual Students' Conference at Matlock Bank, July 22-31. Among the speakers who are expected to take part are Mr. J. R. Mott, Rev. Dr. George Wilson (Edinburgh), Rev. J. H. Miller (Elie), Rev. Principal Grey (Wycliffe Hall, Oxford), and Rev. Charles Dowse (Dublin). Several former leaders of the movement are expected to be present, including Rev. G. T. Manley (Allahabad), Rev. D. M. Thornton (Cairo), and Miss Rouse (Bombay). Inquiries should be addressed to the General Secretary, British College Christian Union, 22, Warwick Lane, E.C.

R.T.S. Missionary Breakfast.

THAT the beneficent labours of the Religious Tract Society, in publishing abroad the Gospel of the Grace of God, are crowned with increasing fruitfulness was clearly shown by the stimulating and instructive addresses given at the annual missionary breakfast held at the Cannon Street Hotel, E.C., on Tuesday last.

Speaking from the chair, Mr. W. H. BROWN, of Woodford, referred to the peculiar value of the printed Word in penetrating to places and people, where the spoken message is unheard. He reminded his hearers that in lands dominated by Romanism, the work of disseminating Gospel truth is of the highest value, while in heathen lands both the educational and evangelistic departments minister to a far-reaching extent to the needs of the natives.

CHINA AND THE GOSPEL.

Mr. BIRDWOOD VAN SOMEREN TAYLOR (C.M.S.) testified to the valuable assistance rendered by the R.T.S. to missions in Fuh-kien. The China of to-day is by no means the China of even five years ago. On every hand the people are flocking into the churches, and prominent men and officials are seeking the co-operation of missionaries in establishing educational centres.

The rich results of the broadcast circulation of Gospel tracts in North India were spoken of by Rev. G. J. DANN (B.M.S.), who told first of a poor fakir being led to seek Christ through reading a leaflet, and then of the interest of a learned native professor being aroused. The speaker gave a vivid description of book and tract selling from seven a.m. until sundown at the great bathing festival at Allahabad.

A SERIOUS POSITION.

After a few words on the L.M.S. work in Matabeleland from Rev. DAVID CARNEGIE, came the usual statement from Rev. R. LOVETT, who showed that the demands for Christian literature from the mission field show large and continuous increase, yet the financial condition of the Society will not admit of compliance with these urgent requests.

That the Indian depôts of the R.T.S. are the means, to an increasing extent, of moulding native thought was shown by Rev. GEORGE MANLEY (C.M.S.) The work of the Society is absolutely essential to the progress of Christianity in the East.

New Guinea savages are strangers to all literature, but Mr. J. H. HOLMES (L.M.S.), of Orokolo, who followed, looked forward hopefully to the day when the R.T.S. publications will be welcomed.

THE MISSIONARY AS BILL-POSTER.

Journeying in Shan-si, Mr. ALBERT LUTTLEY (C.I.M.), who was the next speaker, has frequently posted large pictures and bills in city gateways and other public places, and has found them attractive, and excellent "texts" for evangelistic addresses. The speaker told of many conversions as the result of distributing Gospels and awakening books. "It is impossible to over-estimate the services of the R.T.S."

The last speaker, Mr. GEORGE BRAITHWAITE (R.T.S., Tokyo) said that Christian literature is a great power in Japan, and he traced many conversions directly to tract distribution. Japan, however, has forty-five millions of inhabitants, and many, although they have turned from idols, have no knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ. The field, therefore, is a needy one, and a ready means of spreading the Gospel therein is by means of Gospel books and tracts.

Moody Bible Institute.—Professor W. W. White, of Montclair, N.J., is engaged to lecture on "The Writings of Luke the Physician," during the month of June, at the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago. The course is complete in itself, and is intended for pastors and others who can spend only a limited time at such an institution as the Moody Institute. Dr. White will also deliver several addresses on "How to Teach the Bible." Mr. Robert E. Speer, secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, New York, is also expected at the Moody Institute on June 24 and 26. Dr. James M. Gray, of Boston, will be the leading lecturer during July and August.

Missions to Seamen.

THE Bishop of London presided, on Wednesday of last week, at the annual meeting of the Missions to Seamen Society, held at the Church House, Westminster, when there was a large attendance. The annual report showed that, allowing for two large sums for new buildings which came into the previous year's accounts, the receipts for 1901 were greater than in any other year, amounting to £43,957. But this sum was not enough to cover the whole expenditure, and £1,000 had to be drawn from working reserve fund. The Society has now 74 mission stations in all parts of the world, and maintains a staff of over 100 paid workers, in addition to a very large number of honorary helpers. There are 69 steam or sailing mission vessels and other boats to carry the chaplains and readers to ships, and 105 special churches and institutes provided by the Society for the sole use of seafaring men when ashore. Last year nearly 20,000 services, Bible readings, or meetings for prayer were held specially for seafaring men ashore; 3,571 merchant seamen or fishermen took total abstinence pledges; and 7,166 Bibles and prayer books were bought. The chairman paid a high tribute to the work of the Society as he had seen it in the port of London. The Bishop of Victoria (Hong Kong) expressed his gratitude for what the Society is doing in Chinese waters, and said it would be absolutely impossible to carry on work among the sailors in Hong Kong harbour but for the help received from that Society. Admiral Macleod, director of naval ordnance, Rev. J. B. Barton, and Mr. T. Cheney Garfit also spoke.

Aggressive Protestantism.

THE annual meetings in connection with Mr. John Kensit's Protestant work, which were held on May 16 at Exeter Hall, attracted large and enthusiastic audiences.

In the afternoon Mr. KENSIT, who presided, said they were determined to put "first things first," and to stand for the principle of an open Bible without the intervention of any priest.

The movement has been subject to abuse, but many earnest people pray for it, and the protests which have been made against Romanizing measures in the Church of England have aroused public opinion.

Mr. J. A. KENSIT, after protesting against the continued preferment of sacerdotalists, showed that the work of the Wycliffe Preachers has made good progress. During the past year they have visited 249 towns and villages, holding 888 meetings, attended by 283,000 people, among whom thousands of pamphlets and leaflets were distributed. Literature to the value of £239 was sold at the meetings. The preachers have sometimes had rough times, but "Onward" has been their motto. Here and there attempts had been made to stifle free speech by the refusal of the authorities to let the preachers have the public halls. There are over 1,000 voluntary workers in connection with the Crusade.

In the evening Mr. JAMES INSKIP said that the Church Times attacks the Coronation Oath of the Sovereign because the word Protestant is used in it. The desire of the Ritualists, as well as of the Romanists, is to abolish the pledge to Protestantism. The Church Times further says that no one in the Church of England now uses the word Protestant—"it belongs to a violent and discredited party." That is the standard now raised by the leading exponent of the Ritualistic policy. Does England intend to return to that retrograde position?

Rev. HENRY DENING, who followed, pleaded that every means should be utilized to open the doors of the convents. Thousands of young women take vows when their judgment is not matured, and it is a sad thing in this land of liberty that these thousands of young women in convents should die and be buried, and no notice be given of how they died, or when, or where.

In a forcible address, Mr. JOHN KENSIT said that he loved the Church of England, but Popery in the Church must be ended. He proposed to form a London forward movement, and wanted 1,000 young men and women who would express their willingness to co-operate in the work, taking their stand on "the Magna Charta of the Church of England as defined in the Sixth Article, viz., Holy Scripture." Mr. Kensit declared that he has never interrupted Divine service; what he has done—and, by God's grace, will do again—was to raise his voice in protest against idolatry in a Protestant church.

Other speakers were Mr. J. A. KENSIT, Rev. J. C. WILCOX, and Mr. MARTIN, leader of the Wycliffe Preachers (Band I.), who gave some interesting details of his experiences.

American Notes.

THE report of the secretary of the American Tract Society, read at the recent annual meeting, showed that thirty-seven new publications had been added to the lists of the society during the past year, twenty being in English, and the others in German, Spanish, Italian, and Dutch. Four hundred and eighty-seven thousand immigrants landed in the United States during 1900, and the Tract Society, with 153 languages or dialects at its command, was well equipped to reach them. Colporteurs have been placed in Chicago, Cleveland, and Detroit to work exclusively among the Poles and Bohemians. Christian literature to the number of 2,639,520 pages, printed in the Spanish language, had been sent to Cuba and the Philippines during and since the Spanish war.

A rather remarkable reply has been made by Mr. J. B. McAfee, of Topeka, Kansas, to the statement by a former Governor, that prohibition was ruining the State which was last year the scene of Mrs. Nation's victorious warfare. After showing that the progress of Kansas has been at much more per cent. than that of Kentucky or Missouri, Mr. McAfee says, in the Kansas City Journal:—

"Prohibition is ruining the liquor traffic of Kansas, but greatly increasing the wealth of our State. On December 10, 1901, there was on deposit in the banks of Kansas 87,181,175·14dols., five times as much as when prohibition in Kansas went into effect, 60dols per capita for every man, woman, and child in the State. This last sum does not include the money in the purses or the homes of the people. Many millions of mortgage indebtedness have been paid off since we had prohibition."

Secretaries of home mission societies (Presbyterian, Baptist, Congregational, Methodist north and south, Reformed, Cumberland Presbyterian, Disciples, and United Brethren) united in an appeal to the Christian public to resist the encroachments of the emissaries of the Salt Lake hierarchy. They say:—"Whatever modifications public sentiment or Government action may have forced upon the Mormon attitude and Mormon practices, it has not essentially changed its character since the days of Joseph Smith and Brigham Young. Its priestly oligarchy threatens free government, its grasping priestcraft invades property rights, its varied vices are destructive of good morals, while its pagan doctrines are antagonistic to the Gospel of Christ."

ROGER MARTIN.

Death of Mr. John Jewell Penstone.

THIS much-loved and widely-known leader in Christian service has been called to the eternal rest, at the advanced age of eighty-five years. Since his conversion while quite a young man, he has continued to serve the Lord diligently. During the revival of the early "forties" he was intimately associated with the late Messrs. Robert and John Howard in the work of God at Tottenham. Since the opening of Brook Street Chapel he has been closely associated with the brethren meeting there and at Bruce Grove Hall. We hope to give in an early issue a portrait and further particulars of Mr. Penstone's career.

On "Burning and Shining."

WE all like anything that shines; if it is only a piece of glass, lying in the road and reflecting the sunlight, we are almost sure to stop and look at it—possibly in the hope that it is something more valuable than it really is! Perhaps at school you tease someone a little distance off with a piece of looking-glass, by directing the sun's rays into his eyes! And I am sure you like to see diamonds, or other precious stones, which dazzle you with their brilliant light.

We like to shine ourselves, too—to be able to say or do things that cause people to admire us, or to "shine" in our home or examinations. Jesus tells us we are to shine—"Let your light so shine before men" (Matt. v. 16), not that people may admire us, but that they may "see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." If we shine, it should not be to win admiration for ourselves, but to bring glory to God. Therefore the first lesson we learn about shining is not conceit, but

HUMILITY.

I have read of a little girl who shone in a fine new dress at a Sunday-school anniversary; and when the choir sang an anthem in which the words "Hallelujah! Hallelujah!" occurred, she was so full of her smart appearance that she thought they sang, "Hardly knew you! Hardly knew you!" which, you will admit, was very foolish indeed.

We are told that John the Baptist was "a burning and a shining light," and he learned to shine in the right way when, in his humility, he spoke of Jesus as One "whose shoe's latchet he was not worthy to stoop down and unloose" (Mark i. 7).

We also like the light which causes things to shine—that is, if we are good children, because you know it is only bad people that "love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil" (John iii. 19). You do not admire a candle or a gas-jet, unless it is lit; and it is either the material of which the candle is composed, or the gas that is in the pipe, that enables them to give off any light at all. So the second lesson we learn is,

GRATITUDE.

Turn to 1 Cor. iv. 7, which says, "Who maketh thee to differ from another, and what hast thou that thou didst not receive? Now, if thou didst receive it, why dost thou glory as if thou hadst not received it?" This applies to your health, your good looks, your cleverness at lessons, and everything else of which you feel proud, all of which, like every good and perfect gift, come down from above, from the Father of Lights (Jas. i. 17).

But we, like John, must be burning as well as shining lights. The candle has to suffer, and give of its own substance, to shed forth its light; and John knew this when he said of his Master, "He must increase, but I must decrease" (John iii. 30). This teaches us a lesson of FAITHFULNESS.

We all of us like to shine, but how few are willing to burn, to sacrifice ourselves, and our own will, for Jesus' sake! We read of faithful martyrs who have given their bodies to be burned, rather than deny their Lord. We may never be called upon to do that, but there are lots of ways in which we can burn for Jesus every day. We can burn with indignation at temptation; burn with contempt for those who tempt us to do wrong; burn with hatred of that which is evil. All light costs something. Are you willing, even at some sacrifice, to be true to the dear Lord who gave Himself for you?

There is one other way of burning I should like to mention, and this tells us of OBEDIENCE.

You will remember that when Jesus drew near and conversed with the two disciples on the way to Emmaus (Luke xxiv. 32), they said to each other, after He had gone, "Did not our heart burn within us, while He talked with us by the way?" That means that instead of having cold, indifferent hearts, they were warmed by the Saviour's words. Will you let Him warm your heart, and prevent it getting cold? If so, you must listen to his voice and obey his Word. Then, with a warm heart, you will delight to love and serve Him, thinking not of yourself, but of Him who died for you and rose again, that you may obey and glorify your Father which is in heaven.

SERVICE

is one more lesson, which is beautifully expressed in the little hymn which I hope you all know by heart—

Jesus bids us shine with a pure, clear light,
Like a little candle burning in the night;
In this world of darkness we must shine—
You in your small corner, and I in mine.

Jesus bids us shine, first of all, for Him;
Well He sees and knows it, if our light is dim;
He looks down from heaven, to see us shine—
You in your small corner, and I in mine.

Jesus bids us shine, then; for all around
Many kinds of darkness in this world abound—
Sin and want and sorrow; so we must shine—
You in your small corner, and I in mine.

You can easily remember these lessons (taking them in a different order) by the letters of the word, SHINE—thus—Service, Humility, Indebted (which should make us grateful), Noble (which includes being faithful) and Eager (to obey).

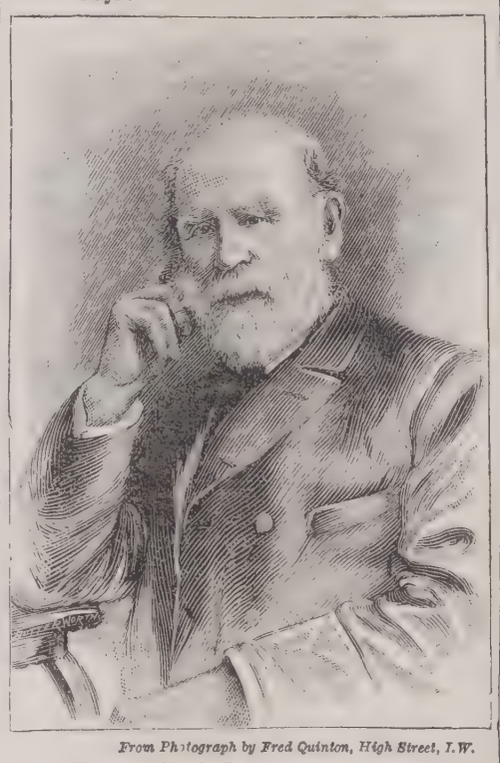
Mr. Albert Midlane.

OUR old friend Mr. Albert Midlane, the author of so many hymns and poems, has written the following Children's Hymn for Coronation Days:—



From Photograph by Fred Quinton, High Street, T.W.

Tune—"Gentle Jesus, meek and mild."

God of love in regions fair,
Hear, O hear, the children's prayer;
Help us join—while others sing—
"Bless, O bless, our gracious King.'

Never have before we known
King or Queen ascend the throne—
Ne'er before have joined the lay
On a Coronation Day.

Never have we known till now,
These, our happy words to flow,
Like the birds on tuneful wing,
Singing, "Bless our gracious King."

Help him rule us all in love,
With thy favour from above,
That from every heart the cry—
"Bless our King" may rise on high.

Thanks we give this day to see,
British children here to be;
Thanks for such a song to sing
As the anthem—"Bless our King."

Give us reverence for the throne,
May we be obedient known;
And, should coming years we see,
May this day remembered be.

These bright words, by the author of "There's a Friend for Little Children," are sure to engage many voices during the coming weeks. (Folded, with portrait, 2s. per 100. Morgan & Scott.)

Seaside Holidays for Afflicted Little Ones.—Always endeavouring to deal with the needs of the suffering poor in various parts of the Metropolis, the Watercress and Flower Girls' Christian Mission have erected at Clacton-on-Sea a holiday home for the use of these children. All through the fine weather small parties of the more unfortunate blind and crippled waifs are sent down for a fortnight's change. Good food, sea breezes, and country rambles have their desired effect upon the health of the children. Ten shillings will cover the cost of one child for fourteen days, and the superintendent, Mr. John A. Groom (8, Sekforde Street, Clerkenwell, E.C.), is desirous that none of the crowd of anxious applicants shall be disappointed.

The Purpose of His Coming (1 John iii. 5-12).

TWICE over in this paragraph we have the object of the manifestation of the Son of God defined (vv. 5 and 8).

First, that He might bear away sins by one definite past act, as the scapegoat did in type. This proves how alien sin is to the heart of God, and how impossible, therefore, it must be for God to tolerate sin in those whom He has called out of the world to be his own. There was no sin in Christ. His whole existence is antagonistic to it. It cost Him blood to bear away the sins of men; whosoever, therefore, abideth in Him sinneth not; that is, He is kept from a life of habitual sinful practice. If he falls into sin he realises that it is his abnormal and not his normal condition. As health is the normal state of human life, to which disease is recognised as an exception, so holiness is the acknowledged life of the believer who abides in Christ and Christ in him, though through want of perfect soul-health he may temporarily be overcome of evil. It is impossible for anyone who has become the abode of Christ to delight in sin, to wallow in it, to commit it, and commit it without anguish, confession, and the desire after restoration, all of which prove that the inner nature has been changed—the old evil heart replaced by the new, clean one.

Secondly, the Son of God was manifested to destroy the works of the devil. The fallen spirit kept his first estate only a short time after his creation. At the beginning of human history he was sinning. Yes, and before, his being was in revolt against the will of God. Probably it is his sin which has dragged the world into the terrible condition in which we find it to-day. The creation was made subject to him, when he was an unfallen archangel, and it has continued subject to him since his fall, in consequence of which it groaneth and travaileth (Rom. viii. 18-22). Such a terrible catastrophe as has recently occurred in the West Indies seems to be one of the relics of his fall and the consequences it has entailed. Let us rejoice that Jesus Christ will so loose the power and kingdom of evil, that it will no longer hold men or creation in its bondage.

Notice the perpetual comparison between the believer and his Lord—as He is (iii. 2); as He is pure (iii. 3); as He is righteous (iii. 7).

A striking contrast runs through this paragraph, which might be arranged in two parallel lines, as under:

Children of God,	Children of the devil.
Abideth in Him,	Hath not seen, neither knoweth.
Sinneth not,	Sinneth.
Doeth righteousness,	Doeth not righteousness.
Begotten of God,	Of the devil.
Doeth no sin,	Doeth sin.
Love one another,	Loveth not his brother.
Cannot sin,	Slew his brother.

Choose which of these columns shall be yours, and if you truly desire to be in the column of light, open your heart to the Spirit of God, that He may sow in you the germ of the Christ-life. This is regeneration, and as this grows stronger and stronger it will make it impossible for you to persist in a course of sin. You will hunger and thirst after righteousness. You will become increasingly transformed to the image of Jesus Christ. It will become habitual for you to abide in Him, and to realize his indwelling.

If we refuse the life of God, we do in point of fact open our souls to receive the seed of the devil; we become his children. Sin becomes habitual; we are hardly conscious when we yield to it. Hatred replaces love; darkness light; and the course of the soul becomes more and more headlong into the abyss, whither Cain, Saul, and Judas fell. F. B. M.

Cuba.—In a recent communication, Rev. A. J. Diaz reports that the work of the Independent Havana City Baptist Mission is making gratifying progress, in spite of much opposition. The main efforts put forth are among Cubans. Dr. Diaz preaches in Spanish to large congregations on Sundays, and has baptized many converts. He has a large Sunday school for children in the afternoon, and holds meetings in the out-stations and in the parks, where crowds hear for the first time the Gospel message. Mrs. Diaz, the mother of the pastor, devotes her energies to ministering to the needs of women in their homes and holding meetings in the women's gaol. Dr. Diaz visits the sick in their homes in the morning, while in the afternoon he is to be found in the church building giving free medical advice. This has proved a source of great benefit to the poor, and the two-fold ministry of Dr. Diaz is being richly owned and blessed of God to the native Cubans. His address is 36, Zulueta Street, Havana, Cuba.

The Council at Jerusalem (Acts xv. 2-33).
Golden Text—Gal. v. 1.

THIS lesson describes a great triumph. Liberal-mindedness made conquest of the narrow prejudice of the Jewish believers, and mutual forbearance and brotherliness of feeling constituted Jew and Gentile as "one in Christ," who had made both "free."

Introduction.

Paul and Barnabas returning to Antioch in Syria to report "work fulfilled" on their missionary tour, found a disturbing element had crept into the church there. Certain men, probably of rank and wealth, but lacking credentials as teachers from the mother church, had come up from Judea and taught the Gentile converts that they could only be received into the Christian Church by way of the door-of-entrance into the Jewish community—circumcision. The majority of the converts at Antioch were Gentiles, and had believed that the Gospel of Jesus dispensed with the requirements of the Mosaic Law for the Jew, and that faith in Christ gave both Jew and Gentile entrance into the joy of God's salvation; they were, therefore, greatly distressed in mind at the new teaching.

Paul met the false teachers with uncompromising front (note Gal. ii. 6), and it was finally decided that Paul, Barnabas, and other chosen men should go up as a deputation from the Church at Antioch and lay the vexed question for decision before the Council at Jerusalem, A.D. 49.

A special church meeting was called, and after much disputing, Peter gave his testimony of the Lord's dealings with him for teaching, concerning his plan of grace towards the Gentiles (chapter x.), in a noble and candid speech, marking the truth of "God giving them the Holy Ghost, even as He did us, and put no difference between us and them." Next, the delegates from Antioch "declared what miracles and wonders God had wrought among the Gentiles by them" (v. 12). And finally, "James, the Lord's brother," pastor of the church at Jerusalem, summed up the argument by (1) accepting the position of Peter; (2) supporting it by prophetic quotation; (3) pronouncing his own judgment, and offering advice.

The decision of the council was sent to Antioch in letters of definite instructions, borne by two of the "chief men from among the brethren" at Jerusalem, who were authorized to confirm by word of mouth the decision of the council and the doctrines preached by Barnabas and Paul; also to accompany the latter back to Antioch. Great consolation and rest of mind was the result to all Gentile converts then and up to the present time. The Holy Ghost was honoured (v. 28) and his power manifested as much in guidance (John xvi. 13) and wisdom (Eph. i. 17) as in Acts x.

The Magna Charta of England is looked upon as the foundation of our national liberties, and this letter, with the conference of which it was the outcome, is as truly the great charter of our religious freedom.

It has four fundamental principles:—

I. That all men are alike—
  (a) In their need of salvation.
  (b) In the provision made for their salvation—the atoning grace of Jesus.
  (c) In the condition by which alone they receive salvation—by faith in Christ.

II. That we are free from the yoke of the law. The law and covenant of Moses must give place to the law and covenant of Jesus Christ.

III. That the Christian religion is spiritual; not mere form and ritual.

IV. That Christianity is a religion of tolerance towards the opinions and practices of its followers, but we should deny ourselves rather than needlessly offend a fellow-believer. All one in Christ Jesus united to each other by the love "that thinketh no evil" (1 Cor. xiii. 5). Note 1 Cor. x. 31, 32, and Rom. xiv. 1-10; Gal. v. 13, 14.

"Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law" (Gal. iii. 13). "Free from the law of sin and death" (Rom. viii. 2). "No condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus" (Rom. viii. 1). "The Lord's freeman," "Christ's servant," "The bondslave of Jesus Christ" (Rom. i. 1).

When Pilgrim came to the foot of the Cross his burden rolled off.

Trusting in Jesus, the youngest can sing:—

"Now are we free, there's no condemnation, Jesus provides a perfect salvation."

Trusting Jesus.

How can I want if He is near?
He loveth me, how can I fear?
And so, whatever be his will,
I go on trusting—trusting still.

THE "EDINBURGH CASTLE," E.

THE six-days' mission, conducted by Rev. J. Q. A. HENRY at Dr. Barnardo's well-known and capacious mission hall, the Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse, E., proved very fruitful. The attendances and enthusiasm each evening were alike encouraging. The climax was reached at the closing gathering on Friday last, which was an occasion long to be remembered. In the address on "The Future of the Anglo-Saxon Race," Dr. Henry showed that, in spite of imperfections and failures, many of the English-speaking peoples are at any rate realizing a Divine call to the evangelization of the world. After enumerating some of the distinguishing characteristics of the race — its reverence for the Lord's Day, philanthropic, and missionary enterprises, and its love of justice — Dr. Henry asked the pertinent question, "What, then, is the mission of the Anglo-Saxon?" The debt which English-speaking peoples owe to themselves is to federate their forces, to spread the doctrines of civil and religious liberty among the nations of the earth, and strike the stronghold of the greatest of our national iniquities, which is the drink. The speaker closed with an impressive appeal, which resulted in a large number of pledges being added to the 1,300 already secured.

Mr. WALTER NOTMAN, superintendent of the work at the Edinburgh Castle, writes:—"Although commenced on Whit Sunday, and carried on through the holiday week, hundreds have come together night by night to listen to the eloquent missioner.

"The different aspects of the drink question have been presented in a highly helpful manner. There was nothing of the merely sentimental utterance, but a masterly and comprehensive dealing with the subject.

"The results of the mission have been the winning of many to the side of total abstinence, and a deepening of conviction among those already pledged. Two meetings for young people were held, one at the Edinburgh Castle, with an attendance of nearly 3,000, and the other among the girls of Dr. Barnardo's Village Home at Ilford.

"It is to be hoped that temperance workers will do their best to secure the services of this eloquent exponent of temperance. It will mean a revival of no ordinary kind. One thing Dr. Henry does not fail to do, and that is, present the Gospel of God's grace. We feel much indebted, also, to the Jubilee Singers in their sweet ministry of song, which added greatly to the interest of the mission."

GLASGOW.

The services which Dr. Henry conducted on Sabbath last at Glasgow were crowded, and the people listened with rapt attention. In all the gatherings, at Rev. Dr. Wells' church at Pollokshields, at Finnieston U.F. Church (Rev. D. M. McIntyre's), and at Dowanhill (Rev W. Dickie's), the pastors and church officials evinced cordial sympathy with the temperance cause. The day was the U.F. Church Assembly Temperance Sabbath, and in all about ninety temperance sermons were preached in the city. We hope to give particulars next week.

FUTURE MEETINGS.

May 31-June 6, Belfast; 8, Sheffield; 10, Maryport; 29, Sheffield; July 31, Alford, Lincs.; Aug. 1-30, "Edinburgh Castle," Limehouse, E.; Aug. 31, Lincoln; Sept. 4, Louth.

Drink and Lunacy.—From the date of their appointment forty-four years ago, the Edinburgh Commissioners in Lunacy have had year by year to report a steady increase in the number of lunatics in Scotland. Their latest statistics show that in the twelve months ended December 31 last, a further addition of 399 had been made to the dread total of 15,899 under control in public asylums in that country. In about half a century there has been an increase at the rate of about 180 per cent., the number of insane in 1858 being only 5,824. As the population has increased only 49 per cent. in the same period, the outlook is a startling one.

Tracts and their Distribution.

THE familiar but fascinating story of the rise and progress of the Stirling Tract Enterprise was related with much vividness by Mr. John Macfarlane (manager) at the Noon Meeting at Aldersgate Street Y.M.C.A. on Monday last.

The inception of the undertaking, and the early labours of Mr. Drummond in his earnest efforts to "deluge" the district with tracts on special subjects was heard with keen relish. Deeply impressed by the desecration of the Lord's Day, he prepared and distributed a tract on the sanctity on the Sabbath, which had an extraordinary effect in awakening the people. Later, when Stirling was invaded by a party of strolling players, Mr. Drummond issued a tract on the theatre, and again the public conscience was deeply stirred. Horse-racing was similarly dealt with, and Stirling has been free from race meetings for fifty years. Not less effective than its predecessors was a tract on the subject of "Family Religion." The growth of the enterprise, the genius for organization evinced by Mr. Drummond, the personal labours of that gentleman, and the blessing resulting from the wide dissemination of the tracts both at home and abroad, were pithily described. Mr. Macfarlane also gave some wise counsel to distributors:—(1) Never omit a blind man; he will probably get somebody to read it to him, and thus two will be reached instead of one. (2) Do not hesitate to give the same tract twice to one person; it may be neglected again and again, and yet prove fruitful in the end. (3) "Saturate" a district, leaving a tract again and again at every house.

A refreshing word to workers followed from Mr. JOHN BLACKHAM, the esteemed founder of the P.S.A. movement, who told of encouragement derived by himself from reading a tract which, in the course of cleaning a house, had been rescued from a chimney, where it had been stuffed away for fourteen years.

At a subsequent meeting in the same hall, at 1.30 p.m., Mr. Macfarlane pleaded the cause of the Monthly Tract Society, which is worked in association with the Stirling enterprise. The report which was presented shows that the various departments have been busily occupied during the year. Lads at public schools and young men at Universities have had special attention.

Personalia.

For family reasons Dr. CHARLES F. HARFORD requests friends to note the change in his surname from Harford-Battersby.

Miss RUTH HURDITCH, daughter of the esteemed director of the Evangelistic Mission, has been married to Rev. A. B. Fisher, of Toro, in the Uganda Mission of the C.M.S.

Rev. ANDREW MURRAY, as a Cape correspondent says, is in serious ill-health. "He is fast breaking down, suffering from sleeplessness, &c. It is feared that he will have to go to Switzerland for the mountain air for some months, and some of his friends begin to wonder gravely whether that will cure him."

Miss A. MACPHERSON, of the Home of Industry, Bethnal Green Road, who has been ill throughout the winter, has been failing considerably during the last few days. There has, indeed, been cause for great anxiety; but at the beginning of the week Dr. Kidd found more favourable symptoms. Miss Macpherson has expressed the desire that her friends will remember her in prayer.

Rev. Dr. PIERSON purposes to sail by the Lucania on July 5, and hopes to be in London from about July 12. He will supply the Congregational chapel of Rev. Albert Swift, West Dulwich, for August, and begin services at Christ's Church, Westminster Bridge Road, in September. He hopes to be at Keswick, including the Lord's Day, immediately before the Convention. His address up to September 1 will be "Care of the Office of THE CHRISTIAN." In a letter to us Dr. Pierson says:—"It is impossible for me to respond to the numerous invitations which are coming from all quarters, to various kinds of services in Great Britain, until I am in Great Britain and can look about me and see what are the demands which regular labours will entail. I shall be glad if you will ask friends kindly to forbear with my lack of response to their invitations, as I am overwhelmed with correspondence and editorial duties.

Evangelical Effort in Finland.

WHILE on a visit to this country, Mrs. Parker (formerly of Birmingham, but for many years resident at Helsingfors) is endeavouring to raise funds for the erection of a larger meeting-place for Evangelical Christians in the city, which is the capital of Finland. The Finland and St. Petersburg Mission was founded fourteen years ago, and the leaders in the movement are able to report that "its efforts have been blessed among all classes. The seed sown from the pulpit, in the home, and through the Press, is bearing fruit for eternity." Progress is at present very much hampered by the inadequate nature of the accommodation available at Helsingfors. The rooms used, besides being incommodious and unhealthy, are only procurable at exorbitant rents. A site has been secured in a suitable district of the city, and building operations will be commenced when a sum of £4,000 has been raised. The city itself, on account of its commercial and educational importance, is the best base of operations for the whole country.

Of the £4,000 more than one-half has now been raised, Christians of all denominations contributing liberally after having made inquiry and satisfied themselves of the value of the movement. Cordial recommendation is made by Rev. F. B. Meyer, Rev. F. S. Webster, Rev. Dr. Randles, and Miss Charlotte Mason. Mrs. Parker may be addressed at the House of Rest, 10, Finchley Road, St. John's Wood, N.W., and the treasurer of the fund is Mr. Joseph Good, 176, High Street, Hull.

South Africa General Mission.

DEAR SIR,—Before leaving the homeland for Natal, I must write and thank you for copies of your valuable paper, received regularly while in South Africa. We are sure we can count upon a continuance of your kindness; it brings us into touch with God's work everywhere, and we are able to take a prayerful interest in his work.

We are sailing in the Dunottar Castle on May 31, having two farewell meetings, one on Thursday, 29th, at Mildmay Conference, at 4.15, and the other in the Public Hall, Beckenham, on the 30th, at 7.45.

We need the prayers of God's children, and would ask special prayer for Swaziland. Peace will soon be declared, and our missionaries will be returning to their stations. By what we hear, we fear to find them nearly all looted and destroyed. Funds will be needed for rebuilding and refurnishing the stations.

We have had full particulars of the awful accident which happened to our dear missionary, Mr. Lindfield, while on his way to Durban from Amatongaland. An alligator seized him, bit off both his hands, and tore open his side. How he escaped from it, we do not know. He was found on the bank dying, about eighteen hours afterwards. One of our missionaries was with him; his testimony was grand, and with his dying breath he sent a message to one of our workers to take his place in this most hopeful country.—Most sincerely,

W. SPENCER WALTON.

Evangelistic.

Whitsuntide in the Open-Air.

A PARTY of preachers of the Open-Air Mission, including Mr. Frank Cockrem and Colonel Major, visited the fair at Millom, Cumberland, on Tuesday, May 20. Three very good meetings were held during the day, when the preaching was attentively listened to by large and receptive crowds. The addresses given included one by Rev. Dr. Joscelyne, vicar of the parish, who is a member of the Open-Air Mission. A great wave of spiritual blessing has passed over Millom during the past year, and this was conspicuously seen in the ready help that was on all sides given to the workers. This is the second Whitsuntide that an "Open-Air" party has visited Millom.

Mr. W. R. Lane in Glasgow.

A ten-days' mission, conducted in Finnieston Church, Glasgow, by Mr. W. R. Lane, has just been concluded. A similar series of meetings, held there by the same evangelist some years ago, secured for him a hearty welcome and a band of earnest workers, many of whom were led to Christ at that time. It was a great joy to these, and to many others, to meet Mr. Lane again, and to listen to his wise, forceful, and Scriptural teaching. The ten days of the mission were days of blessing. Conviction of sin, repentance, and faith were the evident fruits of the Spirit in the case of many; and it is believed that others, who were then impressed, will soon be gathered in. To God be the praise! M.

Lantern Services in South Ireland.

The lantern services which Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Sims are holding in the south of Ireland continue to arouse much interest. At Kilfinane the schoolhouse was crowded. Rev. Francis G. S. Read (rector) writes:—"The whole service was solemn and impressive to a degree, and many heads were bowed when Mrs. Sims was singing 'Too late! too late! ye cannot enter now,' while on the screen was depicted 'the five foolish virgins' vainly knocking for admittance. We had a large gathering of the poorer and rougher element of the population, and yet they were wondrously quiet, orderly, and attentive throughout. The great majority of those present heard 'the glad tidings' for the first time in their lives. I might speak of another meeting held in an adjoining parish, which I had also the privilege of attending, conducted by the same evangelists and on the same lines. The building (a coach-house) proved far too small for the hundreds that unexpectedly attended. At both gatherings the Holy Spirit's presence was felt working and applying the Word with saving power to souls."

The mission which Mr. and Mrs. Sims commenced in the Palace Theatre, Cork, upon May 11, continues to give rise to much thankfulness. Interest has deepened, the nightly attendances ranging between 600 and 900. Souls are being brought to decision and Christians built up in the faith.

Simultaneous Mission in Melbourne.

The Simultaneous Mission, for which preparations had been in progress for some months among the evangelical churches of Melbourne and suburbs, commenced on Lord's Day, April 13. About fifty places of meeting had been secured, every centre of population within the bounds of greater Melbourne having been provided for, either in public halls or in large marquees specially erected for the occasion.

In addition to the evangelists from America, Rev. Dr. Torrey and Mr. W. Edgar Geil, the speakers included ministers and mission workers from all parts of the Commonwealth.

The meetings commenced at 8.30 p.m., just after the ordinary church services, and great crowds were attracted. At Hawthorn, for instance, where Dr. Torrey was announced to speak, assisted by Mr. Alexander (the American choir leader who accompanied him), the Town Hall was filled to its utmost capacity a few minutes after it was opened. About 1,200 seats had been provided, all of which were occupied, and the limited standing space which was left was also taken up. An overflow meeting was also crowded to excess.

Mr. Geil conducted a meeting for young people in the Federal Hall, on the same afternoon, and the building, which holds 1,500, was crowded. At the evening service the hall was again crowded, and hundreds could not gain admission. Mr. Geil announced that the largest tent available in the commonwealth, capable of seating thousands, had been obtained, and the meetings would be held therein instead of the hall. He preached a vigorous sermon from 1 Kings ii. 3, 4. From other parts of the city, too, encouraging tidings were received. At Brighton the meeting was held in the Drill Hall, which accommodates 1,000. It was filled to overflowing. A monster tent, capable of holding 2,000 people, has been erected at Brunswick. There was a good attendance at the inaugural service.

The Shire Hall, Coburg, was filled to overflowing at the opening service, when Mr. J. C. Langley conducted the service. The Town Hall, Collingwood, with its capacity for 1,500, was packed, and hundreds were unable to gain admission. During the afternoon a united Sunday schools service was held in the hall, when 1,000 scholars attended. Dr. Porter, who addressed the children, secured their undivided attention.

The Boy Preacher.

The Great Assembly Hall, Mile End, E., was densely crowded in every part on Monday last at Mr. Jack Cooke's farewell meeting, on the conclusion of his London campaign.

The occasion was a notable one. It marked the end of a mission that in many places has been rich with revival blessing; it was an enthusiastic rally of converts and friends, and afforded a happy opportunity for the pastors of churches visited by the young evangelist to bear witness to the solid character of the work wrought through him.

Speaking from the chair, Mr. F. N. Charrington referred to the extraordinary interest aroused by the meetings at the Great Assembly Hall. The crowds have been enormous, the services of the police having to be requisitioned to keep back the urgent crowds. At the mission in January last there were no fewer than 1,325 inquirers, and during the fifteen-days' meetings just concluded there were 538 more. All classes and conditions have been reached. A number of Roman Catholics sought the one Mediator between God and men, and gave in their crucifixes and rosaries. Slaves of strong drink and would-be suicides were also among those who have professed conversion.

Rev. G. Freeman added a hearty testimony regarding the labours of Mr. Cooke and Mr. Coutts at Westbourne Grove Chapel. "It is no mere movement of a day. We have people whose lives and homes have been changed, and who desire to magnify God. The power is not of man, but is in the name of Jesus." Mr. Walter Notman, speaking of the Edinburgh Castle mission, said that huge crowds had flocked to the great hall on Sunday nights at Limehouse, and several hundred names of inquirers were taken, chiefly of young people. Pastor T. Richardson, of Rotherhithe, said that the meeting for men addressed by Mr. Cooke in Rotherhithe Town Hall was most impressive. Pastor Cuff, of Shoreditch Tabernacle, rejoiced in the message of the young preacher and its results. Great numbers of people outside the regular operations have been attracted and influenced by a boy sent of God. The spiritual life of the church was quickened, and a large proportion of the converts have become members.

Rev. J. R. Coutts next spoke in terms of earnest encouragement to the converts present, and Mr. Cooke added a few words expressive of hearty appreciation of the co-operation of many friends. He assured his friends that they need have no fear of his becoming "spoiled," and, in conclusion, besought prayer that in the future his message might still be blessed in winning souls for the Master.

Gipsy Smith at Pontypool.

The eastern valleys of Monmouthshire have times and again been the scene of great gatherings and deep spiritual awakening. Pontypool, on account of its geographical position, has often been the centre from which mighty influences have permeated the community and brought it under the saving power of God.

The open market at Pontypool, known as the "Blue Boar Field," was the usual meeting place. Here George Whitefield, Howell Harris, Christmas Evans, John Hambleton, Dr. Thomas, Richard Weaver, and other eminent servants of God, have proclaimed the Gospel of Christ in the power of the Holy Ghost unto salvation. Here, in more recent years, the Pontymoile Mission held annual camp meetings with very blessed results, until the Urban District Council covered the open space with a commodious market hall, which has often been looked at with longing eyes for political and other monster gatherings, but none dared venture to believe that it was possible to fit it up for such a purpose.

The Free Church Council of the Eastern Valleys, inaugurated five years ago, has brought the Free Churches into a close union with one another for the purpose of reaching the careless and godless non-church-goers, and of deepening the spiritual life of believers. Thus by quiet days, exchange of pulpits, united prayers, and the Simultaneous Mission, the churches were prepared to make one gigantic effort to extend Christ's kingdom in the valleys. Arrangements were made with the National Council for Gipsy Smith to conduct a mission at Pontypool.

A NOTEWORTHY ENDEAVOUR.

The large Market Hall was engaged, and the eagerness with which the representatives of the churches volunteered their services in any capacity, however menial, was a good augury for the success of the mission. Stall holders and produce vendors were in possession of the market on Saturday, the 10th inst., till 10.30 p.m., after which the workers, about sixty in number, cleared away the tables and stalls, erected a platform with raised gallery for the choir, and seated the great building with chairs and other available seats. These, again, had to be removed the following Friday night, and the hall re-arranged for the market, and refixed once more on Saturday, after 10.30 p.m., ready for the Sunday services. The labour was enormous, but its hearty and cheerful performance recalled the days of Nehemiah and his helpers (Neh. ii.-iv.).

At the first meeting, on Sunday afternoon, 11th inst., the building was filled long before the advertised time, while at the evening service hundreds failed to get in, and were turned from the doors. Night after night the same eagerness to hear was manifested, and the hall, accommodating 3,000, was densely packed, the district for many miles round was stirred, and several hundreds passed through the inquiry rooms.

MANY TOUCHING SCENES

were witnessed inside and outside the building. One I will relate. A man who had walked from Cwmtillery, over the mountain, a distance of eight miles, begged the stewards and police at the door to allow him to squeeze in, but was told the hall was so crowded that no one could be admitted. He pleaded again and again, and, at last, said pathetically, "I have no money to give, but if you will allow me to go in and hear the preacher I will give you the boots off my feet, and will walk home barefooted." But he could not be admitted, and he crossed the mountain home again sadly disappointed. The next night he had to work in the coal pit, but was determined to hear. He lost a turn's work on Tuesday night to go to the meeting, and was early at the doors, gained admission, heard the Word, went into the inquiry room, was converted, and went home over the mountain, this time rejoicing in a new-found joy, and singing,

"Count your many blessings, name them one by one,
And it will surprise you what the Lord hath done."

T. M. W.

A large number of women engaged in theatres accepted the invitation of Mr. William Forbes to tea on Thursday in Bloomsbury Chapel. After tea solos and hymns were sung, and short addresses were given. Mr. Spencer Johnson, formerly an actor, took part.

Requests for Prayer.

For a great ingathering of souls during the Gospel Tent mission, Reach, Cambs.

For evangelistic services in the Congregational Chapel, Rudgwick, Sussex, to be conducted each Sunday during June, 1902, by Mr. Harold H. Cook.

For Gospel tent services to be commenced at Whitechurch, near Bristol, on June 1, by Mr. Jas. A. Vicary, that blessing to many souls may be the result.

An elderly lady, suffering constant pain from extreme nervous exhaustion, asks prayer that she may have grace to glorify God in the fiery trial. In days of health she was a devoted and diligent seeker of souls. The writer asks prayer that the suffering may be alleviated, and that if it be the will of God the cause may be removed.

DONATIONS

Oxford Notes.

"EIGHT'S WEEK" has brought a great influx of visitors into Oxford, many of whom are members of the highest families in the land. As in preceding years, Christian literature has been distributed at the races by Rev. C. J. Casher, M.A., B.D., of St. John's College.

The work of the Church Lads' Brigade as a moral and religious movement in Oxford was never more manifest than on Whit Monday, when nearly 1,000 officers and lads, all of whom must be members of a religious society in connection with their church, assembled in the Cathedral for the special sermon by the Bishop of Oxford. Most of the officers in charge of the companies are the younger clergy of the parishes.

The special Sunday evening evangelistic services, held in the open air during the summer months, which are carried on by the young people of St. Aldate's Church, commence on the first Sunday in June.

A Tent Wanted.—During past years the calls for work that have reached Carrubbers Close Mission, Edinburgh, from the smaller towns and villages round the city have been steadily increasing, and by cycle corps and other evangelistic agencies much good has been effected. The time has fully come, however, when the use of a tent would prove of great value. The workers give their services gratuitously, but an appeal is made for a tent, furnished with seats. A sum of £80 will be needed to supply and furnish a tent capable of holding 400 persons. The treasurer is Mr. Thos. Ormiston, 19, St. Giles Street, Edinburgh.

A Fifty Years' Record.—Among the agencies which are seeking to uplift and influence for good the poor of South London, the Lansdowne Place Ragged School and Mission occupies a worthy place, with its record of fifty years' aggressive and fruitful ministry. Some fifty Christian workers give their services freely, and are rewarded by seeing their labours appreciated by hundreds of the poor who flock to the Mission halls and schools. With Sunday the efforts of the Ragged School teacher do not end. Demands are made upon the workers' evenings throughout the week. The young people's service on Monday, the sewing class on Tuesday, children's Gospel service on Wednesday, Band of Hope and girls' club on Thursday, occupy the attention of the helpers from week to week, as they seek to lead young and old to a saving knowledge of the love of God. The financial secretary is Mr. H. J. Fisher, Cromer Lodge, 25, Church Road, Brixton, S.W.

A Memorial Holiday Home.—A few days ago, at Sandon, near Chelmsford, there was opened a beautiful holiday home, to be used in connection with the work carried on in Spitalfields, under the honorary superintendence of Mr. Charles Montague. The Home is erected as a memorial to the late Mrs. John G. Johnson, of Highgate, who for many years was an earnest supporter of the King Edward Mission and Institute, Spitalfields. The Home, which stands in four or five acres of orchard and garden grounds, and is entirely free of debt, was formally declared to be open by Miss Johnson, and others who took part in the ceremony included Dr. Kennedy, Rev. Bevil Allen, Mr. J. G. Johnson, and Mr. John Kirk. For many years the Mission has sent children and old people into the country for rest and change, with the result that not half the number of hospital letters have been needed that was formerly required. The new Home will afford greater facilities for the extension of the work among the poor.

NATIONAL BLIND RELIEF SOCIETY.

In thanking the readers of The Christian for their kind response in the past, I again bring before them two more cases that require immediate aid.

A BLIND MUSICIAN.—L. A., aged 50 years, has become blind through overstudy. She worked 10 hours per day to gain a gold medal for music in order to support her parents, who died at the age of 92-82. She is extremely delicate, and, owing to a cancer at the back of her eyes, suffers constant pain, and quite unable to earn her own living.

G. S., in whom I am interested, has been blind from lead poisoning since 1897. He was sent to the Exeter School for 2½ years, and then went to the Normal College. He had to leave the latter as the Doctors said the poisoning was beginning to affect his brain.—R. D. C.

The Rev. J. PULLEIN-THOMPSON, Hon. Sec., the Vicarage, 27, Tite Street, Chelsea, S.W., will gladly acknowledge donations, or they may be sent to the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

To Help the Poor.

The bitter cry of the abjectly Poor, the Homeless and Friendless, the Outcast, the Criminal, the little Children of the Slums, is in our ears and at our doors night and day. The numerous Homes of the Darkest England Scheme — the Salvation Army's Social Work—receive and assist over 6,000 such people daily, and by God's blessing hundreds are permanently reclaimed. We are now in pressing financial need, and are dependent upon the gifts of God's people. Can you send us any help, please? Inspection of the homes invited. Clothes are needed. Please address cheques — crossed Bank of England, Law Courts Branch, and made payable to William Booth—to Mrs. BRAMWELL BOOTH, 101, Queen Victoria Street, London, E.C.

About Books.

THE MIRACLES OF MISSIONS.

AMONG the most striking statements of the fruition of missionary labour are Dr. Pierson's very readable volumes of brief sketches, The Miracles of Missions, of which the Fourth Series is before us. (Paper, 1s. 6d.; bound, 4s. Funk & Wagnalls). Made up of papers on missionary exertions and achievements, with here and there a homeland story or incident thrown in, these books are profoundly interesting, and should do much to stimulate inquiry regarding effort on various fields. When dealing with missionary principles and polity, Dr. Pierson writes as a master; in these entertaining and instructive volumes, he performs the equally important and eminently practical ministry of a missionary biographer and historian. Uniform in style with its predecessors, Vol. iv. gives us lessons learned in various schools. Here are the stories of Good King Khama, William Duncan of Metlakahtla, John G. Paton, Frank Crossley, Joseph Rabinowitz and George Müller. The style is graphic; there is nothing tame in the book. We have been specially struck by the chapters on "The Miracles of Prayer," "Day Dawn in Korea" and "A Wonder-Working Church"—the story of the Moravian Brethren. Such sketches as these are read where systematic works are passed by; and we bespeak for them the earnest attention of all who are prepared to see the finger of God in the history of missionary enterprise.

CORONATION PUBLICATIONS.

An attractively got up Gospel booklet, which deserves to be widely circulated at the Coronation season, is A Royal Guest, by E. G. Taylor. (6d. per doz. Gowans Bros., 8 and 9, Clerkenwell Green, E.C.). The lesson of the King, who brings rich and rare gifts to the poorest of his subjects, is taught in simple and charming fashion.

Much that is interesting and curious is given us in The Crowning of our Kings: From Ethelred II. to Edward VII. (2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.) Beautifully illustrated and tastefully bound, this book will answer many questions that are being asked at the present time.

Mr. Henry Frowde has issued several Bibles specially prepared for presentation in schools and at local celebrations in commemoration of the forthcoming Coronation. Each volume contains a portrait of the King and Queen, presentation book-plate, and appropriate design on the covers. Purchasers of a thousand copies of any of these books can have a special device or inscription stamped on the volume free of charge. (Oxford House, Amen Corner, E.C.)

Among the numerous hymns written for use at services in connection with the Coronation, three deserve special mention: "O Happy Morn!" (Canon H. D. Rawnsley), "God Bless the Sovereign of his Choice" (Rev. F. W. Orde Ward), and "A Loyal Heart of Mine" (Rev. Charles Bullock). Both in sentiment and expression the words are highly suitable, and the music is of exceptional merit. The three pieces are published together, the frontispiece being an excellent portrait of the King. (2d. "Home Words" Office.)

Noble Women of Our Time, by Frederick Douglas How (5s. Isbister & Co.), is a series of sketches which first appeared in the Sunday Magazine. Among the twelve women whose story is here outlined are: Mrs. Daniell, of Aldershot; Mrs. Wightman, of Shrewsbury; Miss Agnes Jones, and Miss Elizabeth Gilbert. There are several portraits.

Ministerial Life and Work. Being a series of Lectures on Pastoral Theology delivered at all the Scottish Universities, under the authority of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland. By James Stewart Wilson, D.D. (3s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.) This is the second course of its kind delivered by Dr. Wilson. The minister is regarded as preacher and pastor, likewise in his relation to church and people. The treatment is sober, sound, and thoroughly practical.

That James Chalmers should have fallen a martyr to the savagery he had laboured so long to overcome, and by which he had been so often threatened, was a source of profound grief to thousands the world over who had known and appreciated the true nobility of the man, and the greatness of his labours. The story of his life, told by Mr. Cuthbert Lennox—James Chalmers, of New Guinea: Missionary, Pioneer, Martyr—will be welcomed by a multitude of readers. It is the record of one of the most heroic and attractive missionaries of our times, whose name must be written high in the roll of fame, and whose triumphs and martyrdom sound an urgent call to others to take up the work he laid down. (2s. 6d. Melrose.)

Church of England.

Canon M'Cormick has obtained a faculty for the erection of an outdoor pulpit in connection with St. James's, Piccadilly. The pulpit is being given by one of the churchwardens, and will be placed in the middle of the church on the north side, facing Piccadilly. The preaching from it will take place principally on Sunday evenings.

In view of the proposals to amalgamate the Baptist Theological Colleges at Rawdon, near Leeds, and Nottingham, with the one at Manchester, and so forming a united "Northern Baptist College," the buildings at Rawdon have been offered to the Bishop of Ripon for his college. Steps are being taken to secure the buildings, which the Bishop says are admirably adapted for the purpose.

The printed declaration of The Holdfast Union sets forth an intention "to maintain as far as possible the following features in our churches and ritual: No cross or other image on the Communion Table. No eastward (sacrificing) position in consecrating. Periodical evening Communions. A full-length surplice, and black preaching gown for the minister. Scarf, if used, to be distinct from the stole—condemned at the Reformation. No Romanizing collection of hymns. An unsurpliced choir, and no singing or monotoning of prescribed prayers." The hon. sec. is Rev. E. H. F. Cosens, vicar of Holy Trinity, Tewkesbury.

At the recent ruri-decanal conference held at Southport, Rev. W. Hodgson, vicar of St. John's, Waterloo, read a paper on the evils of betting and gambling, in the course of which he referred to the rapid spread of gambling amongst the working classes. "The vice may lead to the circulation of money, but it is from the pockets of the fools to those of the knaves, with the contingent reversion to the publican. As to the remedy for the evil, we must set an example in the matter and abolish raffles and lotteries at bazaars, while the vice would be diminished if the entire press would refuse to publish tips and odds."

Congregational.

On Whit-Monday the church at Lyndhurst Road, Hampstead (Rev. Dr. Horton's), through its temperance committee, conducted a refreshment tent on Hampstead Heath. The customers were waited upon by ladies of the church, and their attendance and services were so appreciated that one or two were offered "tips."

Rev. Dr. Parker preached for the first time after his recent illness at the City Temple, E.C., on Lord's Day morning last, before a crowded congregation, which included many visitors from America and the Colonies. The popular preacher, though still looking somewhat worn and feeble, was in excellent voice, and he alluded to his gladness to be back again in his pulpit.

The new church at Avonmouth has been opened by Rev. Pedr Williams. This church is the second completed of the five of the Bristol Congregational Church Extension Scheme. The dedicatory prayer outside the church was offered by the vicar of the parish, Rev. J. A. Harvey, who also gave an admirable address, expressing the truest spirit of Christian brotherhood, at the evening meeting.

Baptist.

Rev. J. H. Martin, late of Tring, has been welcomed to the pastorate of Orsett Road Church, Grays.

The new Sunday School and Lecture Hall of the Leytonstone Road Church, at Harrow Green, are to be opened on May 29, by Mrs. J. A. Spurgeon. A series of meetings, extending until June 6, has been arranged. Among the speakers will be Revs. E. H. Ellis, J. Fleming Shearer, and J. Gregory Mantle.

In order to bring Baptist members of Cambridge University into closer touch, the "Robert Hall Society" has been formed, mainly by the efforts of Rev. Charles Joseph. At the inaugural meeting, attended by some six resident M.A.'s and some fifteen undergraduates, Mr. S. R. Glover (son of Rev. Dr. Glover and a classical lecturer at St. John's College) briefly explained the nature and objects of the Society.

Methodist.

The new statistics of Wesleyan Methodism presented to the Synods and to be forwarded to Conference are as follows:—Members, 463,274, an increase of 8,172; number on trial, 33,486; new members received, 48,713; junior members, 5,463; candidates for the ministry, 149.

Rev. John McNeill is to conduct an open-air service in Hyde Park, in connection with the West London Mission, on the afternoons of the second, third, fourth and fifth Sundays in June. The service will be from half-past three to half-past four. On the evenings of the Sundays named, Mr. McNeill is to preach in Exeter Hall.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes has left London for the Bernese Oberland, where he will rest. He is greatly improved in health, and will resume his ministerial work in West London early in the autumn. It is expected that Rev. Mark Guy Pearse will also return to the West London Mission to take up the work which he relinquished a year ago.

Mr. E. Tennyson Smith calls attention of Wesleyans to the fact that the last opportunity of endeavouring to influence the Conference this year to pass a definite resolution that liquor sellers shall not be appointed to office is by submitting a resolution on the subject at the forthcoming June quarterly meeting.

The customary Whit-Monday Wesleyan service was held in Gwennap Pit, near Redruth. The day was not exactly ideal, so far as atmospheric conditions were concerned; the wind was boisterous and cold. There was no rain, however, during the service. Thousands of people attended, and the historic service seemed to have lost none of its fascination. It was an inspiring congregation which Rev. E. J. Brailsford, the invited preacher, faced.

The following bit of experience is reported from the Manchester Mission:—"When I went home last night from the Free Trade Hall my little girl says: 'Daddy, have you been crying?' 'Yes, lassie,' said I, taking her upon my knee. 'Why?' asked she. 'Oh, I am a bad man, but Jesus has forgiven me, and now I love Him, and you, too.' Putting her arms round my neck, my little one cried gleefully, 'My daddy loves Jesus, and I shall have a new dress now.'" The man paused as a great lump came to his throat, and all felt moved as he continued, in a subdued tone, "This morning I bought her one."

Presbyterian.

The foundation stones of the new church at Muswell Hill were laid on May 23. The building is to seat 730 people.

The anniversary services in connection with the church at Blackhill were conducted by Rev. Dr. MacEwan, of Clapham, who preached to large and deeply interested congregations. Dr. MacEwan's words made a profound impression, especially his evening sermon, preached to an overflowing congregation, from "What is truth?"

The new St. Mark's Church, erected at the corner of Bath Road, Bournemouth, was opened recently by Dr. Robertson Nicoll. At the close of the service the London Presbytery South, presided over by Dr. Moinet, formally received the congregation and the minister (Rev. R. Hughes) into the denomination. The congregation for some time past worshipped in Shaftesbury Hall, and the Synod decided to receive them on the completion of their church.

In Penn, a growing suburb of Wolverhampton, the population is estimated at about 2,000, and the provision for religious worship is small in the extreme. It is proposed to erect a Gospel Mission Hall at a total cost of about £600. The land has already been secured upon very favourable terms. The secretary is Mr. H. J. Jordan, 18, St. Jude's Road West, Wolverhampton.

A fourteen days' Christian Evidence Mission has just been concluded by Mr. W. T. Lee, at Dowlais, in the Christian Mission Hall (a branch of the Pontymoyle Mission). Large congregations attended nightly, and the young people manifested the liveliest interest throughout. Mr. Lee's lecture on "The Delusions of Spiritualism" was particularly convincing, and resulted in some of the leading local Spiritualists making a public confession of their determination to renounce Spiritualism.

Mr. Northcote Willy's Bible Carriage Work, now known as the Highway Bible Mission, commenced over twenty years ago. During these years hundreds of places have been visited, and vast numbers reached with the written and preached Word. Bible carriages, Bible carts, market stalls and other means have been used in spreading the printed Gospel, and God's good tidings have been told out in chapel, and hall and workroom, as well as in the open air. Mr. Willy's address is Woodhead, Burley-in-Wharfedale, Yorks.

The fifth year's work of the Evangelical Lay Preachers' Association (Islington district) gives cause for much thankfulness. Both as regards the number of meetings addressed, and in the known results, the past twelve months have been the best the Association has yet experienced. 224 meetings for adults were addressed, and twenty-six children's services. Owing to the rapidly growing nature of the work, additional members are required. Help is gladly rendered to mission halls, children's and open-air meetings, and village churches. Particulars may be obtained from the hon. sec., 99, Balfour Road, Highbury, N.

Fallen Asleep.

On May 14 Rev. HENRY WOODS TINDALL, M.A., rector of St. Edmund's, Manchester. Mr. Tindall was the founder of the Clergy Seaside Rest, Margate, and a faithful and able preacher, conscientiously attached to the Evangelical school.—Mr. T. W. J. SARGANT, of Highgate, N., circuit steward of the Highgate Wesleyan circuit. Mr. Sargant was killed in a carriage accident at Hindhead.—Rev. Dr. HENRY ANGUS, of Arbroath, and for a quarter of a century minister of Trinity Presbyterian Church, Sunderland, aged sixty-six.

Outings for Working Girls.—It is pointed out by the workers of the Y.W.C.A. that the present Coronation season will be one of unusual trial to hundreds of tired working girls in London; and the help of friends is invited for the purpose of extending during the spring and summer months the Saturday afternoon outings, by which much good has been done in the past. Communications should be addressed to Miss Butler, 13, Onslow Square, S.W.

Notes & Comments

"A Revival Call to the Churches." We commend to the earnest attention of all our readers a pamphlet under this title by Wm. Woods Smyth. (Partridge. 6d. net.) It shows the present low condition of Christian life in Christendom, and contrasts the agnostic, sceptical, disbelieving, indifferent, negligent, scornful, Godless, Christless attitude of the world with the quickened Christian life, and the awakened conscience of the ungodly, in times when the power of the Holy Ghost is visibly and mightily put forth. The contrast is shown also between the strenuous human effort of much Gospel ministry at its best, and the quiet influence of the Spirit, as when God breathes upon the earth with his south wind, or vehemently shakes the sinner's heart as with earthquake and tempest; when by his meekness or his mightiness He brings sinners in multitudes to bow down at the feet of God. How the Spirit is grieved, and how He may be received, is pressed upon the believer's mind in this Revival Call to the Churches.

The Promised Spirit. By far the most interesting and stirring of much that had both of these qualities, at the meetings of welcome to Dr. Harry Guinness on Monday, was his own account of a breath of the Spirit, a real breath of revival, at Geelong. It was a vivid illustration of the Word of the Lord, "Not by army, nor by power, but by my Spirit."

The Late Mr. McVicker. A volume containing selected letters with brief memoir and portrait of J. G. McVicker has just been published at the office of Echoes of Service (3s.). He was one of God's choice spirits, and the book will do good to all who read it.

Gospel Transformation. There is a suggestive sentence in the R.V. (marg.) of Isaiah xxxv. 7, which preachers and teachers might use with great effect at the present time. "The mirage shall become a pool." The mirage of the desert stands as an emblem of illusive appearances, the pool as an emblem of realities; and the transformation of the one into the other is accomplished by God, who comes to save (v. 4). This ancient word is by no means out of date. To-day life is, for many, a seductive and heart-breaking mirage. Shams and illusions abound. Ghostly images of the realities demanded by the soul occupy the first place in human vision. And men discover, sooner or later, that they have been deceived. To these comes the word of the Gospel: "The mirage shall become a pool." When God takes possession of life, the phantoms vanish, and realities replace deceptions. This is a message that weary hearts sorely need to-day, even though many of them would not admit it at the first.

The Coronation of Humanity. In the midst of the glitter of forthcoming events, and of the present feverish anticipation, there is a tendency to forget, in the excited spirit of the new imperialism, that the nation's only reliable strength is the individual power that comes direct from God. It is well to remember, and to bear constantly in mind, the higher Kingship, with its consequent royal priesthood, which the seer of Patmos proclaimed, standing with his face towards the West, and sending grace and peace from "the Prince of the kings of the earth." That inalienable heritage of the believer has a Divine element that transcends all earthly dignity. "Unto Him that loved us and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father, to Him be glory and dominion for ever and ever." (Rev. i. 5, 6).

Non-Religious Education. The Education Bill continues to be a chief topic for debate throughout the kingdom, and both supporters and opponents of the Bill are straining every nerve in the interests of their side. The opposition to it, however, is so great and deep that there must be some serious modifications made in its provisions before it will satisfy a great part of the country. The Bill in its present form puts a weapon into the hands of Sacerdotalists which would be used with deadly effect in villages and country places. We are hopeful, however, that a via media may be reached, satisfactory to both sides. The time has certainly come when Christian educationalists must face the whole question of non-religious education. For the majority of children there is no religious education in the home, whilst the Sunday-school offers them only an hour's instruction per week. The result is, we are growing pagans. Our fear is that in the battle with priestcraft too much may be demanded by the friends of freedom. Because some would pervert religious teaching, it is unwise to swing to the other extreme, and cry, "Banish all religious teaching from the schools." At every cost the Bible must be retained, and surely there may be taught the fundamental truths of Christianity as well—those truths which are common to all who bear the Christian name. We cannot see any reason for Mr. Chamberlain's dictum that a choice must be made between an absolutely secular education and distinctly denominational teaching.

A Policy of Conciliation. The Archbishop of Canterbury, who is famed for his strong, blunt, commonsense, urged at the Committee of Church Defence, last week, that Churchmen should do their best to conciliate Nonconformists in the present controversy. This is excellent advice, but conciliation supposes that parties at variance at least understand each other's position, and we are much afraid that on the part of very many there is not even the desire to understand what Free Churchmanship really means. As to conciliation between the Sacerdotal party and Nonconformists, it is useless to consider it. Neither party is prepared to give up its principles, and most certainly there could be no real union between men who contradict each other on every vital point. The Archbishop may rest assured that, however much Nonconformists deplore the division that rests between themselves and the Anglican Church, they prefer that division rather than admit the amazing assumptions of Sacerdotalists. With regard to Evangelical Churchmen the case is different, and real union between them and Free Churchmen may well find some means of practical expression, other than that of chance meetings on neutral platforms.

John Ruskin and Joseph Parker. In occupying the pulpit again after his recent illness, Rev. Dr. Parker, in the happy circumstances, referred to an objectionable modern tendency to be "afraid of rapture in devotion, of holy sympathy with good things;" and he urged that while he did not object to the ordinary means of grace, he held that no means of grace should be ordinary:—

> There should be no great occasions for the preacher. He is no preacher who waits for his audience. He waits for the Book and the Spirit, and finds in one Man story enough for any eloquence of which he may be master. There is no occasion in the sanctuary that is not great, and every sermon the preacher delivers should be, in its meaning and resolution, the greatest sermon he ever attempted.

A similar exhortation was more than once enforced by Ruskin, who urged the solemn importance of a reverent recognition of the eternal possibilities of the pulpit half-hour. The message of the preacher, he pointed out, is one of life or death, whether we hear or refuse, "which either breathes upon the dry bones that they may live, or, if ineffectual, remains recorded in condemnation, perhaps against the utterer and the hearer alike, but assuredly against one of them." These two utterances have as strong a bearing upon the pew as upon the pulpit.

High Church Unfairness. Thousands of people in all parts of the country will sympathize with the action of the Evangelical clergy of Hastings, and other places, in their respectful protest against the Bishop of Chichester's stinging remarks concerning the practice of Evening Communion. To place Evening Communion and the use of incense in the same category is unwarranted, in view of the fact that Convocation has sanctioned the former, while the latter has been declared by the archbishops to be illegal. This attempt at turning the tables upon the Evangelicals, and seeking to convict them of illegal practices seems to be coming into fashion among the extreme High Churchmen. The Church Times has on several recent occasions used inexcusable language concerning those who practise Evening Communion, and several leading speakers of that party are taking the same line. If, instead of casting unjust aspersions upon those who are loyal to their vows, the extreme men would frankly admit themselves to be at war with their own Church, or else take pains to show how Evangelicals have been false to their vows, it would be more to the point.

Knowing in Part. It is curious to notice how men who seem to have bound themselves irrevocably to the teachings of tradition catch at any stray passage of Scripture, as at a passing straw, in order to support their theories. The "Guild of All Souls"—a society in the English Church which offers "the Holy Sacrifice" on behalf of the departed—had for its preacher this year a gentleman who based his plea upon the expression of St. Paul, "We know in part." Inter alia he said :—

We know in part that prayer and, most of all, the offering of the Holy Eucharist, avail for the faithful departed, even if we know not how they avail.

But we make bold to say that the preacher knows nothing of the kind, and he ought not to profess that he does. There is a great difference between knowing in part and professing to know what cannot be known. But it is exactly upon such slender foundations, mingled with inference and corrupt tradition, that the whole system of priestism, with its outworks, has been builded.

A Noble Bi-Centenary. The 26th of June will be the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of Philip Doddridge, the preacher whose "Rise and Progress of Religion in the Soul" has long been a spiritual classic. If that excellent book no longer occupies the very prominent place it did for so prolonged a period, many of Doddridge's hymns still retain their high position in the service of the sanctuary. Few hymnals of the present day do not include "My God, and is thy table spread?" "O God of Bethel, by whose hand," the hymn which was Livingstone's favourite during his African labours; or that old favourite, so dear to many hearts, "O happy day, that fixed my choice!" Doubtless the best way of honouring the memory of the writer of these, and of so many others of equal power and utility, is that of singing them in Divine worship, and the Sabbath following the anniversary would seem to be a specially suitable day for the purpose.

An Itinerant Ministry. The question of extended pastorates has for long enough exercised the minds of both ministers and churches, and there seems some likelihood now that, in one of the great bodies at least, an attempt will be made to urge churches seriously to face the question of an itinerant ministry. Of course, there are advantages and disadvantages on both sides; but it is a significant fact that the one denomination which has progressed beyond most of the rest has that type of ministry. Very few men are really capable of preaching acceptably three times a week to the same congregation for fifteen, twenty, or thirty years; and even when they are, it is a grave question whether the same kind of ministry all the time is really the best for the congregation. That system is the more reasonable which allows most room for the various ministries which our Lord has provided for his Church. We must not forget that apostles, pastors, teachers and evangelists, are all necessary for the work of the Church. An itinerant ministry would also, as Mr. Gange recently pointed out, avoid the spectacle of a servant of Christ often having to tout for opportunities of preaching.

Imaginary Infidels. Charles Dickens once commented severely upon a preacher who was in the habit of setting up in the pulpit imaginary atheistical working-men for the purpose of knocking them down again. Unhappily the class is not yet extinct, and it not infrequently happens that the result is simply to disseminate the seeds of doubt. The American Bishop Whipple's little anecdote is of more practical value than yards of historical argument. He relates how a thoughtful scholar once said to him that the reason he could not be an infidel was simply this :—

I am a man. I am going somewhere. To-night I am a day nearer the grave than I was last night. I have read all the books assailing the religion of Jesus Christ can tell me. They shed not one solitary ray of hope upon the darkness. They shall not take away the Guide and leave me stone blind.

Mistresses and Servants. The Lady Knightley, of Fawsley, has contributed to a contemporary a most wise and well-balanced article upon the subject of servant and mistress, and if its sane counsels were only carried out (and they might easily be), there would speedily be a solution of one of the burning questions of the hour. Lady Knightley's plea practically amounts to this—let there be on both sides a recognition of what is due to each other. This would at once dispose of hireling work on the one hand, and of tyranny on the other. It is the custom of many to make sport of the Puritans and their manner of life, but if between mistresses and servants to-day there was a little more of the filial relationship which characterized that period, domestic life would be more tolerable all round, and servants would be less exposed to the outside dangers which at present menace them.

A Promising Outlook. It is noteworthy that the prejudice against women doctors is visibly giving way before the skill and sympathy shown by those who have adopted medicine as their profession. In America to-day there are upwards of 6,000 fully qualified registered lady practitioners, and if in Great Britain the number does not exceed about 500, it is a growing one despite the fact that the feeling of medical men against the innovation is evinced in many and unpleasant ways. Perhaps, however, in India the development of the movement is most marked, and it is well that it should be so. There are now in that great dependency over 200 highly-skilled women doctors employed in the hospitals and dispensaries, and additions are constantly being made to their ranks. Such a work of mercy is of huge value, not only in smoothing away the racial differences which divide us from our coloured fellow-subjects, but in the still higher direction of preparing the way of the Lord, and making straight his paths.

The Martyrology of Toil. It is lamentable to find, from the report of the Chief Inspector of Factories and Workshops, issued a few days ago, that during the year 1901 there were no fewer than 83,760 accidents to workpeople in their employment, 1,035 of which proved fatal. Although no fewer than twenty-six different codes of special rules for different dangerous trades are in force, there is yet room for restrictive legislation in regard to the manufacture and use of white lead, matches, &c., as preventible deaths from lead and phosphorus poisoning still continue. For these, unhappily, the selfishness and greed of employers and shareholders are largely responsible. There is, however, one pleasant section of the report—that which shows a decrease in the number of licences granted for the employment of mere children, there having been a decrease of 140. As a large number of these licences were for performances in the unhealthy atmosphere of the theatre and the music-hall, the falling-off is gratifying, and it is to be regretted that the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act of 1894, under which these licenses are granted, did not prohibit altogether such employment of the little toilers.

The Moloch of Labour. The annual report of the Registrar-General, which has just appeared, offers some striking figures as to the rate of infant mortality in those centres where the conditions of labour are most unnatural. Lancashire, which has an unenviable reputation for the conditions of its female labour, shows the largest general death-rate in the country, while its infant mortality is appallingly the greatest. The marvel to us is that it is not larger, considering all the circumstances. A system which encourages women to spend all the day in mills, while their tender children are farmed out by the day to various nurses and guardians, is bound to inflict terrible damage upon a community. Thousands of children, by this means, are exposed to death, and those who survive are practically deprived of all home life. Industrial conditions which menace life, home, and all moral training, are—whoever is to blame for them—corrupt and inhuman. For all this kind of thing there will come a day of judgment, in time as well as in eternity.

Dangerous Trades. It is a sign of the times that room has been made for a portly volume of 900 pages entirely devoted, as an encyclopœdia of information, to those industrial occupations which are more or less dangerous to health. A volume of this character is of the greatest value to all philanthropists and social workers. It gives good reasons for thankfulness as also for hope. It is comparatively within recent years only that public attention has been seriously drawn to the peril which is attached to so many trades, and to the credit of the country it ought to be said that when great abuses have been exposed they have been speedily remedied. Protection of life and health is greater than ever before; but there is yet much to be done before the true conditions of labour are reached, in which every worker shall find the risk to life, health, and limb reduced to the minimum.

A Lesson in Credulity. The world has very rarely been treated to a spectacle of imposition on the one hand, and credulity on the other, so remarkable as that revealed in the notorious Humbert case in France. That shrewd business men, bankers and others, should have risked nearly two millions of money sterling upon the bare word of an adventuress, whose only security was the alleged contents of a safe, passes comprehension. The scene when the safe was opened, as described by the Daily Graphic, was piteous. Men who had risked everything upon the supposed security contained in the safe saw it opened and beheld its emptiness. It is a suggestive story. The age is supposed to be sceptical and destitute of faith. And it is, but in one direction only. God alone, source of all truth, is doubted; but men have plenty of faith for impostors, cranks, fanatics, et hoc genus omne. A collapse like this of the Humbert business is a sharp lesson for the dupes, who, too late, bewail their folly. But it ought to have its lesson for everybody. "All faith less than faith in God is doomed to vexation," said a great man; it would be well if men, by their vexations, came to the only faith that at once enlarges and calms the heart.

Peace—and After!

AT noon on Sunday, London and, subsequently, the provinces were stirred by the glad tidings of the proclamation of peace, and naturally the welcome event found allusion in many evening sermons. Peace had been eagerly anticipated for a week or more, but when it became an accomplished fact it seemed almost too good to be true, and it will yet take time to realize that the terrible conditions of the past two and a half years are really at an end.

The effect upon the populace, of the war coupled with the commercial prosperity of the country, has been demoralizing in the extreme; evincing a shoddy patriotism and an over-indulgence in drink which have filled serious minds with a deep concern. Nor have these evidences been lacking since the proclamation, to judge from the orgies which have been rife in the leading thoroughfares in the evenings of the last few days. It was not without reason that the Lord Mayor of London, when asked as to the best way of celebrating the event, gave the laconic reply—"For one thing, keep sober!"

But this effervescence will subside in due course, and meanwhile—and for some time to come—our statesmen and military authorities will be occupied with the questions pertaining to lasting settlement. We have conquered a brave and pertinacious foe; now arise ample opportunities to show that England can be generous as well as just. The material advantages in prospect are so enormous that we can well afford to deal liberally with the newly-acquired colonies, so that the elements of racial discord may be minimized with all speed. The Government has a heavy and a difficult task to face, and we doubt not that it will rise to the occasion in a spirit and manner worthy of the traditions of a powerful, civilized nation.

One of the saddest aspects of the struggle has been the sorry spectacle of two professedly Christian peoples engaged in mutual carnage and bloodshed before the eyes of the native races of South Africa and of the world. History has often repeated itself since the days of Abram and Lot, when the former deprecated unseemly strife in the presence of the Canaanite and the Perizzite, who dwelt then in the land. But the conflict has raged and is now past; all the more need, therefore, for strenuous endeavours to obliterate the lamentable traces that it has left behind, and enable the opposing forces to know each other better

When the mists have rolled away.

We have heard much of the concern expressed for the deliverance of the blacks from the thraldom of the Boers. In Christian circles, especially, this was urged as an argument for the grim necessity of the war. Now we must see to it that this purpose is accomplished, and that the Native Races are really benefited by our rule. Britons as a whole are alive to this, at least in theory; it remains to be enforced in practice. Capitalists in South Africa represent many nationalities, and this, perhaps, will increase the difficulty of the task before us. But we must not flinch from stern measures, if need be, to secure for the Natives guarantees of freedom and justice, in the complications that beset the problem of Native Labour which have to a large extent been set forth as justification for the war.

We have referred more than once in these columns to the disaffection caused among our brethren belonging to Christian communities on the Continent. We may never convince them that the war was just; but we have now an unique opportunity of vindicating our national character, in our treatment of our subjugated foes, and in earnest endeavour to replace disaster with discretion, and to prepare the way for the Day Spring from on high, that He may guide their feet and ours in the way of a lasting and prosperous peace, and thus to establish the blessed Imperialism of the Kingdom of God.

"PEACE": June 1, 1902.

(From the Westminster Gazette.)

"Peace" to the anguished mother,
"Peace" to the weary wife,
"Peace" to the hearts long burdened
By the rack and strain of strife.

"Peace." The dove olive-freighted
Over the waves has sped;
Peace to the noble living,
Peace to the splendid dead.

The Lack of Conversions.

By Rev. T. L. CUYLER, D.D.

THAT there has been a lamentable falling off in the percentage of conversions during these recent years is proved by the statistical reports of most of the Evangelical denominations. There may be several reasons to account for this painful fact. I am convinced that one reason is that—with happy exceptions—there has been a decline of direct, pointed, faithful, and persuasive preaching to the unconverted. Too many discourses are addressed to nobody in particular; preaching to Christians has been relatively overdone, and preaching to the impenitent underdone. I do not mean denunciations that only irritate, or mere hortations that are often a waste of breath. I mean that the preacher should so hold up the uglinesss and the doom of sin before the sinner's eye, that he should feel his own guiltiness; and so present Jesus Christ that the sinner should flee to Him as his only Saviour. "Warn them from Me!" is God's solemn injunction to every minister; he has, therefore, no more right to cap Sinai, or to conceal hell, than he has to hide the sin-atoning cross of Calvary. In short, I mean logic set on fire by love.

THE KIND OF PREACHING NEEDED.

Ministers ought to go back to the fountain-head, and remember that Jesus Christ "began to preach, and to say, Repent, for the Kingdom of heaven is at hand." They ought to remember that Peter began the great Apostolical campaign by preaching repentance to the unconverted, and Paul "ceased not to warn, night and day, with tears." They ought to remember that the most successful preachers, from Whitfield and Wesley, on to Spurgeon and Moody, were men whose chief aim was to awaken the unconverted, and to lead them straight to Jesus Christ. Unless a minister intensely loves souls, and longs for souls, he will never save souls; if he does, and uses the right means, seasoned with prayer, God will give him souls converted as his rich reward.

Preaching to the unconverted is not easy work; it costs more mental labour than any other sermon-work—except during a great descent of the Holy Spirit, and at such times all sermons make themselves. Preaching is a luxury when every stroke echoes in converted souls.

THE TONIC OF THE GOSPEL.

Nothing stirs up comatose Christians like the sight of awakened persons going into an inquiry-room with their pastor. If a worldly-minded church-member sees his own son or daughter come home from church or the Sabbath-school, under conviction and with a melted heart, it is a live coal on his own conscience. The sight of awakened inquirers wakes up many whose eye-lids are grown heavy.

It is not only the duty of a pastor to endeavour to win converts by his efforts in the pulpit, but in his ministrations during the week. I found that many could be reached for personal conversation in pastoral visitation, and by appointing times for meeting inquirers; many also by addressing kind letters to the unconverted. Personal effort is one secret of success. I know an eminently zealous and judicious pastor who has had very large ingatherings of new members, and without outside help. He faithfully told his people that they were as responsible for souls as he was; he bade them seek the power from on high, and called for volunteers to visit and converse with unconverted acquaintances. Sunday-school teachers were urged to pray for and labour with their scholars. In the meantime, the pastor delivered awakening and soul-convicting sermons, and wrote two hundred letters to individuals, directing them to their path of duty. Such a course as this—dictated by common sense, and solicitude for the salvation of souls—is within the possibilities of every minister. How shall a minister escape if he neglect the salvation of souls within his reach?

RELIGION IN THE HOME.

One other cause for decline in conversions must be noted, and that is the decline of a warm, living, and attractive religion in too many professedly Christian homes. The parents do not maintain the "Church in the House." Family worship is either neglected entirely or else made a pious sham. Instead of following up the faithful preaching in the pulpit, by watering the Gospel seed at home, they choke the seed by their worldly talk on the Sabbath, and their worldly walk during the week. The downward pull of their six days is too much for the upward pull of the best work of their pastor on his one day. When the Elkanahs and Hannahs become scarce, small wonder that the Samuels are fewer also!

A CROWN OF REJOICING.

I have ventured to indicate two chief causes for the downward trend in conversions. That trend can be stopped; and it will be, if every minister will face his Master when he enters his pulpit, and will see the lights of the judgment-seat in the faces of his auditors. As my own very imperfect life draws towards the sunset, I would say to my younger brethren that, whatever of good I may have wrought through the Press, the sweetest joy of my pastorates was the privilege of receiving over two thousand souls into Christ's flock on confession of their faith in Him. Many a hard-toiling brother who never had my favouring opportunities will deserve a goodlier crown. And the one crown that is within the reach of all of us is that of the winner of souls to Jesus Christ!

The Far-off Land.

Isa. xxxiii. 17.

The loom of the land of God
I have seen from my tossing bark,
'Mid the waves that uplift from the deep,
Thro' the doubt and the dark.

My hand on the straining helm,
My eye on the distant goal;
The tempest behind, but before
Is the rest of my soul.

The loom of the land of God,
The earnest of Heaven's rest;
My soul on its shores shall complete
Her perilous quest.

There, there is the star of my soul,
The King with the wounded hand;
Not a dream, but a vision of God,
Is the loom of his land.

Samuel and Saul.

"CRUEL AS THE GRAVE."
(1 Sam. xx.-xxvii.)

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

JEALOUSY has no scruples, and will not hesitate to violate the most revered sanctities. Her foot is ruthless; it will trample upon the relationship of home, the bonds of friendship and kinship, and the reverence which attaches itself to the house and worship of God. When once this passion has kindled, there is nothing on which it will forbear to feed, nothing is too sacred to be fuel for its flame. Not that it often, under the restraint of Christian civilization at least, proceeds to murder; rather, by whispered suspicions, by the shrug of the shoulders, the movement of the finger, the furtive look, the suggestive question, it may destroy the peace which one has in husband, wife, child or friend.

The home-life is one of the most sacred institutions of our human life. Michal, Saul's daughter, loved David, and they told him, and it pleased him, and he gave her to David to wife. Yet when David had evaded his javelin, and fled to the security of his home, saying to himself, "At least my father-in-law will respect the sanctity of his daughter's love!" the madly-jealous monarch sent messengers thither to watch him, and slay him in the morning, eliciting from the imprisoned singer such strains as those preserved in Psalm lix.:—

Deliver me from mine enemies, O my God;
Set me on high from them that rise up against me.
Deliver me from the workers of iniquity,
And save me from bloodthirsty men.
For, lo, they lie in wait for my soul;
The mighty gather themselves together against me;
Not for my trangression, nor for any sin, O Lord.

Michal knew her father too well to trust his clemency; she warned her husband of the imminence of death, and with woman-wit (and what will not women do for those they love!) aided him to escape, with her own hands letting him down from the window. It was due to her that the newly-formed home was not rendered desolate, and the light of its hearth quenched.

But the case of Saul shows that jealousy will break down the precincts of the sanctuary as ruthlessly as of the home. David hastened to tell Samuel of the turn that things were taking. For greater security Samuel led him to a cluster of booths, perhaps woven of osiers, (called Naioth), where a number of young men were being trained for the prophetic office, and were living in the fullest manifestation of spiritual power.

Into this sacred assembly Saul forced three successive bands of messengers to arrest David, and finally, in hot wrath at their failure to return, went himself. He started for Naioth; but was stricken down, or ever he reached the place; and, divested of his royal robes, for a second time in his life, lay on the ground in a kind of trance, which lasted for all that day and all that night.

The very fountains of a father's love and pride dry up before the volcanic fires of jealousy, and become the cause of even deeper and wider contortions. Jonathan was one of the noblest types of manhood. A truly princely soul was his. Grace and beauty must have adorned his person, whilst intrepid daring and courage characterized his behaviour on the battlefield. There was everything to bind his father to him, for reasons of policy as well as of paternal pride. But these considerations had no weight with Saul, whilst jealousy of David lay heavy in the other scale.

Speaking of David derisively as "the son of Jesse," thus accentuating his lowly birth, and ignoring the relationship that bound him to the royal family, he fell into a grievous rage, abused Jonathan with the vilest epithets that an Eastern can use, and hurled his javelin at his noble son, who had interfered to mollify his wrath.

But jealousy is also responsive to the worst possible suggestions. Of this there is an illustration in the following chapter (xxi.). The fugitive fled this time to Nob, where Ahimelech, the high priest, presided over the relics of the ancient sanctuary. The suspicions excited in Ahimelech's mind by his unescorted and hasty advent were removed by an evasive reply, and the king's son-in-law was received with all deference, and supplied with bread, with the mighty sword of Goliath, and such spiritual counsel as the ephod could afford.

The incident was reported to Saul, some months afterwards, as he was encamped "on the height" (R.V. marg.) above Gibeah, waiting for tidings of his hated rival, that he might at once march with his household troops, composed of trusted Benjamites, men of his own tribe, to capture and slay him. It seemed as though all the demands of the public service were set aside and accounted as the small dust of the balance so long as the vengeance of his soul was unappeased. The promulgation and execution of law, the hearing of suits, the defences of the kingdom—all were set aside until this one purpose was fulfilled. He had just given vent to the complaint (and jealousy so often takes on the tone of injured innocence) that all his servants were in conspiracy against him, that no one cared for him, etc. It was an unjust and injurious taunt. Well might the Apostle James affirm that the tongue is often "set on fire of hell." It was so here. Mad jealousy runs amuck, striking here and there, with absolute disregard of all that is most precious and true.

Amid the silence that followed these undeserved reproaches, Doeg narrated what he had seen on that fateful day, and his malicious statement had diverted the king's suspicions from his courtiers to the priests. Nob was not far distant from Gibeah; and a peremptory summons, in a short time, brought Ahimelech and all his father's house, i.e., all the males of the high priest's family of the house of Eli, into the presence of the king. In unmeasured terms Saul accused the whole of them of connivance with David for the overthrow of his throne and dynasty, and would give no heed to Ahimelech's mild expostulations. Yielding to some unholy impulse from the prince of the power of the air, to which his disordered nature was as susceptible as it had been to the spiritual afflatus of Naioth, he said, "Thou shalt surely die, Ahimelech, thou and all thy father's house."

The royal bodyguard shrank from executing the awful sentence; but Doeg the Edomite, a foreigner, with his herdsmen, had no such compunctions, but forthwith fell on the unresisting priests. It was a cowardly and dastardly deed, the tidings of which must have staggered the whole nation with dumb-foundering horror. All good men must have felt that the foundations of society were loosed, and that neither life nor liberty was safe, while such frenzy was enthroned in their monarch's breast.

What a warning is here that we should not yield to the first intrusion of evil, lest the thought should lead to the act, and repeated acts to the habit, and habits congeal to character, and character set to destiny!

Jealousy is, however, subject to strong remorse. These scourges are the remonstrances of that blessed Spirit, who allows no soul to drift unwarned to the bottomless pit. Saul was very subject to these powerful eddies in the hurrying current.

When, in an earlier stage, Jonathan reminded his father of the priceless services that David had rendered, he had hearkened attentively, relented, and sworn that he should not be put to death (xix. 1-7).

When David spared his life in the cave, near the Fountain of the Wild Goat, amid the wild ravines that border on the western shores of the Dead Sea, refusing to put forth his hand against the Lord's anointed, and restraining his surprised and eager followers—touched by a generosity which was wholly unexampled in those rude days, Saul lifted up his voice and wept, and poured out the pent-up generosity which had been natural to him in earlier days, but had for long been restrained. "If a man find his enemy," he said, "will he let him go well away? Wherefore the Lord reward thee good for that thou hast done for me this day" (xxiv. 16-22).

And, when again he came in search of David and pitched his camp on the ridge of Hachilah, on the southern hills, and again, through David's clemency, his life was spared from the fatal plunge of the spear, which would not have needed a second thrust, Saul went so far as to say before all his camp: "I have played the fool, and have erred exceedingly. I have sinned; return, my son David, for I will no more do thee harm" (xxvi.).

But the cure of jealousy is clearly set forth in these terrible chapters. Without doubt Saul's surmises were well known to all the members of his family, and especially to Jonathan. Before ever Saul had blurted out his threat that Jonathan's kingdom would not be established, so long as the son of Jesse lived upon the ground, the heir-apparent had assured his friend that he knew the time would come when the Lord would cut off the enemies of David, every one from the earth (xx. 14, 15; 30, 31). And later, while Saul was seeking David's life amid the ravines of Ziph, urged on in his madness by the treacherous Ziphites, Jonathan came to him, and strengthened his hand in God, and said: "Fear not, for the hand of Saul, my father, shall not find thee, and thou shalt be king over Israel, and I shall be next unto thee; and that also Saul my father knoweth."

Jonathan, then, was even more affected by the choice of David than his father was. It was certain that he would never succeed to the throne. Respected and loved he might be, but enthroned never. But not a cloud of jealousy ever darkened the pure heaven of his love, or cast its shadow on the crystal lake of his peace. Perfect love had cast out hate; we are told that "he loved David as his own soul."*

If you are tempted to jealousy, do not brood over the fell passion, or allow it to grow from less to more, but arise to deal with it at once, and with all the energy of your soul. Insist on loving the one to whom you have felt the unholy passion. You reply that that is the very difficulty which confronts you—you cannot love. You must distinguish between love and the emotion of love. It may be impossible for you to command the latter, but quite possible to practise the former, since love consists primarily, not in the feeling, but in the doing; not in emotions, but in strong acts of self-denial.

Find out the individual concerning whom you were beginning to feel jealous; be willing to do kind acts, and speak kind words. Whenever you are tempted to utter a depreciating remark, arrest the words before they cross your lips, and utter some kindly ones instead. Whenever you find yourself speaking contemptuously or judging harshly, go out of your way to do some generous deed. Overcome evil with good, hatred with love. Do not wait to feel kindly, but act promptly and heartily. Go out of your way to confer a kindness. Above all, avoid aloofness. Throw yourself in that other's company; try to enter into the anxieties, trials, and temptations by which his life is torn and rent; cultivate a near and close fellowship, and always offer and present yourself to God as a living sacrifice. Believe also that God does hear you, that his Holy Spirit takes part with you against the enemy of your peace, and that He who has led you to desire perfect deliverance is prepared to work in you to will and do of his good pleasure.

The Church and Missions.-II.

By Rev. JOHN STEWART, M.A., Madras.

How Best to Organize Home Efforts, and Generally Increase Interest in Foreign Missions.

IN our first paper, we noted three things that had to be kept in mind in any consideration of this subject—(1) the importance of a strong and vigorous spiritual life; (2) the compulsory nature of the obligation; and (3) the possibility of accomplishment of the task set before us. We also considered the methods hitherto adopted, and wherein they failed. In the second, we shall look at several ways whereby present methods may be supplemented.

HOW BEST TO SUPPLEMENT PRESENT METHODS.

1. Prayer Unions for systematic study and definite prayer. One great need in any system that is to be really efficient, is provision for systematic study of Missions in general, and definite and intelligent prayer for them in detail. Along with this is the necessity for training in systematic giving and personal responsibility and effort. No system can be permanently effective which does not take these elements into account and make provision for them.

What is wanted, therefore, is some means of gathering together all those in each congregation who are really interested in the subject, and through them reaching the other members. If this cannot be conveniently done in connection with any existing organization, a separate organization might be formed, to meet, say, once a month, for the purpose of definite prayer and systematic study of Missions; the duty of systematic and proportionate giving, and personal effort, being at the same time inculcated and emphasized.

In short, the members of a congregation interested in Foreign Missions might be formed into prayer bands or circles, after the pattern of the Gleaners' Union of the C.M.S., the Home Helpers' Union of the S.A.G.M., or other similar Unions already in existence in societies where the importance of these points has been recognised and provided for. Printed forms of application for membership, each giving a brief synopsis of the objects of the circle, could be provided and filled up by those who wished to share in the benefits, and undertake the responsibility involved in being thus banded together. The prayer card, or member's card, might also contain a blank to be filled with the minimum amount of weekly contribution the member was prepared to give for the extension of the Kingdom, as, for example, Carey's weekly penny. To receive such contributions, members would require to be furnished with mission boxes for their own use. Middleton's booklet, "What Do I Give, and Why?" would be very useful in this connection.

By some such method, not only would a substantial sum be contributed in the aggregate for Foreign Missions, but the sympathies of members would be deepened and drawn out towards the object for which they were contributing. A missionary box in a house is itself a constant reminder of the need for special and definite prayer. By means of such boxes the C.M.S. is reported as having raised £30,000 in 1900, while the "Regions Beyond" Missionary Union raised at least £4,000.

The benefits of the system are, however, not to be measured by the amount of money raised. One of the greatest is, as has been pointed out—of members, the widening of their sympathies and interests, and the bringing of them into harmony with the mind of God with reference to the world's evangelization. That the method referred to is meeting a felt need, is evident from the number of important societies where this or some similar plan has been adopted.

The number of circles, and size of each, in any particular church—such as junior, senior, &c. —would have to be arranged to meet local needs; but such circles having once been formed, periodical meetings arranged, and missionary boxes given out, there would still remain a large field for effort among other members of the congregation. It would be the special duty of the members to interest others by the distribution of literature, special meetings, personal conversation, and in other ways.

It may be objected that in many congregations there might be difficulty in securing for such circles leaders with sufficient knowledge of the subject to make the meetings really interesting. It might possibly happen that very few in the circle or congregation had the leisure necessary to make the preparation required, or the means of access to books of reference that is desirable. To meet this difficulty, special provision might be made. This we shall now consider.

2. Volunteer Bands. There are in every large town, and often even in smaller towns, numbers of people with missionary zeal, who are debarred from going out as missionaries, by consideration of health, difficulties connected with family circumstances, or other reasons, but who are anxious to be of service at home in extending interest in Foreign Missions. There are others who may be actually looking forward to the mission field, and perhaps have already begun to study and prepare with that end in view. It is clear that it would be a great benefit to the cause of missions if such people could be banded together for special study, and their services made use of in various ways, e.g., in the formation and visitation of Prayer-unions; in giving missionary addresses at Sunday-schools, magic lantern lectures, and generally by undertaking any kind of work calculated to arouse missionary interest. Such a scheme would be a benefit not only to the Church but to the volunteers themselves. It would make them better qualified for Christian work, either at home or abroad, and would at the same time bring them face to face with the needs of the heathen world in a way that they could not otherwise be. The formation, therefore, of what we might call volunteer bands for presbyteries, cities, or districts, as distinct from particular churches, would be a very useful adjunct to any scheme of having prayer circles in connection with congregations.

Such volunteer bands would be entirely managed by the members themselves. Although they would, of course, have the sympathy of the pastors of the different congregations, it ought to be made clear that one object in view is to relieve the pastors and not to add to their burdens. The provincial Lay Workers' Unions of the C.M.S. work along these lines, and have proved themselves most useful auxiliaries. The S.V.M.U. in Liverpool has, as the result of visitation of the kind indicated, succeeded in getting a large number of C.E. societies to begin the systematic study of missions, with very hopeful results. Such volunteer bands could easily be in touch with (say) presbyterial committees and presbyterial and synod correspondents; and might, indeed, form a connecting link between such bodies and congregational prayer circles.

Interest in Missions

In India.

TO any of my readers, who would like to be kept in touch with Christian life in India by a weekly Indian religious paper, I heartily commend the following:—

1. The Bombay Guardian.—It was commenced by the venerated George Bowen, and is carried on in the spirit of that saintly man. It is earnestly Christian, and up-to-date in Evangelical advocacy, evangelistic intelligence, and social reform. The English agents are Messrs. Headley Bros., 14, Bishopsgate Without, London.

2. The Indian Witness.—Edited by Dr. Robinson, primarily in the interest of the (American) Methodist Episcopal Church. It is a large-hearted and comprehensive Evangelical organ, liberal, enlightened, and unsectarian. With articles, notes, comments, reports, and correspondence, it is a live and lively paper, with an American flavour. Address, 46, Dharumtola Road, Calcutta.

3. The Christian Patriot.—Edited and written by educated natives, it has special interest on that account. It is necessary to look at Indian and other matters from the Indians' own point of view. Address, the Manager, Christian Patriot, Royapettah, Madras.

The terms for either of the above is 8s. a year, by money order.

4. It may be that some may feel the need of a newspaper of a more general character. There are several such in the chief cities of India. We had the pleasure of being entertained at Colombo by Mr. J. Ferguson, the editor of the Ceylon Observer. He is, in all respects, an accomplished journalist, an encyclopædia of general information, and an authority on all Ceylon affairs, having lived there for over forty years, with occasional visits home. The paper is not only up to the latest date, but is a staunch and unflinching advocate of social and political righteousness. Recent numbers of the weekly edition contain trenchant protests against the action of the Government in promoting the sale of opium in Burma and Ceylon. The editor says:—

> It is most unfortunate that our present Governor may have to say, before he finally leaves this Colony—unless the present unrestricted sale is abandoned—"I have, among other things, in the course of my well-nigh eight years' administration, seen the import and consumption of opium increased by 100 per cent. among the natives of Ceylon—a people who in 1850 used absolutely no opium. . . . No one who has not been among the Chinese can realize the degradation and utter incapacity for work which result from—nay, accompany—the opium habit."

The London agents of the Ceylon Observer, are Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London.

We had the gratification of visiting the Boer camp, near Coonoor, a health resort on the Nilgeri hills. A natural amphitheatre, shaded by trees, afforded a well sheltered site for an open-air meeting, which, by the courtesy of the officer in charge, we were allowed to hold. It was arranged by Mr. Mallis, a missionary resident at Coonoor, and addressed by Mr. Logan, another missionary. At the close I had a conversation with a minister of the Dutch Church, evidently a sincere and energetic Christian. He had been for years a reader of The Christian, and was looking forward hopefully for the end of the war.

"Sister L—," who has been much blessed in Christian work at home and abroad, has been sending this paper to a Boer camp in Ceylon; I met her there, and learned from her how much it was appreciated. We are in frequent receipt of assurances, verbal and written, that it becomes every week more interesting, informing, and indispensable.

Shall I be thought presumptuous if I ask my readers to make The Christian a constant subject of their prayers, and to give effect to their own prayers by subscribing for a copy to some new friend, named either by themselves or by the publishers?

I have found The Christian in the homes of missionaries and other Christians abroad, in Y.M.C.A.'s and Y.W.C.A.'s, in Soldiers' and Sailors' Homes, and other institutions; but not in all. Wherever it was received it was welcomed as a visitor from the homeland. Sometimes I was told of friends at home who sent it to one or more abroad, and thus established communication with various parts of the missionary world.

A little exercise of the imagination and of sympathy will readily suggest the interest added to a lonely Christian life in a foreign land, by the weekly arrival of such a record of the words and actings of men of thought and men of action at home and in distant places. A cheerful and cheering experience may easily be added to the life of folks at home who tarry by the stuff, by subscribing 8s. 8d. a year for a copy of The Christian to missionaries and pastors, to Y.M.C.A.'s and Y.W.C.A.'s, to colleges and schools and libraries, in India and other lands, and at a cost of only 6s. 6d. a year to friends at home; or 4s. 4d. if supplied by a local bookseller or newsagent.

There are many luxuries and amusements the expense of which is saved by being born again, and which may be replaced by higher and less expensive enjoyments of the Christian life: "Oh, the good we all may do, while the days are going by!"

For forty-three years The Christian has held high and unflinchingly the banner of unadulterated Evangelical and Scriptural truth, and has told the weekly story of Gospel enterprise through the world. It has been one of the joys of my declining years to have met in all quarters of the globe testimony to the use God has made of it, in bringing souls into the Kingdom, and in nourishing them there.

R. Cope Morgan.

The White Slave Traffic.

THE vile traffic carried on both in Great Britain and abroad, for betraying young girls into an immoral life, brings such large profits to those who are engaged in it, that most energetic and assiduous action is necessary for its suppression.

In London there is a strong and influential society of Jewish ladies and gentlemen, whose energies are largely devoted to the punishment of traders in foreign women. This useful organization, the Jewish Association for the Protection of Young Girls, has appointed two agents, whose whole time is devoted to visiting foreign vessels landing young women at the various docks connected with London, ascertaining the destination of the girls and the circumstances under which they have left their own country. Their work is extended with equal zeal and energy to Christian girls.

A case which demonstrates the need for an effectual international law on the subject is that of two young girls who were noticed by the Jewish agents in charge of a Russian man and woman. From inquiries which were made, it transpired that the girls had been induced to come to this country from Odessa, on the assurance that they would be able to secure good situations in London, and earn plenty of money. A supply of cash was given them, but on landing it was taken away and they were told that, as situations could not be obtained in London, they would be taken to South Africa. I.O.U.'s for some hundreds of roubles were obtained from each, and passages were taken for them, not to Africa, but to Buenos Ayres.

The Jewish Association and the National Vigilance Association took combined action in the matter, and the case became the subject of a police-court inquiry. Here the weak, ineffective character of the law was brought out. Although it was apparent to everyone that the object of the man and woman in bringing these two girls over, and in taking them to Buenos Ayres, was to sell them for immoral purposes, yet nothing could be done to punish them, and after the night's incarceration both were set at liberty.

The Jewish Society sent the girls back to their friends in Odessa. The case clearly demonstrates the urgent need for international action to be taken for the suppression of an international traffic of an abominable character, and the removal of an international shame.

A Zambesi Potentate.

NOT the least important of our Coronation guests is Lewanika, the King of Barotsiland, among whose subjects the French Protestant missionaries have laboured so earnestly during recent years. We owe it to Lewanika's friend and neighbour, and our ally, Khama, that the vast territory of North-West Rhodesia, covering 200,000 square miles on either side of the Upper Zambesi, has been placed under the protection of the British Government.

Lewanika, succeeding to a line of cruel tyrants, found his kingdom menaced without and within, his throne shaken by a revolutionary party, his boundaries invaded by slave-raiding negroes from the Congo and Portuguese territories, and by the unspeakable Matabele. Once, indeed, he was driven into exile for some years, and it was on his return to power, after a sharp conflict with his enemies, that he first invoked the help of "Satory" (Queen Victoria) through her High Commissioner. But the Government was not anxious to add to its responsibilities: the still unconquered Matabele lay between the British outposts and the Zambesi.

No effective protection could, indeed, be given at the moment; moreover, his chiefs would not hear of such a humiliation. Two years later Khama's ambassadors brought their master's message to the assembled chiefs of Barotsiland: "Barotsi, I have tasted a delicious dish, and I would share it with you." Assured by the accounts brought from Bechuanaland that the shadow of "Satory" meant really protection and not conquest, they were inclined to receive favourably the emissaries of the British South Africa Company in 1890. At that time a treaty was arranged; but not till the long struggle with Matabeleland was over, could it be confirmed by the arrival of a British Resident to the capital in 1897.

MISSIONARY PIONEER WORK.

The days are long past when Lewanika received his first European visitor, the French Protestant missionary, M. Coillard, sitting on a native stool and tearing a wild bird to pieces with his teeth. The persevering efforts of this devoted missionary and his colleagues have opened his mind to the benefits of peace and civilization. They assured the chief that if he could make his people prosperous they would not want to rebel against him; and if he would only stop crime at its sources, tribal quarrels would cease. Lewanika interpreted this teaching according to his own ideas. Although his eldest son and heir, Litia, has been baptized, he himself is not a Christian, and in his Government the law is much more in evidence than the Gospel. At once he took measures to stop the depopulation of his country by slave-raiding and infanticide. The burning alive of "sorcerers," the "smelling-out" and torture of witches, and the trial by ordeal of boiling water were gradually abolished. The king sits every day in his court dealing out justice. A suspected person has a chief told off as his advocate, if he has no friend to plead for him. From earliest days the Barotsi were protected by the institution of a Natamoyo, or minister of mercy. This personage must be one of the royal family. Any criminal who could flee to him or to his hut, was safe against lynching, and secured a legal trial. This right of sanctuary has been bestowed on the missionaries as well.

THE DRINK QUESTION SETTLED.

But of all his reforms none are more sweeping than the liquor law. Formerly a beanfeast was held in every village to celebrate the new moon, and this was the fons et origo of all quarrels, plots, and assassinations. The King decreed that he would put an end to it once for all, and under the most drastic penalties he forbade the manufacture, sale, and importation of all intoxicants from native beer to European spirits. One day a chief came to church drunk. "How dare you come into God's house with the smell of beer on your lips?" demanded his Sovereign as soon as the service was over. "Take me to your hut." The hut and court were found to be full of pots of beer in process of manufacture. The chief, who held a post analogous to that of Chancellor of the Exchequer, was made to carry forth his vats and empty them on the ground, after which he was banished from Court.

Lewanika has not come to England under the escort of the missionaries, but on a political errand, accompanied by Colonel Harding, C.M.G., the native chief of police. Last week he had his first interview with King Edward, a privilege long looked forward to. About the middle of June he will come to London as His Majesty's guest. The prayers of all Christians are earnestly requested that he may gain good and not evil from his visit to our country, and that during his absence the work of conversion may prosper in his country.

M. Adolphe Jalla, one of M. Coillard's earliest colleagues, is now in England on furlough, and may be addressed, care of Mr. J. E. Mathieson, 58, Ladbroke Grove, W. He will be very glad to deliver addresses about Barotsiland, its people and missions, to any who may desire to know more of the work.

Japanese and the Coronation.

IN a recent issue particulars were given of the contingent of Japanese sailors and marines who are shortly to reach England for the Coronation festivities. It is expected that the party, officers and men together, will number about 1,250. Miss McLean, of the Japanese Christian Institute, Tilbury Docks, has made excellent arrangements for the interest and comfort of the men, all of whom will also take away mementoes of their visit to Great Britain. The gifts include pincushions, picture cards, books, and other things such as sailors find useful, all of them being put up in very attractive bags. The accumulation represents the warm Christian solicitude of many ladies and gentlemen concerned for the well-being of our visitors from "the Land of the Rising Sun."

A representative had the pleasure last week of inspecting Miss McLean's stock of things, all of them bright and ready for distribution. The tastes of the recipients, according to their rank and station, have been carefully studied. The Coronation occasion is illustrated at various points; and, when home again, the sailor will assuredly recall the Christian kindness of which the bag and its contents are the concrete expression. Many of the pincushions have been decorated with good emblems and religious mottoes, little sermons being conveyed by signs for "God," "God is Love," and "Those who are in Christ Jesus are Happy."

Foreign Aid Society.

THE annual meeting of the Foreign Aid Society, which, it will be remembered, aids the Protestant Churches of France and Belgium in their protests against Rome on the one hand, and infidelity and rationalism on the other, was held on Monday, May 26, in St. Paul's Church Room, Onslow Square, S.W.

In connection with a recent meeting of the Society, held at Clapham Conference Hall, we gave particulars of various developments of the work. On the present occasion, Rev. J. Gosset-Tanner, secretary, presented the report, which detailed many striking particulars of the progress of evangelical truth on the continent.

Prebendary Webb-Peploe, who presided, spoke appreciatively of the operations of the Society, which, he said, renders valuable service to the Protestant cause.

After hearty words of encouragement from Rev. G. Giddins, of the Continental Church Society, Rev. G. R. Thornton said that one of the most remarkable proofs of the growth of Protestantism in France is found in the comparatively large sum of £40,000 devoted by these struggling churches to foreign missions.

Colportage work, carried on by the Evangelical Society of Geneva, was described by Pastor Vernier, and words of cordial testimony were added by Prebendary Borrett White.

Bible Day Schools in Italy.

TO be "an Italian mission to Italians" is the ideal which the Spezia Mission has set before it. Founded in 1866 by Rev. Edward Clarke, it has grown until the schools and stations stretch from Belluno, in the north, southward to Pistoja, a distance of about 240 miles. The aim has been to select for active service men trained in the priesthood, teachers trained in the Government colleges, and other thoroughly equipped helpers, who, having received the grace of God into their own hearts, are able to tell with power the story of the Cross.

Mr. Clarke's colleague in the directorship—Rev. H. H. Pullen—is now on a visit to this country, and may be communicated with at the address of his brother, Rev. E. P. Pullen, Shirley, Southampton. Formerly a Baptist minister at Stroud Green, in North London, Mr. Pullen has been entirely devoted to this work for the past eleven years, and during that period has seen much of the goodness of the Lord in blessing upon the preaching and teaching of the Gospel. The effort is one continuous struggle against relentless opposition; and the workers often wish that Protestants who are inclined to be lukewarm could have actual experience of the doings of the Church of Rome. Step by step ground has been gained until now over thirty Italian helpers are at work, four or five of whom were formerly priests or friars. The head of an effort recently established had been priest of a very important parish, and was called on to make great sacrifices in leaving the Church of Rome. One of the best workers, who has proved by years of faithful service his sterling worth, was a Franciscan friar. Another man, Padre Pio da Castiglion Fiorentino—who left the Jesuits on being led into the light, was recaptured by them, imprisoned in a damp, dark cell, and at last escaped—preached at Casa Alberto a few months ago. He held high positions in the Roman Church at Pisa, Pistoja, and Florence, and made his solemn abjuration publicly in midst of grave peril at the mission house in Pistoja, when the whole of that intensely Papal city was stirred.

TRAINING NATIVE HELPERS.

As an instance of success in the bringing forward of native help, it is mentioned that three girls who entered the orphanage at the age of four years, are now, as young women, under training at the government schools of Florence, in the hope that they may be placed at the head of important branches. All three have confessed Christ publicly, and have given ample evidence of a true change of heart. Should they be able to obtain the full teaching diploma, they will be of immense use.

Close attention is given to the work among the young, and for some time it has been evident that thorough and deliberate opposition to it has been arranged at the Vatican. In the districts where the Bible Day Schools are flourishing best, there have been planted two aggressive Roman Catholic churches, each with a strong staff of priests. In a proclamation scattered broadcast at the opening of one of these, Rome showed her hand with unwonted clearness. After applying some epithets which would shock English ears, it was plainly announced that the new enterprise was part of a distinct campaign organized against the Mission and its work by the Pope himself working in conjunction with the Salesiani—i.e., the followers of St. Francis di Sales.

As Spezia is a great naval port, many facilities are enjoyed of visiting the Italian and other warships. When English vessels come, special gatherings of the men are held, and "grand times" are usually experienced.

On all hands the Mission is capable of expansion, if adequate support were forthcoming. From several districts pathetic appeals for workers have recently been received, in one case from a city where two years ago the workers who went on a visit were threatened with stoning, and the magistrates declined permission to sell Scriptures.

The Gospel in Paris.

WITH quiet, unobtrusive perseverance, the Paris City Mission continues the difficult task of giving the Gospel to the inhabitants of France's gay capital. Founded on the model of the London City Mission, the Society procures lay missionary agents to aid Evangelical pastors, churches, and organizations, and making domiciliary visits with a view to bringing Gospel truths home to the people; reading and explaining God's Word, distributing tracts, &c. At the end of twenty-two years, the committee look back with gratitude to God for the Divine favour which has been experienced, and the wonderful tokens of his faithfulness to the promises of his Word.

Last year's report is a record of consistent and strenuous endeavour on the part of twelve missionaries, whose evangelistic work has borne abundant fruit. Nearly 8,000 visits to the homes of the people were made. They have taken part in 2,631 Evangelical meetings for the edification of believers, and appealing to the unconverted; they have sold or judiciously given away 262 Bibles and New Testaments, and have distributed over 46,000 Gospels and tracts, chiefly among those who do not attend the mission halls.

PIONEERS OF THE GOSPEL.

At the annual meeting on Friday, held at the Memorial Hall, Mr. F. A. Bevan presided, and spoke of the perfect harmony which exists between the missionaries and the pastors of the churches. The agents of the Mission are pioneers of Christian effort, and have no desire to form another organization, asking only to be allowed to go with the Gospel to the lowest and most degraded. Many difficulties to be encountered by the workers arise out of the widespread ignorance to the Word of God which prevails. Then the people are not accustomed to meetings. Happily the work carried on by the McAll Mission and Miss de Bröen has done much to familiarize them with Gospel services, and their prejudice in this respect is much less pronounced than was formerly the case.

Mr. W. J. Lockie recalled the formation of the Mission in 1833 by David Nasmyth, and its reorganization by Lord Shaftesbury and Mr. J. M. Weylland in 1878, tracing its development to the present time. He pointed out that while attention is chiefly given to the French, the English are not neglected, three of the missionaries working among British residents. Continuing, the secretary related the circumstances of a remarkable conversion which was witnessed a short time ago. An Anarchist had come to Paris with the intention of carrying out a deadly plot. Being attracted to one of the halls of the Mission he came under the influence of the Gospel, and ultimately yielded himself to Christ. He at once determined to work for his living and found employment in a factory.

OPEN DOORS.

A stirring address was given by Rev. S. H. Anderson, who, while acting as Paris secretary, gives assistance in the McAll Mission, and special efforts among Jews. He pointed out that one out of every thirteen of the inhabitants of Paris is a foreigner, and testified to the growing readiness on the part of the people to receive the Gospel, citing many instances of fruit being seen "after many days." The speaker pleaded for deeper interest to be taken in efforts to give the Gospel to France, remembering that if England does good to France she will be a blessing to this country.

The next speaker was Mr. S. Cantwell, who works among the French in the metropolis in connection with the London City Mission. He told a story of singular interest. A representative of a Jesuit college in France came to London to prepare for settling in Madagascar, to take up work in opposition to Christians there. After much persuasion he accepted a copy of the New Testament from the city missionary, and the Word was used of God to the conversion of the man's soul. He returned to his own country a true disciple of Jesus Christ, and immediately opened at his own expense two halls for the preaching of the Gospel.

Miss de Broen, who for thirty-one years has laboured devotedly in France, also spoke, bearing testimony to the growing hatred to priestcraft and the prevalence of infidelity.

From Mr. Henry Varley.

I AM unexpectedly returning to England, though we intended visiting some other of the American cities prior to coming back to the homeland. Six months have passed rapidly, and arduous service has made life worth living. Some of the recent campaigns have been in Worcester, Baltimore, Hartford and other centres. In the last-named much interest has existed. It is the capital of the State, and beautiful for situation; just now it is full of the beauties of this lovely spring season. To our deep regret my voice gave out, and for nearly a fortnight I could scarcely speak above a whisper. I was compelled to close the work and go to Nantasket on the seacoast and rest for a fortnight.

Though I have since returned to resume the preaching of Christ, both my throat and my voice are impaired, and have induced medical counsel to urge cessation of work and rest for the relief of the swollen vocal chords.

I suppose I must be getting older after forty-five years public ministry, but I frankly say I do not like to acknowledge it. Preaching Christ is a glorious business, and it is the highest enjoyment. Enough, however, except to add that acting upon this advice, I am returning for the benefit of the sea voyage and rest for a season to England. My dear wife I expect will stay in America until I go back. Not that I am alone, for our daughter, who has shared so largely during the past four years in the literary labours of dear Mr. Moody and the Northfield Record of Christian Work, accompanies me. We leave Boston, Mass., on Tuesday, 27th inst., on the ss. Ivernia, and trust to arrive about eight days later in London. If any friends wish to write me, may I ask that letters be addressed to your care?

Henry Varley.

Be Still.

"Be still, and know that I am God" (Psa. xlvi. 10).

Be still, my soul, be still,
Thy God is on his throne;
His kingdom ruleth over all,
Thou shalt his goodness own.

Be still, my soul, be still,
Thy God is ever near;
Rest in his love, his perfect love,
And cast away thy fear.

Be still, my soul, be still,
Trust on through darkest night;
God is thy shield and God thy sun,
Thy God will give thee light.

Be still, my soul, be still,
Hush every anxious thought;
Be thine the peace, the perfect peace,
His precious blood has bought.

Be still, my soul, be still,
Fear not the chast'ning rod;
Know that all worketh for thy good,
Hope in the Lord thy God.

Be still, with patience wait,
The day is drawing near;
The night of weeping soon will pass,
The morn of joy appear.

"For ye have need of patience, that, having done the will of God, ye may receive the promise. For yet a very little while, He that cometh shall come, and shall not tarry" (Heb. x. 36 and 37). G. W. O.

"A Modern Shadrach."—In a recent issue we told the story of a young Spanish soldier who refused to kneel during the celebration of the mass, giving as his reason the explanation that he was a Protestant. In the Spanish army the Roman Catholic religion is tolerated and no other; and all soldiers are forced to conform to it. Whatever his own feelings, the officer in command of a regiment is compelled to enforce obedience in such a case; hence the young soldier was only proceeded against for his irregularity. At the court-martial, counsel for the prosecution asked for three years' penal servitude; but, in view of the nature of the evidence in defence, the accusation was ultimately withdrawn, and the young man acquitted.

Jennie's Sermon on Obedience.

We do not like this word quite so well as "Love," do we? And yet it comes next to Love, is really a part of true love. Because of love, Obedience must be. Jesus said, "If ye love Me, keep my commandments" (John xiv, 15).

Some children were once playing in a garden, and, being tired of the usual games, decided to "play at church," so the summer-house was arranged, and Jennie, who was to be the preacher, went behind a bush to prepare her sermon. All being ready, some hymns were sung, and then this text was given out, and Jennie explained that it meant, "If you love me, do as I tell you;" and, she said, "It is not easy to do as you are told when you don't love the one who tells you; when the servant says, 'Come here,' or 'do this.' I don't like obeying because I do not love her. But how different it is when mother says, 'Jennie, dear, I want you.' Once mother told me to stop in the nursery and mind baby while she went to see some visitors; but she was gone so long that I ran down just to speak to the little girl in next door garden, and when I came back mother looked at me so sadly. At bed time I threw my arms round her, and said, 'Good night, mother dear. I do love you.' And she said, 'It is very difficult to believe that you love me when you do not mind what I tell you. I don't care a bit for that kind of love.' And, oh, I did cry! So that is just what Jesus means when He says, 'If you love Me, do as I tell you;' and He tells us to 'Come to Him,' to 'Love one another,' to 'Watch and pray,' and lots of other things, and He knows if we are trying to mind and show that we love Him. Amen."

Now I think we may learn a great deal from Jennie's sermon. A young man who was resting under the garden-hedge heard it all, and it was the means of changing his whole life.

Who will now say, what the captains said in the time of Jeremiah, "We will obey the voice of our Lord our God" (Jer. xlii. 6). It is heart obedience that the Lord wants; sometimes we cannot understand all the reason why, and then we just have to trust. The highest obedience does not wait to be told or called; but knowing what God would like us to do, does it, and does it promptly. Mother calls, "Mary, come here;" but Mary tried not to hear. Three times the call came, then mother was angry and had to make her child come. Was Mary obedient? Oh, no. Yet this is just how we often treat our Lord and Master. We do not heed his gentle call, so He has to give us stern warnings.

1 John iii. 23 gives us the first commandment God wants us to obey; until we have truly believed in Jesus, and taken Him to be our own Saviour, we cannot do anything to please Him. Lots of people are trying to do good works, and they have not obeyed this first commandment. Read the story of Agag and Saul in 1 Sam, xv., and you will learn the kind of obedience God likes.

In Deut. xxviii. 15 we read the terrible curses pronounced on those who do not obey God's law, and we feel afraid, for we know in our hearts we are not always obedient; but let our fear just send us to Jesus, "who has redeemed us from the curse of the law, having been made a curse for us" (Gal iii. 13). Trust the Saviour, and his obedience is counted as yours.

Here are two texts to encourage you: Ex. xix. 5. God says, "If ye will obey my voice . . . ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto Me," and Jesus says, "Ye are my friends if ye do the things that I command you." God's "peculiar treasure," and Jesus' "little friends"—it is worth all the trouble of obedience to gain this!

In Nothing Be Anxious.

(Phil. iv. 6, R.V.)

Dwell not on the sorrows that only may be,
Then half of thy sorrows most surely will flee,
The rest give to Jesus, the known and unknown,
He maketh thy worries and sorrows his own.
By his word He upholds worlds countless as sand,
His sheep dwell in safety, upheld by his hand.
Remember He loves thee, tho' thorny thy way,
He will never forget, and never say nay.

S. Trevor Francis.

Lean on Thy Lord.

Lean on thy Lord, and He will give Strength for the coming days:
Gladness in sorrow,
Thus thou shalt borrow:
Lean on thy Lord, and thou shalt live
All thy life long with praise!

Lean on thy Lord, when lov'd ones fade
Slowly from out thy sight.
'Tis his voice calleth
Each as he falleth:
Lean on thy Lord, t'was He who made
And beckons each to light.

Lean on thy Lord, when doubts assail
Thy soul with mists of gloom;
When ways are shrouded,
And skies are clouded;
Lean on thy Lord, He will not fail
To cheer thy life with bloom.

Lean on thy Lord, when friends are cold,
And unresponsive prove;
Our Lord and Brother,
Cares as none other.
Lean on thy Lord, his heart will hold,
And clasp thee in his love.

Crime in Scotland.—The Prison Commissioners for Scotland have again had the unpleasant duty of calling attention to the startling growth of crime in that country. There has been an increase of over 6,000 in the committals for the year and an addition of 634 to the average number of serious crimes. The names of 634 offenders have been added to the list of "habitual criminals," forty of this number being females. It is not stated how many of the offences and crimes were directly or indirectly due to drink, but it is perfectly safe to assume that in Scotland, as in England and Ireland, the drink traffic is largely responsible for this unhappy decadence in a nation noteworthy by reason of its sterling righteousness.

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, June 8. Numbers xvii.

IT required to be determined that men cannot assume to themselves office in God's Church and service, but must wait until God designates their work and equips them for it. And this point was put altogether beyond dispute by the marvellous and apt incident recounted in this chapter. Of all the rods that were deposited in the sanctuary, it was Aaron's only that budded; he, therefore, and his house, were alone chosen to stand before God; thus one cause of dissatisfaction and murmuring was taken out of the way.

This has great significance for us. Christ is the Priest of the Church. It is his work, by the Holy Spirit, to minister in the hearts of his people on earth, and by the merit of his mediatorial work to intercede for them before the throne. And it is evident that He is well able to fulfil these offices, because the rod of his power is ever budding, producing blossoms, and bearing ripe clusters. We may still further say that all who are called to be priests unto God—and this includes the whole Church—are distinguished by the perennial fertility and beauty, by which their lives are characterized. Though they may seem to the carnal eye mere bare rods, yet they are always becoming covered by the flowers and fruits of a rich and beautiful life. "They bear fruit in old age, and are fat and flourishing."

But mind, O soul, that thou canst not bear aught of thyself. From Him is our fruit found. Oh, that by a touch of the Spirit of Resurrection, all who read these words may begin to blossom in promise, and bear fruit in practice.

MONDAY, June 9. Numbers xviii.

The opening paragraph of this chapter should be read with the closing verses of the previous one. The people seemed quite dispirited and broken; and it was therefore ordained that Aaron and his sons should bear the iniquity of the sanctuary and priesthood. In its fullest sense, this sacred office has only been perfectly fulfilled by our Saviour, who is in all points the heavenly counterpart of Aaron. Perhaps there is a sense in which all of us, who are of his house, may participate with Him in this, as we are oppressed with the sin of men, and bear it on our hearts and in our prayers—as when Paul wished himself accursed from God for the sake of Israel, and was willing to fill up in his measure that which was behind of the sufferings of Christ. How good it is to be joined unto Him, to minister unto Him (2-4).

In the following paragraph (8-20) there is an account of the provision made for the priestly family. The males were to eat of the sin or trespass offerings, and, so to speak, in this way identify themselves with the sins and failures of the people. They were to eat in the holy place, from which we learn that it is only in our holiest moments that we can come into closest understanding of, and sympathy with, our erring brethren (Gal. vi. 1, 2). The daughters of Aaron might not eat of these sacrifices, but partook of the thankofferings of the people. It is easier to enter into the joys than the sins of others. But what a princely fortune was theirs (12, 13).

The provision of the Levites was also defined. God was their inheritance. All the tithes which the people brought were theirs, but a tithe of these was their gift to Aaron and his family. Let us not fear to yield ourselves to God for his service. He cannot fail to care for us.

TUESDAY, June 10. Numbers xix.

It is interesting to find the contents of this chapter here. We might have expected them in Leviticus, but they seem a little incongruous to the story of the desert pilgrimage. Yet after all, is not this the most appropriate place, since in the desert march we are most exposed to the touch of defilement, such as needs daily purification, lest it shut us out from fellowship with God? The red heifer was intended to teach the Hebrews of their hourly liability to become polluted, and of the gracious provision made for their cleansing in "the ashes of an heifer sprinkling the unclean."

In this red heifer, trace the lineaments of our blessed Lord! "Without spot;" "wherein is no blemish;" "on which never came yoke" (this indicating the voluntariness of his service); "without the camp;" "blood sprinkled seven times" (the number of perfection). Remember that not only was the blood of Jesus shed to put away the defilement and penalty of our sins, in the aggregate, and once for all, but that his death has done two things for us beside; first, it secures a constant cleansing for those who are constantly being convicted of sinfulness, and, secondly, it makes an entire break and severance between us and our past.

The first of these benefits is set forth in the ashes, which were mingled in living water, and kept for sprinkling the unclean—blessed emblem of the blood which cleanseth us, when we confess our sins to Him, who is faithful and just to forgive us. The second is set forth in that burning without the camp, together with cedar and hyssop (the greatest and the least of the vegetable kingdom, and, therefore, inclusive of all the creation), and scarlet (which stands for the pomp and splendour of the world); so does the death of Christ cause us to die to the world—the world is crucified to us, and we to the world, and there is no longer any fascination for us in its prizes and joys.

WEDNESDAY, June 11. Numbers xx.

Again the murmuring spirit breaks out, as it had done forty years before. To the end of our life we are liable to the recrudescence of the old sins, and can never afford to sheathe our sword or relax our watchfulness. But this time Moses was to speak to the rock, not strike it, because the Rock of our Salvation was smitten only once. It is appointed unto men once to die, and Jesus Christ was once offered to bear the sin of many. Henceforward it is only needful for the dying soul to speak to Him, in the language of expectant faith, though in the lowest and most faltering accents, and streams of help and salvation will at once flow forth for him. It was probably through lack of faith that Moses smote the rock, instead of speaking to it. It seemed such a little thing to speak, hardly enough, surely, to awaken a response in the hard rock; hence he lifted up his hand and smote the rock with main force, as though his might were to do the work; and it was his lack of faith, allied as it was with impatience, that excluded the great Lawgiver from the Land of Promise.

Throughout subsequent years, this refusal of Edom to act a brother's part to the children of Israel was remembered with deep emotion. It is referred to again and again in the strongest terms by Prophet and Psalmist (Deut. ii. 4, 8; xxiii. 7; Amos i. 11; Obad. 10, 12; Psa. cxxxvii. 7).

The death of Aaron, on the borders of the land of Promise, causes my heart to turn to Thee, O glorious Priest, who ever liveth to make intercession. Since Thou hast entered on thy eternal Priesthood in the presence of God, for my brethren and for me, Thou livest ever, and I live in Thee, and for Thee, and with Thee eternally blessed.

THURSDAY, June 12. Numbers xxi.

Have you never compassed the land of Edom? It is bad enough to have to fight the Canaanite, but it goes hard to have to traverse a long, circuitous route around the land of Edom, which a little kindness on the part of our brother might have rendered unnecessary. Ah, how much Christians have had to suffer from their brethren and sisters in Christ! What discouragement, what heart-break, what faintness we have caused each other! The fiery serpents which Satan has sent among us have too often borne the likeness of our fellow-believers.

The story of the brazen serpent is perpetually fresh. It seems an exemplification of the law that like cures like. The Son of God, in the likeness of the flesh of sin, hung on the cross of Calvary, that the progress of disease and death might be arrested, and that whosoever turns to Him the look of faith, should not perish, but have everlasting life.

Near the pole of the brazen serpent sprang up the brook, around which Israel sang these sweet versicles of thanksgiving (17, 18); and we are reminded that the cross of our Lord Jesus has opened springs of Pentecostal power in this sinful world, which have been flowing ever since. Spring up, O Holy Spirit's power, in our hearts and churches with fresh energy!

Two great victories overthrew Sihon and Og, and laid open the eastern lands to the settlement of the tribes. Thus God began to fulfil his word, as He will do for all who by faith and patience are prepared to inherit his promises.

FRIDAY, June 13. Numbers xxii.

The true character of Balaam is apparent on the pages of Peter and Jude. Peter tells us that he loved the wages of unrighteousness, and Jude that he erred for reward. The rewards of divination, which Balak sent, had an irresistible fascination for him. At all hazards he must obtain them, though he wished to do so under the appearance of religion. He made the condition that he should speak only what God told him, but he was most eager to contrive that God should speak to him and through him in a manner to win Balak's hire.

If only Balaam had abode by his first answer to Balak's messengers, he would have been saved the disgrace and suffering which ensued. But he seemed to think that it was possible to alter God's mind; hence his remark to the second despatch of messengers, "Tarry ye here this night, that I may know what the Lord will speak unto me more." And when, finally, God told him that he might go, if the men came to call him, he did not wait for them to come, but rose up in the morning, "saddled his ass, and went with the princes of Moab." All the time he tried to serve two masters, and endeavoured to speak as God wished, whilst he pleased Balak, and pocketed his handsome rewards. There is no doubt as to the result, when we put God with another on the throne of our life.

How often God uses the circumstances, and even the dumb creatures, of our life to arrest us in our mad career! The Apostle Peter specially refers to this incident (2 Peter ii. 6). None of us goes to his doom without warning voices remonstrating with us. Many red lights line the track of the train before it rushes to its own destruction. It is this that makes the way of transgressors so hard, if they do despite to the Spirit of Grace.

SATURDAY, June 14. Numbers xxiii.

Notice the position of these chapters, preceding, as they do, the awful story of Baal-peor. Presently the people will be perpetrating such sins, that it would seem as though God must cast them aside; but here God is standing for them, and vindicating his choice. When they sin, He constitutes Himself their judge and chastiser; but when Balak would assail them, He arrests his hand, and through Balaam pours forth a rich torrent of complacent and elevated commendation.

Here is Balaam, standing in the presence of Balak and his princes—beside him the seven altars with their smoking embers, before him the gold and silver that had lured him from his home — endeavouring with all his might to earn the royal gifts; but he finds that no weapon that he can forge against Israel can prosper, and that the tongue he raises in judgment against the people of God is condemned. "How shall I curse whom God hath not cursed? or how shall I defy whom God hath not defied?" He saw that Israel dwelt alone as God's own peculiar possession and property, called to fulfil his purpose in the world, and impervious to blessing or curse of his. So it is with us; we are far from perfect; God knows it; but He says to all Balaams, "Touch not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm."

And this parable is confirmed by the second: "He hath not beheld iniquity in Jacob." He gives commandment to bless, who can reverse? If God be for us, who can be against us?

Prayer and Pains.

AN AMERICAN IN INDIA.

"Prayer and pains, through faith in Jesus Christ, can do anything."—Eliot, the Apostle to the American Indians.

MANY will remember the clear-cut expositions of Professor W. W. White in his Bible lectures, and the nervous energy with which they were given, too intense for his physical strength to have long endured.

The Methodist Episcopal Mission at Madras added to its staff, about eighteen years ago, in the person of Rev. A. W. Rudisill, D.D., a man as spiritual, as devoted to the kingdom of God, and as intense in nervous energy, as Professor White. He had had the advantage in his younger days of a training as a printer, and he had not forgotten his art when he became a pastor and a preacher of Christ's Gospel.

Dr. Rudisill is a typical American, beyond the average of his countrymen, whether as a man or a Christian. The publishing house under his superintendence is an object-lesson of what can be done by a man full of the Holy Ghost and of faith, a man of prayer and energy, unhampered by precedent, and eager to learn God's latest revelation of the forces of nature, that he may utilize them in the noblest work possible to man on earth—the communication of the glad tidings of salvation among all the nations of the world.

When I came to London fifty years ago, the first emphatic word I heard was "precedent." I was told that I must learn what were the customs of trade, for it was an important rule to do everything as it had been done before. Nevertheless, I observed that the men who succeeded were generally the men who got out of the ruts and opened up new paths for themselves—or rather who were led in new paths by the Guiding Hand of God.

Our kinsmen in America started their Transatlantic life free from precedent. The American is the Englishman plus members of other European nations, cut off from the past, placed in a new country, with new conditions and large possibilities, under the great law of human life that "Necessity is the mother of invention."

Our transplanted brother did, indeed, carry over with him some of his habits, which increased upon him and enslaved him. He smoked and chewed more than he had done at home. But when he became a Christian thoroughly awake to the obligation Divinely laid upon the Church of Christ that "this Gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the inhabited earth for a testimony unto all the nations; and then shall the end come," he began to throw aside every weight. The M.E. Church made it a condition that none of their ministers or missionaries should indulge in alcohol or tobacco, and that every member of the Church should be a pledged abstainer. No one can move among them without perceiving and feeling the benefit of the prohibition.

In 1869 I heard Alfred Cookman say, at a camp meeting in America, that after he had become a preacher, he continued his cigar. He often felt the incongruity of speaking to inquirers, with the smell of the weed in his breath and in his clothes, and his conscience was often painfully exercised. One day, with the cigar in his lips, the Spirit once more renewed his convictions, and assured him that although he might be a man of average power and usefulness, yet he never could be used with the power of the Spirit which was promised to them that obey Him. Mr. Cookman thought the cost of his idol too great, put it under his heel, and never smoked again. His remaining years of testimony were full of spiritual power, and he died saying the words preserved in the hymn, "Sweeping through the gates, washed in the blood of the Lamb."

There are few men of business, however up-to-date their management may be, who would not learn some useful things by spending an hour in the M.E. Publishing House at Madras, with Dr. Rudisill to explain his methods and their results. In eight years he mastered arts and sciences which ordinarily require forty years, in not half of which arts would one man in a thousand ever dream of attempting to become proficient. He has received certificates from experts in photographic processes, testifying that some of his work, after a brief time of study and practice, could not be distinguished from that of their best artists.

REV. A. W. RUDISILL, D.D.

It was found that the printing-office with its machinery came under the provisions of the Indian Factory Act, and alterations were required to be made under very pressing conditions as to time. This is Dr. Rudisill's account of what happened:—

To have this change made speedily I thought the only way out was to enlist the services of a skilled machinist. But I had had, a few months previous, a bit of experience. I had engaged one who, instead of really helping me with a calm delight and inflexible constancy, proceeded to extract rupees, and I was compelled to take up and complete the unfinished work.

I shuddered inwardly at the thought of being in the teeth and claws of such a rupee extractor a second time. Still, as it was the hottest time of the year in torrid Madras, and in addition to all other duties I was pastor of Vepery Methodist Episcopal Church, I did not feel like assuming this undertaking.

I called to see the manager of a large machine shop, and after stating what was needed asked him how long it would take. He explained that the first thing to do was to give out the contract for digging the ditch and carrying out the dirt; then the next contract would be with the stonecutters and the bricklayers; the bearings must be prepared, beltings lengthened, counter-shafting readjusted, a number of machines moved and reset, and numerous unforeseen things were to be done. Therefore it would take from four to six weeks. From past experiences I knew this meant at least two months of rupee extracting.

It was useless to urge that we were printing a weekly paper, were crowded with reports which could not be delayed, and such a lengthy interruption could not be thought of.

Without stopping to think what it meant, I said, "I can do it in one night without stopping the machinery." He looked at me as though I had said I would climb to the moon or something equivalent to it. I left that manager with a determination to do it in the time I said, if possible.

After a thorough study of what was to be done, and then mapping out the work for every hour, I put on nearly one hundred men to do this work, and from 4.30 a.m. one day to 8 a.m. the following morning, the shafting was lowered and the machines all running without interrupting the regular running of the Press. But through that scorching heat I never left the work until it was finished. Not only was the machinery running, but the rubbish was all cleared away.

When my machinist friend saw what had been done, he exclaimed, "Oh that's the way with you Americans!"

Moving rapidly through these million-peopled States of India, some under British, some under native rule, we have been profoundly impressed with the magnitude of the work to be done; the yearning of God's heart that it should be done; the imperative command of our Lord to his Church that it must be done; the ample provision of means and power for its accomplishment.

As Great Britain gladly avails herself of the inventive genius of her American sons in their varied machinery, may we not observe their ways when, under the guidance of God's Spirit, their wisest and ablest men strike out new paths and attain new results. And if we choose old paths, let them be the old paths of apostles and prophets, paths to walk in, not to stand still in and stop the way. And indeed the new country has plenty of new paths of men teaching perverse things, to draw disciples after them, paths carefully to be shunned.

The first and chief idea of Dr. Rudisill, before he came to India, and ever since, has been to spread throughout India and the world Bible booklets of 16pp., about two by three inches in size, containing small portions of the Word of Life, in every language in which that Word is printed.

This is one of the best and safest investments possible for those who wish to spend their money in extending the Gospel of God. The interest of the money is guaranteed by the Bible Booklet Society to be devoted to the free distribution of Bible Booklets, the principal forming an Endowment Fund.

By a combination of photo-engraving, electrotyping, booklet-binding machines, and the Hoe printing-presses, they can be turned out at the rate of one million six hundred thousand pages per day. Our friend, Rev. F. B. Meyer, wrote of these booklets in these columns in 1899:—

Thus mines are being laid throughout the land, by which the hoary systems of idolatry are being disintegrated, as the ice of Polar regions by the genial influences of the spring.

The work has the admiration of all who have examined it. One dollar will pay for the circulation of 50,000 pages. Communications or contributions may be made through The Christian.

"The Times of the Gentiles." Luke xxi. 24. Dan. ii. 31-47. Rom. xi.

IT is written in Acts xv. 18, "Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world." It was not left for the ages and dispensations to shape themselves, for God left nothing to chance or accident, but all is foreseen, foreknown, and foreprovided. We have all been pained by the creed of the late Cecil Rhodes. Yet one fundamental truth lay at the bottom: that the great and important thing for all who live in this world is to find out the line upon which God works, and to get on to that line. He knew not where to find that line. He had studied history, and observed nations, but he knew not the Word of God. It is in the Scriptures alone that we can find out how God works, and the line along which He works.

In Isaiah, xiv. 24, we have these blessed, assuring words:—"The Lord of Hosts hath sworn, saying, Surely as I have thought so shall it come to pass; and as I have purposed so shall it stand." We have to discover what it is that God is said to have thought, and what it is He is said to have purposed. So we take a view of the whole contents of Scripture, having the scope of the whole Bible before our eyes. Each portion of the Word of God we should be able to put into its proper place, saying, "This goes into that age, or this dispensation."

(A) The Primal Creation (Gen. i. 1) occupies only the first words of the Bible:—"In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." What that primal creation was no one can tell. How long it existed none can know. In 2 Peter iii. 6, it is spoken of as "the world that then was," the common interpretation being that it was the world before the flood. So we read in the fifth verse: "By the word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth standing out of the water and in the water." It was overflowed with water and covered with the deep, and in some way, and for some reason, became a ruin.

(B) Satan's First Rebellion (Gen. i. 2).—Before we come to this, we have to speak of a person introduced to us in chap. iii. in his activities not having a sphere of crimes and immoralities, but a religious sphere, controverting the word of the living God. There is no record of his fall in that chapter. He fell through pride, for that is spoken of in 1 Tim. iii. 6, "Lest, being lifted up with pride, he fall into the condemnation of the devil." There seems to be no other place for that fall but between the first and second verses of the Bible.

(C) The Earth Restored and Blessed (Gen. i. 2; ii.).—We do not know how long the primal creation lasted. For geologists who wish to settle it there is all the space they can desire. So we place a large full-stop after the first verse, to separate the first creation from the world that now is. Satan's first rebellion takes us to chapter iii. Then we have man's ruin. We are not told how long the rebellion lasted, for this history is very much condensed. We are too much inclined to feel that the things happened as rapidly as they are read; but this chapter tells us how the restored earth previously became a ruin.

(D) Satan Enters and the Consequence (Gen. iii.).—He deceived our first parents as to the word of God—"Hath God said?" "Ye shall not surely die." You may notice how Eve had prepared the way for being deceived. In repeating God's injunction she first omits a word, then adds a whole sentence, and then alters another word. Answering the tempter the first time, she omits the word "surely"; afterwards she adds a whole sentence, "neither shalt thou touch it"; then changes a certainty into a contingency, and instead of "Thou shalt surely die," said, "lest ye die."

(E) Mankind Dealt with as a Whole (Gen. iv.-xi.)—This takes us to the end of chapter xi. All through the intervening chapters mankind is dealt with as a whole.

(F) The Chosen Nation Called and Blessed (Gen. xi. 31-Mal.)—Then God made another nation. He took a man from the nation and made a chosen nation, and the remainder of the Old Testament is the history of that people. God said to Abraham: "I will bless thee, and thou shalt be a blessing." But Israel was not a blessing, and failed to make a right use of the gifts of God. When One came as the Son of Abraham and David, they were ready to say, "This is the Heir; come, let us kill Him, and seize on the inheritance." And you find that it was the religious section of the nation that did this; while professing to be very religious and punctilious, they rejected and crucified the Son of God.

(G) The First Advent (Rom. xv. 8).—If we want to know why the Lord Jesus Christ came into the world, most Roman Catholic books will tell us that He came to found the Church: that He appointed Peter to form the Church. You have two Scriptures in the Gospel of St. John concerning Christ's coming: "I came not to judge the world;" "For judgment I am come into this world." The one has relation to purpose, and the other to result. He came not to judge, but it was impossible for the perfect Son of Man to stand on the earth and not judge. As the result of his rejection, and the events which took place, He caused the Church to be founded. In Romans xv. 7, 8, we have the exact purpose of his coming into the world. "Christ received us to the glory of God. Now I say that Jesus Christ was a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God to confirm the promises made unto the fathers." He manifested and proved the Word of God. As Sir Robert Anderson has pointed out, it was not because He wrought miracles. Anti-Christ would work miracles, but Anti-Christ's miracles could only prove the truth of God's Word, and not its Divine meaning. But the miracles of Christ were the identical miracles that were promised. So that the Gospels, instead of being the beginning of the New Testament, are the conclusion of the Old. The Old Testament had been full of promises of the coming of Christ and the setting up of his Kingdom, and the Gospels and solemn records of the King and Kingdom close the Old Testament history.

(H) The Church Taken Out.—This is where we are to-day. The object of the Gospel is not to convert the world, but to take out the members of that body of which Christ is the glorious Head in heaven, and they the members of it on earth. We get some light on this subject in Ephesians iii. 8, 9, 10. You must remember that whenever you have the word "purpose," you are taken back before the primal creation; whenever the Church is in question it is "before the foundation of the world;" whenever the Kingdom is in question it is always "from the creation of the world." When we come to the Church, and the secret which was "hid in God," we have it "according to the eternal purpose which He purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord." So we speak here of the purpose of God with regard to the Church. God is making known to angelic powers something of his manifold wisdom. And what is the lesson which He is teaching them? He is teaching them this great truth—that all things exist through Christ; all things exist, and consist, and are held together, by Him. Apart from the Creator no created being can stand for a moment. Satan fell; man, placed in a position of wonderful privilege, was standing alone, but fell. Mankind fell by the judgment of the flood, and the judgment of the division of tongues. Then God created another nation, but Israel did not stand. Now the Church is being taken out. Will the Church stand? Yes; because it is in Christ. He can take the Church and use it as an object-lesson for angelic principalities and powers in heaven, showing to them that no created being can stand apart from the Creator.

(H) The Church Taken Up.—So this body of Christ is being taken out. What is the hope of this body? When are we going to get back to the new heavens and the new earth? We are waiting for the Lord to descend in the air to take his people to Himself, and be "for ever with the Lord." It is important to notice the distinction between the Church taken out, and the Church taken up. Let us imagine ourselves to be a company of godly Jews before the first Advent, looking for the consolation of Israel. We imagine we are reading in Micah v., "But thou Bethlehem Ephratah, though thou be little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall He come forth unto Me that is to be Ruler in Israel." So we say we must keep our eyes on Bethlehem, for it is perfectly clear that it is there the Messiah will appear. But we read on, and in Zechariah we find—"Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion; shout, O daughter of Jerusalem; behold thy King cometh unto thee." In one place it is Bethlehem, and in another Jerusalem. May we not have here an exact picture of the Church being taken up? We are waiting for Him to come forth from the Father's presence.

(G) The Second Advent.—From 1 Thess. v. 1 we learn that the taking up of the Church does not depend upon times and seasons, but wholly upon movements of the Lord Jesus Himself. "For yourselves know perfectly that the day of the Lord cometh as a thief in the night." When He comes for his people, it is not the day of the Lord (which is a day of darkness and wrath), but the day of Christ. Now notice the change of pronouns which follows: "For when they shall say, Peace and safety; then sudden destruction cometh upon them . . . and they shall not escape. But ye, brethren, are not in darkness that that day should overtake you as a thief. Ye are all the children of light."

(F) The Chosen Nation Recalled and a Blessing.—Israel was intended to be a blessing, but failed. The nation will be recalled and "build the old wastes; they will raise up the former desolations, and repair the waste cities, the desolations of many generations." "Ye shall be named the priests of the Lord; men shall call you the ministers of our God. Ye shall eat the riches of the Gentiles, and in their glory shall ye boast yourselves."

(E) Mankind dealt with as a whole.—Here you have the chief events of the Apocalypse. Mankind is to be brought into subjection and dealt with as a whole after Israel is recalled.

(D) Satan Bound and the Consequence.—We cannot imagine the awful condition of the world under the super-human power of anti-Christ, nor can we imagine what it will be when Satan is bound.

(C) The Earth Restored and Blessed.—This brings us to the days of the Millennium (Rev. xx. 4-6; Isa. xxxv.).

(B) Satan's Final Rebellion.—Why must Satan be loosed? For God to finish the lesson He is teaching the angelic beings—that none can stand apart from Christ. Israel will stand, and never fall. What about mankind? Will they stand? No, for glory cannot do what grace has not done. The moment Satan is loosed they listen to his words, and he deceives them. As thoroughly as he deceived our first parents he deceives mankind, proving that none can stand apart from the Creator. The Church will stand because it is in Christ, Israel also.

(A) The New Heavens and the New Earth.—So we end where we began, to find out the line along which God works and get on to that line, looking for "a new heaven and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness," and waiting for God's Son from heaven, to be taken up into glory.

Dublin Believers' Meetings.

ONCE more we have been privileged to hold a three days' conference at Merrion Hall, Dublin, commencing Tuesday, 27th ult. As in years gone by, they have proved times of refreshing blessing to many Dublin Christians, as well as to those who came from England, Scotland, and the country parts of Ireland, and the hearty fellowship and warm brotherly spirit was very manifest and appreciated by all. At the preliminary prayer meeting on Monday evening a loving message was read from Mr. Robert C. Chapman, of Barnstaple (in his 100th year).

Amongst other brethren who ministered the Word of God were Dr. Neatby, Messrs. Alexander Stewart (of Glasgow), A. J. Holiday, Alpheus Wilkes, George F. Trench, and F. S. Arnot. On the afternoon of the first and second days special subjects for consideration were arranged, and the third afternoon and evening were devoted to accounts of missionary work, when brethren from China, India, Straits, Central Africa, and the Argentine spoke. Mr. Alexander Stewart gave the closing address, speaking specially to young Christians on the subject of progress in the divine life as set forth in the Epistle to the Philippians.

One interesting incident during the meetings was the cordial interchange by telegraph of messages of greeting between the Irish Baptist Association (then meeting in Dublin) and the Believers' Meeting in Merrion Hall.

Southsea Convention.

THIS annual convention, which for seventeen years past has been convened by the late Rev. F. Baldey, was held this year in the "Welcome Mission," Portsmouth.

It commenced with a prayer-meeting on Saturday evening, May 17. This was led by Rev. F. Paynter, of Guildford, who gave an address on "The Fulness of the Blessing of the Gospel of Christ."

On Sunday there were four meetings. At the first Mr. Paynter took for his subject 2 Kings iv. 1-7. He said: "The Lord wants all you have in order that He may give you all He has for you. The widow had but one thing, and believing God's wonderful promise, she gave it, and although her neighbours might laugh at her collection of empty vessels, she obeyed God, and He gave her enough to pay her debts and for herself and sons to live on. Thus, if you give the Lord your all, He will fill you with the fulness of his Spirit, so that you are not only abundantly satisfied, but overflow in blessing to others."

In the afternoon, Mrs. R. C. Morgan, who has lately visited India, gave a very pathetic account of the condition of that land, especially dwelling upon the famine-stricken districts. Mr. R. C. Morgan followed, pressing the great need for workers and help in prayer and money. In the first evening service, Mr. R. C. Morgan gave a very striking evangelistic address upon "Poisoned Man and the Antidote." In words of earnestness and power he illustrated and enforced his subject from the eight signs given by Jesus Christ and recorded in St. John's Gospel. At the later meeting, Rev. F. Paynter spoke upon "The Fulness of the Spirit."

On Monday afternoon, both Mr. Morgan and Mr. Paynter spoke, and in the evening Revs. W. G. Pope and F. Paynter. This meeting was followed by one for quiet waiting upon the Lord, which was a season of great blessing.

On Tuesday, Rev. J. Gregory Mantle gave an address on "The Siege of Jericho." He said Joshua vi. 1 was Jericho to the eye of sense, while verses 2-7 represented Jericho to the eye of faith. Each one has a Jericho. It may be in your nature: remember the Saviour from all sin is Jesus Christ. It may be in your home: remember the prayer of faith can fell the walls. Don't get weary in going round; pray on, and the orders for the shout of victory will surely come, and your Jericho will fall.

In the evening, Mr. Mantle's subject was "The Art of the Potter." His key texts were Jer. xviii. 2-6; Isa. lxiv. 8; Rom. ix. 21. Rev. J. J. Luce followed on Rom. vi., "Dying with Christ." He dwelt particularly upon three words, "knowing, reckoning, yielding."

On Wednesday, Rev. A. D. Cope spoke upon "Progress in the Christian Life." Rev. J. J. Luce followed with "Quench not the Spirit." He said that the message that had come to him during the Convention was from the last speaker: "I can suffer, but I cannot sin; I can die, but I cannot sin."

In the evening the Bible readings were given by Captain Riley and Rev. J. J. Luce. The closing address on Thursday was given by Rev. W. L. Brimmell, chaplain of H.M. Forces. The seasons of quiet waiting upon the Lord were especially helpful, and many testified to definite blessing.

London Spectacle Mission Society.—During recent years the number of applicants for relief to the London Spectacle Mission Society has greatly increased, last year no fewer than 1,516 applications being made. The ninth annual report indicates the efforts which are being made to meet these growing needs. A new departure last year was the opening of a centre in North London. For this purpose the vicar of St. Anne's, Finsbury Park, has allowed the use of the church room in Palmerston Road. Although only in its infancy, the centre promises to become as useful and self-supporting as the other branches. There are now four working centres of the Mission in London, and the gratitude of the applicants for spectacles is often expressed in words of touching testimony to the benefit and relief obtained. Miss C. Waring, 197, Sutherland Avenue, Maida Vale, W., continues her duties as secretary.

Mrs. Meredith's Institutions.

AT the annual meeting in support of the well-known institutions associated with the name of the late Mrs. Meredith, each of the three departments were dealt with in turn, each being supported by its own chairman and speaker.

THE PRISON MISSION.

First came the report of the Prison Mission carried on at Clapham Road. Rev. G. W. Keeling naturally made reference to the losses sustained by the deaths of the esteemed founder, Mrs. Meredith, and of that earnest supporter of the home mission work, Lord Rookwood. Mr. Keeling showed that the simple but effective principles which have resulted so encouragingly in the past are well maintained:—(1) work for every woman; (2) sufficient pay to enable each to support herself, the whole operations, of course, being carried on a Christian basis. Applications are continually received from prison governors and chaplains who desire to secure admittance for cases. In all 126 women were employed during the past year, while many Gospel and temperance meetings were held, with fruitful results.

Sir Robert Anderson, who presided, spoke highly of efforts put forth, and showed that their value received the cordial recognition of the Home Office. Proceeding, the speaker said that, face to face with practical need, such as that of discharged prisoners, philanthropy must not evaporate in sentiment. Perhaps there never was such a shallow age as the present, but let not that hinder or discourage in meeting the claims of the suffering and sorrowful. The secret of success in life is practical dealing with details; the world is full of people who are always going to begin "to do something." Here is a woman discharged from prison; who is going to help her? Oh, everybody. No, "everybody" means "nobody." She is going to be helped by the woman who is actually there at the prison gate, to receive and welcome her. She is then treated, by this organization, not as a prisoner or a nun, to be kept shut away, but is provided with work whereby she may support herself, and all with the aim that she may go on to a new life.

Sir Mark Stewart, M.P., who followed, said that the principles of the mission have been taken up in various parts of the world, notably in Canada, where an extended system is carried on with splendid results.

PRINCESS MARY VILLAGE HOMES.

The children in the admirable Homes at Addlestone are gathered from various sources. Some are the children of criminals; others are committed by magistrates or brought by police court missionaries; while yet others are rescued by Christian workers from circumstances fraught with moral danger. No fewer than 182 have been helped, taken in, and trained for domestic service during the year. Speaking from the chair, Lord Aberdare pointed to the contingent of bright young girls from the Homes, who were present in the meeting as excellent testimony to the value of the work.

THE LEBANON NURSES.

Rev. Francis Paynter, who presided, spoke earnest words in behalf of the Balkleen Lebanon Nurses' Mission, and Mr. Keeling gave a very encouraging account of the medical operations. Patients go to the hospital from long distances, and the buildings are greatly needing enlargement. Pastor W. Fuller Gooch, summing up the afternoon's proceedings, described the institution as "evangelical throughout."

Aged Dissenting Ministers. — The annual meeting of the Society for the Relief of Aged and Infirm Protestant Dissenting Ministers was held at the Sunday School Union House, 56, Old Bailey, on Tuesday, last week, the chair being occupied by Mr. W. Lepard Smith. The report showed an income for the year of £1,031, and an expenditure of £889, £846 of which was distributed among seventy-four aged and infirm ministers. The secretary of the Society is Rev. P. G. Scorey, Perryfield Road, Crawley, Sussex.

Welcome Home to Dr. Harry Guinness.

An additional interest attached to this year's anniversary of the Regions Beyond Missionary Union, held at Exeter Hall on Monday, opportunity being taken of the occasion for extending a hearty welcome to Dr. Harry Guinness on his return to the homeland. The afternoon meeting was under the presidency of Mr. T. A. Denny, and was a season of rejoicing as well as thanksgiving to God for the favour and sparing mercy which He has caused to follow his servant while abroad.

In the course of a few genial remarks the chairman recalled his early associations with the Guinness family and their devoted labours, and made touching reference to the painful and protracted illness through which Dr. Harry passed last year.

A FRUITFUL YEAR.

The report of Harley College, read by the the principal, Rev. Forbes Jackson, M.A., was of an encouraging nature. A special feature of the year had been the training of all the students at the one centre, Cliff College being no longer used for that purpose. Both in their studies and the preaching of the Gospel the students have given general satisfaction. The course has been extended from three to four years, the young men in the college during the year numbering forty-nine. More applications for the services of the men for supplying pulpits have been received than in any former years, and in addition to these engagements the students have carried through a number of open-air missions. Of the students who have completed their training and settled in the foreign field during the year, some have gone to South and North Africa, the backwoods of Canada, and South America. Three German students have received appointments—two to labour in East Africa and one to work among the Cameroons. Others have gone to Argentina, India, the Congo and China.

Rev. E. H. Ellis, pastor of the East London Tabernacle, followed with cordial words of welcome to Dr. Harry Guinness. Being in Adelaide during Dr. Harry's mission there, he had had opportunity of witnessing some of the remarkable gatherings which had taken place, and the cheering results which followed, hundreds being dealt with in the inquiry rooms. Having spent ten years in the Colonies, Mr. Ellis spoke with some assurance of many hopeful features of Colonial church life. Turning to the homeland, he spoke of the deplorable conditions under which the poor of the Metropolis live, and strongly denounced the sweating system and kindred evils.

It was with considerable satisfaction that Rev. F. B. Meyer announced the fact that the year closed with the institutions free from debt. The £3,000 needed to complete the cost for the new steamer had been raised in Australia through the efforts of Dr. Harry Guinness, and the vessel is now being reconstructed on the Congo. The cost of furnishing, &c., has yet to be met.

"WHAT HATH GOD WROUGHT?"

With remembrance of the past year's experience, and the restoration of his son, Dr. Grattan Guinness was led to exclaim, "What hath God wrought!" He recalled the circumstances of the inception of the college, and the unique growth of its institutions, until over a thousand workers have gone forth into fifty different countries. Quite an ovation awaited Dr. Harry Guinness, and some minutes elapsed before he was allowed to speak. His first word was a request that the great audience should join him in singing the familiar chorus, "I believe God answers prayer." This having been done with much heartiness, the speaker related the circumstances which led up to his going abroad for the purpose of regaining his lost health and strength. God had a higher purpose for that voyage to serve, and one outcome had been the adding of some two thousand souls to the Church. Many hearts were touched as he vividly pictured memorable scenes witnessed at the gatherings in Geelong, Sydney, Melbourne, Tasmania, &c., and proceeded to cite some incidents of fervent solicitude for the unsaved on the part of converts. One notable feature of the Geelong Convention and the evangelistic mission of Dr. H. Guinness was the remarkable and unseen working of the Holy Ghost, with the absence of any strain or unreasonable effort in the presentation of the Gospel. In several instances whole families passed from darkness to light.

Another meeting was held in the evening, when addresses of welcome were given, and Dr. Harry Guinness spoke on "Harvest work in Australia and New Zealand."

The St. Giles' Mission.

The meeting of the St. Giles' Christian Mission, which to many is chiefly known through its far-reaching work on behalf of discharged prisoners, took place at the Mansion House on Monday afternoon. Mr. Sheriff Marshall, in place of the Lord Mayor, presided. Alderman T. V. Strong, in a concise statement in regard to the work carried on, said the facts and statistics were both satisfactory and cheering. Reference was made to the time—about ten years ago—when the accounts showed an adverse balance of over £1,000. The close of 1891, however, showed a credit balance of £2,548, including a legacy of £2,000 which had been invested. It was maintained that the figures speak volumes in regard to the painstaking way in which the funds have been expended. The mission had also been extended, and had made good its claim for continued support. It would be a poor return for the workers' efforts if there was any falling off of supplies, and debt had always been dreaded as a veritable plague.

In some extracts from the annual report, it was remarked that the work showed the grace of continuity. One year was very like another; but a work which had to do with many thousands of the poor was sure to have facts and incidents associated with it which were of interest to such as were optimists rather than pessimists. The Gospel is preached at all times, and is recognised as the one remedy for sin. The large number of voluntary helpers are hard-working people, who count it a privilege to show that they have been "saved to serve."

AT THE PRISON GATE.

As regards the prison gate work which had been commenced in 1877, an average of 20,000 men and lads had partaken of a free breakfast during the week-day mornings of each year. That meal was not pauperising, as some suggested; it rather bore witness to the fact that someone had been thinking of, and providing for them, and were anxious for their welfare. These breakfasts, and Mr. Wheatley's visits to the prisons, helped ex-prisoners to get into honest employment. Much is also done to relieve the misery of the wives and children of prisoners In dealing with friendless juvenile offenders they began as near as possible at the beginning, and assistance had been given to thousands of boys who had been in danger of becoming permanently vicious and criminal. If this one branch alone had been engaged in, the mission would have had a strong and important claim on the sympathy and financial support of all who are anxious for the creation of honest citizens. An average of 500 boys were annually received into homes; while as many homeless and destitute women are also cared for. During last year 20,956 discharged prisoners were provided with a free breakfast; 5,085 signed the temperance pledge; 4,836 were assisted to obtain an honest footing in the world; and 311 convicts were also assisted on their release from penal servitude. The more general work included the holding of 4,167 Gospel services.

The Chairman congratulated Mr. Wheatley on the large number of friends at the meeting. Excellent work was being done; and it was a very great satisfaction, that all was so well carried on. The number relieved, or assisted, showed what kind of work was being done, and it had the sympathy of the Lord Mayor. Speaking as the treasurer, Mr. F. A. Bevan moved the first resolution, having reference to the blessing which had attended the work, especially during the past year. He was personally acquainted with the work, and had watched it for years. The Mission was not in favour in some quarters; but when he had asked for explanations he had learned that there was fullest sympathy with what was done for discharged prisoners; what was not so appreciated was the way in which destitute people were relieved; but when further explanations of that complaint were asked for no answer was returned.

The resolution was seconded by Sir Robert Anderson, who also referred to the criticisms, which sometimes might be hypercritical. If the work was done, not as a fad, but in an earnest manner, they must not pick holes. He commended the work on two grounds, first, its aims, and secondly, on account of the personality of Mr. Wheatley, the value of whose efforts among the young could not be exaggerated.

Other speakers were Sir W. H. Quayle Jones and Sir James Vaughan. Mr. Wheatley also made a brief statement. They had made no alteration. If a case was deserving it was relieved; if not, it was turned away. In regard to the criticisms, he thought that those who did their work honestly had no time to find fault with others. He thanked the friends for coming, and he also thanked those employers of labour who helped them by taking their boys.

The Navvy Mission Society.

A very gratifying report of successful effort was presented at the annual meeting of this organization, held at the Church House on Thursday, Rev. B. S. Tupholme (Rural Dean of Ealing) presiding. The question of maintaining sufficient annual income for the work was shown to be an anxious one, and the committee felt it necessary to resolve on the dismissal of two of its missionaries. On hearing of this, two friends of the Society made a generous offer of £50 to obviate this necessity in one case.

Numerous openings for extended work are now before the Society, and some of the greatest contracting firms in the country are liberally helping, and the men are also contributing in various ways. The committee call attention to the great works for railway communication across London which will bring so many navvies to the Metropolis, and the need which arises for giving thought to their spiritual interests. Reference was made to numerous interesting cases of navvies, whose lives under God have been transformed through the Society's work in England, and have become centres of good influence in the Colonies.

After the Chairman had acknowledged the hearty support the Society receives from contractors, Canon McCormick contrasted the spiritual destitution among navvies in former days with the more adequate provision now made for them by the Society. Encouraging accounts of the direct work of the Mission were given by Colonel H. V. Hunt and Rev. R. Grimston.

Good News for Christian Tourists.

The Christian Tourist Association will meet a long and keenly-felt demand. In these days of extensive travel it is particularly refreshing for spiritually minded people to find opportunities of mingling pleasure with edification, freed from associations that are out of harmony with their higher aspirations and ideals. Freedom from questionable entertainments, abstention from Sunday travelling, Bible readings and Christian fellowship, the visiting of mission stations, are among the advantages placed within their reach, to which, we assume, may be added strictly temperance principles. These are high aims not always easy to realize when persons drawn from the four winds are thrown together; as it is frequently found that some, not entirely in sympathy with such restrictions, will join similar parties for the sake of the economical advantages afforded. But the management of this new association is sufficiently strong to take a firm stand and hold its ground, and herein will be found an important element in its success. The office is at 10, Paternoster Row, E.C., where full particulars may be obtained of the secretary.

THE MILDMAY CONFERENCE.

MAY 27-29.

AFTER the opening session, an account of which appeared in our last issue, the attendances in the large hall were fairly maintained. The Hon. R. Moreton presided, in the absence of Lord Polwarth through bereavement, and the various speakers were heard with warm sympathy, the afternoon Bible-readings being a deeply interesting feature. The subject of the Conference was "Things Concerning the King." The daily themes were—Tuesday: The King Predicted; Wednesday: The King Rejected; Thursday: The King Crowned.

TUESDAY.

The King of Love.

By Rev. J. M. WILLOUGHBY.

THE people of Israel felt, and you and I feel, that what we need is no abstraction, but a Person who will reveal Himself as Leader, as Ruler, and as King. If the conception becomes narrower as we draw towards the climax—the Son of Man, the Son of Abraham, the Son of David, the Son of God—in another sense it becomes exceedingly broad. What is promised implicitly in the earlier part of the Old Testament, becomes very full in the later part; so that the difficulty is not to tell what the Old Testament says concerning the Son of David as the Messiah and King, but rather to discover how to put the leading lines of that Kingship. One text I think is really sufficient, without making reference after reference—Luke i. 31-33. I have sometimes thought that the term higher criticism was a bold one; but I have chosen the criticism of the Angel Gabriel on the Old Testament, and I shall call that the highest criticism.

I. The typical import of the history of Kingship in the Old Testament. There can be no greater mistake in Bible reading—especially Bible reading with the right object, finding its spirit in the testimony to the Lord Jesus Christ—than to restrict prophecy to a few expressions or texts. I am not depreciating these texts for a moment. I have often felt like the Ethiopian eunuch when he took the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah and asked, "Does the prophet speak of himself or of some other man?" I find sufficient testimony for head, for heart, and for conscience to make me rejoice in God my Saviour. On the other hand we have the example of the New Testament for seeing far more than that in the Old Testament, a book which is itself a prophecy of the King. The serpent lifted up in the wilderness and the manna are types of Christ—nay, He claims them Himself. The Epistle to the Hebrews may be called the happy hunting ground of those who wish to see how the Holy Spirit interprets the Old Testament and finds Christ therein.

THE COMPLETION OF THE INCOMPLETE.

Christlieb looks at the God of Abraham, who offered up his only beloved son Isaac; at the God of Isaac, who was content, unmurmuring, to be offered up to God; at the God of Jacob, who was the founder of the first Israel—and finds there a reference by type to the blessed Trinity. We look down the pages of the Old Testament and find such striking things as this—Moses, incomplete, followed by Joshua, whose name is Jesus; Elijah, incomplete, followed by Elisha, whose name is "My God is Salvation"—types of that fulfilment which was seen when John the Baptist, incomplete, was followed by the only complete One. Teaching about kingship is wonderfully complete in the Old Testament. You can divide the Old Testament as a prediction of the King into three—Prophecy, the Revealer; Kingship, the Ruler; Priesthood, the Mediator: and these may be summed up in the word, Redeemer.

The first king was given to Israel on the demand of the people, and they were very much rebuked for making the demand. Yet in Deut. xvii. 14, we find that the kingship was all being prepared for beforehand, that there was in the mind of God the foresight of this kingship being established at some time. I suppose I shall be considered by the critics foolish for saying that Deuteronomy is before the first Book of Samuel; but I am content to be foolish in the company of our Lord Jesus Christ. I have thought that our friends who so severely criticise the Old Testament do not credit the powers for evil with great perception; for in his use of the Old Testament the devil showed that he was no higher critic. I feel very sad that such acuteness, so much ingenuity, should be spent in striving to turn the Sword of the Spirit into Brummagem tin-plate; and we can only hope that in the end all this will be turned into vindication of that which they now assail.

THE FAILURE OF THE EARTHLY KINGSHIP.

God had provided for the kingship beforehand, yet when the people demanded a king they demanded wrongly. They were anticipating his will; and so they got a king not after God's heart, but one after their own heart. When Saul the failure had finished his time, came David, chosen of God, to fulfil God's Word. Perhaps the most striking thing in the history of the kingship of Judah and Israel is its failure. No sooner was the son of David set upon the throne than, in spite of his Divine wisdom, which he neglected, idolatry was tolerated in the land, and his injudiciousness alienated the greater part of the tribes from their allegiance. We find Jehoshaphat striving to remedy the evil, but though there were several good kings they never did set it right.

Even a king like Hezekiah, with the help of an Isaiah, was unable to touch the heart of the people; and, climax of climaxes, a king like Josiah could for his own sake only die to be happy. His reformation was inwardly so rotten that even while he lived the prophets could see no hope in it. Why was all this failure? What does it mean? I think it was because the kingship is to be at least as typical in its negative as in its positive sense. Although we are to seek for partial types of the kingship as it should be, we are to see in the kings, as a whole, their great failure.

II. Ideal kingship as put forward in the Old Testament prophecy generally. It is a very striking thing that David himself (Psalm lxxii.) should see that it would not be sufficient to have a king such as he might hope for Solomon to be. Prophet after prophet, though they spoke of the Rod out of the stem of Jesse, knew that any mere successor such as they had seen would be insufficient.

THE IDEAL KING MUST BE REDEEMER.

(1) Their ideal king was to be a Redeemer. He must be able to do what Josiah failed to do—able to make the people holy. We have the same thought in Zechariah ix. 9, and we may sum up the first requisite of this ideal King by saying that He must be a Redeemer, joining together the ideas of kingship and priesthood. In Christ we have the necessary fulfilment of these two requirements, and no ordinary king could be mediator and ruler. Turn to Micah ii. 13, and, oh, how full is the conception. So our Lord, in his first sermon at Nazareth, could tell the people there that He was come to bring, literally to preach, deliverance to the captive (Isaiah lxi. 1-3).

(2) He must be an everlasting King. If the first conception means unlimited power to break the power of sin, this means everlasting duration as well as power. The angel's words tell us that the Kingdom is to be without end. Note, King is a relative term, and requires people. When we speak of the King ruling for ever and ever, we must be everlasting, too, for the idea to be beautiful. As it was not sufficient for the King to be holy like Josiah, but able to make his people holy; He must be able to fulfil the hopes of the saints of old, and to give them everlasting life. He must fulfil the hope of the Psalmist (xvii. 15). "I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness"—in holiness and everlasting life.

(3) Another conception is needed to complete the Kingship. He must be a Light to lighten the Gentiles, as well as to be the glory of his people Israel. His dominion must stretch from sea to sea. From Elijah being sent to the woman of Sarepta, from Elisha healing Naaman, from Jonah's mission to Nineveh, with their hints of a wider covenant, we go on to the Book of Zephaniah (called so well a compendium of all the prophets) and right up to Zechariah. The whole of prophecy is the promise that the Seed of the woman, the Son of Abraham, the Son of David, shall be not only a King and Messiah of Judaism, but a King for all the nations of the world.

What are the lessons of this Sonship of David?

A SIMPLE CREED.

(a) For our own souls how should we sum up these three conceptions of the King—Redeemer, Life Giver, Ruler of all? One said to me, "Do you know what my creed is?

> The King of Love my Shepherd is,
> Whose goodness faileth never."

The first four words sum up what we have been saying. The ideal King is a King of Love. If we know this King, if He has thus been predicated to us by the Holy Spirit, surely the longing in our hearts will take us right to Himself, and the star will point to where He lies. We shall ask, "Where is He that is born King of the Jews? for we have come to worship Him" with the gold of our loving homage; to offer him the frankincense of a pure worship, recognizing the mystery of godliness; to offer Him the myrrh of a tear-washed heart, which has experienced that godly sorrow of which Paul spoke.

(b) He is a King because He commands. This kingship is a dread thing, or it is nothing. The word for the preacher is not "priest," but "herald." The apostles went forth to herald, and you and I are to herald salvation. The Magi came seeking a king; we know how Paul found Athens with its altar "to the unknown God"—oh, pathetic cry, showing that the man of Macedonia was a real messenger sent of God. These are but instances of the cry of the world, going up inarticulately, it may be; but if our hearts have any of the love of parenthood, the inarticulate nature of the cry will make us listen.

"Lo, I am with you alway. Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations," baptizing them in the name of God the Father—God of Love; God the Son—King, Redeemer; God the Holy Ghost—Life Giver and Sanctifier. Dare we disobey the King we love?

The Beauty of the King.

(Isa. xxxiii. 17.)

By Rev. F. S. WEBSTER.

Jerusalem was surrounded by the armies of Assyria. The temporary relief gained when Hezekiah paid 300 talents of silver and thirty talents of gold—emptying the royal treasury, and stripping the temple of its vessels and ornaments — had soon come to an end. Sennacherib had broken the contract, and had sent his chief envoy, Rabshakeh, with another army, demanding the surrender of the city.

But there was a new spirit in the hearts of the people. There was no thought this time of an alliance with Egypt; and the prophet, instead of being an object of contempt and ridicule, was the first to be referred to. His advice was sought and followed. There was a new spirit of confidence in God. This second attack of the Assyrian, instead of turning them to despair, roused them to defiance.

What had brought the change? It was God's forgiveness of the nation. They looked upon the departure of the Assyrian before as a plain evidence that God's favour was still upon them, and as a remarkable confirmation of the truth of what Isaiah had declared. The prophet had a different people to deal with, and his encouraging words did not fall upon deaf ears. You have his encouragement in the first verse, a plain forecast of the destruction to fall upon the attacker; then, after a short prayer, a graphic picture of the ambassador of peace who found peace so soon broken.

From the tenth verse the chief subject is the sufficiency of the championship of Jehovah, and how, as the result, there was perfect deliverance for the people of God. So the chapter closes with two precious promises of victory and forgiveness—(1) That the lame should take the prey, and (2) the people of the land should be forgiven their iniquity.

EVERYTHING CHANGED BY GOD'S PRESENCE.

God's presence was going to change everything. They need not fear. Of late they had seen the king clad in sack-cloth and ashes, as he wept before God because of the sin of the nation. They should see him ride forth in glorious attire, in royal procession. They had seen Jerusalem encompassed by armies. They should see "the land of far-spreading distances." The tents of the invader should disappear, and "thine eyes shall see Jerusalem a quiet habitation." The "fierce nation" should no more oppress the people of God. Jehovah alone was left, the sufficient defence of his people, in their midst like a noble river undertaking the safety and supply of his own.

The primary application of the text by no means exhausts its deep meaning. A greater than Hezekiah is here. The King in his beauty is the Prince of Peace, the King of Love. We have seen Him for us mocked, buffeted, handcuffed. We shall see Him in his royal beauty. By faith we shall see Him crowned with glory and honour. Fierce dogs, far worse than those of the Assyrian, seek to overthrow the city of God. The spoiler is come up against the Church of Christ. Oh, how we lament the inroads made by sin, by Sabbath-breaking, by want of reverence for God's holy Day and his holy Word! How we lament the change in the habits of the people—families that were brought up godly, Bible-reading, church-loving Christians: now look at things so very different. Oh, how we lament that Jerusalem is so hemmed in by the invader, the object of fierce and cruel attack; but "thine eyes shall see Jerusalem a quiet habitation."

MORE THAN A CLEAN SLATE.

The Lord is coming again, and when He comes his Church shall be glorious and shall reign with Him. This is the deeper meaning of the passage. The story of the siege is only a parable of the life of God in the soul of man. God's forgiveness does wonders for us. It is much more than a clean slate. It cancels the past; and it fills the soul with new courage, new faith, and new hope. It meant new national life to the kingdom, and it means new spiritual life for the Church at any moment, when a vision of the King in his beauty bursts upon her eyes.

Not that there will be no temptation. The Assyrian will return to the attack; but when we have seen the King in his beauty, we have no fear as to the issue of the conflict. This is a personal matter. It needs the unveiling of the Holy Spirit, the touch of the finger of God. Books do not enlighten us. Bible-readings alone cannot open our eyes. The finger of God must touch the blind eyes. This, please God, shall be to us the Mount of Transfiguration. We shall see no man but Jesus only.

(1) The beauty of the King passes all man's understanding. There is the beauty of his personal character. Then there is his unique sinlessness. By that He stands out as different from all men, proved to be the very Son of God. There are beautiful characters in history, but there is none that you can put alongside Jesus of Nazareth. There is no flaw in Him, no stain—it is absolute sinlessness. Thereby He stands out unique and supreme, the moral King of men. Read the Gospel story till the beauty shines out before you—the beauty of his truth and his goodness, the beauty of that purity which, in its incandescent heat, throws off all that would defile.

EYES BLIND TO THE VISION.

The beauty of his perfect sympathy—have you recognised it? They did not all recognise it when He was upon the earth. There were some who stumbled over his lowly parentage, his obscure social position, his ignominious death. To some He was "as a root out of a dry ground." For them He had "no form nor comeliness," and there was "no beauty that they should desire Him." Christ has no beauty in the eyes of the carnal and the worldly. It is the fashion to pretend to admire the Lord Jesus Christ. People like a great deal of what He said, but they will not obey Him. They will not listen to what He said about the Word of God. They would sooner trust their own intellects. They would sooner trust their own righteousness than the blood He shed. Christ pours contempt upon the carnal wisdom and self-sufficiency which thinks that the world needs only a little more education and a few improvements. Let us learn to see that the beauty is that of truth and grace, of One who will by no means spare the Pharisee, but whose heart bursts with compassion over every penitent sinner.

The beauty set forth in the brazen serpent, in the scapegoat, in all the sacrifices is, just to give infinite value to the perfect Sacrifice. A Lamb as it had been slain is the centre of Heaven's adoration. Is He the centre of your adoration? Does your heart overflow with joy as you say, "He loved me, and gave Himself for me"? Do you love the old hymns? Is that blood-stained cross on Calvary the most beautiful picture in the world? Is the Lamb sacrificed for sin to you the object of a beauty which entrances, and captivates, and inspires you?

PREVAILING INTERCESSION.

There is the beauty of prevailing intercession. He is not now on the cross. He was on the cross, but is now on the throne, exalted, crowned. From that vantage ground of infinite resource He looks down into your life and my life to see how the battle is faring with us; and He looks down not merely to behold from a distance, but to come into our lives with his uttermost salvation, to be at our side to behold, to control, to bless, to save to the uttermost, because "He ever liveth to make intercession for us."

(2) To see the King is the very essence of personal religion. The world cannot understand the things of God. It cannot receive the Spirit of God, because it seeth him not. There is a veil of sense hanging over the sight of the world. It is when the veil of sense is burst that the vision of faith, that the victory of love begins.

You remember the cry, "Lord, show us the Father, and it sufficeth us." It was a noble utterance, in that Philip realized that to see God would satisfy the heart of man, that such a vision would solve all his troubles; that it would give strength, and endurance, and patience, and victory. It was a noble utterance in its faith in the efficacy of a vision of God. Yet Philip ought not to have lacked that knowledge; and so the Saviour replied in a rebuke, very tender but piercing—"Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known Me, Philip? He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father." Is your knowledge of Christ any more perfect than Philip's was? Are you still embarrassed, bewildered, perplexed, heavy-laden? Have you had your Bible since you were a child, and yet have not seen Him? "Have I been so long before you in the Word, and in the preaching, shining before you in the lives of my consecrated servants, and yet hast thou not known Me?"

How are we to see the King in his beauty? By a baptism of the Holy Spirit, by the Holy Spirit coming upon us, and filling us, and opening our eyes. Where shall we see the vision? I answer, in the Bible, in the very Book of God. You remember the words of Habakkuk, "Write the vision and make it plain upon tables." Thank God the vision is written. Every page of this blessed Book is a window into heaven. You never read the Book aright unless it helps you to see the King.

WEDNESDAY.

Why the King was Rejected.

By Rev. J. Q. A. HENRY, D.D.

"He came unto his own, and his own received Him not" (John i. 11).

The Bible notion of the sovereignty of God is very largely differentiated from our ordinary conception of kingship. Our knowledge of God, gathered from Scripture, takes the form of a progressive revelation; and the sovereignty of God is to be interpreted in the light of his Fatherhood. Those of us who have accepted Christ as our Saviour, and look up to God as our Father, cherish this blessed notion of Him as our Sovereign and King; He is Father-King, and also Sovereign-Father.

The rejection of a King is always a matter of the first significance, and especially if that King should prove to be the rightful owner and supreme sovereign of the realm. Needless to say, God is the sole Owner of the world. He is also the supreme Proprietor and Perfect King of the world. Hence his rejection on the part of his creature is not only an act of indignity and impiety, but of imbecility as well. God came to earth in the person of Christ, and was rejected; the King was disowned, notwithstanding that He came on a mission of mercy and help, not to oppress his people, but to bless them.

CHRIST'S MISSION.

Christ came to make known our Father-King, to announce his just claim upon the sons of men. We are his children, the creatures of his power; we belong to him by the triple tie of creation, providential care, and redemption. Jesus came to make known to us God's claim upon our time and talents and services and resources, in view of his fatherly and kingly character. He came, moreover, to vindicate God's love to men, to tell us that the Father-King "so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." He came to plant the cross in the midst of the universe, the cross to penetrate to the nadir of our degradation, and the nethermost point of our woe, and also to reach to the highest heaven where God is in his holiness and love. He came to plant the cross whose arms should extend from the east to the west, and embrace all men, clasping them together as subjects of the divine love and the divine Father.

Yet, despite the beneficent and merciful and self-sacrificing mission upon which the King came, He was rejected, rejected in his own home, by members of his own family, by his townsmen and fellow-citizens—"He came unto his own, and his own received Him not."

The nation which should first have tasted the blessings of the King's rule, formally, deliberately, and fatally rejected Him. In this the Jews were joined by the Herodians and the representatives of the Roman power, so that the entire world in epitome, the generation into which he was born, combined to reject and destroy his sovereign sway. This great fact of the rejection of Christ marks a distinct epoch, and constitutes the turning point in the history of the world.

CHARACTER AND CLAIMS OF THE KING.

Why was Christ rejected as King? First and foremost, on the ground of his sinless character; the holiness of Christ stands out on the page of history as well as on the page of Scripture as one of the most sublime facts in the experience of the world. The sinlessness of Christ, the holiness of the Son of God, is not only the attraction of those who love and submit to his authority and power, but carries repulsion in the small and ungrateful souls of those who reject Him. Christ was truthful; sin is false. Christ was spiritual; his people were carnal and besotted. The Kingdom He came to establish was pure and holy; it met with hostility on the part of those who loved self-indulgence, pride, self-will; and the malignity of the human heart expressed itself in the crucifixion of the Lord of life and glory.

Another reason for the rejection of the King is found in his august claim to be the Saviour of man. He came to open up a new and living way into the presence of God; the Kingdom was to be characterized by justice, peace, and joy.

The conception which He presented of life, and empire, and authority, was beyond the people to whom his Message was addressed. It bewildered and confused them, and they repudiated the King and his reign. Moreover, He came as a unique personality, resultant from the union of perfect man with perfect God, and to fulfil a unique mission in the world as Saviour and King. The people failed to grasp the significance of the Visitor; they refused to accept the sovereignty and the service which He sought to render. Christ was rejected largely because "in Him dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead bodily." The people saw the son of Mary, but not the Son of God. They saw one in the form of a servant, but not the King immortal—God tabernacling in human flesh for the redemption of the world.

Christ was not only rejected because of his claim to be equal to the Father, but still further because of the demand that He made; He demanded homage, uncompromising obedience, loyalty, abandonment to his truth and will. Moreover, he came to reveal the myriad-sided wisdom and truth of Almighty God, to be the supplement and complement of every human soul—all classes, and sections, and temperaments. The welcome He gave to all sorts and conditions of people was not appreciated by the Jewish nation; in their ignorance and intolerance, they could not grasp the idea of such a cosmopolitan King.

THE PENALTY OF REJECTION.

What shall be said of the penalty of this rejection? If we look back over the New Testament history, and the subsequent annals of the world, we can discover something of the penalty which has followed the rejection of the King. This penalty has not been arbitrary, but inevitable; not capricious, but natural. It has followed necessarily upon the rejection and refusal and denial of the King on the part of the people to whom He came. The light failed; the opportunity closed; the day of visitation came to an end; and inevitable retribution followed. Penalties were visited upon the family, the town, the city, and the social and religious life of the generation that rejected the King. There you have an idea of what may be, in the last anaylsis and experience, the penalty of all who, at any time, reject the King; they will in turn be rejected by the King, and the blessing, and the ministry, and the power, and the glory, with which He would cover his own, shall be given to others who are willing to receive and accept and obey.

Men and women are responsible according to the light against which they sin. Oh! the light against which men are sinning, not only the light of the Cross, but also the glory of the Resurrection, and the light of nearly two thousand years of Christian experience—in the face of an open Bible and a Christian Sabbath. Millions and millions of people sin against the light of God and truth, and become partners with those who rejected the King when He came to his own.

ECCLESIASTICAL AND NATIONAL SINS.

What shall be said concerning Christ's rejection in matters ecclesiastical? Are we not held by many things that are not according to the language of the Book? We used to say that "The Bible and the Bible only is the religion of Protestants"; we were loyal to the Book, and sought its distribution among the sons of men. How much have we criticised it, and cut it, and crippled it—crucified the Word of God! We substitute many things for Christ—now it is the Church, now a creed, now a ceremony, now clothes. All sorts of things are put in the place of the Word of God, until we fill religion with horrible misconceptions of God and of Jesus Christ, and find ourselves asking men and women to accept them instead of the Saviour. We need a new reformation, a reformation to bring us back again to the doctrine of justification by faith, and of the sovereign power of God.

Then as to our national life? A nation has responsibility and conscience; it may commit sin, and such things must be punished. Inasmuch as nations, as such, do not project themselves into the future, national sins must be punished here and now, if at all. What shall be said regarding the national rejection of Jesus Christ as King? We have excluded Him from art and literature; from journalism and commerce; from politics and government; from legislatures and parliaments; and we have said, "You may be King in things which we are pleased to term sacred, but in things which we are pleased to term secular, you can have neither part nor lot." Here we suffer the Son of God to reign; but there we do not. His sovereign power, however, belongs to all parts and spheres of life; yet he is only allowed to reign as King of kings and Lord of lords in the spiritual department of things.

We are rejecting Him as King in our national life, and permitting as well as protecting a great many of his most relentless foes, such as covetousness, "which is idolatry," and drunkenness, with its horrible debaucheries. Think of impurity, gambling, and those other black iniquities to which we give hospitality and sanction, all of them enemies and sworn foes of Jesus Christ and his Kingdom. The time has come when we should betake ourselves to the destruction of these iniquities, as the enemies of Christ, in order that He may be made King in our national life.

The King will be crowned! For ever God's Word is "settled in heaven." The King will be crowned in the personal, national, and ecclesiastical acceptance of his sovereign power. He will be crowned in glory, he will be crowned in wrath, he will be crowned in judgment, as well as in the hearts and lives of his people. Enthrone Christ in the life by acceptance of his sovereign power—well. Reject Christ—his mercies, and gifts, and blessings, which He would gladly bestow on the sons of men, and He will reject you. "He came unto his own world, and his own people received Him not." He is here in the world, and he asks for complete and blessed coronation in our thoughts and affections and life.

Sins by which Christ is Rejected.

By Rev. W. H. GRIFFITH THOMAS.

If we would understand aright the solemn fact of the rejection of our Lord, there is one book of the New Testament which, perhaps above all others, we must make our careful study; and that is the Gospel according to St. John. Three great strands run through that Gospel, binding it together from first to last—(1) Revelation; (2) Rejection; (3) Reception.

Commencing in the prologue of the book, one or other, and sometimes two or more, of these are found—not merely in every chapter, but in every section of the book until its very close. In chap. i. 11, we read: "He came unto his own, and his own received Him not." There we have a personal revelation met by rejection; and that subject occupies the first twelve chapters of the book. Chapter xii. closes with a solemn comment upon the awful issues of that rejection. In the prologue there is mention of "as many as received Him"; and the story of such is told in chapter xiii. 1: "Having loved his own which were in the world, He loved them unto the end." In chapter i. we read (v. 11) of his own who did not receive Him—"they received Him not"; again, in chapter xiii. 1, we read of those who did receive Him. The culmination in the one case was the crucifixion of Christ; in the other it was their reception by the risen Lord.

SIN AND SINS.

Very early we find traces of the one sin which was at the root of the rejection of the King; we can also see the particular sins that led immediately to that rejection. I desire to answer the question, Why was Jesus Christ rejected? I shall indicate, first the sins that immediately led to it, and then the sin which explains all. We will think—first of the fruit and then of the root; first of the stream, and then of the source; first of the instrumental causes, then of the procuring cause.

Surrounding the cross of Christ were five different classes of persons, and they represent as many different sins that crucified and rejected our Lord. The first class is described by the phrase, the Multitude. The expression occurs throughout the Gospel, and the reference is more particularly to the people of Galilee. Very easily stirred, and deeply impressed by our Lord's miracles, these people from the north hung upon his words, and followed him from place to place in crowds. Filled with emotion, they cried, "Hosannah!" on Palm Sunday, but they were just as easily moved to cry, "Crucify Him!" on Good Friday.

The first sin among those that rejected Christ was therefore Fickleness based on Superficiality. Is it not so to-day? Many men of highly-strung emotion, impressed by the beauty of the character of Jesus Christ—men of no depth of character themselves and of superficial light—are easily stirred in an opposite direction; and when Christ comes before them they join in the cry, "Crucify Him!" The stony-ground hearer, who has "no depth of earth," is here; when the time of testing comes, he falls away. He is a virtual rejector of Jesus Christ.

THE JEWS AS SLANDERERS.

The second class was the Jews. These are to be clearly distinguished from "the multitude" in John's Gospel. They represent the people of Jerusalem and Judah, the Nationalist party of the day; the party which entertained in a special degree the national hopes and ideas as to the Messiah and so forth. In religion they represented narrowness and bigotry, and for the most part belonged to the sect of the Pharisees. Christ had to oppose their views about the Sabbath, and on other subjects; and they opposed Him, charging Him with blasphemy, and at length bringing Him before Pilate, saying, "We have found this fellow perverting our nation . . . . forbidding to give tribute to Cæsar." Of course, Christ did quite the opposite. He said, "Render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's." Their sin was Slander based on Prejudice. They wilfully slandered the character of Jesus Christ.

Is not the same thing being done to-day? When Christ comes opposing men's errors with his truth, cutting at the root of their narrowness and bigotry, you find the same opposition. Men misinterpret Jesus Christ, and are prepared, because of their prejudices, to have nothing to do with Him. When crossed in their prejudice, they slander and crucify the Lord Jesus Christ.

"ENVY, HATRED, AND MALICE."

The third class is the Chief Priests. They were the rulers, and the remainder were tools in their hands. They represented power and position, and were the exponents of the religion of their day. They could not brook any opposition or interference, especially on the part of one who came from Nazareth. They quickly saw, too, that Christ's teaching cut at the root of their ecclesiastical rank and position. They were not to be superseded. They regarded Jesus as a revolutionist. Their craft was in danger. Hence, under the guise of vindicating loyalty to God, they manifested a virulent hatred towards Christ. "For envy they delivered Him." Their sin was Envy based on Hatred.

Envy is not dead yet. When Jesus Christ comes to-day face to face with unworthy ideas, then there is a battle royal. Conservatism—a drag on the wheel in all matters affecting human life—is a great safeguard, perhaps a necessity. But when a personal interest enters either into conservatism or radicalism, then bitterness comes. There is much that will touch the personal element when Jesus Christ comes into contact with this form of life. Envy based on hatred rejects and crucifies Jesus Christ.

JUDAS, THE BETRAYER.

The fourth party is Judas, who was one of the instruments of our Master's rejection and crucifixion. He seems to have followed Jesus for what he could get out of it, and not for what Jesus was. When he saw no possibility of making more out of his Master, he left Him. The key of the character of Judas is given in Matt. xxvi. 14—"What will ye give me?" When he can get nothing, Judas will turn against the Lord—have nothing more to do with Him. Judas was a money lover. His sin was Avarice based on Selfishness.

Shall I say that avarice is crucifying Jesus

Christ to-day? Money-making and money-getting is legitimate; money-loving is not legitimate. "The love of money is a root of all kinds of evil" (1 Tim. vi. 10, R.V.). There is no sin more pronouncedly dealt with in our Lord's ministry than the sin of covetousness. Greed and speculation—are these not essentially opposed to the Lord Jesus Christ? What about the gamblers, the pawners, the combines and trusts? Christians who give the Lord their heart must not keep back their purse and pocket; in such cases the heart cannot be really and truly given.

"SUFFERED UNDER PONTIUS PILATE."

The fifth party was Pilate. He did not believe the accusations against Jesus Christ; in fact, he had a supreme contempt for the accusers. But we read that "Pilate, willing to content the people, delivered Jesus to be crucified." He was actuated by considerations of expediency, and not by principle. He was afraid of disgrace, and so he fell. What was his sin? It was Compliance based upon Cowardice. And so it is to-day.

There are men who, brought face to face with Christ and his claims, think of their social position and worldly interests. They let "I dare not" wait upon "I would," and they fall. They are lost through moral weakness. There is such a thing as the wickedness of weakness, as well as such a thing as the weakness of wickedness.

THE SIN OF UNBELIEF.

Now to the second part of the subject. What is the sin that underlies the five sins. There was one foundation, source, explanation of all, and that was the sin of Unbelief. This is the sin of the Garden of Eden—refusal to believe God. This is the spirit of a deliberate refusal to believe God and depend upon Him. "Hath God said?" "No; and if He has, I will not believe it." So says unbelief. That sin lies at the root of every sin that rejected the Lord Jesus Christ.

Unbelief prevents the soul from reaching spiritual ideals. The great subject of the Gospel of John. "That ye might believe, and that believing ye might have life through his Name," is the avowed object of the book (xx. 31). Trust in God produces the opposite of the things that come of unbelief. It produces Steadfastness (as opposed to Fickleness); Truthfulness (as distinguished from Slander); Love (not Envy, but the grace that seeks not merely her own but the interest of all around); Unselfishness (opposed to Avarice); and Courage (the opposite of Cowardice, enabling the soul to stand alone against the world). The one and all-embracing call to everyone is to "trust in the Lord with all his heart and lean not to his own understanding." In a sense of which perhaps Luther never dreamed, Justification by Faith (or, as I would prefer to say, Righteousness by faith) is "the article of a standing or falling church." Trust in the Lord is the secret of everything which will produce character, guarantee service, and glorify God.

(Further Addresses will be reported next week.)

Oxford Notes.

At the annual meeting of the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews, Rev. Paul Dressler, as deputation said there were about eleven million of Jews in the world, and that during the past century no more than 224,000 had been converted to Christianity. One most hopeful sign was the success of the handsome college at Bayreuth, in the hands of the Congregationalists and Presbyterians. 800 students were in training for the work of the Christian ministry.

On Friday, at the Hannington Hall, the ex-Abbé Corneloup, director of the Society for the Help of Roman Catholic Priests in France, gave a deeply interesting account of his remarkable work. During the six years of the Society's work, no less than 600 priests have left Roman Catholicism. He showed how exceedingly hard it was to become a Protestant, as no Roman Catholic will employ an ex-priest if aware of it. According to the Figaro, 200 priests are to-day earning a livelihood in the streets. The Society has founded thirty-six new Protestant churches. The Society reaches the priests by (1) preaching in the streets, which is allowed by the Government, and (2) by publication of printed matter.

STRENGTH IN WEAKNESS (2 Cor. xii. 1-10; xiii. 4-9).

THE Apostle begins with a remarkable expression—"I know a man in Christ." To know a man is something, but to know a man who lives and thinks and has his being in Christ, is to be acquainted with one of God's most transcendent works. Oh, that every one of my young brothers may be a man in Christ, absolutely manly and human, but his personality embued with the Spirit and power of the Saviour!

To but very few is it given to be caught up into the third heaven, and probably only to those who have passed through the furnace of trial and persecution, as the Apostle Paul had done. There are wonderful compensations in life, and if it be true that this marvellous vision took place when he was being stoned at Lystra, we can easily see why God should have drawn his spirit into fellowship with Himself, making it unconscious of the anguish to which the battered body was being subjected.

The Apostle, however, did not glory in the vision which had been vouchsafed to him, but in his weaknesses, and especially in the thorn or stake in his flesh. Great have been the disputes as to what he refers to. Was the thorn in the flesh a physical ailment or hereditary trouble? Some say it was ophthalmia; others, his unprepossessing appearance; others, again, hesitation in his speech. Perhaps it does not greatly matter. It is enough to know that the Apostle attributes its presence to the special working of Satan, who delighted in buffeting one from whom the kingdom of darkness was receiving so much detriment. There was a time in the Apostle's experience when he had earnestly pleaded with the Lord that this chain might be broken, and its limitation ended. It was so difficult to do his life work in the face of such an impediment. His prayer was not granted as he hoped and expected, but in another way. The thorn was left, probably to the bitter end, but "grace sufficient" was given to enable the Apostle to perform his life-work. This grace, which was given as a compensation for the presence of the thorn, enabled him to do more work in the world than could have been done otherwise. The infirmity was the opportunity for the communication of God's abundant help, and the Apostle came to see that he owed more than he could compute to this thorn. If, therefore, you had gone to him and commiserated with him on the loss of his eyesight, or the stammering of his speech, or whatever his infirmity was, he would have thanked you courteously for your intention, but with a happy smile would have said: "If I could, I would not be released. I would rather be as I am, that God's greater power might manifest itself through me. I welcome the disabilities of my mortal frame, because I am conscious that these things are producing in me a more perfect work of God, through which souls are being widely blessed. I glory in my weaknesses that the strength of Christ may rest upon me."

Anything which brings home to us our human weakness and nothingness is good. As long as we are self-confident, the power of God is kept out of our lives; but just as soon as we are beaten, broken, distressed, the walls of our nature are thrown down before the incoming tide of Divine fulness. We may be crucified through weakness, but we live with Christ through the power of God, which makes its track through our tried and emptied natures. F. B. M.

C.E. NOTES.

Dr. F. E. Clark, the founder and leader of the movement, in the course of a short tour of the provinces, visited Bath on Thursday last, and addressed a Conference and United District Demonstration in celebration of the coming of age of the movement. The account of his tours of the world, full of most interesting experiences, and of the inception and spread of the movement, was listened to most intently. The third Christian Endeavour Society that was formed was at Bath, in Maine, and hearty greetings were sent by Dr. Clark to this Society from their namesakes in the old country.

Keswick "Substitutes."—Calling attention to the effort of Mr. J. T. Budd, by way of enabling some forty to fifty clergy, ministers, and evangelists to visit the Keswick Convention this year, Rev. F. B. Meyer writes: "These have already applied. Some can purchase the railway ticket, but cannot also pay for board and lodging. We may also say that each will need a £5 note to cover all the expenses incident to the visit. It may be that some who love the meetings may not be able to go this year—could they not send their substitutes. Whole lives and parishes have been transformed by attendance at the convention, and perhaps those need it most who are least able to afford it. Gifts should be sent at once to Mr. Budd, 23, Pembroke Crescent, Hove, Brighton."

PAUL CROSSES TO EUROPE (Acts xvi. 6-15).
GOLDEN TEXT: Acts xxii. 15.

AGAIN from Antioch, in Syria, Paul set forth on his second missionary journey, not this time with his old companion, Barnabas, but with Silas, one of the deputation from Jerusalem (xv. 27, 34), who had remained at Antioch of his own choice for the work of the Lord there. The space of two and a half years was occupied by this tour, from the end of A.D. 49 to the spring of A.D. 52.

Paul's proposed plan (xv. 36) was to revisit the churches which had been founded during the first journey, and deliver to them the decrees ordained by the elders at Jerusalem (xvi. 4); but the Lord had a greater scheme prepared, and a wider field waiting for his services. At Lystra Timotheus joined the missionary party, and at Troas, Luke (vv. 3, 10, "We").

Paul's desire was to preach the Gospel in Asia Minor; the Lord willed that in Europe his salvation should be proclaimed.

"THOUGH THE VISION TARRY, WAIT FOR IT."

Right across the central uplands of Asia Minor, not allowed to turn northward or southward, nor even to stay and preach in the countries through which they passed, straight on they must journey until they came to Troas, the last seaport in Asia Minor, and the nearest to EUROPE; close by the Hellespont, and only four miles distant from the site of ancient Troy.

During that long journey their minds had been perplexed, their faith tried, their hopes disappointed, their ardour damped; but so soon as they reached Troas, everything which had been dark and inexplicable, was now clear as daylight.

Thank God for true-hearted workers who can patiently walk in faith till He shows them by "open vision." How many a S.S. teacher has not seen the fruit of much labour until "after many days." Sow the seed, "God giveth the increase." Thank God for SHUT doors, as well as OPENED ONES, for what we have NOT been allowed to do, as well as what we have been enabled to do.

"IF YE BE WILLING AND OBEDIENT."

Verse 10. No hesitation, no loitering now. The cry had been urgent, the vision unmistakable. The Lord had called them to preach the Gospel AGAIN, and this time in Macedonia. A straight course from Troas to Neapolis, twelve miles by road, and they reach the chief city, Philippi—a Roman colony whose inhabitants were chiefly Roman soldiers. Paul and Silas, Luke and Timotheus had come a long and dangerous journey from Asia to EUROPE, and who did they find to preach to awaiting them? and where?

A group of women, on the seashore—not even a synagogue or a place of worship. Was their faith staggered again? No! The work was the Lord's, not theirs. "God is no respecter of persons." The Apostles did their part (v. 10), and found the Lord there to bless the Word (vv. 14-15).

What matters it whether we take an important class or one of poor little neglected children, so long as the Holy Spirit makes me "wise to win souls for Him" (Prov. xi. 30)?

Tell the story to the children,
Say that Jesus died for them;
Tell them they may be the jewels
Shining in his diadem.

Older ones may scorn and mock you,
May not list the tale you tell;
But the children, little children,
They will always listen well.

THE GOSPEL FIRST PREACHED IN EUROPE.

First missionaries—Paul and Silas.
First congregation—a company of women.
First convert—a business woman.
First welcome—Lydia and her household.
First reward of city authorities—stripes and imprisonment—feet in the stocks—but the praises of God rang through the prison, and the keeper of the prison converted to God.

THE OPENING POWER OF THE HOLY SPIRIT.

The Apostles' hearts were opened to receive and follow God's guidance, even when contrary to their own wishes and plans.

The Apostles' hearts were opened to hear the voice of the Spirit as to the way they should take.

The Apostles' hearts were opened to hear and heed the cry of men needing a Saviour.

May the Holy Spirit open our hearts to the cry of the needy heathen in distant lands, and at home.

The hearts of the Macedonians were opened to desire the message of God. The Holy Spirit alone can make a soul feel its need of a Saviour.

Lydia's HEART was OPENED to the Lord, and when He came in He took possession of her soul, her household, and her wealth (v. 15).

LET THE SAVIOUR IN.

One of My Failures.

By T. J. BARNARDO, F.R.C.S. Ed.

FROM a perusal of the instances of child rescue and of subsequent prosperity which are so frequently recorded in our magazines and little books, those who have read them may have been led to conclude that all my child-rescues invariably result in similar successes. Alas, that is not so! There are some failures! Happily, indeed, the failures are few and far between; but there are some, and these are at times of so sad and discouraging a nature that it needs more than ordinary courage and perseverance to preserve hope, and to continue the work in the face of them. But here let me tell the story of one of my saddest failures.

Janette Gillan was fourteen and a half years of age when she first came into my hands. I had frequently met her hanging about certain common lodging-houses in Bethnal Green which were the resort of tramps, beggars, and criminals. There was something exceedingly attractive about the child. Her face would arrest any one's attention. When animated, she had a prettiness about her that made her conspicuous among the general run of those with whom she associated. She was very dark, her oval face of a healthy olive hue, with soft dark eyes and long lashes. One could not fail to see at a glance that, under favourable circumstances, she would grow up to become

AN ATTRACTIVE-LOOKING WOMAN.

But Janette was a regular little vixen! There was no wilder hoyden in the streets than she. She could keep the boys at bay, and she did, giving them quite as good as they gave her of rough usage and rougher language.

I have seldom seen a girl who could fight as Janette did! She struck out like a boy, keeping her arms well up in defence and giving her blows straight from the shoulder. This was so well recognized that many a time she was put up to box in the kitchen of the lodging-houses she frequented. She always won a victory over girl combatants; but now and then a boy came on the scene who, although she gave him "a bad time," succeeded in wearing down her defence. Not that such an assailant was ever what could be called a triumphant victor, for Janette at the moment of defeat would dash in with new weapons! She would scratch and bite so as to leave her marks on her foe! More than once I came between her and her opponents, but I had small thanks for my pains! She jeered and scoffed at me, and did not fail to call me ill names, while the company in the kitchen looked as if they wanted but little incitement in order to unite to beset me; so I had to be prudent.

Janette's mother was a truly loathsome creature: a beggar and a tramp, constantly in liquor, and in the habit of using foul and blasphemous language. Mother and daughter would disappear occasionally for a week or ten days, during which time I heard they were on the tramp. Then they would suddenly turn up with an empty basket and more money than usual; but on these occasions the mother was nearly always drunk. More than once I have seen Janette help her mother out of the street into the kitchen of a common lodging-house. So the ill-spent years of childhood ran on, and poor Janette was growing in knowledge of evil as she advanced to womanhood.

One night I was in her most favoured lodging-house just before giving a Supper to street children, when I was suddenly surprised at Janette's into the kitchen up to a group to whom I was talking. She was in wild excitement. Throwing aside the shawl in which she had wrapped her head and face, she appeared as if she had just come out of a terrible onslaught. Her face was torn and scratched and bleeding, her hair was dishevelled, her dress was almost in rags. Amid sobs which she tried in vain to suppress she explained that it was her "mother what had done it," and she accompanied her accusation by frightful words of imprecation, doubly shocking from such young lips. She was in terror even then that the mother, who had chased her down the street, would come in. I saw my opportunity and began afresh to urge upon Janette, as I had often urged before, that she should come in among my Home girls and let me give her a chance such as she had never once had. Some of the people in the house supported this view, and said, "Why don't you go with the gentleman, Janette?" and I improved the occasion as strenuously as I could. I think, however, Janette only consented with a view to escape that night from her mother's violence. I firmly believe she intended to run away at the first possible opportunity; but, anyhow, I was glad to lead her off. When we got down into Commercial Street I hailed a cab, and away we went to our Ever-Open Door.

Janette so liked her surroundings in the little Receiving-House to which I brought her, and was so impressed by the gentle kindness of the good Matron in charge, that she gradually made up her mind to remain. I durst not, however, send her to our Village Home.

JANETTE WAS TOO OLD.

She had had too great an experience and proficiency in evil. Her temper was too unbridled, her language too dreadful, to permit of her association with younger and innocent children. So I sent her to one of our Homes for older girls, and gradually, after infinite trouble, the girl shaped into what I thought was hopeful for the future. The months ran on until two years had passed, and Janette, although always more or less unsettled, proved to be warm-hearted and lovable. But when she was sixteen and a half she began to be very impatient to be out "doing for herself." Thoughts of her future caused me much anxiety. At last I was forced to see that if I did not send her to service soon, she would abscond. Accordingly, I placed her in a country situation in a quiet, well-ordered household, where the sister of a clergyman manifested the greatest interest in Janette, and, not without some difficulty, broke her into the mysteries of domestic service. In all this, however, I now recognise that I made two mistakes. In the first place, I ought to have contrived to keep Janette in our Home for at least another twelve months, and in the second place the situation she was sent to should not have been so near London. Her mistress lived in Surrey, only six or seven miles from town. I thought that was far enough; but I ought to have placed her in the Midlands, at a good distance from her old haunts.

It did not occur to me that the mother, whom Janette had not seen since that eventful night in the lodging-house, would ever again cross her daughter's path. But, alas! the unexpected happened: how, I cannot to this day be quite certain of. Suddenly, disquieting tidings reached me about Janette: that some tramps had been seen in the village, and that Janette was suspected of being in communication with them. Before I could interfere,

THE CRISIS CAME.

One morning her mistress found that Janette had not occupied her bed the previous night, that all her things were gone, and that she had cleared out, leaving no trace behind her! I at once instituted searching inquiries in all likely haunts; but she was not in the old Bethnal Green district. I had the common lodging-houses that she used to frequent carefully watched, but in vain. I could discover no trace either of mother or daughter, and indeed I was not really sure that the girl's mother had got hold of her. I thought that perhaps the tramps with whom she was seen might only have been some old companions. Subsequently I discovered that it was indeed her own mother who had tracked her to her situation, and who, appealing to her unsettled nature and hatred of restraint, had induced her to throw up all her chances and return to a vagrant life. The twain had gone off for a while to Birmingham, and afterwards had settled down into their old life of tramping about the country, Janette gradually but surely losing all appearance of respectability and becoming draggled and ragged and demoralized like those whose company she kept.

And yet I had once had great hopes of her eventual reformation! How well I remember some of my early converse with this girl and how sincerely she was moved by little talks about God's love to her! One thing seemed to impress her greatly, and it did, I believe, restrain her at a time when

SHE ACKNOWLEDGED NO OTHER RESTRAINT.

I had been talking with her and some of her companions in the Home upon the words, "Abraham, the friend of God," and Janette seemed greatly surprised when I urged that "God was their Friend, the Friend of each one of them; that He loved them, and that they would never be really happy unless they were His friends and trusted, obeyed, and loved Him." I remember Janette blurting out at my Bible-reading: "I never thought God wor a friend of mine; it is all news to me! Anyhow, He ain't a particular Friend of my mother's!" This gave opportunity for a conversation which seemed to affect the poor girl deeply. Janette's mistress told me later on that the girl had always seemed impressed in the little Sunday afternoon talks they had together, and she had even hoped that Janette had begun to know the meaning of prayer. Alas, for all such hopes! The impressions had been effaced before they could become permanent, and the poor impulsive girl had gone down before the resumed sway of old temptations and evil companionship!

Years passed over, and I saw nothing of Janette. She had vanished. At last, one night, I had to visit a woman whose two children lay ill in a furnished room in Bethnal Green. On turning the corner of one of the narrow thoroughfares in that lodging-house district, I came upon a crowd. There I found a policeman trying his utmost to induce a young woman, who was more than three parts drunk, very vociferous and noisy, to go with him to the station. A second policeman had as much as he could do to hold the young woman's baby, and to keep back a troublesome throng of loafers. It was really distressful to see how these two men were beset by that violent crowd of ill-conditioned persons in one of the worst districts of East London. It was only when two more constables appeared that they succeeded in their object, and then only by lifting the young woman bodily off her feet and carrying her in made with their hands and arms, she shouting defiantly the while, and offering to fight one and all. Judge of my horror when in this degraded, shameless, drunken creature I recognized the well-remembered features, woefully altered though they were, of Janette Gillan!

She was locked up in the police cell for the night. I went down the next morning and found her sober, but not softened—hard, violent, and blasphemous. She listened quietly enough, however, while I talked to her, but all my pleadings were ineffectual. She would not leave her life! She must go on as she had begun! I stayed as long as I could talking to her. Her baby was brought into the cell, and she was also allowed to walk into the little yard adjoining. Oh, how awfully changed she had become! Her good looks had but partially survived the wreck of character and respectability. Everything that made life worth living had gone by the board. Although she was but twenty-two years of age, she looked at least ten years older.

At the police-court she was brought up on the charge of having been drunk and disorderly, and of having assaulted one of the constables. The magistrate was willing, because of her youth, to take a lenient view; but Janette was her own worst enemy! The missionary of the court offered to find her a home. No; she would not allow any one to help her. She would go her own way! In terrible phrases of blasphemy which shocked those who heard her, she refused all aid and declared with bravado that she could "do her bit on her head." She was sent to gaol in default of being able to pay the fine. I would gladly have paid it, and wished to do so, but the warrant officer begged me not. He assured me that in her then state it would be better for her to undergo the restraints of the prison. It was her only chance. Nor was I more successful when her term was out. Some of her companions were waiting for her, and the first place they turned into after she left the gaol was the public house! "Ephraim is joined to his idols; let him alone!" Janette had gone to swell the ranks of the hopeless and the lost.

Will my readers bear in mind, as they follow this sad incident which it has given me great distress to recall, that Janette's case in its early conditions is that of many around us to-day? There are hundreds and thousands of little children, not merely in London alone, but all over the Kingdom, growing up in the slums of our great towns, and under almost as evil conditions, who are as surely being brought up for the devil, for a ruined life, and for a shameful career, as if they were predestined to them from their very birth! Moreover, in their turn are almost certain to bring into the world an offspring as degraded and as hopeless as themselves. If such as Janette are to be effectually redeemed from destruction, it must be before the inherited tendencies are strengthened by environment and before the habit of evil-doing becomes second nature. Had Janette been saved from her mother and from her dreadful surroundings when she was younger, had I, when I placed her out, had the larger experience of to-day, there is no reason why her future story should not have been as bright as that of thousands of others who have passed through my hands and done well. But bad as Janette's failure was, the lesson it teaches is not discouragement, but perseverance and the need for better and prompter measures. Indeed, the memory of even one such case is as the stinging lash of a whip which constantly urges me on to make every endeavour possible to seek out and rescue at the earliest age such poor young creatures as might seem from their very birth to be the inheritors of only shame and ruin. The recorded histories of many thousands of our cases show clearly that God has placed in his people's hands the ineffable privilege and power of reversing the awful decrees of heredity, and of giving to the children of the poorest, through the Gospel of his Son, their rightful place in the Kingdom of Heaven.

Reaching the Masses.

A SPLENDID work has for some years been carried on by the Rotherhithe Free Church, under the energetic and capable directorship of Mr. Thomas Richardson, a busy city man, who, with wonderful versatility, devotes his time after business hours to the manifold cares of this aggressive pastorate.

He has gathered a most devoted band of co-workers, who stand loyally by his side in the Sunday-school and P.S.A.—or "Men's Own" as the strikingly successful afternoon gathering is called.

Mr. Richardson had a long, practical training in Mr. Charrington's mission, where he is always a welcome visitor when his other duties permit. There is no finer exemplification in London of "How to Reach the Masses" than Mr. Richardson's work. His address is 48, Lower Road, S.E. We are not surprised to hear that new buildings are urgently required, of which, no doubt, our readers will hear more later on.

Sergeant Pullinger's Work.—In many parts of the country there are those who have followed with prayerful interest the labours of Sergeant Pullinger among soldiers and civilians. These will find in the fourteenth report of the Guards' Mission some interesting facts and figures concerning his work. The services in the mission rooms and the visitation of the public barrack rooms have yielded encouraging fruit. Evangelistic services in country towns and villages have been held, and some remarkable seasons of refreshing have been experienced. Copies of the report may be obtained from Sergeant Pullinger, 58, Hugh Street, Ebury Bridge, S.W.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

DOWANHILL CHURCH, GLASGOW.

THE address recently given by Rev. Dr. J. Q. A. Henry at Dowanhill Church, Glasgow (Rev. William Dickie's), was much appreciated. Mr. Dickie writes:—"There was a large audience, which listened with the most sympathetic attention to the distinguished and eloquent preacher as he put forth an earnest plea for individually sharing in the responsibility and service of temperance reform. He at once awakened and maintained the best Christian interest and sympathy by the high ground which he assumed in maintaining that in this great work we are fellow-workers with God. His eloquent plea for information as the basis of reformation was exemplified in a very striking way by the facts which he marshalled in a masterly manner before his audience. We have seldom listened to a more forcible and yet tender appeal for individual decision. One forgot the speaker's eloquence in the speaker's earnestness and sincerity. But probably the most noticeable feature of the address was the absence of any rasping references to "the trade," or any irritating jeers at those whose habits were not yet in line with the best temperance sentiment. He spoke for rather than against, and carried his hearers with him. We are persuaded that the advocacy of temperance on such lines of Christian charity and courtesy by one who speaks from the heart with an eloquence which betrays little or no self-consciousness, is calculated to commend and further the cause in every community in which Dr. Henry appears."

DR. HENRY AND THE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND.

Business arrangements made it inconvenient for a hearing of Dr. Henry in the General Assembly of the Church. But the friends of the Temperance Campaign had the special gratification of listening to his voice in two meetings associated with the sittings of the Supreme Court. On Monday evening, 26th ult., the ladies of the Women's Guild provided him a splendid opportunity in their annual "At Home." Dr. Henry was the only speaker, save a few words from Professor Kennedy (chairman) and Dr. James Paton, temperance convener. For forty minutes or thereby, he held them spellbound by his eloquent, fully-informed, and pronouncedly Christian defence of the whole temperance movement. An eager and convinced abstainer himself, he carried the sympathy and the conviction of all friends of temperance effort in any of its multiform aspects and bearings.

Next morning, in the same place of meeting, Edinburgh Café, at the annual breakfast of the Committee on Temperance of the Church of Scotland, Dr. Henry, along with Rev. Charles Martin, of the Blue Cross Society of Geneva, were the principal speakers. Mr. Martin greatly interested the friends present as he described the work in beautiful, if broken, English, and with a passion of sympathy for the victims of intemprance. Dr. Henry, taking a wider range, described all the lines of action on which those whom he represented were proceeding in America, and rivetted the attention and stirred the enthusiasm of the meeting to an unwonted degree. His broad and sensible practicality, while advocating ultimate "repression" or "suppression," was keenly appreciated by abstainers and by non-abstainers alike. Dr. James Paton, from the chair, assured both speakers that their personality was deeply impressed on the heart and memory of all present, and that their cause would have an interest in their prayers.

EAST LONDON TABERNACLE.

A long promised visit was paid by Dr. Henry on Wednesday last, May 28, to the East London Tabernacle, Burdett Road, E., but owing to the number of his engagements only one night could be at present given. The pastor, Rev. E. H. Ellis, presided over a large, appreciative, and enthusiastic audience, and Dr. Henry delivered a most forcible address, dealing with various problems of the drink question. An earnest desire was expressed for Dr. Henry to repeat his visit, and conduct a week's campaign as soon as possible. This he promised to do at the earliest available date, in the spring of 1903. The meeting, which was in all respects very successful, resulted in a number of pledges being secured.

BELFAST.

On Saturday, 31st ult., Rev. Dr. Henry began a brief mission in Belfast under the auspices of the Committee on Temperance of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church. Although rain fell very heavily all the day, some 1,600 Sabbath-school teachers and temperance workers assembled in the large hall of the Y.M.C.A. at half-past three o'clock. The music was led by the choir of Cooke Centenary Church, under the leadership of Mr. M. Curran, and the chair was occupied, in the regretted absence of the Moderator of the General Assembly, by Rev. William McKean, temperance agent of the Presbytery of Belfast.

Dr. Henry met with a most enthusiastic reception, all present standing and cheering in the heartiest manner; and for an hour he held the audience in his hand as he spoke of the first and worst foe of the Church of God, and of the responsibility resting on all Christians, to become workers together with Him in the overthrow of the evil and in taking possession of the world. An impression was produced, which, we doubt not, will be ineffaceable. Great as were the expectations formed regarding the "field-marshal of a noble reform," they have been already more than amply realized.

At 7.30 p.m. Dr. Henry addressed a meeting in Ballysillan Church, under the presidency of Rev. John Gailey, pastor. Suffice it to say that the address on the more practical side of the subject made as fine an impression on a gathering, principally consisting of working men, as the afternoon address made upon the assemblage of Christian workers.

On Sabbath last, at St. Enoch's Church (Rev. John Pollock), the largest belonging to the denomination in the city, was exceedingly well filled at the morning service, when Dr. Henry preached from the story of Deborah. The interest on the part of the congregation was deep, the attention was intense; and the strain, under which scores and hundreds laboured, was plainly visible.

At 4.30 a large concourse of people assembled in Westbourne Church, Ballymacarrett (Rev. W. Witherow), notwithstanding the rain, which continued to fall throughout the entire day. As Dr. Henry spoke of the guilt of being "partakers of their evil deeds," the pent-up feelings of the people were with difficulty kept under control, and indeed on more than one occasion there was suppressed cheering. All the ministers of the district were present, and were deeply moved.

At seven o'clock Cooke Centenary Church, Ormeau Park, was filled to the doors. Rev. John Macmillan, pastor, and convener of the General Assembly's Committee on temperance, conducted the devotional service, the choir and the congregation giving a hearty rendering of the hymns. Dr. Henry delivered a discourse from the words "Let us now go to Gilgal, and renew the kingdom there." He marshalled facts so marvellously, clothed them with such reality and life, animating them with his spirit, and pouring into them the enthusiasm of his soul, that men and women held their breath, and we are certain that to not a few the service became the beginning of a new era. As the great congregation separated, many lingered to express their personal thanks, and to take by the hand a man who had so deeply touched their hearts.

At this service, as at the others, an opportunity was given for signing the pledge.

FUTURE MEETINGS.

June 8, Sheffield; 10, Maryport; 29, Sheffield; July 31, Alford, Lincs.; Aug. 1-30, "Edinburgh Castle," Limehouse, E.; Aug. 31, Lincoln; Sept. 4, Louth; 6-9, Taunton; 10, 11, Newport, Mon; 12-14, Taunton; 15, 16, Llanelly; 21, Free St. George's, Edinburgh (Dr. Alex. Whyte's).

Evangelistic.

Rev. Jesse Mayo at Bingley.

A TEN-DAYS' open-air mission is being conducted at Bingley, by Rev. Jesse Mayo, for the Free Church Council. "An organist, violinist, and soloists had been secured, and all the local ministers and some prominent townsmen are taking part. We had immense crowds at the two services on Sunday—just the people we want." On Saturday last Mr. Mayo received the sad intelligence of the death of his eldest son, by drowning. Much sympathy will be felt for the evangelist, who adds, "Thank God the dear boy was in the Lord, but the blow is a terrible one."

Mr. Henry Thorne at Shrewsbury.

From May 17 to 26 Mr. Henry Thorne conducted a mission in Claremont Street Baptist Church, Shrewsbury. There were few seekers, but all the meetings were characterized by the power of the Holy Ghost, and God's people were greatly edified. The Bible readings, given daily, were much appreciated, especially the reading on "The Second Coming of our Lord," and the last two readings on the programme were, by request, cancelled in favour of further study on the Second Coming. Doubtless the mission was a time of sowing precious seed; the harvest will be reaped later on. D. M. D.

Mrs. E. L. Baeyertz.

A sixteen days' mission, conducted in the Conference Hall, Eccleston Street, Victoria, S.W., by Mrs. Baeyertz, has just been concluded. Notwithstanding Mildmay week, the attendances have been most encouraging, many Christians and their friends coming regularly to the services. In the afternoons the addresses were mainly for Christians, and the evening services evangelistic. From the beginning, and right throughout the mission, the presence of God was very manifest, and at each service the Word was with power. In the "after meetings" a good number of persons (over 100 in all) have gone into the inquiry-room, and after instruction in the Word of God, have professed trust in Christ for salvation. Altogether it has been a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord, believers being edified and built up, and souls saved. Mrs. Baeyertz has kindly consented to repeat her addresses on "The Passover" (with table spread in modern Jewish fashion) and "The Great White Throne" on Sunday next, at 3.30 and 7 p.m., at the same hall, offerings being taken in aid of the Bayswater Y.M.C.A. Alfred J. Hale.

As a result of Rev. J. T. Vine's recent mission at East Molesey further gatherings of an evangelistic character have been held, and several seekers were pointed to Christ.

In connection with the Bishop Hooper Protestant van, helpful missions have recently been held by Mr. Samuel Bradfeld, evangelist, at Elmore, Stonehouse, Cashes Green, Stroud, and Brimscombe.

Interest continues and much blessing has resulted in the Palace Theatre services, which Mr. and Mrs. Sims are conducting at Cork, so much so that the friends who are engaged in the work have decided to continue for another week, or to June 15. Doors seem to be opening in other localities, and it is intended to move forward as the Lord directs.

Describing meetings held at Sopley, Christchurch, at Whitsuntide, by Mr. Bob Johnson, Mr. Chas. Button writes:—"The power of God was made manifest. On Whit-Monday evening we had a remarkable meeting; one who was a poacher and had ridden to Bournemouth to spend the day with ungodly companions, felt compelled to leave them and return to Sopley. He yielded to his convictions, came back, and was pointed to Christ."

An eight-days' mission for young people has been conducted at Oxendon Presbyterian Church, Hampstead, by Mr. J. Edwin Jackson. On the afternoon of Sundays, May 4 and 11, there were a large number of scholars and young people. During the week two meetings were held each evening, and the earnest appeals to come to Christ have been followed with much blessing. Many deep impressions have been made, and there is reason to believe that some of the scholars have been led into the light of the glorious Gospel. E. H.

A mission of fifteen days' duration, conducted by Rev. F. C. Spurr, in connection with the Baptist Church, Elgin, of which Rev. Walter D. Hankinson is pastor, has just been concluded. Mr. Spurr's visit has been much appreciated and has resulted in definite blessing to many. Three meetings were held in the town hall, at two of which about 1,000 people were present, and at the third (for men only), some 500 men were assembled. The week-night meetings, Bible readings, and other services, held in the church, were well attended, the closing services being specially memorable, both for the number assembled and the impressions left on many hearts.

A fortnight's mission has just been concluded at Perth by Rev. W. G. Pope (late of North Africa). To many, especially among the young, it proved a time of blessing. From the beginning God manifested Himself through his servant, and as one after another caught their first glimpse of Christ, workers and preacher were gladdened. The afternoon Bible readings were the means of revealing to many the glorious possibilities of a life wholly yielded to God. The missioner has left us, but the work goes on. To God be all the glory. J. G.

A mission was held in the parish of Llandeiniolen, at St. Helen's Church, Penisarwaen, from April 30 to May 8. The ground was prepared by earnest commendatory letters by the Bishop to the missioner, Canon Williams, vicar of St. David's, and the clergy of the parish. The people, especially St. Helen's congregation, worked hard, and made commendable efforts to attend the four daily services. The evening services were attended by crowded congregations from neighbouring churches and by Nonconformists. The earnest, eloquent, spiritual, and truly evangelical addresses were listened to with rapt attention. The services were highly appreciated, and fruitful results are looked for.

Rev. J. Bennett Anderson has spent a busy fortnight in the Shankhill Road Mission, Belfast. He attracted large audiences through his street singing and speaking. After the outdoor services the people were invited indoors, where the evangelist again spoke and sang. A goodly number were hopefully dealt with about the great salvation. Mr. Anderson paid a previous visit to this mission six years ago, and there is still fruit from that campaign. The special series closed with a praise service, in which Rev. H. Montgomery and other friends took part. Mr. Anderson has also been visiting Ballymoney.

Obituary.

THE MARCHIONESS OF NORTHAMPTON.

ALTHOUGH following a long illness, and, therefore, not altogether unexpected, the death of the Marchioness of Northampton will come with a sense of shock to a wide circle of Christian friends. Lord Northampton's labours in connection with many efforts for the spiritual and social wellbeing of the people are well known, and in all of them he had the earnest co-operation of the marchioness. In fact, her ladyship was herself a worker, and will long be remembered as a teacher of a Bible class in the George Yard Mission in the time of the late Mr. George Holland. The deceased lady passed away on Sunday afternoon last from a brief attack of bronchitis following progressive paralysis. She was the daughter of the second Lord Ashburton, and married the Marquis of Northampton (then Lord Compton) in 1884.

MR. J. T. DUNN.

It is with deep regret we record the death of Mr. John T. Dunn, of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, which occurred on May 22 at his residence, 25, Grosvenor Park, Camberwell. It is but a year ago since he was so seriously ill that there was little hope of recovery, but, owing to the blessing of God and a robust constitution, he was raised up again to a measure of health and strength. But three long months of illness to a man of over three score years and ten weakened him to such an extent that his family at times were most anxious about him. He was, however, able to be about his usual work until Thursday, May 8, on which day he was taken suddenly ill, and after a fortnight of intense suffering passed peacefully away. The church with which he has been associated since 1859 will sorely miss a valued helper. His "Men's Bible Class," to which he was so greatly attached, will feel his loss; and the Richmond Street Mission, of which he was the founder, keenly mourn a leader and friend.

MR. JOSEPH CLARK.

West Cliff Tabernacle, Bournemouth, suffers a great loss by the death of Mr. Joseph Clark. He was born in London in 1824, and at the age of seventeen was led to confess Christ in connection with Bible Christians. After two or three years he became attached to Westminster Chapel, and owed much to the helpful influence of Rev. Samuel Martin. Moving to Craven Chapel, which then had for its minister Dr. Leifchild, he became superintendent of the Christian Instruction Society, and spent many happy years of service. Eight years were given to resuscitate village work at Adderbury, Oxon; and for the last twenty years he has been in turn Sunday school teacher, deacon, and elder among Bournemouth friends, helping alike Messrs. Colman, Wainwright and Hooper in their pastorates. Lately he has ailed, and on May 29 he peacefully passed into his Lord's presence, aged seventy-seven, leaving a memory of peculiar fragrance. After a service in West Cliff Tabernacle, in which his old pastor, Mr. Wainwright, joined the present one, his remains were interred on June 3, in Bournemouth Cemetery. His widow, although turned seventy-nine, is wonderfully sustained. G. D. H.

MR. CHARLIE SMITH.

At the age of seventy-two, this devoted servant of Christ has passed away. It was about 1862 when the truth laid hold of him under the powerful preaching of the late William Carter. One Sunday evening he was induced to go to the old Victoria Theatre in the New Cut. There the truth of John iii. 16 convicted him of sin and brought him to the feet of Jesus. His conversion was a very real thing. Up to that time he used to say "a blacker sinner never walked the streets of London." He had never known father or mother, had been brought up in ignorance and sin, had been a terrible drunkard, and everything else that was bad, up to the time that God converted him. He was a whip-maker by trade, and well known as "Whippy," by cabmen, who dealt with him; but now that Christ was his Saviour, no one came to him for a threepenny article without his having a word with him about Jesus.

He soon joined Mr. Carter's band of open-air preachers, and although unable to read, yet his one text, John iii. 16, was sufficient for him; in fact, to the end of his life, whatever other text he might take to commence with, he nearly always worked round to his one salvation text again. Soon Mr. Carter saw that he was just the man for his work, and it was not long before he was living at the Victoria Hall, of which he took the charge. It was no light duty. Every night meetings for the roughest men and women in the south of London were held, and often teas were given to special classes, such as costermongers, chimney sweeps, thieves, &c. Many were the trophies of grace there won as jewels from the mire of sin for the Redeemer's crown.

On the death of Carter the work was broken up, and Charlie Smith laboured for several years among the navvies on the various railways where new lines were being made. Again in this work he was much blessed. He also preached a good deal up and down the country in connection with the Evangelization Society. For the last fourteen years he has been employed at Bath by the Country Towns Mission to work amongst the cabmen and Bath wheelchairmen, and greatly have his services been valued, and many have thereby been saved. For the last year or so he has been almost laid aside by ill-health, and the last few months his sufferings have been most acute; and although he often wondered why his heavenly Father should allow him thus to suffer, yet he never doubted his Father's love. Among his last words were, "It is so sweet to serve the Lord Jesus, blessed Jesus." Thus has this devoted servant of Christ passed into the presence of the Master whom for so many years he had so faithfully served. G. E. Thomas.

Bath.

Requests for Prayer.

For blessing on open-air work at Epsom Races and at Ascot.

For blessing on a mission at Kildarton, Armagh, by Rev. Dr. Morris, June 7-24.

For the work of the Ebenezer Bible carriage in the neighbourhood of Ross, Herefordshire.

For special services throughout June in the Gospel Hall, Hounslow, to be conducted by Mr. Clement Palser.

Bells of Peace.

AFTER a protracted struggle in South Africa the British Empire rejoices to-day at the Conclusion of Peace, and the joy bells have rung out a merry peal all over the land to Welcome the Good News.

Part of our Empire is, however, the

SCENE OF A MOMENTOUS CONFLICT,

in which artillery and rifles play no part. It is the Strife between Light and Darkness, Freedom and Bondage, Christianity and Heathen superstition, and, as Ambassadors of The Prince of Peace, we wish this Thanksgiving time to be made an occasion to assist in bringing peace to the 297 millions of India.

The Zenana Bible and Medical Mission has for 50 years been in the forefront of the battle labouring to carry the tidings of peace to the Homes of India. The suggestion has been welcomed that now hostilities have ceased in South Africa shall be invited, as self-sacrificing gifts, towards a sum of £12,000 which is needed to strengthen and extend our Efforts for the Spiritual Peace of India.

Thank-offerings for Peace

Peace FOR THE WOMEN AND GIRLS OF INDIA.

Nearly one-fifth of the women and girls in the world are in India, living in the midst of heathen superstition, and needing the Gospel that we so richly enjoy. We have not grasped the vastness of the work nor the urgency of the time. Let us pray earnestly for many more labourers.

Peace FOR THE WIDOWS OF INDIA.

One in every six of the women and girls of India is a widow! Child marriage still prevails, and many thousands of these poor widows are mere girls. The Government has abolished suttee, or the burning of the widow to death, but the long continued suffering and isolation of widowhood in India can only be relieved by introducing the Gospel; and this constitutes a pathetic appeal to us to give them the freedom which alone comes through the knowledge of Christ.

Peace FOR THE SUFFERERS OF INDIA.

The vast majority of the women of India are quite unable to get skilled medical aid in sickness, and their sufferings constitute a most earnest plea to us to share with them those medical aids which we enjoy, and which have come to us as a direct result of Christianity.

Peace FOR THE WHOLE PEOPLE OF INDIA

through the agency of the women who, when won for Jesus Christ, become Missionaries in the Homes. Women and children are always the first to suffer from War, and wherever the Gospel of Peace is unknown they suffer likewise. The heathen world is a picture of Woman neglected and degraded.

DELAYED PEACE IS PROLONGED MISERY,

May not war be the penalty for our want of faithfulness, the drawing of the sword of the flesh the chastisement for sheathing the Sword of the Spirit, the national expenditure of millions to destroy life the punishment for withholding the gold and silver to save it to Life Eternal?

No part of the Empire seems more promising in spiritual results than India at the present time, where plague, famine and disease have created a feeling of helplessness and need, and thus opened up a highway for Christian Enterprise. We therefore invite the co-operation of all members of Evangelical Denominations to show their gratitude to Almighty God for bringing this war to a close by sending a Peace Offering to this Society.

About Books.

There have been issued from the Cambridge University Press special editions of the Revised Version Bible (10d.), Authorised Version with references (1s. 2d.), and Revised New Testament (6d.)—all in special binding commemorative of the Coronation. Each volume has a suitable label with blank space to be filled up if given as a present.

In the latest volume of the Christian Study Manuals (1s. each net. Hodder & Stoughton)—Religions of Bible Lands—Prof. D. S. Margoliouth explains for the understanding of the simplest reader the principles of Semitic, Egyptian, and Persian forms of worship. Much is here supplied in popular form which has hitherto been difficult of access.

In the belief that the moment appears to be at hand when the first resurrection may begin, Rev. William Bramley-Moore (from the Author, 26, Russell Square, W.C.) states in The Church's Forgotten Hope his thoughts on the translation (or rapture) of the saints. While there are passages in the book with regard to which we cannot see eye to eye with the author, it will be welcomed by many who are seeking light on prophetic study.

Fragrant Flowers from the King's Garden. By Rev. R. Venting. (3s. 6d. Simpkin, Marshall, & Co.). This volume of illustrative points has reached its second edition. The compiler has an eye to the teachings of Nature; and important lessons, learned in many schools, are here presented in brief and bright paragraphs, fully indexed. In a word, this book gives the spiritual meaning of natural parables; and it is sure to prove helpful to many preachers and teachers.

Memoranda Paulina: Sunday Readings in St. Paul's Epistles. By George Jackson, B.A. (3s. 6d. Isbister & Co.) Those who read these chapters in Good Words will be glad to have them in connected form—slightly re-arranged, and enriched with here and there a useful foot-note. Some of the papers are really fine; all of them will repay careful reading. The aim has been to combine the spirit of devotion with the intelligent study of Holy Scripture; and that aim has been realized in a remarkable degree.

A Return to God and His Word. Remarks on Mr. W. Blair Neatby's "History of the Plymouth Brethren." By W. H. Bennet. (3d. H. A. Raymond, 16, Paternoster Square, E.C.) These pages realize the ideal of criticism—"speaking the truth in love." Certain expressions employed by Mr. Neatby provoked some such remarks as are here made; apparent inconsistencies of statement by a historian justify the strictures delivered by Mr. Bennet. Without apologizing for Darbyism with its many sorrowful incidents, or attempting to answer un-Christian criticism on the part of recent reviewers, Mr. Bennet calls for a return to God and his Word. His booklet deserves prayerful consideration.

Dreams and Realities: Practical Papers on Christian Living. By G. E. Morgan, M.A. (1s. Morgan & Scott.) This is an unpretending book which because of its very modesty may fail to receive the attention which it deserves. The more we have looked into it the more have we been impressed with its helpful character. There is no attempt at brilliancy; but it sparkles with brightness everywhere. Take such an example as this:—

> Socialism says, "All thine is mine!" Christianity teaches, "All mine is thine!" Anarchism cries, "Down with everyone that is up!" Christianity replies, "Uplift everyone that is down!" Christianity alone, of all the religions of the world, has a message of hope to the sinner, raising him out of the horrible pit and setting his feet upon the Eternal Rock.

This is one among many examples of the terse and pointed style in which the author puts great practical truths. He is quick in observation and keen in insight, and is able to present the results of both, often in very felicitous style. His book is in truth a most valuable repertory of sanctified common sense. It is an additional recommendation that its papers, while complete in themselves and separate, are so brief that they can easily be read through in a short sitting.

J. Guinness Rogers.

In view of the approaching Coronation, Mr. Andrew Melrose has issued Stainer's Festival Anthem, "Blessed is the Nation. (4d).

No. 9 of Mr. B. McCall Barbour's Boys' Series—Not One Drop; and No. 2 of Bits for Our Boys, are daintily got up, and well worthy of wide circulation. (1d. each. Kensit, 18, Paternoster Row.)

Are You Ready? (Earnest Appeals No. 5) is a useful Gospel call; and The Things which were Sent, an equally helpful booklet for Christians. (½d. each. Marsom, 17, Cathedral Yard, Bristol.)

One Hundred Special Hymns, Composed by John Elliott, Evangelist (Torquay). This collection of simple Gospel hymns has been used with great acceptance by Mr. Elliott in his Missions. They are adapted chiefly to the tunes found in "Sacred Songs and Solos." (The Author. One penny.)

Church of England.

The new building of Christ Church, North Brixton—of which Rev. W. R. Mowll is the uncompromising Evangelical vicar—is on the eve of completion, and will be consecrated towards the end of September next.

The Bishop of Sodor and Man, in his charge to the Manx clergy at the annual convocation held at Bishop's Court, said that he had been deeply thankful to hear of late of new Bible Classes and Communicants' Unions, especially as a result of a recent mission in the deanery in which they were met.

The vacancy on the staff of Ridley Hall, caused by the approaching departure of Rev. C. L. Carr, has been filled by the appointment of Rev. E. S. Woods, B.A., to the office of Chaplain and Lecturer, and Mr. C. West-Watson, B.A., as Bursar and Lecturer. The Triennial Reunion takes place on June 23, 24, and 25. The Bishop of Durham will be the chief speaker.

In accordance with annual custom on the first Sunday after Trinity, several of his Majesty's Judges attended the afternoon service on Lord's Day last at St. Paul's Cathedral. The Lord Mayor, accompanied by the Sheriffs and some of the Aldermen, drove from the Mansion House about 3 o'clock to welcome the Judges on their arrival. The sermon was preached by the Bishop of Stepney (canon in residence) from the words, "Honour all men. Love the brotherhood. Fear God. Honour the King" (1 Peter ii. 17).

The Holborn Deanery Association, in connection with the London Diocesan Council for Rescue and Preventive Work, has been formed under the presidency of the Bishop of Islington. A very encouraging beginning has already been made. Two small rooms, near Theobald's Road, in a central position, have been taken and furnished. One worker residing there has been privileged in the last six months to deal with many hopeful cases. A small house of refuge is urgently needed, wherein two workers at least may reside, to which invitations may be given, in which girls may be received.

Congregational.

There has been a marked improvement in the condition of Rev. Dr. Caleb Scott. A message from Manchester says:—"Decidedly better; operation indefinitely postponed."

Rev. Dr. A. G. Rogers, son of Dr. J. Guinness Rogers, has become pastor of South Cliff Church, Scarborough. Dr. Guinness Rogers preached and took part in the recognition service.

Mr. Frank N. Tribe, of Redland Park, Bristol, has been elected chairman, and Rev. Richard Lovett, vice-chairman of the Board of Directors of the London Missionary Society for the ensuing year.

The recognition service of Rev. J. Adams as pastor of the newly-formed church at West Ealing, W., took place last week. Until the new church is built, the services are held in the Victoria Hall, Ealing Broadway. The chair was taken by Mr. Albert Spicer, who was supported by Revs. C. Silvester Horne, Dr. Lawson Forster, and others.

In view of meeting the cost of some repairs to the roof of Aylesbury church, the pastor, Rev. J. H. Stowell, intimated that instead of raising the money by means of a bazaar, or by a subscription list, he would ask for gifts to be brought to the church on an appointed day. One hundred and thirty-six persons brought offerings ranging from one shilling to £10, amounting in all to £97.

The church at Rotherfield Peppard celebrated its 108th anniversary on Whit Sunday and Monday. The change in the observance of Whit Monday at Peppard is notable. At the beginning of last century the annual revels on that day were an abomination; vast crowds came together to drink, brawl, and engage in brutalizing sports. The first pastor of the church, Rev. Joseph Walker, held, with a few friends, a solemn prayer meeting on the day of the revels. He then got a well-known minister to preach in the chapel on Whit Monday. So, from year to year the good increased, until at length the revels became extinct.

Baptist.

The ancient church at East Street, Southampton, now under the pastoral care of Rev. G. W. Brooker, has celebrated its 213th anniversary, when sermons were preached by Rev. H. J. Perkins in the morning, and Rev. T. E. Ruth in the evening. The report was highly satisfactory, testifying to the earnest work of pastor and people during the past year.

A year ago the church at Yalding, Kent, (Rev. W. H. Tomkins) undertook the task of reducing the debt by £140, with a view to saving the interest, which amounts to a large sum yearly. By strenuous self-denial and earnest prayerful effort they have succeeded in their object, and an announcement to this effect was made at the service on Sunday evening last, when the congregation united in singing the Doxology.

The new Sunday School and Lecture Hall of the church at Leytonstone Road, N.E. (Pastor F. J. Walkley), were opened on Thursday last. The church itself will eventually be built on land adjoining, which has already been acquired. The ceremony was performed by Mrs. J. A. Spurgeon. At the service which followed, the sermon was preached by Rev. Thomas Greenwood (president of the London Baptist Association), and Rev. J. Bradford also took part.

The Baptist Students' Fraternal Union has decided upon a village preaching campaign, to be carried out during the summer vacation by the voluntary services of between sixty and seventy of the students. The idea is for them to make their headquarters at a village or small country town and there hold religious meetings, either in the open air or otherwise, as may best suit local conditions, and effect a thorough visitation of the people. The distribution of religious literature will also be a feature of the campaign.

The annual assembly of the Yorkshire Baptist Association was well attended; the speaking was maintained at a high level, and the two crowded days were full of happy and inspiring fellowship. Rev. J. Gyles Williams, pastor of the Attercliffe Baptist Church, has accepted the secretariate. As this will demand the whole of his time and necessitate his living in Leeds, he has placed his resignation in the hands of his deacons, and proposes to terminate his ministry on the first Sunday in July.

The congregation at Cromer, which has been worshipping in hired rooms since its formation four years ago, is soon to have a building of its own. The owners of land in the town will not sell a vacant site for a chapel, or it would have been built before; but last year some property in the principal street came into the market, and was purchased for £1,600. This is now being adapted so as to obtain a chapel seating 300 adults, together with class-rooms and a vestry, at a cost of about £700. The opening is to take place in September, by which time it is hoped that all the needed money will be forthcoming. The pastor is Rev. S. J. Henman.

Methodist.

The statistical returns to be presented at the forthcoming assembly of the United Methodist Free Churches will show a net gain in membership of 2,392.

The centenary of Zion New Connexion Sunday School, Longton, has been celebrated with services conducted by Dr. Townsend and Rev. J. Fleming, who is closing his five years' ministry there. Zion was the first Sunday School in the town.

A novel method of raising money for religious purposes has been adopted by the Primitive Methodists at Chester-le-Street, where two members have become amateur chimney-sweeps, receiving sums of 3s. 6d. to 7s. 6d. for each job. The money thus received is devoted to the reduction of the debt on the new chapel.

The Camden Street branch of the Wesleyan London Central Mission has had a somewhat chequered history, but has now come upon prosperous days. Mr. G. H. East, the missioner-in-charge, announced at the anniversary that if the congregation grows during the next six months at the same rate as it has during the past six, the chapel will not contain the people.

Presbyterian.

Mr. Joseph Wilson, of Sefton Park, Liverpool, has accepted the presidency of the Total Abstinence Association in succession to Rev. Dr. Monro Gibson.

The new hall at Enfield has been opened, the dedicatory service being conducted by Rev. Dr. J. Monro Gibson. The hall, affording accommodation for 250 persons, is a handsome structure, and has been erected in the midst of charming sylvan surroundings at the foot of Windmill Hill, opposite Chase Green.

Salvation Army.

Midnight crusades on behalf of fallen women are being held in the metropolis.

The Salvation Army has twenty-one travelling vans and some forty tents engaged in this country for the summer months.

Surgeon-General Evatt presided recently at a large anti-drink demonstration conducted by Mrs. Bramwell Booth in the Guild Hall, Plymouth.

The Army has five institutions for girls in Australia many of the inmates being sent by the Government instead of to prison or reformatories.

Commissioner Cadman has conducted a service for male and female prisoners in Kingston Gaol, Jamaica. Four hundred and sixty men and women were present. The gaol governor also attended the service.

At the Twenty-ninth Annual Meeting of the Howard Street Gospel Mission, Wandsworth Road, S.W., which was held recently, an encouraging report was presented. A great amount of philanthropic work has been undertaken in ministering to the needs of the suffering poor, while large numbers of people have heard the gospel, and souls have been won from the paths of sin. Among the speakers were Mr. John Soames, who touched briefly on the various agencies of the mission and related incidents of visitation among the sick poor; Rev. R. Copp, and Mrs. W. Grimes.

At the Village Hall, St. Nicholas, near Cardiff, a largely-attended missionary meeting was held on Tuesday week. The gathering had been arranged for by the local branch of the Y.P.S.C.E., which was inaugurated by Mr. J. Cory, about two years ago. Mr. Davey, a returned missionary, gave an address on work in China. He has recently returned after eight years' service, and dealt very clearly and consisely with his subject. He gave a rapid survey of the history of the Chinese, their religion and characteristics, showing the difficulties the missionaries have to contend with while seeking to gain the ear and confidence of the people. He quoted several cases of conversion, and gave graphic accounts of the persecution suffered by these people in behalf of their faith. The meeting proved most inspiring and helpful.

Cobo Mission, Guernsey, was begun under difficulties by Mr. B. Angel, a young evangelist. After two years of prayer and reliance upon God alone, he procured the loan of a field, hired a tent and began a mission. His efforts were blessed, and the meetings held were times of refreshing from the Lord. Then a tent was given and was more than filled with worshippers, and at the close of the summer Mr. Angel and some of his helpers met to consider what could be done for the winter. While they were deliberating, a business man who had attended the services but who knew nothing of this little meeting, telephoned to one of the workers to offer a large room for this mission. The offer was gladly accepted, the room has been enlarged, and many are now praising God for the blessing they have received at the Cobo Mission.

Fallen Asleep.

The death of Mr. John Unite, of Edgware Road, London, and of Claptons Hall, Wooburn, Bucks., removes an eminent London manufacturer, whose services to the Free Churches continued to his eighty-fourth year.—Rev. J. M. Wilson, for forty-three years Presbyterian minister at Hexham, died on Friday in Edinburgh. He retired from the pastorate three years ago, and settled in Scotland.—Mr. John Batey, of Fence Houses, co. Durham, a prominent Presbyterian, was, at the time of his death, Synod and Presbytery elder, session clerk, and treasurer.—At 197, St. Andrew's Road, Glasgow, aged twenty-three years, Robert, second son of John Climie, evangelist and editor of The Monthly Evangel, after five months of lingering illness.

Notices.

Applicants for Tracts.—Mr. E. A. Talbot, Harley House, Bow, E; Mr. J. Wallbank, 54, London Terrace, Dunstable (for C.E. open-air work); Mr. B. H. Trotman, 70, City Road, Birmingham; Mr. G. A. Mowells, 171, High Street, West Norwood, S.E.; Mr. H. J. Gittings, 40, Elign Road, Hereford; Miss Hall, 2, Mitford Place, Armley, Leeds; Pastor S. Arston Fox, 16, Bath Terrace, Robin Hood Street, Nottingham; Baron Porcelli, Ellington, Ramsgate (fishing smacks, &c.); Mr. G. Gourdon, 37, Charter Street, Gillingham, Kent; Miss Bing, 25, Frederick Road, New Brompton, Kent; Miss B. Smithies, 131, Ecclesbourne Road, Thornton Heath; Mr. E. P. Fisher, 4, Wadworth Street, Denaby Main, near Rotherham, Yorkshire.

Notes & Comments

A Call to Prayer. We are glad to notice the suggestion emanating from the Bishop of Ripon, who urges that at the present time, amidst our national joyousness, the people should recognize in the great event of the next fortnight a call to earnest prayer on behalf of the King and his Empire. Our responsibilities are vastly increased, and we need to consult God more than ever about our affairs. Woe be to the nation if it does not recognize God more than it has done of late. But we hope for the best.

Coronation Appeals. It is not surprising that the great event of the year should be made the occasion of numerous "Special Appeals." In fact, it is probable that there is not a mission agency in the country that is not more or less in need of help. It would seem invidious to name any in particular; a glance down our "Donation List" will suggest many. Perhaps, however, in view of the interest now centred in South Africa, it may be fitting to refer to the great need of Soldiers' Homes in that country. The South Africa General Mission is endeavouring to raise £14,000 for this purpose, about half of which has been guaranteed.

Rome and the Coronation. It would appear that the peers and other members of the Roman Catholic Church who will attend the Coronation will be in a somewhat anomalous position, as they are prohibited from joining in the service of prayer and thanksgiving. Cardinal Vaughan has notified that the Pope decrees that (Roman) Catholics may never join in religious services held in non-Catholic places of worship, and the permission which has been given in regard to attendance at Westminster Abbey on the occasion of the Coronation is explained by the Cardinal on the ground that—

> They will attend simply to pay an act of civil honour to a Sovereign personally present in a great State function.

In other directions, however, the Pope has been more lenient, and has dispensed Romanists from the law of abstinence as regards eating and drinking, "so that they may more easily take part in the rejoicings and festivities."

Anglican Trickery. A London vicar writes thus to the Church Times:—

> Sir,—Many of the clergy have a strong objection to having to declare, in the "Form of Proclamation" on page 6, that in the Coronation Oath the King undertakes to maintain . . . the Protestant Reformed Religion established by law." I should like to point out to them that they are under no obligation whatever to make that objectionable announcement.
> The use of the service itself is only permissive—not compulsory. On the cover it is stated to be a "Service recommended for use." This being the case, the clergy are at liberty to adopt it with or without omissions as they may think best. My own intention is to read the Form of Proclamation as it stands up to, and including, the words, "High office," and then, omitting all that follows in that paragraph, resume the Form at the words, "Then his Majesty is solemnly anointed," &c. Robert A. Eden.
> 58, Oakley Square, London, N.W.

It is instructive to note the disingenuous methods adopted by men who, while receiving the pay of "the Protestant Reformed Religion established by law," deny the validity of its claims. It is a code of morals from which even the man of the world turns with disgust and scorn.

The Lesson of the Hooligan. The deplorable murder of young Mr. Spicer, at the hands of hooligan roughs in a public London thoroughfare on Monday night last week, raises a far wider question than that of adequate police protection. It tears aside the veil of our boasted advance in civilization and the much-vaunted theory that "the world is daily growing better." In the church, in the home, and throughout the nation, Christian standards are being lowered and the laws of God are suffered to fall into neglect. The demands of the Bible, family worship, and the sanctity of the Lord's Day, are treated as mere secondary considerations; consequently there is an all-round decadence in the conscience of the people, from the highest to the lowest. The upper classes set the example of defiance of the Divine Law, and the lower are not slow to follow the lead. Infidels may bawl that "Christianity is a failure"; higher critics may prate that the Bible is not divine; teachers and novelists may theorize on the development of the race; but what a pitiful comment upon it all is this brutal, sordid murder of a young man in cold blood on the very night of our rejoicing over "Peace with Honour"! The fact remains that nothing short of high Christian standards can cause a nation to dwell in safety; that in proportion as Christianity rules, the people live at peace; and in proportion as it declines, neither property nor life are safe. This is fact, whatever theory may be.

A Fact for Mr. Ritchie. Unhappily in England, as in Scotland, there is again a large increase in lunacy. It is stated that the Birmingham local asylums are over-crowded by a population of 1,622, and that, pending the building of an additional asylum at a cost of £61,000, temporary premises have been leased. A very large proportion of this cost may justly be added to the national drink bill; but although, year by year, the vast army of the insane continues to swell its numbers, and the medical scientists intensify their statements as to the dread cause, the members of the Government close their eyes to that which is sapping the life of the nation.

The Tied House. It is to be regretted that Mr. F. W. Thomson's proposed addition to the Licensing Bill, of a clause to the effect that it should be illegal for any person other than the holder of a licence to have any control over such licence, or the purpose for which it is used, should have been objected to by the Government and withdrawn. It is quite true that, as Mr. Ritchie said, the question of tied houses is a thorny one, but Parliament exists for the purpose of dealing with thorny questions; and if it is desirable that the tied club should be abolished (and the new Bill will do that) it is even more desirable that the brewers' control of the drink shop should be done away with. The brewer behind the publican is, however, a strong political power, and his "vested interests" are paramount, though to the simple-minded it would seem that the vested interest of the State in the well-being of the nation should be paramount.

The Curse of the Derby. True to its policy, the Daily News remained alone amongst the great dailies, in omitting all description of the Epsom Races, but a special correspondent contributed to its columns an article on the character of the crowd that attended the Derby, and the chief occupation of that crowd. It might do even betting-men some good to read this article, which photographs them with marvellous accuracy. Book-makers are fond of branding as "hypocrites" all who denounce the Turf, but surely theirs is the hypocrisy who pretend to be interested in the pose and pace of horses, while, as a fact, the only interest the race has for them is the money that betting on it brings to them. And this year the gamblers may well cry "woe" to their prophets, for the horse that all the "tipsters" were absolutely certain would win, came in fourth! As the Derby is held to-day, it is a curse to the community, and Epsom is simply the hunting ground of fevered money-grabbers, whose every action degrades true sport. We only wish the King had the courage to refuse his patronage to the Derby until the professional betting element is cleared away from it, both on the course and in the newspapers.

A Vicar's Disillusionment. The vicar of Upper Edmonton, who stood alone at the London Diocesan Conference in voting against the Education Bill, justifies his action by detailing some noteworthy experiences. After twenty-eight years as a parochial clergyman, and twenty-three as chairman of one of the largest Church day-schools in London, he is forced to the reluctant conclusion that a Church day-school is a "positive hindrance" rather than a help to the Church to which he belongs, inasmuch as convenience rather than conscience rules the attendance of the scholars, or, as the vicar naïvely puts it, "It is more a question of shoe-leather than creed!" Further, careful analysis of the attendance convinces him, concerning many places, that:—

> There is no gainsaying the fact that on the one day of the week, when parents are free to choose between the Church Sunday-school and the Nonconformist Sunday-school, the great majority choose the latter.

Hence he urges, why spend so much money, time, and labour over the day-schools, when the ultimate end—religious instruction—proves to be so little appreciated? and he pleads for a more earnest development of Sunday-schools, catechizing, and guilds. In other words, take care of the religious and let the secular take care of itself.

The Moral. If the children attend the Church school during the week and Nonconformist chapels and schools on Sunday, we may well question, Why? Is it because the elementary education in the Church schools is better than that of the Board schools, or is it merely a question of "shoe-leather"? Or, again, is it an indication that the spiritual instruction of Nonconformists is more in accordance with the heart and conscience of the population than that of the Church? Whichever it be, it is a loud call to the Free Churches to devote earnest thought and energy to strengthening their Sunday-schools, that they may impart spiritual instruction of a clear and definite type, so that their children may not be entangled in the meshes of priestcraft, and lose the liberties for which their fathers died to set them free.

Witnessing with Gifts. The fact that the Congregational Twentieth Century Fund has reached the sum of £710,724 is a subject of congratulation. The framers of the report say:—

> The fund may be regarded as successful, inasmuch as it has stimulated devout thanksgiving and self-sacrifice, has developed interest in our denominational work at home and abroad, has appreciably relieved many churches from the burden of debt, and encouraged the permanent addition of accommodation for the carrying on of Christian work. It has specially interested the young in our principles and history and in the giving to church funds; and the beginning of the new century was signalised by the personal consecration of their lives to the Master's service by hundreds of young men and women.

It is to be hoped, however, that the gifts thus contributed will not be allowed by the donors to affect their accustomed generosity in normal channels. Their century offering must be supplementary, not substitutionary, or much good work will suffer.

The "Rock" Libel Action. Our contemporary, The Rock, has been unsuccessful in defending the libel action brought by the Jesuit, Father Bernard Vaughan. That the Jesuits are forbidden by law to settle in Great Britain was not denied, nor was their designation as a "seditious" body seriously called in question. But when the term is applied, not to the body, but to an individual member of it, then the case is different. The average mind would take it that "the greater includes the less;" not so, the legal mind. £400 as damages, plus a considerable sum for costs, is the penalty our contemporary has to pay for its temerity; but we feel sure many members of the Christian public will readily take a share in the burden, since the matter is one of not merely Protestant, but of national importance.

The Garden City. It is cheering to note that the idea of the "Garden City," which at present finds substantial expression at Bournville and Port Sunlight, has possessed the minds of so many practical men that there is every likelihood of it being extended into new areas. The meeting held last week, to consider how far manufacturers and others can contribute to this end by a united movement, was a distinct success from the point of view of practical suggestion and enthusiasm. Already a small company is on the eve of being floated to carry out the scheme. Of course, in the way of any concerted action on the part of private individuals there will always be difficulties; but these are not insurmountable, and we believe that, even from a business point of view, great employers of labour would find it pay to remove their works from crowded centres to rustic surroundings. The least that can be done is to really face the matter, and see if it be not practicable.

The Fatigue of Home. The Spectator, in a pungent article, deals with what it calls "the horror of home," that is, the modern restless spirit which finds a temporary contentment in patronising clubs, hotels, society banquets, or public-houses, as a relief to the "monotony" of home life and home fare. Our contemporary regards this spirit, not as a disease, but as a passing whim only. We trust it is only that; but it seems to us that it is in keeping with the light and restless temper that exists below the apparent whims. The cultivation of the social instinct is undoubtedly necessary for many reasons, but that charity should begin at, and never be far from, home, which is the training ground for the future manhood and womanhood of the nation. Whoever talks about the "horror," or the "fatigue," or the "monotony," of home, advertises that the true home spirit does not possess him.

Scriptures for India. The interest aroused in connection with the scheme for giving the Scriptures to our fellow-subjects in India has encouraged Lord Radstock, and other friends, to aim at placing in the hands of at least each of the school-children in our great Eastern Dependency who are able to read a Gospel in his or her own tongue. Through the death of Queen Victoria, the Coronation of the King, and the proclamation of peace, it is believed that the minds of the people are open as never before to the reception of Western ideas; and it is felt that much might be done to win the people for Christ if every youthful reader were led to read the story of Salvation. The vast majority of the children are too poor to pay anything at all, and would be likely to treasure the Book all the more if it were their only possession of the kind. We hope to publish a further statement on the subject in an early issue.

"The Least of all Seeds." It is, perhaps, impossible to over-estimate the possible results of the smallest work for God. The history of religion is full of illustrations of the fact, that the greatest consequences frequently can be traced to the smallest causes; and the thought is a helpful and encouraging one to those who are not called upon to do great things, but who have manifold opportunities of making seemingly unimportant efforts to extend the Kingdom. Their giving of a tract, or lending of a book, or speaking of a few kind words, may prove to be the germ of a great movement for Christ. Rev. Dr. Grattan Guinness gives an illustration of this. He says that at Keighley, Yorkshire, he saw a placard announcing a woman's infidel lectures, and that he thereupon started a class of young men for the study of the Christian evidences. Out of that class grew the training institution now at Harley College, Bow; and from that institute, in the thirty years since its foundation, a thousand workers have been sent to all parts of the world.

The New Soudan Peril. Some weeks ago we referred to the sinister rumours which have been afloat for some time respecting the new Mahdism which, it was reported, is developing in the Soudan. There now seems to be no doubt as to the truth of these reports. The new ferment threatens to be worse than the old, and if it be not checked immediately much of our work in the Soudan may have to be done over again. We still contend that it is a most foolish policy on the part of Government to place obstacles in the way of missionary work, while allowing Mohammedan fanatics to have their own way, and to preach their "holy wars." Under the plea of "liberty for all religions," it is possible to keep our Eastern possessions in a state of continual ferment.

On the Watchtower. It is gratifying to learn that the statements which have recently circulated in the newspapers, in regard to the retirement of Mr. Samuel Smith from the representation of Flintshire in Parliament, have no foundation in fact. Mr. Smith has been restored to health, and it is hoped that he may be spared for many years to do yeoman service in the House of Commons. He would be badly missed from that assembly, where he has always stood on the side of righteousness and justice; and it is to be regretted that there are not more legislators as strongly influenced by devotion to the highest interests of the nation.

An "Ethical Funeral." The daily papers recently gave some prominence to an account of an "ethical funeral," perhaps the latest development of a movement which has in it an element of that pathos which accompanies all failures. Over the dead body of a little girl poems were read, and a wordy oration was delivered. One speaker, who claimed to stand "outside all churches, all priesthoods, all theologies, all supernaturalism, all dogmatism," afirmed his belief that "this was not the child's end," a belief which, he added, "gave to evolution an infinitely wider sweep." And this vapouring was all that the ethical leaders had to offer in substitution for the assurance and comfort of the Divine words of Jesus, "I am the resurrection and the life," and those spoken tenderly in the house of the bereaved ruler of the synagogue, "Weep not; the maid is not dead, but sleepeth."

"Thus Far, and no Farther." It would seem as if many scientists and other investigators do not recognise any limit to their own powers of mastering every subject in heaven and earth. An article in a current Monthly praises, in an extravagant manner, the scientific work of a young American, who at the age of forty-two delivers himself thus:—

> I wanted to go to the bottom of things. I wanted to take life in my hands and play with it. I wanted to handle it in my laboratory as I did any other chemical reactions—to start it, to stop it, to vary it, to direct it at my will."

This modern Canute would no doubt arrest the movement of the sea if he could. Pity that any courtiers are yet found to flatter the vanity of would-be gods. The greatness of man does not consist in his magnificent pretensions, but in his humble submission to, and co-operation with, the law of his God, whose inner secret he can never surprise.

Northfield Conference Season.

THOUGH compelled to hold till next week full particulars of the plans for Northfield this year, we cannot delay the announcement that the present season gives every indication of being better than any of its predecessors. Both in speakers secured and in the numbers arranging to attend, the work seems to be going forward, although it is now the third year since Mr. Moody, its founder, was called to his rest.

The work begins with the opening of the Conference for Young Men on June 27. This lasts for ten days. The convention is in the hands of the international committee of the Y.M.C.A., and under the leadership of Mr. John R. Mott, which is sufficient guarantee for its usefulness. Although primarily this conference is for the delegates from the colleges in the Eastern States, representatives are found at Northfield from nearly every large institution of learning, not only in America and Canada, but over the whole Protestant world.

An Example to Us.

THE LORD'S DAY IN ITALY.

FROM time to time THE CHRISTIAN has taken account of efforts being made by different classes in Italy, as, for example, newspaper men, Post Office men, and others, to obtain the rest of the Lord's Day; also reports of the efforts of different towns and cities to have their shops closed on Sunday have been given. All such efforts, however, were local and partial. Now it is a pleasure to state that the subject of Sunday observance, or, as it is termed by the Italians, Il Repoo Domenicale, has been taken up by the Italian Government, and has become a national movement.

On Sunday, May 25, meetings were held throughout all Italy, in order to express approval of the action of the Government, and to help it to translate its proposal into law. I shall best convey an idea of what has been done, and is being done, by telling what took place in Venice. Three or four days before May 25, the city was placarded by large bills, four feet square, informing the citizens:—

That the Parliament of Italy had recognised the necessity of a measure now adopted by all civilized nations. The Association for the Promotion of Days of Rest, which for several years has been very active in this matter, applauding the initiative taken by the Representative Assembly of the nation, has resolved, by a unanimous vote of its members, and in accord with many similar societies, to convene a public assembly through which may be solemnly affirmed the adherence of all our fellow-countrymen to this noble idea. . . .

At the hour fixed, the Malibran Theatre was packed from floor to ceiling. But why a theatre? Because no church was available. Nobody can be so foolish as to suppose that the Roman Catholic Church is in favour of Sunday observance. That would be a suicidal policy. Its interests all lie the other way. They lie in desecrating Sunday, and in promoting Saints' Days, which are priests' "market days"—as the Italians call them. The Roman Catholic Church has not only nothing to do with this Sunday observance movement, but its interests are all the other way.

The appearance of the theatre was imposing, not only because of the numbers present, not only because of the representative character of the vast assembly (there was no priest—the church being the only organization unrepresented), but because of the one thought and idea that had brought them together, a thought that has its root in human right and human justice. On the platform behind the president's chair were the banners of fifty-one different working-men's societies in Venice and in the province of Venetia.

The Parliamentary deputy, Signor FRADELETTO, who was called upon to preside, is a very able man, the enemy of Popery and priestcraft, the friend of liberty, of progress, of education, of religion, of art, and thoroughly loyal to the King and the Monarchy. With his whole soul he has thrown himself into this movement for Sunday repose, which expresses the warm desire of all men of intellect and of heart, no matter to what political party they belong. He advanced two reasons for Sunday rest: First, because, working six days in the week, human nature requires a day of rest from anxious toil; secondly, because it is required to raise the working-people of the land into the calm light of higher things. All require, after six days of uninterrupted labour, this seventh day of repose as a beneficent pause for restoration; and as a sacred right which they cannot allow themselves to ignore.

The subject having been thrown open to discussion, there was a proposal to describe the rest as settimanale (weekly), which after mature consideration was thrown out, and the religious term Domenicale (the Day of the Lord) retained. A motion was then proposed, affirming that—

Convinced that it is the inalienable right of Society, in harmony with its continued progress, to protect the health (physical and intellectual) of its members, to cultivate the sentiment of the family, to elevate the civil, moral, and spiritual tone of the people; and convinced, moreover, that nothing can contribute more to the bringing about of these lofty ends than the observance of Sunday repose; convinced further that the recent action of Parliament in accepting a proposal to sanction this repose by a law of the State will materially further these ends—this assembly votes that the closing of all shops and places of business on Sunday be made obligatory, so that there may be none open to take advantage of the others closed. And that this assembly prays Parliament speedily to carry this project into law.

With some slight modifications this was carried unanimously. The decision of the assembly was there and then telegraphed to the President of the Chambers, to all the deputies and senators, and to others concerned. In almost every other city in Italy similar meetings were held, and similar resolutions passed to strengthen the hands of the Government. Of course, the keeping of Sunday carries with it the complete overthrow of Saints' Days. Both cannot be kept. It is impossible to have a man's time broken into by Saints' Days, which are days of spending and dissipation, and expect him to keep a Sunday rest.

(Joshua xiv. 7-14.)

GOD'S faithfulness is like the great mountains. Caleb was spared to be one of the two survivors of an ungodly generation, and ended his life in one of the most God-fearing generations of Israel's history. We can hardly doubt that he and Joshua, fine instances of the "survival of the fittest," largely contributed to make it so, perhaps even more than Moses, who was too elevated above the people to influence them so fully. In his old age he did not lament the good old times, for the new time and order to which these now gave place were better than they.

Of every believer who is weary with waiting, it will be said at last, as it was of the Lord's chosen people in the furnace of Egypt: "But the time of the promise drew nigh. . . ." "For the mountains shall depart, and the hills be removed, but my kindness shall not depart from thee; neither shall the covenant of my peace be removed, saith the Lord that hath mercy on thee."

Day after day had this man of God kept his grip of the promise, till more than 10,000 days had dawned and died in darkness. Each of these days only brought him a view of desert sands and barren peaks, instead of the green and fruitful hills of Hebron. But at last his eye rested on a vision which had been his day-dream and night-dream all through those years. This vision had tarried, and he had waited for it, and found that in the appointed time it came, and was not too late. So to every waiting one the vision of heaven will come at last to replace the dream of heaven, and the reality will exceed the fancy.

The Mount of Hebron was a monument of one who brought forth good fruit in old age. Mount Pisgah, while a monument of God's faithfulness, was also, alas! a monument of the unfaithfulness, on one occasion in his old age, of the most notable man of God the world ever saw—the man with whom his God spoke "face to face." The Hill of Hebron is a monument of a man of God whose path was as the shining light that shineth more and more unto the perfect day; of one whom his Lord kept from falling and preserved faultless unto the end; whose long trying and testing wrought patience, whose patience wrought experience, and whose experience wrought hope that did not make him ashamed. His trial ended in his triumph. In Caleb we see what aged believers may do, because we see what one aged believer did. The enthusiasm, the enterprise, and hope of a young Christian are beautiful, but the enthusiasm, the enterprise, and hope of an aged believer are even more beautiful and inspiring. Here is an example for the aged to copy. Caleb excelled other saints in his whole-hearted following of his God, and in his holy enterprise and valiant courage. And he exhibits these graces in old age as well as in mid-life, teaching us that aged Christians should be fired with the enthusiasm and boldness which one would look for in younger men. Some persons as they grow old have reason to sigh—

> Tired, tired and spent; the day is almost run,
> And, oh, so little done!
> Above and far beyond, far out of sight,
> Height over height,
> I know the distant hills I should have trod—
> The hills of God—
> Lift up their airy peaks, crest over crest,
> Where I had pressed
> My faltering, weary feet, had strength been given,
> And found my heaven!

May such be able, with the aged Caleb, to add:—

> But strangely now I know that I do stand
> Within the Promised Land, and be filled and fired with his spirit of holy enterprise, as they behold still farther, loftier, fairer hills rising before them, to attain whose heights must be the object of their earnest desire and strenuous endeavour. The mountain, doubtless, is steep, but strength will be given, even to the aged, to ascend it; the fastnesses seem unscalable, but there is a pathway of approach which our skilful Guide will point out to us. They are garrisoned by gigantic and cruel foes; but if the Lord delight in us, and be Himself with us, we are well able to overcome them.

Aged pilgrim, your God is willing to give you back, if not your youth, at least the hopefulness, the holy enterprise, the sacred dream, of younger days. Some heights of attainment you had aimed at in your early Christian course, but failed to achieve, may yet be yours before you leave this world.

Caleb was the oldest man in the Church of God in his day; but in energy, hope, zeal, and enterprise he was the youngest. And he was spared to attain and possess, in his old age, those heights which in early life he had simply been able to gaze upon, and had longed to win.

Remember the reward of him who endured to the end, who received the promise, who still brought forth fruit in old age, who had the happy retrospect of a consistent life, in which he had wholly followed the Lord, and whose name is held in everlasting remembrance.

"Jehovah-Shammah."

("The Lord is there.")

Ezek. xlviii. 35.

Departed is the glory
That shone on Zion's hill,
And scattered is the nation
That knew God's holy will.

Jerusalem rejected
Messiah when He came,
And righteous judgment threatened
Was kindled into flame.

How sad the desolation
Of the once-favoured land!
How long the tribulation
Appointed by God's hand.

The people are still homeless,
Wander from East to West;
Anew some trouble rises,
Despised, they cannot rest.

Yet hearts now sorrow-stricken
Turn to the East again.
Ask: Is there hope of sunrise?
Look—and 'tis not in vain.

For Israel repenting
Light will in truth break in,
Shine forth again from Zion
For those who turn from sin.

The Lord in wondrous mercy
Will call his people home,
And Salem's towers rebuilded
Ring out the welcome—Come!

The city stands for ever,
In heaven's light all fair,
Its name, "Jehovah-Shammah—"
"The Lord—The Lord is there."

Samuel and Saul.

A GREAT SUNSET.

(1 Sam. xxv. 1.)

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

At length Samuel came to his end, so far as this world, at least, was concerned; and was borne to his grave, as a shock of corn fully ripe. Though he had spent the last years in retirement, partly because of his great age, and partly because of the breach between the king and himself, he had never lost the love and respect of his people; and when finally the tidings sped through the country that he had fallen upon that blessed sleep, which God giveth to his beloved, the event was felt to be a national calamity, so that from Dan in the far north to Beersheba on the southern frontier, "all Israel gathered themselves together, and lamented him, and buried him."

Josephus adds this significant paragraph to the record of Scripture: "His moral excellence, and the esteem with which he was regarded, were proved by the continued mourning that was made for him, and the concern that was universally shown to conduct the funeral rites with becoming splendour and solemnity. He was buried in his own native place, and they wept for him many days, not regarding it as the death of another man or a stranger, but as that in which each individual was concerned. He was a righteous man, and of a kindly nature, and on that account very dear to God."

The impression made on his contemporaries lingered, as an afterglow, long after his sundown. Again and again he is referred to in the sacred record.

1 Chron. ix. 22 suggests that he laid the foundations of that elaborate organization of Levites for the service of the sanctuary which was perfected by David and Solomon.

1 Chron. xxvi. 27, 28, asserts that he began to accumulate the treasures by which the House of the Lord was ultimately erected in the reign of David's mighty son.

2 Chron. xxxv. 18, contains a passing reference to some memorable Passover Feast, which he instituted and carried through.

Psa. xcix. 6, and Jer. xv. 1, commemorate the fragrance of his perpetual intercessions.

Acts iii. 24, and xiii. 20, indicate what a conspicuous landmark was furnished by his life and work in the history of his people.

Heb. xi. 33 places him in the long gallery of time, where the niches in the walls have been filled one by one by the statues of those who have lived and wrought in the power of faith.

I. The Blessedness of his Life.—Though Samuel's career was an arduous one, it must have been fraught with the elements of true blessedness.

He was pre-eminently a man of prayer. This was his perpetual resort. Whether for his people or his king, for the overthrow of the Philistines or the recovery of Saul from his evil courses, he never ceased to pray—he would have counted it a sin if he had. "God forbid," he exclaimed on one memorable occasion, "that I should sin against the Lord in ceasing to pray for you." Many a sleepless night did he spend in tears and prayers for the king whom he had set up, and to whose hands he had committed the national interests as a precious charge (1 Sam. xv., 11, 35; xvi. 1).

It has yet to be seen, and probably we shall never know until the veil of eternity is lifted, whether the world has benefited most by our prayers or labours. It is more than likely that the men and women who have poured out perpetual supplications and intercessions have, like Epaphras, wrought most effectively.

All books, says an eloquent writer, are dry and tame compared with the great unwritten book prayed in the closet. The prayers of exiles! The prayers of martyrs! The prayers of missionaries! The prayers of the Waldenses! The prayers of the Covenanters! The sighs, the groans, the inarticulate cries of suffering men, whom tyrants have buried alive in dungeons, whom the world may forget, but God never! But these prayers have been deeds. In the words of James (v. 16, R.V.), they have availed much in their working. Let us pray more, especially as life advances. Let us seek to be enrolled among those who call upon his Name. Let us so live that men may shelter themselves in the thought of our intercessions.

Samuel was also characterized by great singleness of purpose. He could court without flinching the most searching scrutiny (1 Sam. xii. 3). From those early days when, as a child, the vision of his childlike purity, contrasted with the evil of Eli's house, struck on the imagination of Israel, his had been a career of stainless and irreproachable honour. The interests of his people had been his all-absorbing concern. For these he had spent himself with ungrudging devotion, and to find that he must withdraw from them in favour of another was the sorest grief of his life. The troubles which had befallen his land had only led him nearer God, and bound him more tightly to his fellow-countrymen; but when he discovered that they desired him to give up his position, it required all the gifts of God's grace, and all the qualities of a naturally noble nature, to sustain the shock with equanimity. But again his unselfishness, which had become the one aim of his life, conquered; and he set himself to secure the best successor which the age could afford, and humbly stepped down from the supreme place of power.

It was this beautiful humility and singleness of purpose that arrested the reverence of his people, and attracted their veneration.

Oh to be so absorbed in a consuming passion for the glory of God in the salvation of others, that we may be oblivious of ourselves, willing to take the second place, to be accounted of no account, to retire from the blaze of light that falls on the stage to the retirement and twilight of the cloister, where the progress of the days is marked by the clock-chimes, and the incidence of the shadows indicates the progress of the sun from solstice to solstice!

Samuel was also careful to construct. When the whole land was disorganized, he began to lay the foundations of a new State. The time and care he expended on the schools of the prophets, the careful administration of justice in his itineraries, his appeals to the people in their convocations, were part of a great policy which resulted in a consolidated and united people.

Do something in your life. Don't waste the precious time in criticizing others, but put a piece of solid work into the great fabric which is rising around us, and on which the new Jerusalem will one day stand. I like the story of the man who, instead of criticising the garden plots of his neighbours, made his own so beautiful that those on either side were led one by one to do the same.

As first of the prophets, as the connecting-link between the first days of the settlement in Palestine and the splendour of Solomon's reign, by his unblemished character, by his sympathy and strength, by his evident fellowship with the God of Israel from his boyish days to his old age, Samuel won from his people the most profound veneration; and it is not to be wondered at that one of them—who owed everything to him, though he was unable to appreciate the majesty of his personality—in the supreme hour of his desperate need, when all beside had deserted him, turned for help to the great prophet, though he had been withdrawn for a considerable time from earthly scenes, and cried, "Bring me up Samuel."

II. His Blessed Death.—Death is not a stab, but a step; not a chamber, but a passage; not an abiding-place, but a bridge over a gulf. "God is not the God of the dead, but of the living, for all live unto Him."

THE TRUE CONCEPTION OF DEATH.

None are dead, in the sense of remaining in a condition of deadness. Those whom we call dead are those who died, and passed through death into the other life. They put off their earthly tabernacle, but the tenanting-spirit has passed into other scenes and activities for weal or woe, and from which it would be an effort to tear itself, if summoned to return to the cares and responsibilities of this mortal existence: "Why hast thou disquieted me, to bring me up?"

Remember how the Apostle Paul describes death. He speaks of his departure (2 Tim. iv. 6). His word is a nautical term, and signifies the loosing of a ship from its moorings, not that it may reach harbour, but that it may go out from the harbour on to the broad bosom of the ocean. This is the exact thought caught by Tennyson, when he sings:—

Sunset and evening star,
And one clear call for me;
And may there be no moaning of the bar
When I put out to sea.

This is death. It is a moving out of the soul from the stagnant waters and containing walls of the harbour, on to the great bosom of the ocean of eternity, where there is width and space, opportunity to explore to the furthest coast-lines of thought, and to attain to the golden shores of the blessed isles.

Speaking of the deaths of two men, whom we both knew and loved, a beloved friend of mine quoted a poem of Bret Harte, which is exceedingly beautiful and apposite, because it so exactly expresses the desire of the man who is in a strait betwixt two, knowing that the blessedness of this mortal life is far less than that of departing to be with Christ:—

But lo, in the distance the clouds break away!
The gates' glowing portals I see;
And I hear from the outgoing ship in the bay
The song of the sailors in glee.
So I think of the luminous footprints that bore
His comfort o'er dark Galilee,
And wait for the signal to go to the shore,
To the ship that is waiting for me."

Remember how the Apostle Peter describes death.—Speaking of his death, he uses the very word, which had been employed in that memorable conversation on the Mount of Transfiguration, when Moses and Elijah spake with the Master of the decease which He was to accomplish at Jerusalem. "After my decease" (Luke ix. 31; 2 Peter i. 15). The Greek word is exodos. There is only one other place in which that word occurs, in the whole New Testament, when the reference is to the going out of the people from Egypt (Heb. xi. 22).

Death, under this conception, is a going out, not a coming in. It begins. If it ends, it ends the life of slavery and pain, and opens the way into a world where the development of the soul will be unrestrained.

The Lord justly claims the title, "the Resurrection and the Life." He has abolished death, and brought life and Immortality to light through his Gospel. We are not now left to the dim light of a surmise, of supposition, or of hesitating guess work. We know that there is a life beyond death, because men saw Him after He was risen. "We are witnesses," says one of them, "who did eat and drink with Him after He rose from the dead."

Yes, He lives, and because He lives we shall live also. He has gone to prepare mansions for us in the Father's house, and He will come again to receive us to Himself, that where He is we may be also. And in that world we shall see his face, and his Name shall be on our foreheads, and, in company with kindred spirits, we shall do his commandments, hearkening to the voice of his Word. "His servants shall serve Him." Even now I suppose Moses and Aaron are among his priests, and Samuel among them that call upon his Name, "in the solemn troops, and sweet societies" of eternity.

The Church and Missions.—II.

By Rev. JOHN STEWART, M.A., Madras.

How Best to Organize Home Efforts, and Generally Increase Interest in Foreign Missions.

In our second paper we considered the formation of Prayer Unions or circles as a method of binding together all those who were interested in this great question, and showed how the development and formation of such circles could be helped forward by forming volunteer bands of all those possessed of gifts which might be used in a wider field than is afforded by a single congregation. We shall now consider the important questions of literature and specialization as necessary complements of any satisfactory scheme.

3. Literature.—If the circles or unions already referred to are to do really effective work, provision must be made for meeting their requirements in the matter of study, by plans of lessons, such as are suggested, for example, in the S.V.M.U. books, or by missionary studies similar to those which appeared some years ago in the Regions Beyond Magazine. (A similar series, on a somewhat different line, appeared in the Missionary Review of the World about the same time.) These could be published in the Monthly Missionary Record, which should be supplied free to every holder of a missionary box, or contributor of a certain definite amount annually. The sale of the magazine should be pushed by the members of the circles, as should also various booklets on missionary subjects, such as those on Manchuria and Livingstonia, published by the U.F. Church of Scotland, and the admirable series published by the S.A.G.M. All booklets and other publications should, of course, be got up in the best and most attractive style. To do this, and also for the purpose of providing and arranging for the distribution of what is required, a good literature department is of the utmost importance.

It will be of very little use to provide good literature unless some effective means is provided for its distribution. Just here Prayer Union circles would find one of their best fields for the development of personal effort. It would also be the business of the literature department to arrange for the supply of suitable books on missionary subjects by different publishers at the usual rates, and the sale of these could also be pushed by the P.U. circles. A series of selected travelling libraries might at the same time be provided and lent out to the different branches. All this means money, but if the experience of other Societies is any test, the whole scheme can be worked at a very small cost, any additional expense incurred in the matter being met from profit on the sales.

The free distribution of the magazine pays financially, and it pays twice over in the

DEEPENING OF MISSIONARY INTEREST.

We know one society with a comparatively small constituency which meets the entire cost of its home working expenses, including the free distribution of its magazine to box-holders, &c., from the profits on the literature sold, so that every penny contributed goes to the foreign field—a very strong argument with any subscribers; while the indirect results from such an increased circulation of really good literature must be considerable. The two societies that take the front rank in the matter of literature are the S.A.G.M. and the C.M.S. Other societies might well profit by their experience in any development of this important department of work. Every booklet and magazine issued ought to contain a printed form of application for membership in the prayer circles referred to. Another department closely associated with literature is the issuing of periodical letters of instruction and counsel specially addressed to collectors, box holders, and members of prayer circles.

4. Specialization, or "Our Own Missionary." To this form of enterprise much attention has been paid in the C.M.S., and also in America. Sixty years ago Dr. Duff gave expression to the opinion that individual congregations might with advantage be got to undertake the support of but it was not until 1890 that it was adopted, and then by the C.M.S.

By 1896 the number thus supported in connection with that Society had increased to 135. In July of that year The Intelligencer announced that of the seventy-eight new recruits sailing that autumn, nine had been thus adopted, and suggested that the rest might be taken up in the same way. In three weeks forty-four of the number were provided for, and by the time of sailing the whole party had been thus apportioned, while at the end of 1901, out of 892 missionaries at work with the C.M.S., 396 were supported in this way in England and forty-two from the Colonies, while sixty-seven were self-supporting or partly self-supporting, making a total of 505 specially provided for, against 387 for whom the Society is entirely responsible.

Such missionaries are supported either by one person, or by the members of a family; or, again, by a branch of the Gleaners' Union, or some other such body; sometimes it is a church, while again it may be a town, or even a county. In every case the contributions for this purpose are contributions raised on behalf of foreign missions.

Not only in England, but also in America, the plan has been tried, and has almost without exception worked well. If the fact that it is something additional to what is already being done that is undertaken is made clear, there will be very little danger of the particular individual or society becoming so centred in one particular field or missionary as to forget the rest, and the benefits to the spiritual life will soon make themselves manifest. Per contra, to be in contact with one missionary brings the church or individual into contact with the whole missionary enterprise. So far as the adoption of a particular missionary by a congregation is concerned, it is important that it should be closely connected with the systematic study of missions, and with definite prayer for them, with the aid of the prayer card, cycle of prayer, or some other similar help. Without this, the tendency would almost certainly be for the congregation to have its attention confined more or less closely to one particular individual or field, and thus its sympathies would be dwarfed and cramped.

A modified form of this same idea is seen in what is called the share system, which is worked chiefly, although not necessarily exclusively, in connection with Sunday-schools. As an illustration of its effectiveness, the case of the Metropolitan Tabernacle Sunday-school may be mentioned. It was introduced there in 1894, when its annual subscription towards missionary work was £200. In 1899 the amount rose to £659, in addition to £600 contributed towards the cost of rebuilding the Tabernacle.

Some of the benefits of this method of specialization to the individual have been stated as—(1) Making the missionary problem more real, and its accomplishment appear more possible. (2) Enabling individuals to apply their money in the way that appeals most to their minds. (3) Leading Christian men and women, who were indifferent to the claims of missions, to take an interest in them, and thereby awakening the sense of responsibility in regard to them.

SOME PRACTICAL EXAMPLES.

(1) In the case of a church which had been in the habit of contributing £14 per annum for foreign missions, one of the members went out as a missionary. Immediately the members subscribed the whole sum required (£100) for her salary, and their contributions to one home society increased 20 per cent., and to another 60 per cent.

(2) A church with a debt of £5,400 on the building raised £20 a year for foreign missions; a proposal was made and agreed to, to support a missionary of their own. More than the amount required was raised without any difficulty, while the debt on the church was reduced by £1,400, and the ordinary church account was nearly £200 better than the previous year.

(3) Another church which subscribed £28 per annum for foreign missions determined to support a missionary of its own. During the first year £500 was raised, and two missionaries instead of one sent out, and the annual contribution for the general foreign mission fund was almost doubled.

(4) Another church raised £50 a year for foreign missions, and had difficulty in raising an additional £10 for a special object. Having introduced a systematic method of giving, their contributions for foreign missions went up at once to £200. They then decided to have a missionary of their own, to work in a distant home mission district. This led to their having next a foreign missionary, and now that church supports six home and seven foreign missionaries.

Financially, therefore, it pays a church to be interested in foreign missions, while the spiritual benefits, although less easily tabulated, are none the less real. The method is one well worthy of consideration, and we can only hope that something of the kind may soon be begun on a larger scale than hitherto. The underlying principle, as stated by the C.M.S., is that God does not commit his work in the world to one class only. He can use persons of all classes. The thing is to find those whom He chooses.

At any rate, the means suggested might be used to supplement our present methods; and would, if adopted, tend to foster and deepen the prayer-life of those interested in the subject, and bring them into closer harmony with the mind of God in the great work of the world's redemption.

Coronation Opportunities.

In many directions efforts are being organized for a wide-spread distribution of tracts in the streets and parks of the metropolis on the Coronation days.

In view of the dinner which his Majesty the King will give to the poor on July 5, Pastor F. H White writes:—"Is not this a golden opportunity which Christ's stewards and soul-winners should hasten to buy up? In one parish which I know well, a single congregation has undertaken to present 1,200 copies of the pocket edition of 'The Travellers' Guide from Death to Life.' This is a book literally packed with Gospel truth, and about which the Bishop of Durham says:—'Its brightness and interest, its variety, and its plain, strong loving presentation of the old saving Gospel, seem to be just the things likely under God, first to get shut doors opened, and then to step through these for Christ.' Similar efforts might be organized in other parishes. Permission would, of course, have to be obtained to place the books on the tables. This, in the case I refer to, was readily granted by the committee of management; where it is refused the distribution might be made at the doors, as the guests pass out from the halls or schoolrooms used for the dinner. The book can be had, attractively bound in blue, from the British Gospel Book Association, 5, Hope Way, Liverpool, at a specially low rate for distribution."

Among publications eminently suited for general circulation are the "Grace Pettman Penny Stories," which have been so highly appreciated by our soldiers in block-houses in South Africa. Two numbers specially suited to the Coronation season are "The Crowning Day; a Soldier Story," by E. A. Bland, and "Ted's Coronation Day," by Grace Pettman. These stories can be obtained from most newsagents and booksellers, or direct from the publisher, Mr. J. Bateman, 27, Paternoster Square, London, E.C.

Workers at Large.—Principal Forbes Jackson writes from Harley College, Bow, E.: "The students of Harley College close their session at the end of this month, and I am writing to ask whether any of the many readers of The Christian could help me to find evangelistic work for some of them during the three months of holiday recess—in van, village, or tent. If any friends can aid me in this, I shall be glad to hear from them."

SUNDAY, June 15. Numbers xxiv.

IN these closing prophecies Balaam no longer surveys the host of Israel from a distant and inaccessible position, but from the top of Peor, an eminence that commanded a wide prospect. There, viewed in God's light, Israel's tents seemed lovely. They might be "black as Kedar," and filled with men and women who were very far from the ideal, and yet they were ravishingly beautiful. Oh, that our feet might stand on God's heights, and that our eyes were opened to see things as God does, and as they are. Then we should realize our true position as in the risen living Christ. We should resemble more absolutely the lign aloes and the cedars, and from us also waters would go forth, as streams in the desert. The most precious and powerful results would begin to accrue, if instead of taking the world's conception, or our own, we would dare to take God's; and begin living on his plane, and in the might of his Spirit.

The closing prediction of Balaam took in the long future—"the latter days." Only we who are in Christ can anticipate the ages to come without alarm. He is in us now, and He will be with us for ever; and no demand will be too great for Him to meet in and by us, whose blessedness is thus for ever assured. For Israel the Star and Sceptre were undoubtedly David's line, culminating in Christ Himself, and for us they stand for the risen Lord. We shall do valiantly, because He is in us and we are in Him, and the life we live is not ours, but his. What need we fear of Moab or Sheth, of Amalek or Asshur? They belong to the earth sphere, whilst we are of heaven. They shall perish as the creatures of time, but we have already received the kingdom that can never be removed.

The literal significance of these prophecies as illustrated by history is very remarkable, for in these brief and closely-compressed words we have predictions of the overthrow of the gigantic Eastern despotisms by Alexander the Great, and afterwards by the Romans. And beyond all these, there is the anticipation of the time when the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our God and of his Christ, and He shall reign for ever and ever.

MONDAY, June 16. Numbers xxv.

As the incantations of Balaam had been proved powerless, a deeply-laid plot of wickedness was contrived which should break the connection between them and Jehovah—a connection which was absolutely necessary for their stability and well-being. It cannot be too firmly borne in mind that our one source of strength is in the unbroken indwelling of God; this is only possible in its manifested power when we exercise ourselves to have consciences void of offence towards God and man. Any taint of our conscience, any permitted sin, will deprive us of that indwelling. Hence the attempt which was made on Israel will be made also on us, to entangle us in fleshly alliances, to defile and pollute our spiritual nature by bringing it out of the spiritual kingdom into the sensual and evil sphere wherein the children of this world abide.

The Midianite king, at the suggestion of Balaam (Rev. ii. 14), used the blandishments of the beautiful daughters of Moab to turn aside the children of Israel from the paths of purity to the obscene and abominable orgies of Moabite worship. The women probably invited the men of Israel to visit in their homes, to see one of their festivals, and they fell into the snare, yielded to the temptation of the scene, and at once the holy bond which united them to God was severed. As the result, Israel would have become as any other nation, had it not been for the summary measures taken to break off the horrid sin, and restore the former fellowship. This was brought about by Phinehas, who was remembered for good in after ages (Mal. ii.).

If any of my readers are under the fatal fascination of some evil thing, which is stealing from them their blessedness, their peace, and power, let them by the grace of God come out and be separated, and obtain again the witness of the Spirit and the indwelling sense of God.

TUESDAY, June 17. Numbers xxvi.

The plague had swept away all the survivors of the old generation which had come up out of Egypt, and had been numbered at the beginning of the desert march (Num. i., &c.), thirty-eight years before the occasion referred to in this chapter. A second enumeration was now rendered necessary, as a preparation for the division of the country, on the threshold of which the young expectant generation stood. It appears also from this catalogue that the heads of families in Israel amounted to fifty-nine, and these, added to the twelve princes of the tribes, yielded seventy-one, and so laid the foundations of the Sanhedrim.

The total number of males in given in verse 51, and if there were an equal number of females, the whole congregation must have reached the surprising total of 1,203,460, to say nothing of minors and children. How wonderful that so great a host should have been borne, as on eagles' wings, through the perils of the desert! To each family a portion of the new country was to be divided by lot, over which the Providence of God presided (Prov. xvi. 33), and the extent of each holding was determined according to verse 54. "By this regulation, provision was made for the support of upwards of 600,000 yeomanry, with from six to twenty acres of land each."

Comparing the numbers of the first and the second census, it is clear that Reuben, Gad, Ephraim, Naphtali, and especially Simeon, had suffered a great decrease, whilst the other tribes had increased, so that on the whole there was only a decrease of 1,820. But ponder the last verse of the chapter, and read again Heb. iii. and iv. Is it possible that the same relative proportion obtains still, and that only two out of millions enter the promised land? For us that land is the realization of God, of his indwelling in our hearts, and willingness to do all in us and for us. Reader, are you living in it, or in the inhospitable desert-waste?

WEDNESDAY, June 18. Numbers xxvii.

The daughters of Zelophehad were the sole survivors of their father, who had left no sons. He was not among those who rebelled against the Lord with Korah, but had died, as the majority of his people had done, in his own sin. There was no reason, therefore, why his daughters should forfeit his share in the land. They were worthy representatives of those who have faced their apparent disabilities, who have refused to accept a negative, who have triumphed where it seemed as though certain disappointment and failure awaited them.

God always meets the highest ideals and standards of the soul. We can never expect too much from his generosity and grace. We often find in Scripture that seeming obstacles, as in the case of the Syrophenician woman, may become stepping-stones on which to climb to higher things.

Every man who has been placed over God's heritage, and has the heart of a true shepherd, will understand what Moses felt when he uttered the request of vv. 15-17. We desire to see the flock of God in good hands before we resign our office. In this case, as Joshua stepped up to take the rod of authority from the hand of Moses, it was made clear that he would not occupy all his rights and privileges. Not directly, but mediately, through the high priest, were the Divine directions to be obtained. Israel was to be a Theocracy, under the reign of God, as our lives should be.

THURSDAY, June 19. Numbers xxviii.

There is a repetition, in this chapter, of several of the laws previously promulgated in Leviticus and elsewhere; as though during the desert march many of the sacred rites had fallen into disuse. That directions should be given at this point for the maintenance of the morning and evening sacrifice, is a sad confession.

It has been pointed out by a devout student that out of the seventy-one verses in these two chapters, thirteen allude to the sin-offering, whilst the remaining fifty-eight are occupied with sweet savour offerings; and he deduces the precious lesson that the special theme here is God's delight in Christ. Morning and evening, day by day, week after week, from one month to another, Christ was prefigured in the fragrance and preciousness of his Person and work towards God; and, necessarily, since we are viewed in Him, our covenant Representative, our service is also viewed under these types. Compare Eph. v. 1-2.

Ought not this thought to affect our worship? Our hymns and prayers, our lessons and sermons, our service to the poor and needy, ought to have more of the sweet savour of the Spirit and Name of Christ in them. This will be as the Bread of God, as we have it in the second verse: my offering and my bread, for a sweet savour unto Me.

The seventh month of the ecclesiastical year was the first of the civil. It was inaugurated by special blasts of trumpets, and more sacred feasts were held during its course that at any other season of the year. On its tenth day the great Day of Atonement took place, on its fifteenth the Feast of Tabernacles, which lasted a week.

It was a beautiful custom to dwell in booths, in remembrance of the desert march; and in after days Jerusalem must have looked very beautiful when the streets were filled with festal crowds, and the house-tops were covered with bowers of green. It was during such days, as described in John vii. and viii., that our Lord compared Himself to a living fountain of water flowing through the hearts of his people to make deserts sing for joy; and said that He was the Light of the world, the true Beacon and guiding cloud of his people. And the holy Apostle, in describing the blessedness of the future (Rev. vii.), uses this figure to set forth its tranquil joyousness.

The aggregate sum of the victims offered by the Jews in sacrifice was very large. The yearly offerings made at the public expense, and, entirely exclusive of the vast number of voluntary vows and trespass-offerings, amounted to the following annual amount:—fifteen goats, twenty-one kids, seventy-two rams, 132 bullocks, 1,101 lambs, in all 1,241. But, in addition, as many as 255,000 lambs would be slain at the Passover. Truly we have no liberality common amongst us to be compared with this, and it would be well for all of us to consider whether we might not do much more. Love has greater claims than law. It should be borne in mind, of course, that these victims were the food of the high priestly and the priestly houses, and that the vast hecatombs slain by Solomon or Hezekiah were intended partly to supply the need of the great multitude who gathered to Jerusalem at the feasts.

SATURDAY, June 21. Numbers xxx.

It was an ancient usage with Israel that an individual might avow his intention of offering a gift to God, or of abstaining from certain articles of food, or of doing something for God. This now passes under review, and is added as a codicil to the Divine Covenant. In the case of a man such a vow became obligatory, there could be no retracting, no running back (comp. Psa. lv. 20; lxxxix. 34). But in the case of wives or children it was determined by the husband in the one case, and the parent in the other, whether the vow might stand.

Be very careful in dealing with the great God. Better not to vow than to vow and not pay. It is a solemn consideration that God is ever near us, listening to our least expression of special determination. And when once the vow is made, He expects us to go through with it.

Let us resolve, God helping us, to be more than ever for Him, walking in the light of that great vow with which the Lord Jesus bound Himself, when He said that He could not eat of the fruit of the vine until the Kingdom of God should come. What can we render, in our holiest and loftiest hours, for all God's benefits towards us!

F. B. M.

Guildford Convention.

THE opening meeting on Saturday, May 31, was devoted to quiet waiting upon God, and marked by a spirit of earnest expectancy; while on Sunday evangelistic services were held afternoon and evening. At the first general meeting, on Monday night, Rev. J. J. Luce spoke helpfully on "The Lordship of Christ" (Acts x. 36), emphasizing the need for Christians to have their thoughts of Christ raised to a higher level. He drew a comparison between Satan's plan to belittle Christ and the office of the Holy Spirit to exalt Him. Besides the acceptance of Christ as Lord, there must be the confession of Him as Lord. The Saviour set his disciples an example of what his followers must be by washing their feet; so must all who love Him enter into the same spirit of humility, serving one another. Rev. A. E. Barnes Lawrence followed with some thoughtful words concerning what Christ expects us to be to Him—branch, disciple, friend, bondservant, and witness (John xv).

TUESDAY.

On Tuesday morning Rev. W. Darlow Sarjeant opened with an exposition of the words, "Love in the Spirit" (Col. i. 8). He showed that this is the heart of religion, the acme of faith, and the queen of the graces. Natural love is born of earth, and dies with earth; but there is a deeper, stronger, higher love—"Love in the Spirit." Pleading that any who were essentially selfish could not know what holiness was, the speaker urged that any bitterness of feeling among those present should be dispelled if the Holy Spirit was to dwell within their hearts. Love in the Spirit is not a sentiment, but a passion, and does not rest in church organizations or church life; it goes out to seek the lost sheep and bring them back to the fold of God. It is always sacrificial, for it began by suffering long and enduring all things.

The burden of Rev. W. Houghton's address in the afternoon was the condition of those who are "meet for the Master's use" (2 Tim. ii. 21). He instanced many Christians who know Christ as Saviour, yet scarcely know Him as King and Master. We must remember that we have been saved to serve, and must stand in a right relationship to Christ if we would be profitable to Him.

In the evening, Rev. A. E. Barnes Lawrence spoke with much power on part of Romans v. 9, 10, "Justified by his blood," "Saved by his life." After referring to the difficulty many Christians have in realizing the truth of the second statement, while recognising that they are justified by the blood, he went on to speak of the sphere and measure of the believer's safety. The life of the risen Lord is the centre of that sphere, since the life of the Christian is encircled by the life of Christ. The measure of the Christian's safety lies in the knowledge that he is safe from both open transgression and secret sin. Some timely words on the obligation and privilege of those who attended conventions were given by Pastor W. Fuller Gooch, who remarked that such gatherings proceeded on the assumption of two facts—that all believers who assembled belonged to Christ by purchase and submission, and were willing to do his service.

WEDNESDAY.

Rev. F. B. Meyer was the speaker on Wednesday morning, taking as the basis of an impressive discourse Col. i. 9. He pointed out (1) that the Church of Christ, which is his body, arose when He arose, and ascended when He ascended. (2) In the purpose and thought of God we are now in Christ Jesus, and although our bodies are on earth, our spirits do not belong to the earth, because we have been redeemed out of the earth, and our redeemed spirits are in union with the risen Christ. (3) Spiritually, we are always living in the midst of the New Jerusalem, which has come down from heaven, and happy are they who realize that they are living in the midst of the unseen and eternal. He rebuked the practices of many professing Christians, particularly that of reading unwholesome literature, and urged the necessity for cultivating not a morbid and questioning conscience, but a conscience that knows unerringly what is right and what is wrong.

The subject of the afternoon's address, also given by Mr. Meyer, was 1 Cor. ii. 12: "We have received not the spirit of the world, but the Spirit which is of God, that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God." (1) We must give God time to bring to our vision the details of the unseen and eternal; (2) we must expose ourselves constantly to the teaching of the Holy Spirit; (3) we must act as if we felt and perceived them.

When Rev. F. Paynter took the chair on Wednesday night, the attendance was larger than that of any of the previous meetings, and the keynote of an impressive gathering was the opening hymn—"Nothing between, Lord, nothing between." After Pastor McAuliffe had offered prayer, the thoughts of those present were directed by Rev. C. G. Moore to Ephes. iv. 10—"He that descended is the same also that ascended." Christ descended to the cradle, cross, and tomb, that He might go back, and from his throne fill us with his Spirit. The curse of sin is manifold, but the grace of redemption is just as manifold. Second to God's forgiving love comes his filling love. Christ fills with the Holy Ghost because the Holy Ghost fills with Christ. Turning to another side of the Spirit-filled life as indicated in Acts xii., Mr. Moore showed the possibility of a Herod coming into the experience of every believer, Yet the Spirit-filled life is one that will stand all the test of God's providence and the strain of life's discipline, for the highest bliss and most glorious visions of God are given, not only in the Upper Room, but in Herod's presence.

The next speaker was Rev. W. Darlow Sarjeant, who dealt with the effect of the baptism by the Holy Ghost on the believer's disposition. With telling earnestness he set forth the close relation between this baptism and divine compassion for the multitude. Men and women whose hearts are not consumed with compassion for the unsaved know nothing about the baptism of the Holy Ghost. Agnosticism to-day is saying that the Church is failing to fulfil her divinely appointed task. Why, in spite of the thousands of sermons which are being preached, has the Church failed? Because so many labourers are away in the field without being sent. Thousands of our Sunday-school teachers have never been anointed. We must pray that He will send, because He alone can anoint, and give the needed power.

THURSDAY.

Rev. J. J. Luce thoughtfully expounded the Apostle Paul's entreaty to the Thessalonians, "Quench not the Spirit." He said that while many of our churches and chapels are marked by human eloquence and devices, few are characterized by the power of the Holy Ghost. The people to whom this command was given formed a missionary church; and if a church is full of the Holy Ghost it will be characterized by a spirit of true missionary zeal. In illustration of this, Mr. Luce referred to the efforts of the Moravian brethren, and the far-reaching results of their devotion to the Gospel and the extension of Christ's Kingdom the world over.

A large congregation again assembled in the afternoon to listen to an address by Rev. Evan H. Hopkins. Turning to the familiar story of Elisha multiplying the widow's oil and meal, he made a practical and forcible application of the prophet's question, "What hast thou in the house?" Addressing himself to those who had been awakened by the Spirit of God, he pointed out the need for any such to realize that they were debtors, and recognise the claims to be met. God has a claim upon us for the wonderful privileges He has conferred upon us. Jesus Christ has a special claim upon us, since we are his by purchase. The Church, too, has a claim upon us. To the question, "What hast thou in the house?" we can reply that we have Christ, with all the fulness that dwells in Him. It is not a new gift that we need, but a new apprehension of that same gift. The prophet commenced with a question, and followed with a command: "Go and borrow vessels," teaching the duty of giving after receiving. Passing on to speak of the outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon the disciples, Mr. Hopkins emphasized Pentecost as being (1) the fulfilling of a promise, (2) the reception of a power, and (3) the indwelling of a person. The promise was given to the Son, for the Church; the power was such as had never been known before; and the Holy Spirit is not merely an influence, but a person dwelling in hearts surrendered to his sway.

In the evening, to a large audience, Rev. F. S. Webster gave an exhortation to be filled with the Spirit (Ephes. v. 18). He emphasized the fact that these words of the Apostle do not form a prayer or the putting before us of a privilege, but are a distinct command. Many have an idea that the filling of the Spirit can only be enjoyed by bishops, clergy, deacons, and prominent Christian workers; whereas it applies to the rank and file of the Church. Every Christian has the Holy Spirit, but not every Christian is filled with the Holy Ghost. Pressing home the momentous question, the speaker asked: "What is the secret of the great gap between the promises in Scripture and your own experience? Why is it that sin does sometimes have dominion over you, and Christ's grace sometimes seems insufficient for you? Why is it that the peace of God does not keep your hearts and minds? Unless you abide in the fulness of the Holy Spirit you will never experience the promises of the Gospel. There is no remedy against backsliding, and no power to preserve to us the fulness of the truth of God, apart from the Holy Spirit. But to enter into the enjoyment of this truth there must be—(1) Confession of emptiness; (2) consecration and cleansing, the handing over of self to God; (3) claiming what He is waiting to bestow."

FRIDAY.

Gatherings were held for stimulating interest and prayer in foreign missions. In the morning Rev. J. J. Luce presided. Bishop Tugwell held the close attention of the audience as he related the remarkable progress which has been made during the last ten years in Western Equatorial Africa. He described the present favourable attitude of the people toward the messengers of the Gospel compared with the prejudice which was manifested a few years ago, and spoke of the growth of the native church at Lagos, where a place of worship has accommodation for 2,000 people. He voiced the cry of the natives for "white men," and pleaded that some would consecrate their lives to the service of the Gospel in the diocese he represented, comprising 700,000 square miles.

Rev. J. Mulenbruch followed with an interesting account of the work among the Jews in Asia Minor. At Smyrna alone there are 35,000, chiefly descendants of those who were expelled from Spain under Isabella. With pathetic earnestness the speaker pleaded for deeper interest to be taken in the evangelization of his Hebrew brethren. It was gratifying to know that nearly 500 messengers of Christ are beseeching the Jew to be reconciled to God; yet that number is utterly inadequate to reach the twelve million Israelites.

From Persia Rev. A. R. Blackett brought cheering tidings. Although progress has been slow, the power of the Gospel is becoming felt in the land. Unhappily there are only five ministers at work, contrasting with a scene witnessed by the speaker in a cathedral, where six surpliced clergy were ministering to a congregation of eighteen.

After Mr. Spencer Johnson had sung with much tenderness "He died because He loved me so," Rev. A. W. Baumann spoke of the outlook in India. During the thirty-three years he had spent there the country had passed through three distinct periods regarding its attitude towards Christianity. First there was a time of indifference, which was followed by a period of opposition. Hinduism and Mohammedanism reared their heads against Christ. The present is a period of final victory of the King. Other speakers were Rev. A. Glover (Shansi), Mr. H. Forder (Arabia), and Rev. W. P. Buncombe (Japan); while at the afternoon gathering a number of lady missionaries gave accounts of their travels and labours in various lands. The Convention closed with a meeting for praise.

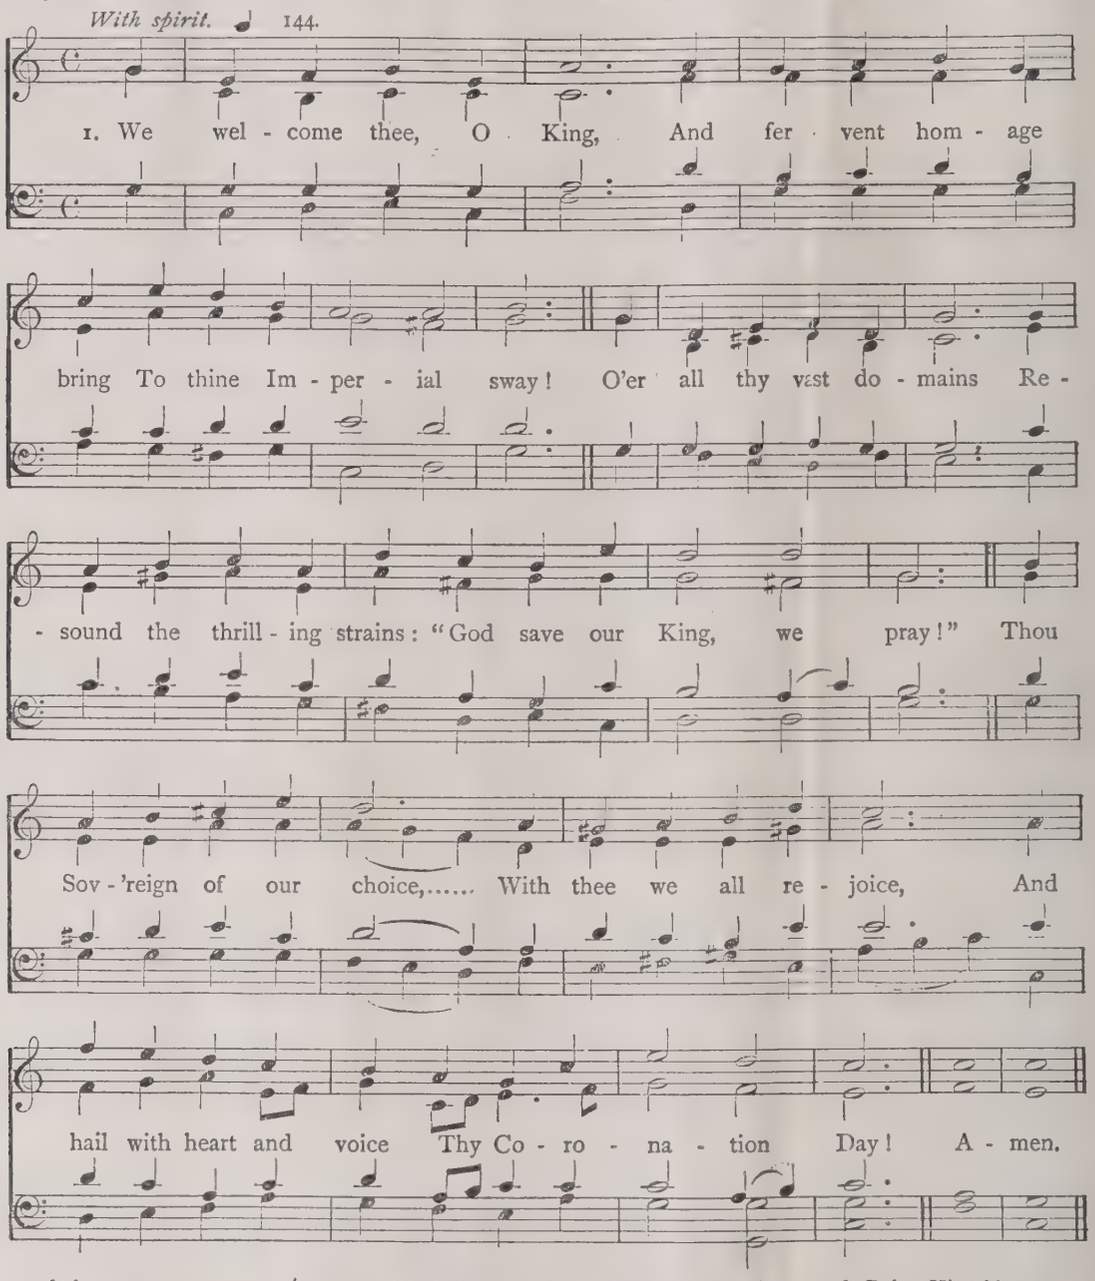
WE WELCOME THEE, O KING!

A HYMN and TUNE suitable for use at Services in celebration of the Coronation of HS MAJESTY KING EDWARD VII.

Music and Words by Rev. J. MOUNTAIN.
Music Revised by W. W. STARMER, Esq., A.I.A.M.

The Coronation Service.

The Coronation Service is a very elaborate symbolic ceremony, the most prominent parts being the following:—His Majesty the King is anointed on the shoulders, head, and breast. Four swords are presented to him—two being the swords of Mercy, one the sword of Justice, and the fourth the sword of State. The King then receives two Golden Spurs, the Royal Sceptre with the Cross, the Ivory Rod with the Dove, and also a gold and jewelled Ring. He is then invested with the Royal Robe of cloth of gold. The Golden Orb of Empire is then placed in his right hand. He is then solemnly crowned with a magnificent golden and bejeweled Crown. Her Majesty the Queen is then anointed and crowned. After this their Majesties kneel before the Sacred Table, and receive the Holy Communion. The Holy Bible having been presented to them, the final ceremony is the ascent of the Thrones, when all present do homage to their Majesties.



With spirit. ♩ 144.

2. The symbol pure doth rest
On shoulders, head, and breast—
Anointing thee our King.
Thy Swords of Mercy great,
Of Justice and of State,
With Spurs of speed we bring.
Take now the Cross of Love,
The gentle, peaceful Dove;
Our high Exemplar prove,
While we thy greatness sing.

3. The Ring we give to thee
A pledge of love shall be
Which naught can separate.
Arrayed in Robes of Gold,
May all thy life unfold
In noble deeds and great.
Thine Orb of Empire grand,
Firm held by God's own hand,
None can its might withstand,
O King of glorious State!

4. We deck thee with thy Crown:
May Britain's fair renown
Rest spotless on thy brow!
Heav'n guard thee, gracious King,
From every hurtful thing;
With virtues rare endow.
God's life thy life imbue,
His love thy love endue,
His strength thy strength renew,
To keep each sacred vow.

5. And thou, O noble Queen!
Naught e'er shall come between
Our loyalty and thee.
Anointed now and crowned,
To us for ever bound
In sweetest charity.
May God thy life preserve,
Thy soul with courage nerve,
Him faithfully to serve—
By duty's bondage free.

6. Before His table now
In sacred union bow,
And Christ your Lord confess.
Take ye the Word of Life,
For valour in the strife
Of Truth and Righteousness.
Your stately Thrones ascend,
While we in homage bend,
And prayer and praises blend
From voices numberless.

7. "God bless our King and Queen:
Long may they reign serene!"
Our Empire's people pray.
"Protect 'mid life's alarms
By Thine Almighty Arms':
Be Thou their Hope and Stay.
As years flow on apace,
Adorn them with Thy grace,
Until they see Thy face—
Heaven's Coronation Day!" Amen.

THE MILDMAY CONFERENCE.

MAY 27-29.

Wednesday Evening.

The Spirit of the Rejectors.

Rev. H. L. MOIR.

And Simeon blessed them, and said unto Mary, his mother, Behold, this child is set for the fall and rising again of many in Israel; and for a sign that shall be spoken against; . . . that the thoughts of many hearts may be revealed (Luke ii. 34, 35).

IN the mind of God there has always been a great idea of the Kingship of his Son on earth. We find a reflection of that divine thought in the Lord's Prayer:—"Hallowed be thy name" (on earth as in heaven), "thy kingdom come" (on earth as in heaven), "thy will be done on earth as in heaven." That is what God wants. It was his good pleasure to take different individuals and place them in positions of kingship on earth. He took David, for instance, placed him on the throne of a special nation, to represent in miniature what he wanted to bring in on a far grander and more perfect scale by-and-by.

THE DIVINE THOUGHT OF KINGSHIP.

There is a Psalm in which David is called upon to come and deal with the malady of his master. The poet tells of the songs he tried in vain because the stubborn mood of Saul would not yield. Then the poet represents David as laying aside his harp, confessing his failure to please his stubborn lord and king, and, bursting out in prophetical ecstasy, declares that what he cannot do now God will do by and by. He then points away down the ages of the future to the coming of a perfect King—the Lord's Anointed. David saw all that the King should be, and what the Kingdom needed. So he pictured the Kingdom of Christ.

In the Messianic Psalms like-minded men pictured two things—the sufferings of Christ and the glory that should follow. The King is David's greatest Son, and the Divine thought of kingship was realized in Jesus of Nazareth.

FROM THE MIRACLE TO ITS WORKER.

The wonderful beauty of our Saviour was veiled. One part of his temptation was to lay aside that veil, to flash and dazzle the eyes of men. But our Lord refused to do his work along that line, and veiled Himself that his work might be spiritual. I know that He wrought miracles. What were they intended to do? To arrest men's thoughts, and not to keep them. Men saw the miracle and looked beyond to the greater wonder of the Person working it. So our Lord came showing Himself gradually. He had come to set up his kingdom, and He did not flash out in kingly glory, but just marched before men's vision in an ordinary, simple way, all with a view to getting people to pass judgment upon Him. You remember He asked his disciples what people were saying about Him. He wanted to know what place He had in men's thoughts. "Whom say men that I am?" then "Whom say ye that I am?" and trying to find out what place He occupied, He was always approaching his throne and kingdom.

CONCEPTIONS OF THE KINGDOM.

There were all kinds of ideas concerning what the Kingdom was to be, and different declarations of what it was not to be. For instance, it was not to be a political kingdom, neither a kingdom of this world, nor a social kingdom; and Paul says: "The Kingdom of God is not meat and drink; but righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost." Of course this Kingdom has its political side. We have watched, in connection with the recent war, how the Spirit of Christ has forbidden the use of many things in modern warfare. You know also that the Kingdom of Jesus Christ is within you, coming to claim the individual; and, if he yields to this claim, passes him on to the great Church of Christ. I once heard a preacher say that the Kingdom of God is that class of people over whom Christ reigns with love. Christ came to be the love of men's love, the conscience of men's conscience, the will of men's will. "The Kingdom of Heaven is within you."

THE SUPREME TEST.

You remember the supreme test Jesus put to Peter, "Lovest thou Me?" When Jesus is really loved by you and me, it means that He occupies the throne of our life. Then can we say, "Thou knowest, Lord, that we love Thee."

When Christ arrives, it all depends upon man's disposition whether He is received or rejected. Take, for instance, Pilate. He is a Roman judge, and must pronounce upon all kinds of persons. And one day there stood before him, in the capacity of a prisoner, Jesus Christ, the King. Pilate was drawn into the quarrel, and had to take side in this awful controversy. When reading the whole story you feel sorry for Pilate, and ask, "Was it not too great a responsibility?" But the answer to that question is that there was nothing more put upon Pilate than is not put upon you and me, and according to our disposition we shall accept or reject the King.

Jehovah asks through Isaiah of those who have rejected Him, "Where is the house that ye built unto Me? Where is the place of my rest?" He then tells us to whom He will look, "To him that is poor and of a contrite spirit, and trembleth at my word." These are not the marks of the rejectors of Christ, for none of the rejectors were poor or of a contrite spirit. Turn also to the Beatitudes, and you find that the people who receive and welcome Christ are the poor in spirit.

There is much of the Gospel that is not written, and I would like to find the story of the four blind men and the poor Syro-Phenician woman, nameless individuals, who went the length of calling Jesus the Son of David. I believe it was because they were poor and contrite, trembling at his word. I think one of the saddest things in the Gospel is when the Sadducees joined their political enemies, the Pharisees, saying, "Show us a sign from heaven," meaning, "We have yet seen nothing to convince us." That is just what people are saying to-day. And God says to-day what He said to them: "Ye do not discern the signs of the times," having no eye to see and no ear to hear.

When we study the Gospels, and look at the spirit of the rejectors of the King, we get light on ourselves and our own rejection of Him. To Christian workers I would say, Study in the Gospels the rejection of Christ, if you would understand why so many reject Him to-day, and would learn more deeply of his love, for while we were reckoned among his rejectors his love to us was steadfast.

The Nature of the Rejection.

Rev. ARCHIBALD G. BROWN.

Our Lord came to earth not unheralded, although his coming took a careless and wicked world by surprise. His own people had long had the Pentateuch, with the promise of the coming Messiah. In addition God had raised up a succession of prophets, who had described the Saviour who should come in terms so clear that the people had almost a photograph of Him.

Then, as a last reminder, God sent John the Baptist, who bare witness of Him. They had the testimony, "This is my beloved Son." Yet He was despised and rejected of men. Moreover, there were those who had studied the prophets, and were on the tiptoe of expectation; yet, when He arrived, to fulfil the predictions which they had possessed for so long and from such a succession of prophets, there came the fulfilment of Isaiah's notable words (liii. 3), "He is despised (or "looked down upon") and rejected" (or "thrown out"). Yes, the King, predicted and promised, was cast out when He appeared.

I want to concentrate our thoughts on the nature of the rejection. (1) It was limited to man; we might well emphasize the final word in the sentence, "rejected of men." He dwelt among the wild beasts in the wilderness; the very fishes took their orders from Him, and steered their courses at his bidding. He spake a curse, and the fig-tree was smitten, withered from root to leaves. He bade the winds, the uncontrollable gales, to be still, and they sobbed themselves to sleep. The restless sea knew its Master; at his word the beating waves ceased to dash. Angels ministered to Him, and counted it an honour to watch by his tomb. All these owned Him Lord; yes, and even the demons knew Him—hear that shuddering creature in the synagogue at Capernaum, who cries, "I know Thee who Thou art, the Holy One of God." Yet the King was rejected of men.

"COMPLETE AND UNQUALIFIED."

The rejection was complete and unqualified. It was a rejection not merely of views, but of persons. We may not all accept every view set forth by a preacher; yet, we should not "throw him out." Some called Him a glutton, others a tippler, and the Pharisees a deceiver, while there were those who did not hesitate to say that He was actuated by demon power. All his claims were flung back.

We know that he claimed to be "the Servant of the Lord," spoken of in Isa. xlii. In the synagogue at Nazareth he reads, "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me," and says, "This day is this scripture fulfilled in your ears." Then they sought to "cast Him down headlong." He claimed, also, to be the Son of God—to be God Himself. He was not only divine—be careful of the present day use of that word—He was Deity. The Jews knew his meaning when he said, "Before Abraham was, I am," and they stoned Him. The very Son of God was brought before the Sanhedrim and charged with blasphemy. All his claims, then, were rejected.

THE CHIEF PRIESTS AND ELDERS.

The rejection was official and representative, not merely by the scum—the ignorant, or, as we might say, the "hooligan" class; but by the scribes and pharisees "in Moses' seat," the decorous and highly religious world of that day, acting for and representing the people. We see Pilate when sitting in judgment, as between two magnets, swaying first one way and then the other. He seems to reason—"If I offer them the choice between Christ and Barabbas, they are sure to choose Christ." But the chief priests and elders "persuaded" the common people. The rejection did not come from a wave of public delirium, it was the calmly-taken action of the religious.

Again, the rejection went to the uttermost limits. He was "thrown back" to the cross. God offers man a Saviour, and man flings the offer back, and the religious world mocks: "He saved others, Himself He cannot save." His sacred body would have been left for birds to prey on, and to be cast into the Gehenna fire, but that God intervened, and a borrowed grave was found.

Does the rejection end there? No. In Luke xix. we have the parable of the nobleman going to receive a kingdom. While his servants are busily engaged, what are the citizens saying and doing? Their message is, "We will not have this Man to reign over us." I believe that is just the word that goes up to heaven to-day. The Lord's servants are occupied in his work, but the citizens have no wish for Him as Lord. Do you object—"No; we live in a different age?" I reply that the rejection is as clear if not as rough. Do you say: "Are not tens of thousands attending places of worship?" I reply, if nominal Christianity is a synonym for Christ, He is not rejected; but I fear He is as much rejected by what is called Christianity as by Paganism.

CHRIST AND THE BIBLE.

The Lord Jesus Christ is represented on earth to-day—(1) primarily, by the Holy Ghost: (2) by the Book the Holy Ghost has written; (3) by the men and women born of the Holy Ghost. As to the first, the world does not understand; the Holy Ghost is perhaps rather neglected than flauntingly rejected. As to the second, how are Christ and the Bible treated? For I say you cannot accept the one and reject the other. In the Old Testament we have a Book which bears Christ's imprimatur. If men believe not the Book, they believe not Him. Yet this blessed Book is betrayed by those who profess to owe everything to it. God's Book is brought to a human tribunal charged with blasphemy, and rejected. Let us, however, be amongst those who refuse to believe that it is a compound of God and man; it is either the highest truth or the most pitiful delusion. How about the third point? Does not a great cry go up, "How are we to get the people?" and is not the reply, "Dilute, water down, eliminate Holy Ghost teaching, and religion will be popular"?

The conclusion is this, that the world will reject to the end, because it is the world. But I am to witness for Him, to take my stand with Him in his rejection. Never did the words sound more clearly than now: "Let us go forth, therefore unto Him without the camp, bearing his reproach." Let us have daily, hourly, life-long fellowship with the rejected Christ.

Thursday.

The King Crowned.

By Sir ROBERT ANDERSON, K.C.B.

And being turned, I saw seven golden candlesticks; and in the midst of the seven candlesticks one like unto the Son of Man, clothed with a garment down to the feet, and girt about the paps with a golden girdle. . . . And He had in his right hand seven stars, and out of his mouth went a sharp two-edged sword, and his countenance was as the sun shineth in his strength.—Rev. i. 12-18.

We have surely reached the climax of the great subject of conference. Let no one think that I am going back, if I begin from the standpoint of the humiliation of Christ, for I do not think we can deal intelligently with the subject before us, or with any profit to ourselves, or of safety to ourselves, if we allow our minds to dwell upon the glory, without having, as it were, started with clear thoughts about the humiliation. Our thoughts, then, naturally turn to Philippians ii., which speaks of Him who, "being in the form of God, thought it not something to be grasped after, to be equal with God." It was his intrinsic right to be on that equality, but "He made Himself of no reputation"—He become a man. Surely this was humiliation enough, but even this was not all. "Being found in fashion as a man, he humbled Himself, and became obedient."

CHRIST'S HUMILIATION.

This brings us to the truth of the humiliation, which present-day theologians called the Kenosis. It is not the first time in the history of Christendom that theologians have taken this position against Christ. Their view of the humiliation, as found in their books and taught in so many of the theological colleges, is this—that Christ came down to the level of a blind, ignorant Jew; that his mind was degraded with all the superstitions and all the ignorances of the time, and of the people among whom he lived. But this was not the humiliation of Christ; this was a degradation. No matter what great names can be quoted in favour of such a view, it is blasphemy against the Christ of God. Christ's humiliation was far different. With the full knowledge of all that He was, and all that He might claim, He thought it not an object of rapine to be equal with God, but divested Himself of his glory; yea in the calm apprehension of everything that God revealed in the Scriptures about Himself. He came down until there was no level of humiliation that He avoided.

CONTEMPORARY VIEWS.

I have often thought that, in this day of cavillers and objectors, we might learn something helpful to us from what our Lord's contemporaries said to Him. They called Him "the friend of publicans and sinners," of common degraded people with whom he associated. Not merely were his surroundings vulgar, as they judged them, but his habits again, as they judged them, were worthy of his surroundings. They called Him "A gluttonous man and a wine-bibber," and also spoke of Him as "Beelzebub." That was his own testimony. Oh, the depth of the humiliation of Christ! It is impossible for persons living in the present day to stand where those stood who judged Christ thus when He was on earth. I was almost startled the other day, as I opened a book by an Oxford doctor, who said that in the Messiah there was nothing religiously, socially, morally, even nationally, to attract, but everything to repel.

Living at the present day, we are apt to think that the men who rejected Christ were either fools or fiends for misjudging Him thus. But they were not fools or fiends. They heard his words; "never man spoke like this Man." They marked his deeds. But then they said in effect, "Is not this a pretender? Is not his mother called Mary?" His sisters they could name, and his brothers were there, and they were offended at Him. Upon one side there was the great national religion with its splendid traditions, that magnificent shrine, that wonderful ceremonial, and that honoured and highly cultured priesthood, and all this having the seal of God's appointment. Upon the other side there was the "carpenter" in the train of common men, in the presence of fishermen and women, some of them with an evil past. It was not that they were fools or fiends, but that they were unspiritual. Those men were as earnest, and intelligent, and devout as any one of us, but they were unspiritual; and men will misjudge the written Word if they are unspiritual, whatever other great qualifications they may have.

TRIAL BY ORDEAL.

But yet this did not measure the humiliation of Christ. We must not leave out of account Gethsemane, and Pilate, and Calvary. In barbaric days in our own country, even not very long ago, there was a form of trial called "trial by ordeal," and I have sometimes thought that such as had misgivings about their judgment of Christ would stand aloof, and watch to see how the ordeal would end. They thought that surely at the last Jesus Christ would prove Himself to be what He had said He was. They watched Him, saw Him brought to prison and judgment, saw that face marred by the blood that trickled from that torn brow. They watched Him on the cross they heard that cry of agony, "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" They were right; God had forsaken Him, and his sun apparently went down in darkness and shame, a criminal gibbeted upon the gallows. And this was the King of Glory; this was He for whom the everlasting doors had been lifted up; this was He who had gone up far above all authority, above every name that is named, whether in this world or in the world to come.

I want to put this definite thought before you, that when, as Son of God, our Lord went back to the place of glory, that was his right, "the glory that He had with the Father before the world was." In this connection we are reminded of those words, "Wherefore God has highly exalted Him, and given Him a name that is above every name." It is a mystery what that name really was, but it was not the name Jesus. If the name referred to was Jesus, the passage that we have read, to my mind, loses its whole point and purpose. Jesus is part of our Lord's humiliation, and there is no music like it. But let us remember what that name meant to the Jew—it was one of the common names; the very Barabbas who was given up instead of Him was, tradition says, named "Jesus." The name referred to by the Apostle was perhaps, that name spoken of in the Book of Revelation—"the name written that no man knew but Himself."

THE GLORY OF CHRIST.

I hope that one result of this conference will be, not an epidemic of talking about "King Jesus," for the title by which, in this dispensation, the Son of God is specially revealed to us is "Lord." What is to be the result of the conference in our lives? If it does not result in our giving the Lord Jesus Christ a higher, a truer, and a worthier place in our hearts and lives, it will have done us harm instead of bringing us blessing. Men of the world often grasp a truth that Christian men miss. The agnostic millionaire who has lately died may teach us a lesson. Cecil Rhodes said: "If there be a God, it is our place to get hold of what his purpose is, and to fall into line with it." That is just what we want to know—that our place is, to fall into God's purpose, which is the glory of Christ. When the approaching Coronation pageant comes, one thought will prevail with everyone, from the great Ministers of State and their magnificent uniforms and their orders and stars, down to the flunkeys at the horses' heads; their thought will be for the glory of that one central figure—the King. We Christians need to get hold of the thought that our place in redemption is just the place of the officials in the Coronation ceremonial—that we are going to heaven for the glory of the King of kings.

The Son of Man Crowned.

Rev. EVAN H. HOPKINS.

In Heb. ii. 5-9, the inspired writer speaks of the great subject of man, man contemplated in two distinct aspects. It is important that we should not confound what is said of man in one aspect with what is said of man in another aspect. This passage, it seems to me, deals with man in Adam, man in a general sense, humanity as a race, right down till we come to the end of the ninth verse, where the writer says in effect, "Now, as we look at this visible sphere, we do not see yet all things put under his feet; we do not as yet see man in the possession of universal dominion. But what do we see? This is not what meets us as we look at things with our natural eye, but we behold, looking in another direction, One who is the representative of man, even Jesus—we see him by faith, crowned with glory and honour." That is our subject, the Son of Man crowned.

First of all, let us look at man as he was originally made—man in his primitive condition. God created man in his own image, after his likeness. What a wondrous thing was man thus created—physically, intellectually, morally, spiritually—the most beautiful and most complete object of God's workmanship! Man was not only created free from any taint of sin; he was endowed with marvellous capacities and possibilities, and the simple fact that he was made in the image of God leads us at once to understand that man must stand pre-eminently above the whole of creation. God put all things under the feet of man thus created and conferred on him universal dominion. It was God's purpose that man should be crowned with glory and honour, that he should be vested with kingly majesty, a reflection of the divine majesty, so that man's position, according to God's ideal, was one of sovereignty. That was God's great purpose.

ADAM—FIRST AND SECOND.

Now the writer of the Epistle said, "But now we see not all things under his feet." What can we say to that fact? Would not God's great purpose concerning man be fulfilled? Would not man's glorious destiny be attained? To answer that question, we must look at another picture. We must not only contemplate man as in Adam, but look at man as in Christ. It was to the second Adam, to Christ, that the Apostle referred, when he said, "But now we see Him, Jesus, crowned with glory and honour." So that the passage teaches us that God's great purpose concerning man, not only will be fulfilled, but in a sense has already been fulfilled.

In the first Adam we see man fallen from the condition of innocency, from the position of dignity and sovereignty; in Christ, we see man, by the eye of faith, not only quickened, and pardoned, and justified, and restored, but raised up above all principalities and powers, and every name that is named; we see man, in Christ, crowned with glory and honour. So, then, God now deals with man in Christ. God has dealt with man in Adam on the ground of probation. God is not going to deal with man again on the ground of probation; He is now dealing with him on the ground of redemption. Man has already been tried and tested, and has failed; and now it is in Christ, on the ground of redemption, that God deals with man.

THE MAN IN THE GLORY.

We have been privileged to see the identification of ourselves with the Man in the Glory. The Head being crowned, means the coronation of the whole body, of each individual member in that body. At the end of the chapter we see the perfect sympathy that subsists between the Head in glory and the members upon earth, for He that sanctifieth, and they who are being sanctified, "are all of one." Do we understand what it means—not simply identification but union? In what sense? Union of life; not merely union of position, but union of nature, partakers of the Divine nature. The very life that is in the Head is in the members. Again, as there is oneness of life, there must be oneness of heart and of soul: "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus."

Notice the glorious possibilities of a holy life. What is holiness? Sanctifying Christ as Lord in our hearts, is closely connected with this (1 Pet. iii. 15, R.V.). It is God's purpose that we should be holy; this is our blessed call, and He that calleth us is holy. He has not only saved us, He has called us with "a holy calling." Where are the resources? Only in Christ. Living in the blessed fact of our union with Him: all the resources that He has are at our disposal. The Divine power has given us "all things that pertain unto life and godliness." There is the provision. We may ever be receiving from Him, in virtue of our union with Him, all that we require here upon earth to glorify our God in heaven.

THE MISSIONARY MEETING.

Egypt, India, and China were represented at the missionary meeting held on the Wednesday afternoon. The first speaker, Mr. Douglas M. Thornton (C.M.S., Cairo) gave an interesting account of various centres of work in Bible lands. Proceeding, he pointed out that there are at least thirty Christian ladies residing in Palestine villages, in order to exercise an evangelistic influence, as the result of an appeal made some years ago at Keswick. A similar effort might well be made in Egyptian villages, where even the only nominal Christian will be a Greek, who opens a grog shop.

Cairo, with its 500 mosques, its student life impregnated with doubt, its devotion of the ignorant to Mohammed, affords a difficult yet rich field for Christians, and Mr. Thornton suggested (1) that, outside the ranks of regular missionaries, Christian men in commercial circles should proceed there, engaging in business, and at the same time witnessing for Christ. (2) That Christian people who spend their winters abroad should make their temporary home in Egypt.

EDUCATION AND THE GOSPEL.

A practical appeal on behalf of the mission field at large followed from Miss Edge (Zenana Bible and Medical Mission), principal of the Bombay High School. Miss Edge pointed out the responsibilities of Britain towards India, and the need for ladies at home to realize the sorrows and sufferings of Indian women and children. All the work of the Society represented by Miss Edge is evangelistic in its many branches. A thousand of the 590,000 villages of India are missioned. and there are some thousands of pupils in the zenanas. The medical work is prospering, and the educational establishments in Bombay include the High School, where English pupils also are received, thus associating them with Christian influence and enterprise.

"MAKE JESUS KING."

The education of the native girls in the vernacular, and also in English, is fruitful in good results, and particularly interesting are the two schools for Israelitish children—descendants of old Jewish settlers. This work has proved very encouraging; several have been baptized, and an industrial home for converts is needed. The Society also has a model kindergarten, and its schools receive Government aid. Some of the girls have been so fully instructed that they will be able to take the places of missionaries on furlough. The Government have now asked that their teachers should be trained by the Society. The aim in all things is to "make Jesus King."

At the conclusion of Miss Edge's address, Mr. Walter B. Sloan, at the invitation of the chairman, Colonel G. W. Oldham, led in prayer, that prominent men of various foreign countries, who may visit this country for the Coronation, may be brought under Christian influence.

CHINA'S WOMEN AND CHILDREN.

Pleading for China, and more especially for its women and children, Rev. James Webster (Manchuria) gave a strong and pathetic address, in which he touched upon the awful burdens of our suffering fellow-creatures. He spoke first of all of the opium curse, then of infanticide, then of footbinding. As to idolatry, the land is full of it. Mr. Webster described a temple in Manchuria, where he saw a poor woman place cakes and wine on the altar before a hideous idol, and pray to it. "Won't you help me today? I've come twenty miles to plead with you on behalf of my son."

The speaker also told of the ghastly idol, the "god of a hundred sores," to which sufferers go, sticking paper on the counterpart of the place in which they are afflicted, and hoping thereby to receive healing. "There is no hope for China but in the living Christ." Mr. Webster concluded with moving words regarding the need for medical missionaries filled with the love of God.

Sleeping Sickness in Uganda. — Sleeping sickness, or negro lethargy, is a very fatal disease, which has been long known in West Africa, but has recently travelled along the Congo into Uganda. The fear is that it will spread in this region. It has many features in common with the general paralysis of the insane. Hitherto it has only attacked natives, and three cases were lately under treatment in London hospitals. Latest reports from Uganda indicate that in Busoga alone 20,000 people have succumbed, and it is said to be still on the increase. A commission, organized jointly by the Foreign Office and the Royal Society, has been appointed to investigate.

Dr. Baedeker's Movements.

HITHERTO the Lord has guided and provided. I left Christiania after a very closely-filled two weeks of happy and fruitful Gospel work in various churches and halls. We had a daily prayer-meeting and a Bible-reading. On Thursday, May 29, I arrived at Jököping, and after filling four days with meetings, I came to Stockholm on the way to Finland and St. Petersburg, where I hope to spend a few days, and then go to Riga, Reval, and attend a conference on June 15—the Russian Pentecost. On June 21, I expect to return to Christiania, to attend a missionary conference, thence to Drammon, and for 28th to 30th inst. the Laurvick Conference. I also hope to take part in conferences at Skien, Bergen, and other places.

Norway is a fertile soil for the Gospel in its fulness; even by interpretation, the truth, in its liberating power, is warmly received by crowds of men and women. There is an atmosphere of spiritual revival in the land. One would like to see more fellowship between the Protestant nations of Europe, strengthening and encouraging each other. My address till June 18 is—care of Baroness Uexküll, Reval, Dom 17; and after that date, Hotel Augustin, Christiania. I shall be thankful for the continued prayer of God's servants.

F. W. Baedeker.

Pastor G. Hübert, of Christiania, writing with reference to Dr. Baedeker's labours in that city, says:—"From May 17 to 28 more than thirty meetings were held—four on Sundays and three each week day. They were all of them well attended, particularly the Gospel meetings in the evening—the largest houses of worship, belonging to various denominations, being used. It was a wonder to see how the Lord sustained his venerable servant to complete so grand a campaign."

In Dark Guatemala.

IN Santo Tomas, one man has been baptized, and is an energetic and useful evangelist. Crowds visit our small dispensary every week, and numbers have been restored to good health. By the medical work, many doors have been opened to us. Recently we were called to see a dying Indian boy, seventeen years old. We found him tearing his hair, and crying, "I don't want to die! oh, I don't want to die! I know there is another world, even if the people say there is none, but I don't know where it is; oh, I don't want to die!" It was a pleasure to tell the boy of Jesus as the Way and of the glory as the prepared place for redeemed sinners. He listened intently, and at once became calm, dying two hours afterwards in peace and without fear. One man here in Santo Tomas burned his idols, with several spectators watching, which was a good testimony.

In a little place near here the telegraph operator, who for a long time opposed the Gospel bitterly, is now a believer, and is preparing to burn his idols and be baptized. We insist upon the destruction of these abominations before accepting the person as a believer. In a small town, twelve miles off, there are several believers, Indians or Ladinos (Spanish-speaking natives), although it is an Indian settlement. One man is an active and fearless evangelist.

"Holy week," so called, is a time of drunkenness and rioting in all parts of the country. Gifts are sent to friends, and on every side there is worldly joy. The god of Santo Tomas is a large image of a dead man in a case, called "The Lord of Calvary," and not only are pilgrimages made to it every Friday, but many here call it God, and trust in it to answer prayer.

There are many encouraging signs in the work in which we are engaged, and in many towns souls are emerging from heathen darkness. These are the days of the Church's opportunities and responsibilities, and are, indeed, wondrous times. We are saddened to see the encroachments of Rome in England and the United States. C. F. The Christian Temperance Campaign.

BELFAST.

CONTINUING his brief mission under the auspices of the Committee on Temperance of the General Assembly of the Irish Presbyterian Church, Rev. Dr. J. Q. A. Henry addressed the meetings in Lisburn on Monday, 2nd inst., in connection with the local Temperance Union. The afternoon meeting, which was very largely attended, was held in the Temperance Hall under the presidency of Rev. Mr. Stewart, who had issued invitations to ladies and gentlemen of influence in the district, and who was evidently much gratified at seeing the result of his efforts, and of those of the secretary, Rev. R. W. Hamilton.

The evening meeting was held in the Orange Hall, which was filled to its utmost capacity long before eight o'clock. The band of the I.O.G.T. played in the streets and afterwards on the platform of the hall. At both meetings the speaking was with power, and many acquired a new conception of the national peril, and of their responsibility in the conflict with the first and worst foe of the home, the church, and the State. Ministers of all denominations were present, and declared that each message was an inspiration.

On Tuesday evening, Dr. Henry was down on the Order of Business to address the General Assembly meeting in May Street Church. The report on temperance was presented in a few words by the Convener, Rev. John Macmillan, and seconded in a brief, pointed, and well-received speech by Rev. C. M. Young, of Belfast. Dr. Henry, in rising to speak, at 8.15, was received in a most enthusiastic manner by the vast assemblage, which packed the great auditorium. For upwards of an hour he held the audience spellbound as he indicated what had been done in America, and what ought to be done in Ireland; as he drew a contrast between the saloon and the church, the one standing for the perdition, the other for the salvation of men; as he declared that the Church was God's agent for smiting wrong and for destroying the works of the devil; and, as he blew a blast, which made every ear to tingle, calling men and women to come to the help of the Lord, he pleaded for action, for a safe Communion table, for the safeguarding of the young, for organization, for united work among all denominations, that the crown might be placed upon the brow of the adorable Lord. At the end of the hour Dr. Henry intimated his intention to conclude what he modestly called "an insufferably long speech," but cries of "Go on" came from all parts of the house, and when he solemnly concluded ten minutes after, the vast audience rose to its feet as one man, and cheered, and cheered, waving hands, and hats, and handkerchiefs in one of the most unforgetable scenes ever witnessed in the General Assembly. It was felt on all hands that the cause had received an impetus which was bound to make itself felt for years to come, and, what was perhaps most gratifying, Dr. Henry's enunciation of sentiments most advanced was most warmly applauded.

Dr. Henry addressed a large meeting in Derry on Wednesday night, another in Coleraine on Thursday night, and the final meeting in Ballymoney on Friday night.

Without counting 1,000 pledge forms applied for and distributed at the inaugural meeting, 600 signatures have been received.

The committee are arranging for another visit from Dr. Henry, in November.

DERRY.

Describing the meeting at Derry, a correspondent writes: "On the evening of June 4, the Guildhall was crowded with an intelligent and appreciative audience. The chair was occupied by Rev. Dr. Stuart. There was music at intervals by the excellent choir of First Derry Church. For over an hour Dr. Henry dilated with great skill and power upon the evils of the drink traffic, and appealed to the Church to awake to its urgent duty. The meeting was one of the finest and most fruitful gatherings that have been held in the city in the interests of temperance. At the close a considerable number signed the temperance pledge. Temperance workers have been encouraged and stimulated, and it is believed that the cause has received a distinct impetus which cannot fail to tell for good upon the entire community. Should Dr. Henry return, he would be very warmly and cordially welcomed."

SHEFFIELD.

Dr. Henry is taking important part in the Conference of the British Temperance League at Sheffield. On Lord's Day last he addressed large meetings, speaking at night in the Albert Hall on, "New Needs in the New Century for Temperance Reform." We hope to give particulars next week.

FUTURE MEETINGS.

June 29, Sheffield; July 31, Alford, Lincs.; Aug. 1-30, "Edinburgh Castle," Limehouse, E.; Aug. 31, Lincoln; Sept. 4, Louth; 6-9, Taunton; 10, 11, Newport, Mon; 12-14, Taunton; 15, 16, Llanelly; 21, Free St. George's Edinburgh (Dr. Alex. Whyte's); Sept. 26-Oct. 3, Alloa; 4-17, Perth; 18-31, Greenock; Nov. 2-Dec. 2, Ireland (Nov. 2-5, Cork; 6-9, Limerick; 24-Dec. 2, Dublin; other announcements later); Dec. 4-14, Worcester; Jan. 9-15, 1903, Motherwell.

Contrasts at the West End.

ON the invitation of Lady Jeune a large and influential meeting was held last week at 79, Harley Street, W., to celebrate the fourteenth anniversary of the Shaftesbury Institute Missions (Miss Meredith Brown's Homes). Many hearts were deeply touched as Lady Jeune, when extending a cordial welcome to her numerous visitors, referred to the auspicious circumstances under which they were gathered, and voiced the great joy which was filling all hearts at the consummation of peace in South Africa. Referring to the work of the Homes, she showed how difficult it is to get people to realise how very near each other the extremes of riches and poverty lie in London; yet the richest ought to know that within a stone's throw of their homes there may exist the greatest suffering and hardship. There had, however, been great improvement in the twenty-five years during which she had known Marylebone, though the parish still contained some of the poorest streets of the metropolis. As the result of experience Lady Jeune was deeply impressed with the value of giving work for those who were able to do it as a means of supporting themselves.

When submitting the annual report, Miss Meredith Brown (founder and honorary resident superintendent) gave some graphic illustrations of the lights and shades of the work. The work among the factory girls was most largely dwelt upon, but the Labour Home for men, the mothers' meetings, and the efforts on behalf of the children were also lovingly presented.

FACTORY GIRLS AND HOMELESS WOMEN.

Much encouragement has been met with in the work among the girls, though sore disappointments have also occurred. Girls of all ages are reached; and when they marry they are still welcomed to the Sunday Bible class, and encouraged to attend the mothers' meeting. The latter is in a prosperous state, and promises well for the future. Homeless women and girls are shielded in the Women's Shelter till something more can be done.

From many causes—including the war and the heavy income-tax—the regular contributions have fallen nearly £300 a year, and at present £1,000 is required to wipe out all liabilities. Miss Brown pleaded eloquently that the work should not be crippled or hampered through lack of funds; and Lady Jeune suggested making a thank-offering to God for the termination of the war.

Miss Brown's testimony was clear and emphatic as to a great change in the character of the girls since she went first among them. Although the workers still find them rough and wild, yet there are no difficulties now such as the poneers encountered. The same is true about the visiting of the men's lodging-houses, and the work of the Labour Home. Formerly, ladies were never allowed to go to the lodging-house, even in twos and threes, without escort, now one but ladies go, and the men are most respectful and attentive listeners.

A warm commendation of this many-sided effort came from the Right Hon. James Alex. Campbell, M.P., who assured his hearers that here was a tried institution which could be supported without misgiving.

As rector of the parish, Canon Barker spoke from personal experience of cases which had come under his own observation. He found the source of supply for such work in the foul stream which the public-house pours forth, and the secret of bringing all to a happy conclusion in the hope of closing up all such sources of temptation.

Rev. Dr. George Hanson (Marylebone Presbyterian Church) testified to the satisfactory hearers who come to his church from among the men and women in the Homes; and instanced with deep satisfaction a young woman whon he had received into church fellowship, after a strikingly sad life history.

Personalia.

Rev. Dr. Cuyler, though now in his eighty-first year, is hard at work. He is busy with two books, one of them to convey messages of comfort to the troubled and sorrowful, the other to present to the world the reminiscences of his long and useful life. Those who know our friend will pray that he may be helped, while bringing forth fruit in his old age.

Mr. R. C. Chapman, of Barnstaple, so widely known for his Gospel labours, and now in his hundredth year, last week sustained a paralytic stroke. His friends will hear with deep concern that he has lost the entire use of his left side, and is lying in a precarious condition. At the same time, looking back upon long years of the right hand of the Most High, he is full of praise; and looking forward he has joyous confidence in the God of all grace, who will continue with him in comfort and blessing to the end.

Soldiers' Christian Association. — The council have received permission to erect a large marquee at the Alexandra Palace for the special benefit of the 2,500 Colonial troops who will be quartered there from June 15 to July 10. The marquee will be furnished as a reading-room. Daily papers, magazines, and writing materials will be supplied free, and each soldier will be presented with a specially bound copy of the New Testament as a memento of the Coronation. Gospel services will be held on Sundays, and on the week-nights as occasion offers. This special effort to minister to the comfort and welfare of the Colonial troops will necessarily entail considerable expense. The secretary of the Association is Mr. S. E. Burrow, Room 24, Exeter Hall, Strand.

Aguilas Mission. — The mission at Aguilas (carried on under the direction of Mr. R. Pollock Simpson) has been greatly hindered during the past year by lack of adequate accommodation for the meetings. Though the Christians gathered have done what they could, they are very poor. Of the £80 required for a new hall, £64 is still required. "We had a few weeks ago the joy of receiving three new members by baptism. A Carabinero and his wife, who were converted about a year ago, have been sent to the Balearic Islands, where they are witnessing for God. During the past year we have had several very interesting and striking conversions, which have given us fresh encouragement and caused us great joy." Home correspondence may be addressed to Mr. John Wallace, 108A, West Regent Street, Glasgow.

Coonoor Convention.—The annual Convention for the Deepening of Spiritual Life was held at Coonoor, South India, from May 13 to 17. The subject of conference was "Scriptural Holiness: What it is, How to Obtain it, and How to Keep it," and the speakers were Revs. Dr. Boggs, American Baptist Mission, and R. J. Ward (Madras), and Messrs. B. Davidson, W. Mallis, and D. Gardiner, of the Ceylon and India General Mission. The meetings were well attended throughout, a large part of the audience being missionaries. The afternoon Bible readings were given by Mr. Gardiner, the subject being "God's Dwelling Places." The speakers adhered closely to Scriptural terms in setting forth the possibilities and limitations of the life of holiness. To many it was a time of deep heart searching, followed by a stepping out in simple faith on the promises of God. At the praise meeting several clear testimonies were given o blessing received. David Gardiner.

Opposition at Epsom Races.

"DERBY Week, 1902," will long be remembered with mingled feelings, by those who took part in Christian work on Epsom Racecourse. One band, drawn partly from the ranks of the Open-Air Mission, and partly from the London City Mission, was nearly sixty strong, Colonels Mackinlay, Major, and Phayre taking part. Work began on Sunday, June 1, when a number of preachers laboured on the Downs among the gipsies, in the town, and on ground where shows and roundabouts were pitched. A foretaste of coming opposition soon manifested itself, for on Sunday evening the service, held for many years, was stopped by a neighbouring householder, who sent a policeman to remove the preachers.

On Monday evening, at the Clock Tower in the centre of Epsom, where many glorious victories have aforetime been wrought in the name of Jesus, but which for some time till last year had not been available for the work, the evangelists held a service in which the power of God was demonstrated. Notwithstanding the interruptions caused by peace rejoicings, a crowd was attracted and listened attentively, several coming forward at the close for Marked Testaments and converts' cards.

TURNED FROM THE RACECOURSE.

On Tuesday morning a surprising development occurred. For the first time in the history of the work, permission to preach on the course itself, in front of the grand stand (still empty, as it was only 10.45) was refused in the most peremptory way. This was a heavy blow; but another spot was found by the side of the stand, facing and within a few feet of the racecourse, to which the service was immediately adjourned, and where prolonged meetings were held during the whole of each forenoon, though not with such great audiences as gathered in former years on the course itself.

Wednesday ("Derby Day") and Friday ("Oaks Day") were most inclement, and heavy rain fell continuously all the forenoon, but not for a moment was the work suspended, nor was an audience wanting at any time. Directed by the Lord, who most graciously manifested his guidance in the matter, a stand was taken on Friday outside the entrance to the racecourse, on a spot never before held for the Master. Here, taking shelter from the storm of rain, was a fourfold audience ready to hand. In front, under the lee of a stand, were a large number of men of the tramp class; over their heads were people in the stand itself, while on the left and behind the preachers were open drinking booths crammed with people. Here was a God-given opportunity, of which the fullest advantage was taken, and the Word of the Lord went forth among these drinking and gambling men with great power.

The crowds coming to and returning from the races were each day met at every point of vantage, and tens of thousands of choice books and cards, besides Gospels supplied by the British and Foreign Bible Society, and lavender bags with texts attached kindly given by the Bible Flower Mission, were presented to mostly willing and even thankful recipients.

F. C. (Open-Air Mission.)

THE SEED BEARING FRUIT.

The friends of the Racecourse Mission did good work in their tent, where policemen and others gathered in large numbers. Several splendid testimonies were given, and an address by Mr. Collard was actually applauded by the men, who were moved by its earnestness and its reality.

The authorities sent orders to take down the large text, "Christ died for the ungodly," which was outside the tent, and no banner of any description was permitted on the course. One of our brethren, who usually visits the carriages, also spoke of decided hostility manifested as he sought to distribute books to those who in former years had accepted them with thanks. After going to all the carriages, only six had been accepted.

A distinct case of conversion occurred of a young man who was awakened at the meeting of the Open-Air Mission in the rain, and was led by another worker to the tent, who eventually had the joy of hearing him confess Christ as his Lord.

Another hopeful case was a young man who said to one of the brethren, "Oh, I wish you had met me at the beginning of the day, then I should not have lost all my money!"

A remarkable letter was read on Friday morning in the tent, the gist of which was as follows: "Four years ago a hopeless, homeless, wretched woman, I was wandering on the Downs. One of the friends of the work spoke to me, fed me, cheered me, helped me, and I took heart, and hoped again. I had been in different circumstances, well to do, and had often sat on that grand stand at Epsom, but through sin had fallen as low as possible, till loving Christian hearts took pity on me, led me to Christ whom I still love and follow. I write these few lines four years after; circumstances have again altered, and I ask you to praise God for his goodness to me, and still pray for me that God's blessing may continue to abide with me." C. C.

POLICEMEN, GIPSIES, AND MINSTRELS.

Perhaps the most important of all the opportunities for service is the distribution of the Word of God, the Gospels given away this year being bound in purple, with a special Coronation design. Another novel method of distributing the Word was by means of some 3,000 text cards, every one written with the pen, and ornamented with pretty designs, in many instances choice natural flowers being used. These cards were prepared by voluntary workers during the winter months just past. The Downs were allotted out to suitable workers according to the kind of people most likely to be met with, and grand stand, bookmakers' stool, drinking booth, and gipsy tent each in turn received its visit, the printed or written Word being supplemented by experience and spoken text whenever opportunity afforded.

During the days of both the Derby and the Oaks many hundreds of people sought shelter in the tent, and for hours a continuous meeting was sustained, the running fire of testimonies being interspersed with singing, in which the audiences joined heartily.

During the day from 400 to 500 policemen accepted the invitation to eat their lunch in the tent, where tea was provided for them (the only other shelter obtainable on the Downs being the drinking booth). These joined heartily in the singing of the hymns, and when the racing was over, seventy-five minstrels, black, white, and red—many of them the best known in the profession, were present as guests to a meat tea; after which they united in playing on their instruments, many and varied, the hymn "Jesus is tenderly calling thee home," and the chorus "The way is so delightful in the service of the Lord," the latter by their own desire.

O. L. H. (Racecourse Mission.)

With a dear comrade, who was helping me again this year, also a banjoist, I went to a van standing on the Downs and begged permission to be allowed to place our instruments inside until the rain held off, but to our utter astonishment our request was flatly refused, so that there was nothing to do but to turn to the distribution of religious literature again. Our two splendid banjoes, used so much in open air work, were now given over to ruin as it appeared, although we held them under our coats.

When we had worked our way to the centre of the course, we came upon a poor backslider, a tipster, who admitted that he was spiritually unhappy, but yet preferred his lost state to renewing his vows to his Redeemer. Learning that the Gospel workers were not allowed to hold the usual services on the racecourse, and that the Jockey Club had ordered the removal of the Scripture banner, we thought of our own Scripture quotations in pearl on our two banjoes, and realized why our banjoes were refused cover in the caravan—the Lord wanted the texts displayed on musical instruments that were free to be used at all parts (as to order these banjoes away, all nigger banjoists must clear off too). Some good work was done.

Aged Christian Blind.

A RECORD of good work on behalf of some of the afflicted of the household of faith was given at the annual meeting of the North London Homes for Aged Christian Blind, which was held at the Jubilee Hall, Crouch Hill, N., on June 3.

Rev. J. F. OSBORNE stated that the efforts put forward to raise the sustentation fund to £3,000 have been successful. The proposition is to use the interest of this money as a repair fund, and thus obviate the necessity of making special appeals for this purpose. During the year the committee have undertaken the erection of a laundry. The expenses in connection with laundry work amounted to more than £200 a year, and it was considered that the establishment of a laundry would mean a considerable saving annually. During the year the health of the inmates, considering their age and infirmities, has been fairly good. Fourteen inmates have been admitted during the twelve months, and the number in the Homes now stands at 103.

Rev. HENRY BRIGHT (superintendent) followed, showing that the operations have been carried on with energy and faithfulness.

The chairman, Mr. WALTER HAZELL, in the course of an encouraging address, said that the Homes are maintained with care and economy worthy of the highest praise. They are conducted, too, on undenominational lines. In conclusion the speaker addressed sympathetic words to the inmates. Other speakers were Revs. J. R. WOOD (President of the Baptist Union), Dr. THORNTON, J. SUTCLIFFE ALLEN, and Mr. G. E. MORGAN.

The B.W.T.A.

THE annual council meetings of the British Women's Temperance Association, held at Birmingham, June 1-5, were largely attended; nearly 800 delegates were present from all parts of the country. The new Birmingham Temperance Hall was crowded on the Tuesday for devotional meetings. Addresses were given by Mrs. PEARSALL SMITH, Miss GORHAM, and others, the interest being sustained throughout the day. The Town Hall was subsequently the scene of the annual public meeting. Lady Henry Somerset presided, and addresses were given to an enthusiastic and crowded audience by Rev. Canon HICKS, M.A., Messrs. LEONARD M. ISITT, and T. E. TAYLOR (one of the leaders of the Temperance Movement in New Zealand).

The Council meetings opened on Wednesday morning in the Town Hall, when Lady HENRY SOMERSET delivered her annual presidential address, in which she lucidly reviewed the present situation generally from a temperance point of view, laying great stress upon the effects of the drink traffic on commercial prosperity, and expressing her belief that the passing of the Government Licensing Bill will have the result of making future temperance legislation easier. Miss AGNES E. SLACK showed that there are 803 Branch Associations in Great Britain, being a gain of forty, and that 18,191 pledges had been taken.

The proceedings of the week were brought to a close by a highly successful "White Ribbon" Missionary meeting. The Town Hall was once again crowded to excess. Lady Henry Somerset delivered an admirable address, and delegates from Australasia, India, Germany, and Madagascar, also spoke. Simultaneously, a united meeting of the Birmingham White Ribbon Bands took place in the Temperance Hall, where Lady Henry Somerset spoke to an audience of working-girls.

Emmanuel Creche and Mission.—The work at Emmanuel Mission, Lambeth, S.E., was commenced in 1898 with the object of bringing the women employed in the dust-yards of the district under Gospel influences. Later, a créche was opened, where the babes of the poor women could be cared for during the absence of their mothers at work. A weekly meeting for mothers, and another for dust-girls, is held; tea is provided, needlework taught, and the Gospel preached. On Sunday evenings an evangelistic service is held, while weekly visits to the yards provide opportunities for reaching the women who do not attend the meetings. "We have opened our doors," says the annual report, "as a refuge for the friendless and fallen during the year, finding them home and shelter, and doing our best to give them a fresh start in life. Two came direct from prison, and in most of the cases drink was found to be the cause of their downfall." The hon superintendent is Miss Reid, 33, Keildon Road, New Wandsworth, S.W.

Home Mission Week.

OFF FOR THE HOLIDAYS!

"MOTHER, mother!" cried an excited voice, "here comes the cab. Oh, do be quick!" The little speaker, Elsie Gramshaw, had been pressing her nose against the window-pane for the last ten minutes, anxiously awaiting the arrival of this vehicle. The first week in August was always looked forward to by the Gramshaw children with intense interest, for then their holidays began. In June they began to mark off the days to the happy event, and when it came to July 30 they could scarcely sleep for excitement.

For several minutes after the arrival of the cab there was much bustle and hurry, and everybody seemed in everybody else's way. But at last boxes and bicycles, spades and pails, umbrellas, mackintoshes, and sunshades, to say nothing of the children, were safely stored inside or outside the cab, and away they all went to the station.

A few hours later found Mr. and Mrs. Gramshaw and their five children in a cottage by the sea, with the woods and hills stretching away in the background. Then followed a fortnight of absolute delight. Father and mother had plenty of time to play with them. There were donkey rides and rounders on the sand; picnics in the woods; and bathing, tennis, boating, cycling, paddling, castle-building, rock climbing, the collecting of shells and stones, filled up the happy hours. In the cool of the evening, when the sun was sinking to rest, flooding sea and land with its golden light, they would sit outside the cottage, and father or mother would tell them tales of brave deeds done, or of fairy princes and princesses. Then before they went to bed they would sing one of their favourite hymns, and as the sweet strains of—

All things bright and beautiful,
All creatures great and small,
All things wise and wonderful,
The Lord God made them all, fell upon the still air, heaven seemed very near, and life full of gladness. Tired and happy, the children would creep to bed, to wake on the morrow to another day of joy and pleasure.

The Board Schools were closed for a month! This thought was pressing itself dismally upon the mind of Maria Brown, as she sat on the doorstep of No. 10, Paradise Alley. How such a place came by the name of Paradise Alley no one ever knew. It was one of the worst London slums; the houses seemed to lean on each other for support, and you could almost shake hands across the street, it was so narrow. Certainly not a place one would choose to stay in on that sultry August day, but there Maria had been sitting for the last hour. She could have walked to the park, half an hour away; but it was so hot, and her head ached, and the baby was so heavy, and when she got there she could not join in the games of the others with him in her arms.

Poor child! She would much sooner have been at school, for a holiday meant to her more work, and more of the society of her ill-tempered mother, who was harassed with the care of five little ones. Maria was only eight years old, and the thought of the weary days to follow filled her with dismay. Tears trickled down the grimy cheek, and, falling on the baby's face, caused him to set up a dismal wail; whereupon Mrs. Brown rushed out, and angrily snatching the baby from Maria's arms, declared that as a punishment the child should have no tea that day. This meant the loss of two thick slices of bread and butter and a mug of tea, which bore a strong resemblance to coloured water. Not a very tempting repast for a hot day, but at the thought of the punishment Maria's tears fell faster, and as she crept upstairs she sobbed, "I h-hate h-holidays."

Evening came, and as the golden light of the sun fell o'er sea and land one ray found its way into No. 10, Paradise Alley, and kissed the face of the child, who, through grief and weariness, had fallen asleep. Suddenly her expression altered, her lips parted into a smile. She was dreaming of a happy day she had spent last year in the country, a day of perfect bliss. Once more she thought she was rushing across the fields shouting for joy, with no cross babies to mind, and no one to speak angrily to her. But alas, it was only a dream, for the next moment a shrill voice cried, "Maria, don't stop moping there. Come 'ere at once, and take this washing 'ome, and mind you're quick. And 'ere, you can just as well take the baby, too, and get 'im out of my way!" The dream faded, the joy was all gone, and the burden of life descended again on a little life too young and too frail to bear it. So Maria's holidays wore away!

There are many such as Maria in our towns and cities. Would Uncle Tom's "Searchers," who have happy homes and good friends, like to take their share in brightening the lives of these less fortunate children? A day in the country, or, better still, a week, means so much to them! If you do what you can, when your holiday comes you will enjoy it all the better because you will realize that "it is more blessed to give than to receive." Any contributions will be gladly received by Uncle Tom for the Country Holiday Fund, and distributed in the most needy quarters.

For My Brother's Sake (Rom. xiv. 13-23).

THE Apostle had a broad, sane view of things. "I know," he said, "and am persuaded in the Lord Jesus that nothing is unclean of itself; save that to him who accounteth anything to be unclean, to him it is unclean." Whenever you yield indifferent matters to others, let it be clearly understood that you do so, not because you surrender the liberty wherewith Christ has made you free, but because you seek to remove any difficulties out of their path, so that it may be easier for them to do right, and more difficult to do wrong.

Once, when the late Charles Garrett was climbing among the hills, he came to a spot from which two paths started—one easy enough, the other difficult. While he was hesitating, he heard his child, who was following, calling to him, and saying: "Take the safe path, father; I am coming." It is because we hear such voices perpetually calling to us that we surrender what under other circumstances would have been innocent enough. Under the old covenant, men renounced what was wrong, under the new they may also have to renounce what is innocent and right.

If this is so, we are more than bound to give up taking intoxicating drink, for this cannot be classed among harmless things. It is pronounced by all medical and scientific experts to be a poison, which should by no means be introduced into our system, even in moderate quantities. If it were innocent and harmless, we should give it up because of its injurious effect on our brothers, but much more so when it is absolutely deleterious. If you have never done so, write out for yourself a Pledge of Total Abstinence, and sign it; you will be always glad to have taken such a step.

How beautiful is that contrast in "The Holy Grail," by the late Poet Laureate, between Sir Percival and Sir Galahad! The one was lifted up in heart, and thought of all his prowess in the lists, and relied on his strong lance. He made sure that he would light on the sacred vessel, which was an emblem of the inner secret of a Blessed Life; but he missed it, and everything which he touched—women, children, cities—crumbled into dust.

But the other was first, absolutely pure-hearted:—

One there was among us, ever moved
Among us in white armour, Galahad.
"God made thee good as thou art beautiful,"
Said Arthur, when he dubb'd him knight.

But, in addition, he was willing to lose himself to save himself: and through this self-abnegation he not only found himself, and saw the glory of the Golden Grail, but he enabled Sir Percival to see it too:—

And o'er his head the holy vessel hung,
Redder than any rose, a joy to me,
For now I knew the veil had been withdrawn.

Read the whole of that wonderfully beautiful allegory, and see that the strong life which blesses others is that which loses itself to find itself and others.

We must remember that we are in a spiritual kingdom as to our spirits, though we are closely connected with this physical world by our bodies. We are not bodies, with souls attached to them as appendages; we are spirits, who happen for a little space to be imprisoned in these tabernacles of clay. And we must be guided by the laws of the spiritual world into which we came by the portal of the New Birth. And what is the keynote of those laws? Is it not Love? Love which loves not itself, which foregoes its most cherished properties that it may woo and win, may seek and save, the lost.

Let us not allow things for which we shall have to condemn ourselves; but even exercise ourselves to have consciences void of offence towards God and man—not morbid consciences that ask questions, but healthy ones imbued with the Holy Spirit and corrected by the Divine Word. F. B. M.

C.E. NOTES.

There are now in Germany about 230 Societies, with more than 6,000 members.

The third annual Convention of the Christian Endeavour Union of Wales is to take place on June 17, 18, and 19, at Barry, Glamorganshire. In addition to devotional services and business meetings there are several important conferences. At the first of these, addresses are to be delivered on "The Endeavourer and the Intellectual Problems of the Day," and "The Endeavourer and Bible Problems of the Day." Another conference will deal with "The Grace of Giving," "Bible-Class Work," "Work Amongst Boys," and "Sabbath Observance." The convention sermon is to be preached by Rev. H. Elvet Lewis (London).

Cardiff has enjoyed a visit from Rev. Francis E. Clark, D.D., of Boston, founder and president of the World's Union of Christian Endeavour Societies. In the course of his address in the afternoon to a large number of Christian workers, Dr. Clark declared that at his church in Portland they had tried the amusement plan, the literary society, the musical club, and other methods; but they had failed. Young people never could be really won unless they were won by the idea of service and an outspoken confession of their desire to do God's will. In the evening meeting, Dr. Clark said that in Wales, the land of the Sunday school, Christian Endeavour should thrive exceedingly.

Welsh Notes.

THE Executive Committee of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodist Foreign Missionary Society have decided to issue a number of booklets dealing with the work carried on by the denomination in Brittany and Assam. Among the most important of the series will be "Brittany and its Needs," by Rev. W. Jenkyn Jones, "The Khasi Bible," by Rev. John Jones, and "The Religions of India," by Rev. J. Roberts, D.D.

The Welsh work of the Missions to Seamen has been carried on with vigour, and an extension is contemplated in the near future. A temporary Seamen's Institute has been opened at Barry, and the Society makes an appeal for £5,000 to erect a temporary building. At Swansea an excellent site has been granted for the erection of a new Seamen's Church and Institute.

The annual meeting of the Swansea Sunday-School Union was held on May 27. The report showed an increase of twelve affiliated schools, and of 437 in the number of scholars. The average attendance also was higher. Best of all over 20 per cent. of the Sunday scholars had made profession of Christ.

At a meeting of the Cardiff and District Free Church Council on May 30, a resolution was passed approving of the Licensing Bill of the Government, but at the same time urging that a clause be inserted to prevent registration of clubs which are financed by any company, or individual, or tied to a brewery company, and suggesting that a local authority should be empowered to fix the time of the opening and closing of clubs.

The annual meetings of the Salvation Army Industrial Homes at Cardiff have been held at the Y.M.C.A. Commissioner Adelaide Cox attended, and delivered an address. The first home was established sixteen years ago. Another has been established since. Last year, at the latter, 167 cases were dealt with, 299 police-court visits were paid, 682 interviews in cells took place, and twenty-four prisoners were taken direct to the Homes from the police-court and from prison.

Hospital Ship for Fishermen.—An important event in the history of the Royal National Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen was the dedication on Tuesday by the Bishop of London of the new hospital steamer, Queen Alexandra, of the future usefulness of which the greatest hopes are entertained.

International S.S. Lesson.

TEMPERANCE LESSON (Rom. xiii. 8-14).

GOLDEN TEXT: Rom. xiii. 12.

THE Epistle to the Romans was written by Paul towards the close of his third missionary journey, A.D. 56, and during his three months' work at Corinth, just previous to his setting out for Jerusalem, bearing alms to the poor saints there from the churches in Achaia. His companions were Timotheus and the others mentioned in chap. xvi. 21-24. It was written in the Greek language, and carried by the Phebe of Cenchrea (xvi. 1). The design suggested by its chief theme, the doctrine of justification by faith; one way of salvation for all, both Jew and Gentile—peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ, "by whom we have the atonement" (v. 1, 11). The Church at Rome was almost certainly not founded by either of the Apostles, but the Gospel had been carried there by Christian Jews. Paul had not yet been to Rome, but was most probably the first Apostle to visit the imperial city. He was well known to some of the members of the Church whom he had met elsewhere, and had often wished to visit them in person (xv. 22, 23), and planned in this Epistle that, when he had finished the business which called him to Jerusalem, as he made his journey towards Spain, touching at Malta, he would "come with joy by the will of God" (xv. 32; Acts xix. 21).

The portion selected for to-day's lesson forms a conclusion to an exhortation on religious, national, and social duties in the earlier part of the chapter, and gives the motive for obedience.

As citizens—obedient to the laws of the land in which we dwell. To honour God, and those who are appointed to govern and administer justice (v. 4). To discharge faithfully my duty towards my neighbour. The existence of love prevents my doing anything to another that the law forbids (Gal. v. 13). The law of love to my neighbour is active as well as passive, doing good things as well as refraining from evil ones.

As children—obedient to the rules of the parents' home, "Honour thy father and mother, which is the first commandment with promise" (Eph. vi. 2), As between parents and children, so between brothers and sisters, let love be the law, for where love rules a home, envy and strife will find no place (1 Pet. iv. 8; 1 Thes. v. 13). Love in the heart to God and man is like life in the body, it animates for all duties, and repels evil. What do we owe to God? Adoration. Love. Trust. Thankfulness. Honour. Obedience. God's claims are righteous, and to neglect them is "to rob God" (Mal. iii. 8, 10). What do we owe our neighbour? Good will. Good words. Good deeds. By measure, "As ourselves" (Mark xii. 33). There is a love that burns (1 Pet. iv. 8; i. 22).

TIME (11): "That narrow isthmus between the two extremities." Jewellers save the sweepings of their workshops because they contain particles of precious metals and stones. Fire to purpose, "Redeeming the time." (11, 12, 13). The metaphors are various.

"Sleep," of the half-hearted, or weary Christian. Awake, walk (Gal. v. 16, 23).

"Night" (12), the period between the Lord's ascension and his coming again (1 Thess. v. 4).

(13). Day and light. Honest living on this earth, night, and works of darkness, meaning sin and sinful living in this world.

"Put off" anger, malice, wrath, &c. (Col. iii., 8; Eph. iv. 22).

"Put on" new man, kindness, meekness, &c. (Col. iii., 12), with love as a girdle, peace within, praise in the heart, song on the lips. . . . "Whatever" in the hands for Jesus (Col. iii. 24). Are we wearing the clothes of darkness and night, or day and light?

COSTUME FOR THE DAY-TIME.

As children of light (Eph. v. 8).

1. Humility.—The inner garment fitting closely.

2. Love.—The cloak often taken off to cast on another (Col. iii. 14; 1 Pet. iv. 8).

3. Truth.—The girdle, making the wearer strong and ready for service.

4. Obedience.—The clasps for the sandals when the feet are shod with the preparation of the Gospel of peace (Eph. vi. 15).

A new dress (Col. iii. 10; Eph. iv. 23).

A costly dress (1 Pet. i. 16-18).

A sacred dress for worship and daily work (James i. 27; 1 John i. 7).

A Court dress. We shall meet the King in it (Col. i. 12; Rev. vii. 9).

"Like Him." What character shall we carry into his presence?

THE ARMOUR OF LIGHT.

Bunyan said, "Religion is the best armour, but the worst cloak a man can have."

Whole armour (Eph. vi. 11, 13), girdle, breastplate, sandals, shield, helmet, sword. Secured by the links of prayer and shining with watchfulness.

How can we "put on the Lord Jesus Christ"?

Rev. iii. 20: Open the door and let Him dwell in our hearts by faith (the latch is on the inside): "I would but ye would not." Eph. iii. 17, Col. iii. 16.

Put on the Lord Jesus Christ:—

Before God by making Him my only Plea (Eph. ii. 13; Heb. ix. 12-24; 1 John i. 9). Ground of Justification (Rom. v. 1). Hope of Glory (Col. i. 27).

Before men by my profession, wearing his badge (Gal. iii. 27; Matt. xxviii. 20). Life and works. "The Christian is the world's Bible" (Matt. v. 16).

Children's Special Service Mission.

University Notes.

[BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.]

CAMBRIDGE.

AS is usual in the May Term, the Inter-Collegiate Christian Union has been holding open-air services in Cambridge on Sunday evenings, and on a week-day evening in various villages round Cambridge. Open-air services have also been held by members of Ridley Hall in the old parish of Barnwell, not without tokens of God's blessing.

The Seventh Triennial Reunion of former members of Ridley Hall will be held (D.V.) on June 23, 24, 25. The chief speaker will be the late Principal, the present Bishop of Durham. Amongst the other speakers are Rev. Prebendary Webb-Peploe and the Master of Trinity (Dr. Butler). The chief subjects under consideration will be "Personal Dealing with Individuals" and "The Clergyman as a Student." There will also be some short addresses on "Spiritual Truths Learned in Mission Work."

OXFORD.

AT the Summer Races during Eight's Week no fewer than 6,400 tracts were distributed, at the gate of Christ Church, to visitors from every part of the land.

Rev. F. W. Hinton, M.A., curate of St. Peter-le-Bailey has received notification of his appointment to the N.W.P. of India under the Church Missionary Society.

The last meeting of the Missionary Union for the academical year was held this week in the rectory grounds of St. Peter-le-Bailey. More than sixty University men listened to an interesting address from Rev. R. Bateman, of the Punjab.

The Bishop of Mackenzie River, speaking at the St. Aldate's Sunday Afternoon Men's Service, gave some deeply interesting facts concerning his thirty-three years' work in the Arctic Regions. Showing the extent and loneliness of the diocese, the Bishop said that his headquarters were 11,000 miles from the nearest railway station, letters were delivered only three times during the year, the latest news they received was always two months old, while their orders for necessaries were given two years before they were delivered. The mission stations are often from 100 to 300 miles apart, and when the Bishop first went there the nearest missionary was distant from him 1,000 miles. At the present time there are forty children in the schools, some of whom have left their homes 500 miles away, and in the spring season when the roads were passable daily services are held, medicine given for the body, and counsel for the soul.

The Bible League.—A tent conference was held in the Priory Grounds (Y.M.C.A.), Islington, last week. Afternoon Bible readings by Pastor W. Fuller Gooch on the Word of God in its relation to (a) Spiritual Life, (b) Church Life, (c) National Life were a leading feature of the gatherings. Many valuable and deeply spiritual addresses were also given by Sir Robert Anderson, Revs. Samuel Wilkinson, J. B. Barraclough, Trevor Fielder, John Tuckwell, T. Lancaster, R. Wright Hay, and Dr. John Robertson. Messrs. John McCall, W. H. Seagram, R. C. Morgan, C. Boardman; and Colonel Morton presided. Copies of the tenth annual report may be had from the secretary, office of the Bible League, 186, Aldersgate Street, E.C.

The King and His Waifs.

A Plea for the Children of the Slums.

By. T. J. BARNARDO, F.R.C.S., Ed.

FOR months past the coming Coronation has been in everybody's mouth, and during the next few weeks not only London but the whole Kingdom will be in a delirious whirl of loyal enthusiasm. Money will be poured out like water, and one and all will gladly offer of their substance to testify their welcome to the King, and their congratulations upon his accession to the Throne of this mighty Empire. Schemes manifold there are for commemorating the auspicious event, ranging from a parish pump to Imperial Colonization. All this is, perhaps, as it should be. Who is there that will not join in the loyal acclaim, "God save the King!"? But is it not well, also, to ask, What share shall the Waifs have in this outburst of National rejoicing and generosity? Is it to the King's honour, and for the good of this Christian Kingdom, that they should be forgotten?

It is surely most significant that His Majesty's own chosen method of celebrating the Coronation should be the providing of a dinner to the poorest. Yet poorer and more helpless than most of his Majesty's London guests on Saturday, July 5, are the Waif and Stray and Orphan and Destitute and Homeless and Evil-entreated Children who are still to be found in such numbers throughout the length and breadth of the land! Last year alone I admitted 2,892 such to the Homes under my care, and I am but one of many workers in the same field! Alas, there is wide scope for ourselves and others before that happy time arrives when there shall be no single Waif Child found within the borders of the United Kingdom! Surely it will be a movement congenial to His Majesty's kindly sympathies to do something for the uplifting of those who so sorely need Christian help and tendance!

To carry out this task needs organization and machinery. Both of these our Homes can well supply. Our thirty-six years of experience have taught valuable lessons, which have been translated into principles and methods, and which have been abundantly approved in the course of our history. Who helps our Homes helps those Waif Children of all our Great Cities on whose behalf they are carried on!

In what way, then, can a permanent

CORONATION YEAR MEMORIAL,

in which the Empire's thanks for the blessings of Peace may be also expressed, be established in connection with the Homes carried on by the National Waifs' Association?

The answer to this question is as prompt as it is practical. Our Homes are outgrowing our means year by year and month by month. To maintain our work in all its efficiency, my Council needs at least £55,000 to carry out present and prospective plans which have been forced upon us by Institutional expansions. This sum, large in itself, is almost infinitesimal in relation to the wealth of the United Kingdom for whose Waif Children our Institutions keep open doors; but it would form a magnificent memorial of Coronation Year, and every penny of it would benefit the King's most helpless subjects (and therefore be for the greater honour of the King!).

I have no huge ornamental scheme on hand, no "splendid generality" to offer for the consideration of the loyal supporters of our constitutional Monarchy; but there is a first-rate opportunity to employ usefully and helpfully at least £55,000 for the direct and immediate benefit of these boys and girls.

HOW DO I PROPOSE TO SPEND IT? THUS:—

At our Girls' Village Home, Ilford, as is well known to nearly all our supporters, I am wanting urgently, as I have done for many years, a properly-equipped Children's Hospital. For years past two of our cottages have been diverted from their primary purpose of housing rescued girls and have been transformed into hospital wards. These things ought not so to be! Pretty and well adapted for a family life as they are, the cottages were not built nor intended for hospital purposes, and my medical colleagues have always complained sadly of being seriously hampered in dealing with the patients among my 1,000 or 1,100 girl inmates. In particular a Consumptive Ward is an URGENT and essential requirement. It will be doing a splendid service then to the cause of Christ's little ones if I am permitted to allot the sum of £10,000 to the erection of an adequate and convenient Hospital at the Girls' Village. This would consist of several Wards, each of which might be a NAME WARD, called after the generous donor whose gift supplies it.

Then, I cannot adequately accommodate all the Destitute and Orphan Girls who make applications at my doors, and who, too old for boarding out, are only eligible for village life at Ilford. On the ground which I have acquired there are excellent sites for ten new cottages. Each of these will house twenty little girls, and, if they are built, I can safely promise the public that they shall be speedily filled with Waif or Orphan Girls, whose pitiful and helpless condition calls aloud for the intervention of loving and sympathetic hands. Each of these cottages will cost £950. What worthier Coronation Memorial could be suggested than such an one as this? What finer expression of thank-offering to GOD for the peace and quietness that have come to us instead of strife and war? Each of these new cottages may be a Name Gift, and so commemorate not only a great event in our nation's history, but also preserve alive the memory of the benevolent donor, or, of some one dear to him or her!

Then again I have in the near future a very important scheme of which has been prematurely exploited in the Press, but which I believe will come in due season to fruition and supply a splendid outlet for successive generations of young life in the years to be. I hope that I shall, before I am much older, have an Over-Sea Colonization Branch in South Africa, just as now I have in Canada, and I anticipate for it a great success, now that the cords of Empire have been drawn tighter. Surely it may be regarded as a fitting Coronation scheme if I ask for £5,000 to enable my Council to organize and place on a working basis our South African scheme!

Then again, the whole of the work in my hands has been and still is sorely hindered and embarrassed by financial burdens. If only I could shake myself quite loose from the task of "serving tables" and of appealing for funds, I believe and am sure, that the work would grow apace and would contribute to the speedier removal of a national blot upon our civilization. A Waif Child is an anachronism! The Twentieth Century ought not to see one such child in all the British Empire, and I am hopeful that loyal citizens throughout King Edward's Dominions, as well as whole-hearted supporters of Christ's cause, will come strenuously forward and "lend us a hand" in bringing about that blessed consummation when no child shall be able to say, "I never had the chance of a better life than that of a Waif and Stray." If to-day we had a sum of £30,000, it would enable my Council to clear our Bankers' overdraft, and to place the whole work on a plane of efficiency which it has never yet occupied!

Have the friends of my Waif Children ever realised that I have now nearly that day and night urgent demands to admit others come to me from all over the Kingdom; that for the past ten years I have not had £100 in hand on any one occasion, and that, as I write these lines, the overdraft at our Bankers' has climbed up to no less a sum than £20,000? As a suggestive contrast let me point to the fact that at Christie's and other sale rooms, in London alone, money changes hands for the purchase of articles de luxe not infrequently in a single week to an amount equal to a whole year's income of our Institutions!

The sum I am now asking for, as a Thank-offering for the priceless blessing of Peace, and as a Coronation Gift, can be provided by the wealth of this land without inconvenience, almost without its being felt! Many who read these pages could send in a special gift of, say, £100, or £50, or £20, or £10, or £5, to this object, according to their means, and not be thereby straitened; or if all the readers of THE CHRISTIAN will, as they assuredly can, simply contribute a SPECIAL CORONATION GIFT of £1, or of 10s., or even of 5s., as a Thank-offering for peace, and as an expression of loyalty to the King, the thing would be done—our overdraft would be swept away, our Ilford Hospital, so long and sorely needed, would begin to rise, our new Cottages would be ready in a few months for their Bethesda-task, our South African Colonization Scheme would be established as a solid fact, and my Council would rejoice in a great deliverance, and in an extended agency for grappling with the task of saving from the devouring slums the children of the Empire. "The liberal soul shall be made fat." "Give, and it shall be given unto you, good measure, pressed down, shaken together, and running over."

Verily, the accomplishment of this great and necessary object will be for the Glory of God, as well as for the honour of this great Kingdom!

And why should that not be so? Indeed I know of no hindrance to its realization except our own littleness of soul and unbelief of heart! What hindrances can there be? Assuredly there is no hindrance in God. It is easy for our Father to send us this sum or to treble it if it were his Holy Will. The silver and the gold are his! He holds the hearts of all men in the hollow of his hand. I have known of many instances in which men have almost unwillingly yielded to impressions which were no doubt divinely laid upon them to give to our work in times of necessity. God is able to do even more than we can ask or think. "He is faithful who also hath promised." If our friends and helpers will but unite in faith, in prayer and in effort, everywhere lifting up holy hands and asking for our Father's bounty for the children He has given me to care for, it will surely come!

Nor is there any hindrance in this Kingdom of Great Britain and its Colonies. They are rich enough. The War and its claims are given by many as a reason for not doing beyond what conscience or even humanity prompts. The war, say they, has cost us over £200,000,000. What of that? If we are to believe Whittaker and Hoyle, the Nation's Drink Bill of last year, direct and indirect, ran to over £300,000,000. Moreover, out of this very War there are thousands of men who are the richer to-day! Great contractors, employers of labour, various manufacturers, shippers, colliery proprietors, and others that might be particularized—all these have vastly increased their earnings and their profits during the last two years. Has not our Father's work among his Waif and Destitute Children a claim upon all these? Yea, verily! And conscience will respond to the claim, if but we, as men of faith, take the key of prayer from the girdle of Omnipotence and open up the infinite treasures of the Most High God!

Then, surely the Church is rich enough. There is wealth enough among the men and women who number themselves in all the churches with the disciples of Jesus Christ to do this thing, out of love to Christ and from compassion to his Little Ones, and yet neither stint their charities nor limit their other good works, while growing exceedingly in the experience of the beatitude: "It is more blessed to give than to receive." The work in my hands

SORELY NEEDS THAT £55,000!

I will get it, certainly and surely, yea, even beyond my thoughts and desires, IF but my co-workers everywhere will join with me in that believing, vehement, continuous, irresistible cry from which the ear of Omnipotence never turns away. "Ask, and ye shall receive" is not the language of mockery; nor are the "fervent, effectual prayers" of God's servants as the despairing cry, "O Baal, hear us." The promise is, "Call upon Me in the day of trouble; I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify Me." Let ours be the confident, believing touch of the hand of faith to the hem of his garment from which virtue flows!

Some objectors there will be, as there always are. Says one: "I am not rich. I cannot give. I already do all I can. I help three, or six, or twenty, good causes, and I can do no more." Yes, you can! Rise up, and look your Almighty Father in the face and tell Him: "Lord, I have given Thee all I can; I have no more. Help me to give." And He will! Surely you will find a way to give £1, or 10s., or even 5s.? Let every man who reads this page purpose in his heart:—"I will give £1, or 10s., or at least 5s., as a special gift to this £55,000 on or before Founder's Day, July 12," and I need go no further: the thing will be done! The money required will all be in the children's treasury, our overdraft will be wiped out, and our Bankers will have a bigger balance than they have ever had!

Says another: "I cannot give a big sum or anything worth sending, and I don't like to send a trifle." There are no such things as trifles in the gifts which we bestow upon our Lord out of the broken alabaster-boxes of our love! Can you only give 5s.? Then give it gladly and cheerfully; give it unto Him and not as unto men, and the bit of the five loaves or the morsel from the two fishes will be transmuted by the Divine blessing into an abundant supply as we obey with joy and gladness His command, "Give ye them to eat."

Or, says a third: "I cannot afford to give anything; I have so many expenses." Ah, stop a moment! Before you come to that decision, consider! Is there no luxury, no superfluity, which you cannot easily give up for this effort? And will you not, by so doing, vastly increase your own pleasure and satisfaction? Think of how Jesus Christ loved, and still loves, little children, and how He, though rich, for our sakes became poor!

Just as I write these lines a friend has drawn my attention to an extract from that remarkable book, THE STORY OF JOHN G. PATON:

> Often as I have looked at the doings of men and churches and tried to bring all to the test as if in Christ's very presence, it has appeared to me that such work as Müller's, and Barnardo's, and that of my own fellow-countryman, William Quarrier, must be peculiarly dear to the heart of our blessed Lord. And were He to visit this world again, and seek a place where His Spirit had most fully wrought itself out into deeds, I fear that many of your so-called churches would deserve to be passed by, and that His holy, tender, helpful, divinely-human love would find its most perfect reflex in these Orphan Homes. Still and for ever, amidst all changes of creed and of climate, this, this is "pure and undefiled religion before God and the Father."

I can add nothing more powerful, nothing more calculated to touch heart and conscience, and lead the readers of these lines trembling to the feet of our Lord in adoring wonder and love, than these words from the lips of the venerable patriarch of the New Hebrides!

Evangelists at Work

Rev. A. Allan at Sheffield.

An eight-days' mission has been concluded by Rev. Andrew Allan, at the Portmahon Baptist Church. It has been attended with gracious results. The effects of the mission are manifest among both young and old. Among believers there has been a quickening and deepening of spiritual life, while a good number of young people have given themselves to the Lord Jesus in whole-hearted consecration. The congregations throughout were large, and representative of all denominations in the district. The mission has sprung from a few devoted souls in the church who received blessing under the teaching of Mrs. Walshaw, of Halifax, whose presence and teaching in one of the meetings was also very helpful.

Gipsy Smith at Belfast.

The mission conducted by Gipsy Smith in the Grosvenor Hall, Belfast, has been one of remarkable fruitfulness. Not only the personality of the man, but the careful and prayerful preparations made for the mission by Rev. R. M. Ker, who has been in charge (in the regretted absence of Rev. Dr. Crawford Johnson), and the noble band of workers by whom he is supported, have contributed to the result. The hall seats about 3,000 persons, and night after night it has been crowded to excess, while on some occasions the doors have had to be closed long before the hour for opening the service, while hundreds were turned away. Scores each night have gone into the inquiry room, and it is believed that many have decided for Christ. Mr. Smith preached the Gospel in a plain, powerful, and persuasive manner. His mission in Belfast is likely to be a record one. This has been his first visit to Ireland, but is hardly likely to be his last.

The Welcome Mission, Portsmouth.

An open-air meeting at 6 a.m. is part of the programme of the Welcome Mission, Portsmouth, during the summer. I was present this (Monday, June 2) morning, and admired this part of the work, undertaken by Mr. Thos. Hogben and his workers. Some 8,000 men pass through the gates into the Portsmouth Dockyard every morning between the hours of six and seven a.m., so that the opportunity is unique. This morning, as the living stream poured by, group upon group stopped five minutes or so to listen to the pointed appeals of different brethren. The talk this morning was to men only. Four thousand special Gospel booklets on purity were distributed, and, whilst the burning topic among all was peace in South Africa, our brethren stood proclaiming "Peace on earth" through the blood of Jesus, especially urging peace in the heart and purity in the life. Will readers join in prayer that some of these dockyard men may be won for Christ? W. G. Pope.

Central London Wesleyan Mission.

A series of special evangelistic services are being conducted (principally on Sundays) in the densely populated districts of Islington and Clerkenwell. Mr. F. Spencer Johnson, "singing evangelist," and Rev. John Wakerley are the missioners. At Liverpool Road centre on May 25 the workers were greatly encouraged with the harvest of souls gathered in. On June 1, at St. John's Square, Clerkenwell, a remarkable manifestation of the Spirit's gracious work was in evidence. A large number went into the inquiry room to hear Mr. Spencer Johnson's address to "seekers." The missioner afterwards invited those who were in earnest to come out boldly and confess Christ. A young man immediately stepped forward and said, "I take Christ to be my present and eternal Saviour." "I am a sailor," he continued; "I hope to return to my vessel in a few days, and for the first time I shall go to sea with Christ as my Captain." Each convert was presented with a marked Testament. T. W. R.

Mr. William Grove at Canning Town.

The ripe experience of Mr. William Grove, in preaching the Gospel to the poor, serves him in good stead in the tent mission which he is at present conducting at Canning Town, E. Mr. Grove's pointed declaration at the outset of the campaign was, "If the people will not come to us, we will go to the people," and in acting unitedly upon this determination, the workers have been privileged to see much fruit.

By means of organized effort, in which the Crusaders' Band of the Y.M.C.A. took prominent part, wide-spread interest was aroused from the first. The method has been to go from street to street, halting for a brief space, announcing the mission, giving a ringing testimony to Christ's power to save, and then passing on. According to a careful estimate, many thousands heard, and listened attentively; the appearance of the band in a street was the signal for a general raising of windows, the people craning forward to catch the unconventional, bright, and telling words of the bandsmen and other missioners.

Two hours' work of this character on the Lord's Day afternoon has had the twofold effect of attracting vast numbers to hear the Gospel message on the spot, and, subsequently, to attend the tent services. On week nights, also, the same procedure has proved similarly fruitful.

The Canning Town district is occupied by a working-class population, mostly dock or waterside labourers, and, generally speaking, outside the operations of regular places of worship. To typical audiences of this kind Mr. Grove has spoken with much acceptance. On Sundays evenings the friends have been busily engaged up till ten o'clock, pointing the anxious to the Saviour.

Rev. John McNeill in London.

On Lord's Day last Rev. John McNeill preached in the afternoon to a vast congregation in Hyde Park. The West London Mission open-air meeting attracts a large crowd, but Mr. McNeill's spirited and telling address proved an additional "draw." In the evening Mr. McNeill was at Exeter Hall for one of the four special services to be conducted on Sunday evenings in June. There was a great congregation—an audience, said Mr. McNeill, to stir any heart. There was also a large choir, which nearly filled the platform. Mr. T. A. Denny led in prayer.

Before his sermon Mr. McNeill said it had seemed good to many brethren in London to ask him—who in God's providence had preached all over the Empire—to preach in London this month, when people are gathered here from all parts of the Empire and of the world. He spoke from—"Come, now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord; though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be white as snow." He called this text God's great Vereeniging—the place of peace.

After speaking with much feeling on the restoration of peace, and anticipating a hearty reconciliation between those who "believe in the same Bible and sing the same hymns," Mr. McNeill proceeded to deal more closely with the text, dwelling on the terrible nature of sin, and saying that the hardest thing a preacher has to do is to bring home the sense of sin to the people. Mr. McNeill concluded with a powerful appeal for immediate surrender to the Lord Jesus Christ, saying that for man to fight against God can have but one ending.

The Simultaneous Mission, Melbourne.

Reports of work in connection with the Simultaneous Mission at Melbourne show that in many parts of the city and suburbs a remarkable degree of interest was aroused. No fewer than 214 churches joined in the effort; there were fifty missioners, 700 committee men, and 2,000 personal workers; 16,800 home prayer meetings were held, and the mission services were attended nightly by 50,000 people. The chief speakers at the central gatherings were Rev. Dr. Torrey and Mr. Geil.

At Prafran and Windsor tent (missioner, Rev. D. H. Dillon) the estimated average nightly attendance was about 2,000. The power of God has been wonderfully felt. The number of people, men, women, and children, who profess to have decided for Christ—and for whom we thank and praise our God—does not in any way do more than just indicate the blessing poured out. Again and again we have heard of those who have received a blessing at the tent, and who have, away from all excitement, yielded their lives to Jesus. The missioner has been content to simply preach the 'Old, old story,' and God has honoured him by using the simple message to the salvation of many souls. 'To God be the glory!'

At Flemington and Kensington (Rev. D. O'Donnell) the attendances averaged 1,400. Interest deepened nightly. The vast audience present on Sabbath evening (April 27), say 3,000, was a memorable sight; no such body of men and women ever assembled at a religious service in this district before. The children's service was memorable, about 2,000 being present." The missioner has not shunned to declare the whole counsel of God, or preached a mutilated or indefinite Gospel, but has appeared as God's ambassador, beseeching men and reasoning with them of "righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come," with power and faithfulness. His cry had been, "Flee from the wrath to come," followed up by an exposition of the love of God and salvation of Christ. Morning prayer meetings are held. Singing bands patrol the streets in sections each night. Prayer bands adjourn to the inquiry rooms during the services to pray for cases they are interested in, and there are manifest signs of deep religious feeling, and that God is breathing upon the dry bones, quickening his professed followers, stimulating workers, and giving showers of blessing. The churches have their work before them to edify and build up those whom Christ has added."

The first of the services in the Exhibition attracted an enormous audience. The Southern Cross says:—"For a fortnight the Simultaneous Movement had girt the city with a ring of missions. Every suburb, from Brighton to Heidelberg, and from Surrey Hills to Footscray, had its own mission, with its special missioner, its choir, and its local committee. But on Sunday the circle closed in, and all effort concentrated on one point—the heart of the city. The time advertised for the service was 8.30, the ostensible reason for choosing that hour being that people might go to their own churches first, and repair to the Exhibition afterwards. But it was a poor prospect for the man who tried to attend two services on Sunday night. Before eight o'clock people were wandering from annex to gallery, and back again, looking in vain for seats. As a rule, when the wing known as the concert hall is used for a public meeting, a huge, drab-coloured curtain cuts off enough space to accommodate some 4,000 people. But on Sunday the curtains were drawn back, and the whole of the floor area under the dome was added to the concert hall. . . . Dr. Torrey rose to demand silence for prayer. A hush fell on the audience, but hardly had the first sentences fallen when there was a noise like the roll of thunder. The doors had long been closed, but at the rear entrance the crowd overwhelmed the ushers, pushed back the doors, and swarmed in filling up the vacant choir seats, and settling down into any corners that had not been already taken. At the front entrance hundreds of people were clamouring for admission, but here the bolts were shot into their sockets, and after relieving their feelings—with hymns—the disappointed ones went home again.

"The service was a time of wonderful power. Dr. Torrey was used of God, preaching with overwhelming force on the subject of Belshazzar's feast. When he concluded his address with an appeal to sinners, there was a ready response. Men and women rose in all parts of the building, and went into the inquiry-room. Quite half the congregation remained to the after-meeting, when several more persons decided to accept Christ. Some fifty deaf mutes attended the meeting, the whole of the proceedings, hymns, prayers, and sermon, being interpreted to them by their chaplain, Mr. Abraham."

Describing Rev. J. Lyall's mission at St. John's Church, Wellington, N.Z., The Outlook says: "The inquiry rooms at times were taxed to their utmost capacity. Many will bless the mission as the date of their new birth. The church on the opening day was full to the doors." Dr. Harry Guinness was in Wellington at the time and took part in the mission.

In connection with the mission which Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Sims are conducting at Cork a correspondent writes: "The attendances are still keeping up, and interest is in no way abating on the part of those anxious to hear the "glad tidings." The Lord is manifestly owning the labours of his servants. It is proposed to visit various districts in the South and South-West."

About Books.

Coronation literature multiplies. Coronation Thoughts (1s. post free. W. G. Wheeler & Co.), by Jesse Page, is a beautifully-got-up brochure, in which poetical items are interspersed with admirable illustrations. The Coronation of the King (1d. Partridge) is a pleasantly-written and attractively-illustrated presentation of spiritual truth.

Addressing himself to Sunday scholars and young people, Pastor A. E. Sims has made an interesting and instructive addition to our Christian allegories. The adventures of a little boy named Enquiring Mind are traced as he goes out in search of the greatest thing in the world; and after repeated disappointments, finds it to be the Love which is of God as seen in a vision of the Cross of Christ. We commend the little book—Life's Loadstar—to all who are in search of fresh reading for young people. (6d. Morgan & Scott.)

Brevities from a Broad-margin Bible. Outline Addresses and Bible Readings. By Rev. S. R. Cambie, vicar of Spondon, Derby, missioner on the staff of the Church Parochial Mission Society. (1s. net. Marshall Bros.) This is not a mere gathering of unconsidered trifles, but a selection of very serviceable outlines from a worker's store. The pages embody the results of much study, and many a labourer will find them suggestive, both in evangelistic work and the unfolding of Scripture teaching unto edification of the saints.

The British and Foreign Bible Society has issued a series of Coronation Editions of the Scriptures. They are attractively bound, and bear an appropriate design in gold on the cover. The Ruby Bible, with marginal references, is bound in English morocco (2s. 6d.). Another book, in the same type, but with central references, is bound in blue grained cloth (2s.). The other editions are:—Ruby Bible, 32mo., blue cloth, gilt edges, 1s.; Diamond Bible, marginal references, in blue or red cloth, 1s. 6d.; and the Ruby Testament, 24mo., cloth, 2d. These books are sure to be in large demand during the coming weeks; and we could wish nothing better than that our boys and girls should receive copies of the Holy Scriptures in commemoration of the approaching Coronation.

The affection which Christians must ever cherish for the persons and places associated with their spiritual crises lends a special interest to F. B. Meyer: His Life and Work, by M. Jennie Street. (1s. 6d. net. Partridge.) It is a profoundly instructive narrative of growth in grace, and in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. In autobiographical passages the veil is drawn aside that the reader may be a witness of the communion between this soul and God. Christians who are themselves yearning for a fuller life will find help in the story of Mr. Meyer's meeting with Mr. C. T. Studd, and of his experiences at the Keswick Convention of 1887, told with childlike simplicity. It is no easier for spiritual leaders than for other men to expose to the public view the most sacred passages of their lives; but when by this means they can help others, it is done with gladness, not as unto men, but as unto God.

In these days of decreasing interest in serious reading, it is well to remember that truth is stranger than fiction, especially if the hand of God is traced in the events of our lives. Strange Tales from Welsh Life (6d. Morgan & Scott), by T. M. Wintle, are facts recorded in simple language from the experience of a missionary who, since his conversion, has laboured, and not in vain, among his fellow-men, as a faithful witness to Christ's saving power. The reader will learn that God has not ceased to work miracles in the souls of the most depraved of men, if they only open their hearts to the Light of the Gospel. Who would believe, e.g., in looking at "Tom the Baller," the respectable head of a respectable Christian family, that at one time he had been a victim to delirium tremens, sunk in the most abject of miseries, selling his last garment for the sake of a drink? The little book is well illustrated with pictures taken by the writer himself. It contains useful hints to mistresses as well as servants, warns young women from marrying heedlessly, or yielding to temptations of vanity. It describes the sad consequences of a kind-hearted, genial girl being led astray by the false promises of a heartless man, and gives a graphic account of the Senghenydd Colliery disaster. As a many-sided picture of Welsh life and custom, as well as its Gospel value, it is sure to interest many readers.

Among seasonable literature we commend for distribution THE COMING CORONATION (2d. Jarrold), by A. F. Harris. The spiritual lessons on the occasion are interestingly presented.

M. E. Kaufmann, 5 and 6, Paternoster Square, E.C., has issued a series of coloured cards, being pictures of great missionaries (eight varieties), with biographical details on the reverse. They are issued in twopenny sheets, and will be of service in Sunday-school instruction.

The Churches.

Church of England.

Rev. A. R. Buckland, secretary of the Religious Tract Society, has resigned the morning preachership of the Foundling Hospital. The resignation will take effect some time during the ensuing winter.

Rev. F. Trevelyan Snow, vicar of St. Peter's, Islington, is hoping to erect mission premises for a part of his large and poor parish. It is proposed to place the premises right in the very midst of a teeming population. A suitable site is available, and the amount required is about £3,250. The Bishops of London and Islington heartily support the scheme.

The final monthly meeting of the Clergy Home Mission Union for the session 1901-2 was held on June 2, at St. Paul's Chapter House, Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas presiding. A paper on "Men's Services" was read by Rev. C. J. Procter, Vicar and Rural Dean of Islington, in which he spoke, from his Cambridge experience, of how to get men, how to treat them, and how to keep them. Mr. Procter strongly recommended the institution of special afternoon services for men, wherever practicable, in other parishes. An animated and interesting discussion followed.

The record of the past year's work in the parish of St. Paul, Westminster Bridge Road, issued by the vicar, Rev. Thos. G. Longley, affords much encouragement. Bible classes and Sunday schools show signs of growth, house to house visiting has been undertaken with much blessing, and temperance work well maintained. Although the parish contains many manufactories, only the employées and very poor reside in it. The bulk of the parishioners are casual and unskilled labourers, many of the families live in one room, and it is evident that, however willing, they have very little to spare for the support of religious services and work in the parish. The whole of the sittings in the church are free, and the weekly offertories so small as not to be sufficient to pay the cost of cleaning, warming, and lighting the church, whilst the cost of repairing the church and buildings, and maintaining the various agencies at work has to be raised wholly outside the parish.

Congregational.

Thirty-three country ministers were the guests of the Hampstead church last week for the annual summer convention. They came from some eighteen different counties.

In the absence, through illness, of Mr. Caleb Scott, Dr. G. S. Barrett has been selected to represent the Congregational Union of England and Wales at the Coronation service in Westminster Abbey.

Rev. Alfred Rowland, with Rev. J. D. Jones and Mr. Edward Smith, of Bewdley, will leave in August as a special deputation from the Congregational Union to the Congregational churches and missions of Canada, including British Columbia.

Baptist.

Rev. Dr. McLaren has promised to preside at the meeting to be held this month to commemorate the completion of Principal Marshall's twenty-five years of tutorial service in connection with Manchester College.

Rev. John Onions, who has been laid aside by a severe attack of influenza, and obliged to take a complete rest, has now recovered his health, and may be addressed "Elim," Severn Road, Weston-super-Mare.

At Montague Street Church, Blackburn, Sunday-school anniversary sermons were preached on June 1 by Rev. F. C. Spurr. The attendances were so large that the Exchange Hall, accommodating 1,500 people, had to be taken at night.

On Sunday week many persons were unable to obtain admission to the Wellington Street Chapel, Stockton-on-Tees, when twenty-five candidates were baptized by Pastor N. H. Patrick. The foundation stones of the new Tabernacle were laid on June 5.

The thirty-seventh anniversary services of the East London Tabernacle Sunday-school were held recently. Outstanding features of the occasion were a telling sermon by Pastor Archibald Brown (Norwood), an address to scholars by Rev. W. Thomas (Grove Road, E.), and a discourse by Pastor E. H. Ellis. At the annual meeting stirring addresses were given by Mr. T. Richardson and Rev. W. J. Mayers. The labours of the late secretary, Mr. H. J. Buttler, received cordial recognition.

The Baptist Church formed at Clacton-on-Sea was commenced in a hall kindly lent by a resident. The numbers attending have increased from thirty, until, on Sunday last, there must have been some 300 or more who gathered in the new school chapel which had been opened on the previous Wednesday by Pastor C. Spurgeon. The building holds 350, and cost £1,500, towards which sum £400 only has been received or promised as yet. The cause is under the pastoral care of Mr. P. A. Clements, of the Pastors' College, and the treasurer is Mr. H. L. Groom, Ellesmere, Ellis Road, Clacton-on-Sea.

Pastor Thomas Spurgeon has paid a brief visit to Paris. Pastor Saillens describes the meetings as follows:—"Our brother came here to seek a little rest, but his apostolic spirit would not allow of complete inaction, and we had the privilege to hear him at three different services. First, he preached in the Wesleyan Chapel, 4, Rue Roquepine, which had been lent for the occasion. The audience, for a Paris-English congregation, was a large one. Our brother gave us a powerful message on the text, 'Hold fast that which is good.' The chapel in the Rue Meslay was quite full at the regular French service. The people listened to the words of love and encouragement with great delight.

The annual meetings of the Northamptonshire Association have been held at Fuller Chapel, Kettering. Mr. F. Covington, J.P., in his presidential address spoke upon "The Place of Love and the Use of Love." To be true to men's needs and true to the proportion of faith, he said, love must be the chief theme of preachers and teachers. When preachers aim at astonishing their hearers by their cleverness, at merely giving them the pleasure of delicate literary flavours, or of catching applause for their zeal or orthodoxy, they may obtain a certain reward, but they stifle love. The true shepherd of souls is knit to his work by stronger ties than salary, prestige, opportunities for influence. Churches that are wise think less of their pastor's talents than they do of his power to win and keep their holiest affections. Public worship affords abundant opportunity for expressions of love, and the services of the sanctuary will never be leaden, weighted with inattention if the hearts that share in them keep love glowing.

Methodist.

The first Primitive Methodist Camp-meeting, it will be remembered, was held on Mow Cop, Staffs., and out of it grew the whole denomination. The ninety-fifth Camp-meeting has just been held on the same spot. The preachers and congregations were from neighbouring circuits.

As the result of the rapid development of the Wesleyan Gospel Car and Colportage agency, Rev. Thos. Cook's time for conducting missions will be further lessened. To fill the partial gap, Conference will be requested to agree to the appointment of a sixth evangelist. It is intended to call out a suitable young man from one of the colleges. This the Home Mission Committee will have eight Connexional evangelists in its employ.

At a recent meeting of the Wesleyan Home Mission Committee reports were given with regard to several new country missions and preliminary arrangements made for their superintendence. The great success of those already commenced has led several of the weaker circuits readily to consent to their amalgamations into missions. The appointment of the district missionary specially chosen to superintend such missions not only increases the staff, but brings in an element of strength which will doubtless be of the greatest value.

Presbyterian.

The forty-seventh anniversary of the founding of St. James' Church, Bristol, and the fifth of the present minister's settlement has been suitably celebrated. Rev. J. G. Train was the special preacher for the occasion, and in the morning delivered a very helpful address on three aspects of Christian faith as instanced by the sitting, walking, and standing in heavenly places referred to by St. Paul in his epistle to the Ephesians. The evening sermon was devoted to an exposition of three roads to success, as given in the concluding verses of Proverbs iv. A public meeting was held in the church, presided over by Rev. W. B. Cooper, supported by his office bearers, at which encouraging addresses were given.

For a considerable time the necessity has been felt for improving and enlarging the church premises at Park Road, West Hartlepool. It has been found impossible to provide sittings for many of the new members, and the work of the church and of the Sunday school has been greatly hindered. The scheme approved for alterations included the provision of seventy additional sittings in the church, the enlargement of the Communion platform, and improvement of the pulpit and organ, the erection of a new block of buildings, containing a hall (on the street level) seated for about 120, minister's vestry, session-room, choir vestry, ladies' parlour, three class-rooms, and minor improvements. The cost of all this is about £3,000. The church was re-opened on June 4 by Lady Gray, who has taken a great interest in the work, and thereafter a service was conducted by the Moderator of Synod, Rev. A. H. Drysdale.

Salvation Army.

The Governor of the Salvation Army's Industrial and Land Colony at Hadleigh, Essex, has received the following letter from the Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department:—"Sir,—I have laid before the Secretary of State your letter respecting the unconditional discharge of ——, who is under your care on conditional discharge. In reply thereto I am directed by the Secretary of State to inform you that in view of your letter he has issued his warrant for the absolute discharge of ——, and I am to add that he much appreciates the services which the Salvation Army have rendered in taking charge of this man and others discharged, and providing them with employment and fitting them for return to ordinary life."

"Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness" (2 Tim. iv. 8) was the text for the month given by Miss Child at her Welcome Home, Canning Town, on Tuesday, 3rd inst. There was a goodly number of friends present, representing "The Christian Lifeboat Crew." The meeting took a very joyous turn. The peace in South Africa and coming Coronation of King Edward VII. were happily dwelt on by many present, and the thoughts turned to the peace of God which passeth all understanding, and the "Crowning Day."

Fallen Asleep.

Mr. S. ROTHERA, of Mixenden Congregational Church, Halifax, of which he was deacon, secretary and trustee for a great number of years. He was also for seventeen years town missionary at Kidderminster in connection with Baxter Church. Until eighty years of age he continued his lay preaching.—Rev. J. COTTLE, Bible Christian, has died at Trefrew, Camelford. He entered the ministry in 1852, and retired, owing to heart weakness, in 1887. For several years he was district chairman.—Aged forty-five, Mr. S. T. HARSE, of Newport (Mon.). He had filled many prominent offices in the Wesleyan body, among others that of senior circuit steward and president of the Commercial Road Chapel P.S.A. Mr. Harse was a life-long abstainer, and an energetic supporter of the temperance cause. His death was the result of an accidental fall from a high ladder.—At Belfast Rev. FREDERICK ELLIOTT, Methodist minister, aged eighty-four years.—At Rasharkin, county Derry, Mr. THOMAS SMYTH, an esteemed elder in the Presbyterian Church.—At Ballynafeigh, Belfast, Mr. ADAM KENNEDY, for many years an earnest Methodist class-leader.—Mr. G. RUDSTONE GARTHORNE, known to many of our readers during his long residence in London. He removed a few years ago to Byron, near London, Canada, where he died on May 21.

Notes & Comments

"The Broad Church." This week we give the first of a special series of articles by Dr. Guinness Rogers, which will prove as important as those —"The Decline of Church Attendance"— which appeared in our columns some months ago. There are few men living more competent than Dr. Rogers to survey the modern trend of thought and purpose in the religious world, and we hope our readers will aid in making these articles widely known.

Day in the Country. The long-continued cold and wet weather has placed a special strain on the health of all, and this state of affairs is accentuated in the case of the dwellers in city courts and slums, for whom there is so little brightness in life. To those surrounded by fresh, pure air, the summer is a season of reinvigoration and upbuilding, and it is well that they should be reminded of the many who enjoy no such privilege. The importance of the "Day in the Country," and other similar efforts, cannot be over-estimated; and this is pre-eminently a case in which promptness adds to the value of the help. Many appeals are reaching us, and every week is precious. Will our readers enable us, as in former years, to continue this much-needed benefaction?

Aldersgate Noon Meeting. The meeting on Monday for some weeks past has been addressed by Rev. Gregory Mantle, and the hall has been filled with men. Last Monday the subject of address was Ezek. xxxvii. 1-14, "Prophesy upon these bones, and say unto them, O ye dry bones, hear the word of the Lord." The meeting was extended beyond the usual hour, and very fervent prayer was offered by many that God's people may be "filled with the Spirit," and that signs and wonders may be done in the name of God's holy Child Jesus.

The Revival Needed. It is felt by many that the revival needed is a revival of the Word of God and Prayer, and that God's people may be drawn singly and unitedly to obey the Apostle's appeal in Rom. xii. 1: "I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, which is your reasonable service." "Bring the whole tithe into the storehouse, that there may be food in my house, and prove Me now herewith, said the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it" (Mal. iii. 10).

Coronation Week. On account of the date of the Coronation we are obliged to go to press with our next issue earlier than usual. Contributions for the literary columns should reach us, and advertisements be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., not later than the first post on Saturday.

The King and Ascot. A significant feature of many sermons last Lord's Day in London and the provinces was the expression of disappointment, and more, at the Royal patronage especially given to Ascot Races this year. Whatever course His Majesty may personally adopt as a private individual—if, indeed, he can at any time be regarded as such—the proposal to give the position of a State function to this or any other race-meeting was a grave mistake. Racing is so inseparably associated with all that is mean and base in our national life, and the ruin of fortune, home and character in hundreds of cases, from the highest to the lowest of the people, that all this, coupled with the prohibitions enforced this year against Gospel effort on the course, has deeply wounded the Christian conscience, and is ground for serious vexation of spirit.

Prayer for the Coronation. It is peculiarly fitting that the Coronation should be preceded by a whole day of intercession and conference next Wednesday. The event is a very great one for the nation, and it behoves Christian people to wait upon God that, in the midst of a great wave of worldliness, thoughts and hearts may be directed to spiritual things. The arrangements at the Queen's Hall include gatherings at 7 and 11 a.m., 3 and 7 p.m. After the early prayer meeting, the subjects considered will be—morning, "Personal Consecration;" afternoon, "Our Imperial Responsibilities as a Christian Nation;" evening, "The Elements of National Greatness." The chair will be occupied by Rev. F. S. Webster, Bishop Taylor-Smith (chaplain-general), the Bishop of London, and Lord Kinnaird.

The Coronation Service. There seems to be some contradiction between the members of the "Advanced" party in the Church of England as to the meaning of the words "Catholic" and "Protestant," so far as the Coronation Service is concerned. Lord Halifax told the members of the E.C.U. on Thursday last that the King is pledged to defend "that Catholic Faith we profess in the Creeds." On the other hand, a manifesto appears in the daily papers, signed by 150 of the extreme Ritualistic clergy, in which they decline to use the form prescribed for the Coronation Service, on the ground that the King takes the oath "to maintain the Protestant reformed religion established by law," and they are not Protestants. Lord Halifax can accept what his friends dissent from, and yet they both aim at the same thing in their work and teaching. But the King certainly does not pledge himself to defend that "Catholic" Faith which Lord Halifax and his friends of the E.C.U. are labouring might and main to impose upon the English people. The "Faith" of the Creeds, and that faith which mis-calls itself "Catholic," are two very different things, which must not be confused. The 150 signatories know well what "Protestant" means; they also know what the Thirty-Nine Articles, which they signed, mean; if they object to them, why did they sign them, and why do they remain in a Church which holds to them?

The View of the Law. A writer in the Daily News puts the matter thus:—

> The following are some of the Acts of Parliament which declare the Church and State to be Protestant:—The Bill of Rights (1 William and Mary) speaks not only of "this Protestant kingdom," but "this Protestant religion." It is asserted that King James endeavoured to subvert and extirpate "the Protestant religion."
> The Act of Union with Scotland (5 Anne, cap. 8) states that "the true Protestant religion professed and established by law in the Church of England, and the doctrine, worship, discipline, and government thereof, should be effectively and unalterably secured."
> The Fifth Article of the Act of Union (39 and 40 George III., c. 67) states "that the Churches of England and Ireland, as now established by law, be united unto one Protestant Episcopal Church, and be called the United Church of England and Ireland."

The Trend of Ritualism. Prebendary Webb-Peploe, in an interview in the Family Churchman, says that Ritualism and lax conduct with regard to the Lord's Day are inseparably connected. In estimating the trend of events, the Prebendary says:—

> It is probable that, if the present Romanizing tendency goes on, the Church of England would become Roman Catholic, whilst the mass of the people would then inevitably demand Disestablishment and Disendowment. The masses would then seek to set up a Free Church in opposition to Ritualists. I cannot believe that the Church will be destroyed by outside influence. If destruction comes, it must be by influences and schisms at work within the Church itself. Personally I hope a reactionary movement may set in in favour of true vital Christianity, but in the meantime we have to count with the fashionables who find the Ritualistic doctrine so convenient to worldly tastes and ambitions.

The Jesuit Anomaly. Anglican opinion seems to be halting in regard to the verdict in the case of Father Vaughan v. The Rock. While admitting the necessity for and value of the measure which makes it illegal for a Jesuit to land upon these shores, or to remain in these islands, the Church Times deprecates any attempt to put the enactment in force, lest such a step should lead to its repeal! It is difficult to recognise the value of an Act if, when the time seems to call specially for its protective clauses to be enforced, its existence in the Statute Book has to be ignored. Even the Church Times admits the "powers for mischief," the traitorous tendency, and the "bad character" of the Jesuit Order. Granted this, why should England be about the only European country that fails to enforce precautionary measures?

A Protest from Within. Another Roman Catholic writer, Mr. Frank Hugh McDonnell, a distinguished scholar and ex-M.P., has joined Mr. Richard Bagot and the growing army of members of the Roman body who attack the methods of the Jesuits. Mr. McDonnell's recently published volume, "The Ruin of Education in Ireland," should be studied by all who are interested in the welfare of the sister island, and it should do much to educate the public mind in regard to a body whose presence in this country, if not illegal, certainly is on many grounds undesirable. It is a sinister fact that Mr. McDonnell, who is an authority upon questions of education in Ireland, was not permitted to give evidence before the University Education Committee.

The Value of History. The Bishop of Kensington spoke very boldly and very truly last week when he charged a great number of Church people with ignorance of Church history and doctrine; and attributed to this ignorance much of the religious bitterness which is current. We think that his lordship's words will bear a wider application than he, perhaps, intended. It is too true, unfortunately, that in all the churches there is an amazing amount of ignorance concerning Christian history and doctrine. The majority of people seem better acquainted with the scrappy literature of to-day than with the literature which puts them in possession of the great events which are the foundations of our present freedom. If people were only aware how and when superstitions gradually crept into the Church, how faithful souls suffered for fidelity to truth, how bigots burned and tortured people whose only crime was devotion to the Word of God, we should see less of flirtation with Rome, and a more sturdy appreciation of the truth.

Heartening the Brethren. During several years it has been the custom of one or two important London churches to invite a number of village ministers to a week's fraternal hospitality and conference, with the avowed object of encouraging them in the midst of what is so often a monotonous and hard life. It is a most kindly and Christlike thing to do, and the end proposed in it cannot fail to be achieved. The idea is well worthy of the consideration of other rich and influential Churches in great centres. Workers in small and obscure villages are easily overlooked, and it would do them a world of good, while the host-churches would gain greatly in sympathy and liberality.

The Greatest of the Apostles. The Professor of Criticism in Chicago University, Dr. Wilkinson, has recently emphasized the believer's "continuing need of Paul." Decrying the modern tendency in Biblical criticism to ignore the testimony of the great Apostle to the Gentiles, and to deal with the sayings of Jesus, and the statements of the four Evangelists, on the "sifting principle," or from a so-called scientific point of view, Dr. Wilkinson urges the necessity for faithful adherence to Paul's facts of Divine history. Referring to the pre-existence of Christ, and his exaltation to eternal glory after his death, he says:—

> Paul makes almost nothing of the earthly life of his Lord—so completely does the heavenly life that his Lord resumed after He was crucified usurp the rapt faith, the kindled imagination, the adoring affection of the Great Apostle. . . . That Paul occupies himself to such an extent with Christ's person and Christ's activity in the supernatural sphere, is quite as it should be, for if previously to that ever-memorable noonday which found Paul a persecutor on his way to Damascus he had known Christ "after the flesh," subsequently to that experience of his he knew Him so no more.

So Paul laid a vital and enduring stress on the fact that it was not Jesus as a man among men, but Jesus as supreme Divine Lord over men who was the Saviour of the world.

Out of Egypt. In a recent paper summarizing the results of modern archæological and other discovery in the land of the Pharaohs, Professor Sayce, of Oxford, one of the greatest living authorities on such matters, deals incidentally, but very keenly, with the miserable assumptions of the so-called Higher Criticism. Pointing out how we have recently learned that, at what was formerly regarded as the very beginning of its history, the civilization and the culture of the people of Egypt were as highly developed as at any future period, and that they were highly advanced, not only in art and mechanics, but in writing, he adds:—

> Yet this highly civilized Egypt of Menes, with its advanced culture and literary proclivities was, only half a dozen years ago, confidently announced to have been a land of barbarism and darkness. Such was the house of cards erected by criticism; a few blows of the excavator's spade has levelled it to the ground. The method and principles which have failed so disastrously when applied to early Egyptian history, are not likely to be more successful when applied to Hebrew history. The vindication of the historical accuracy of Menes means the vindication also of the historical accuracy of the Hebrew patriarchs.

Elevation and Vision. The hill-climber in holiday times is almost startled by the suddenness with which, upon a further ascent of a few yards, the view opens out to the distant horizon. Dr. Alexander McLaren has illustrated this finely in a recent sermon dealing with the words, "the pattern showed thee in the mount." He says, and the words claim the solemn consideration of those who are content to remain ever upon the lower levels of spiritual life:—

> The difference between Christian men's visions of duty depends very largely upon the difference in the heights they have climbed up the hill. The higher you go, the better you see the conformation of the land. . . . Many a thing which a Christian man on the low levels thought to be perfectly in accordance with the pattern, when he gets up a bit farther he finds to be hopelessly at variance with it. It is not just laying down a multitude of red tape regulations as to what Christian morality requires from people in given instances. Go up the hill, and you will see for yourself; the elevation determines the vision.

Mr. Balfour and Education. The important deputation which waited upon Mr. Balfour last week, re the Education Bill, met with little encouragement. This is hardly surprising, for it is quite clear that at all hazards, and despite an ever-growing protest, the Government mean to force the Bill through. But the thing that astonishes us is the near-sightedness of so acute a thinker as Mr. Balfour. He does not believe that in villages and small towns any advantage will be taken of the provisions of the Bill by interested persons. Apparently the eminent statesman knows very little of the conditions of religious life and education in these places. In the majority of them the clergy are not Evangelicals. Very many of them belong to the E.C.U. and other similar societies, and it is absolutely certain that the Bill will become in their hands a powerful weapon on behalf of Priestism. It is no question, as Dr. Fairbairn told Mr. Balfour, of Church or Dissent, but of liberty or bondage. Evangelical clergy and Nonconformists are one in their opposition to this disastrous measure. If the priests capture the villages and small towns, it will be an ill thing for England.

The Place of the Layman. Amid the excitement of the peace rejoicings, and of the preparation for the Coronation, the Conference of Methodist Local preachers held in London last week did not receive that attention which it deserved. It was a remarkable demonstration of the spiritual force exercised by the layman, and it is full of suggestion for all the churches. The Methodist body is one of the largest of the Evangelical communities, but it could never have accomplished its great work but for its local preachers. We believe that the number of the latter exceeds the number of ordained ministers. Other churches have not employed lay preachers to the same extent as the Methodist body, and therein, we think, they greatly err. The work of evangelization can never be successfully done by the comparatively few people whose whole time is devoted to the work of preaching. Every Christian man who has received from God the gift of speech and teaching is under a bond to employ it. It is lamentable how little this idea seems to have seized the hearts of the majority of Church members.

Rendering Good for Evil. It is interesting to learn that at a meeting at Mill Hill Public School, in connection with the tragic death of Mr. Murray Spicer at the hands of street ruffians, the boys resolved to establish a mission to the lads of St. Pancras, similar to that which they now carry on in Whitechapel. The Head-master, Dr. McClure (who is a strong force for all that is good in this excellent school), has said in reference to the projected movement:—

> Our old boys, who are just coming from Oxford and Cambridge, full of the zest and glamour of University life, will be prepared to go among these lads, and live not only with them, but for them. If we utilize this opportunity the sacrifice will not have been made in vain. Such sacrifices are the levers that raise the world.

The spirit of pity and love which underlies action of this kind has ever been the foundation of all successful effort for the moral and spiritual salvation of the degraded and lost. When John Wesley was reproved for preaching to a congregation of respectable people on the text "Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers," he replied, "Had I been preaching in Billingsgate I would have taken the words, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world."

Why We Failed. The report of the committee appointed to inquire into the education and training of military officers has just been published, and it explains why there were so many "mishaps" and "regrettable incidents" in the late South African war. The testimony of the generals and other officers, which appears in the report, all points to one source of the failures—i.e., incapacity on the part of many of the officers. Earl Roberts declares that there is a want of proper training. Sir Ian Hamilton boldly charges young officers with lack of spirit—their idea being "to do as little as they possibly can." The spirit of ease and pleasure which is abroad in the world seems to have invaded the army also. It is evident that some drastic reforms are needed in the home department.

The African Native Races. We observe with pleasure that the Secretary for the Colonies has again been approached by the Aborigines Protection Society on behalf of the condition of the native population in Rhodesia, and urges that His Majesty's Government should intervene in the matter of the treatment of these people. Our readers know, by the extracts we have given from Rhodesian newspapers, how atrocious are the propositions made by certain of the white masters in that territory. They have no humanity, and the only thing they care for is the making of money, no matter how. Now that the British flag waves over the Transvaal, the whole question of the mines and their management is altered. There should be no longer government by clique or company, but direct administration everywhere, and justice for all. Unless some of the money-hunters in South Africa are carefully watched, we shall, unconsciously, become the patrons of a slavery and barbarism as bad as that we have just suppressed.

The Broad Church.—I.

By Rev. J. GUINNESS ROGERS, D.D.

NOTHING is more easy than to create a prejudice in favour of a particular school of thought by giving it a popular name. There are numbers who will not take the trouble to inquire how far the name describes the actual fact, but will credit the party with the distinction which it claims. Certainly this is true in relation to the ecclesiastical and theological schools of to-day. Those who have broken loose from the old Puritan traditions, and the Evangelical faith which is behind them, have gained a definite advantage by describing themselves as "broad," or "liberal," or "advanced" thinkers. The adjectives really prove nothing. The value of a creed is not determined by its breadth, but by its truth. It would, indeed, hardly be too much to say that breadth should be classed as an attribute of the spirit in which a creed is held, not a quality of the creed itself. If the facts be studied closely, it will be found that this is really what is claimed on behalf of the thinkers in question. They are assumed to be wider in their sympathies, more generous in their judgments, not only less hidebound in their creed, but more charitable in their estimate of the position of those who do not agree with them. All these are attractive features of character; but they are purchased too dearly if they are secured at the cost of truth. Above all, it is necessary to emphasize the fact that the teacher who professes all these attributes may nevertheless be mistaken as to the truth of the doctrine he teaches. It is safe to say that in no other field of human thought except theology would this be ever doubted or forgotten.

In the world of science in particular, the one care is to get at the truth. The more judicial the spirit in which an inquirer does his work, the more complete his survey of the facts and arguments on both sides, the more anxious his desire to give full weight to conflicting arguments, the higher the value that will attach to his own conclusions. This is really broad thinking. But if another element be introduced, and the open mind be found to be one that never reaches a definite opinion, it must, of necessity, lose all authority.

The man who feels that there is so much to be said in favour of opposing views that he cannot adjudicate between them can never become a guide. Men may respect his intelligence, admire his subtlety, or approve his honesty, but they will not follow his lead. It is in relation to religion alone that an uncertain attitude of this kind is supposed to be the

CHARACTERISTIC OF A SUPERIOR PERSON.

As descriptive of a church or a party in a church there is more fitness in such an epithet. The "Broad Church" was the title given by Dean Conybeare, in his historic article on Anglican Church parties, to a distinguished body of divines, of whom Frederick Denison Maurice was the coryphæus, who were equally removed from the High Churchmen of the old "high and dry" or the more modern Tractarian type, and from the Evangelical school, but at least as far from those who really had no belief at all. They did not hesitate, as occasion required, to express their differences from High Church and Low Church. But they insisted that in the National Church there should be room for the representatives of both, as well as for those who held their own theological position. There is not here necessarily any indefiniteness or uncertainty about creed. The leaders of the school had distinct views of their own, which they advocated with great power, and which were undoubtedly less rigid than those of either of the other varieties. But

THEIR REAL NOTE WAS COMPREHENSIVENESS.

To a policy of exclusion, against whatever party directed, they were resolutely opposed. I need not inquire how far their action in the many heated controversies of that time was always consistent with the fundamental principle for which they contended. My only object is to indicate the difference between this use of the term Broad Church and that which has grown out of it. When it is said of a man that he is "broad" in his views, the idea generally conveyed is not that he desires that a Christian Church should recognize that there may be variety in unity, and that among those who hold the one Head—Christ Jesus—there may be difference of opinion on questions which do not affect his supremacy as Saviour and Lord. Rather is it suggested that on this very point there may be some compromise, that his exclusive claims are not to be too rigidly maintained; and that, even if it be admitted that there is salvation in Him, it would be uncharitable to assert that He is the only Saviour.

Perhaps, when it is put thus bluntly, there are many who regard themselves as "broad," who would disclaim all sympathy with a theory so extreme. It is here that the danger of this loose mode of speaking becomes apparent.

THE HATRED OF DOGMA.

There are numbers who hate dogma, and who do not mean to express anything more than this in their avowed sympathy with "broad" views. They accept the truth—say, of the Atonement—but they fret against the forms in which it has been cast; and especially do they rebel against the attempt to erect these into standards of orthodoxy which men must accept under penalty of excommunication from the congregation of the faithful. In such protest they must find sympathy. The attempts to serve the cause of truth, after the fashion of the Pharisees when they cast out of the synagogue the blind man whose eyes Christ had opened, have helped only the cause of unbelief. But that is a lesson on which sufficient stress has been laid of recent times. There has been so much talk against creeds that it has become little better than cant, and has led not a few to suppose that the less a man believes, the better Christian he proves himself. It is this kind of breadth against which the teacher of the Gospel has to contend, and the first thing he has to do is to strip his critic of the advantage he derives from thus when he is, in reality, an enemy of the faith once delivered to the saints.

MASQUERADING IN THE GARMENTS OF LIBERTY,

That "faith" is the Gospel—the message of glad tidings from God to the world. Surely it is only necessary to state this in order to show the falsity of many current ideas relative to liberal, or broad, or advanced views. The Gospel is preached as the message of God. Either it is that, or it is one of the wildest delusions by which the world has ever been misled. This is the question which has to be decided, and it is impossible to exaggerate the tremendous nature of the issues which hang upon that decision. For a man to say that the verdict needs to be very strictly qualified, and to claim credit for breadth of mind because he seeks to supply the necessary qualifications, is to trifle with the most serious of all subjects.

The breadth of his survey, the balanced wisdom of his judgments, the charity of his estimates of character, and the like, may be points of great importance to himself, but they do not affect those who have to solve this grand problem for themselves. I am not undervaluing the service that theology has rendered, and can render, to the world. Further, I am prepared to admit that in theological study it is eminently desirable to guard against excessive dogmatism and intolerant judgment. But when everything has been said on that score—and the prophets who warn us against these evils are ever with us—there still remains the crucial question:

DOES GOD LOVE THE WORLD?

and has He sent his Son, not to condemn the world, but that the world, through Him, may be saved? To students examining creeds and systems as matters of professional study there may be vexed points of controversy, which, though they deal only with abstract principles, or it may be only with the statements of them, are of extreme interest. But to men who have really been awakened to the seriousness of life's great problems, who are in the hurly-burly of the fight against the world and its temptations, who are haunted by a sense of sin which they cannot dismiss, they are as much out of place as would be some scientific theory of navigation if put before the drowning crew of a sinking vessel. The questions which agitate such hearts are—Is it a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners? Am I a sinner? Can He save me?

These are the inquiries to which they need an answer, and they can be really helped only by one who can from his heart give the same answer as Paul: "I know whom I believed, and am persuaded that He is able to keep that which I have committed to Him." To describe uncertainty—uncertainty not as to the man's personal relation to the salvation, but as to the salvation itself—as broad-thinking is a misnomer, not to designate it by any harder name.

The "Gospel of the Grace of God" is the very last proclamation in relation to which such an attitude ought to be assumed. If it is what it professes to be, it is to be received with all humility, and yet with joy and gladness. If it is not—I hesitate to put on paper the dread alternative. But after all, the worst, the most untenable, the most disquieting position possible is that of him who seeks to sit upon some miserable fence, and on that account claims credit for a detachment of intellect due to his lofty superiority and special insight, which prevents him from identifying himself with the ordinary members on either side. Diversity in the mode of stating the most wonderful of all truths there will certainly be; and breadth of mind is perhaps best shown in the capacity to recognize the presence of that which is really vital in theories and in men who present it in forms so grotesque or apparently adverse that its glory is well-nigh hidden.

Resources.

Every creature hear the tidings,
Hear what God in Christ has given;
Present pardon for the guilty,
For the saint a present heaven.

Full of love you never dreamt of,
Strong, almighty to renew,
Christ is waiting—try Him, trust Him;
Trust, and see what He will do.

Egypt's hosts may rage behind you,
Ocean billows roll before;
Trust in God, and trust completely,
Let him lead—you need no more.

Christian, lured outside your refuge,
Where you fought and Satan won,
Stand in Christ, and you shall triumph—
Here the foe is overthrown.

Here our God is known, and gives us
Grace to cleanse and keep from sin,
Springs of life, resources boundless—
Holy Spirit, lead us in!

Canon Aitken on Prayer.

STARTING from the position that, while there is a spiritual art of prayer which can only be learned in the school of grace, and in its completeness only by the advanced scholars, Canon W. Hay M. H. Aitken (Norwich) has provided, in The Divine Ordinance of Prayer (3s. 6d. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.), wise counsel and guidance fitted to solve many of the perplexities with which the subject is associated, even in the minds of Christian people. Recognising that reflection on the subject leads in some cases only to the finding of difficulties and apparent anomalies, and that the incompleteness of our knowledge of God is responsible for almost all our errors, an honest and inspiring endeavour is made to provide such persons with good and sufficient grounds for continuing or resuming the practice. To another great class the book will be a cause of deep satisfaction, supplying, as it does, much-needed help in the devotional life, and systematizing prayer on such a broad and strong basis as sheds new light on our great Christian privilege.

In a preliminary examination of the reasonableness of the exercise, it is found that while God has not attached to this injunction such a system of penalties as would have made it a simple matter of obedience, He has so ordered the moral economy of the world as to constitute it a means of liberating his own power to bless. The subjective benefits are shown to be many.

> Not only is faith demanded by prayer; it is also manifestly stimulated and encouraged through prayer. For to believing prayer the answer is promised, and when the answer comes, how much it brings along with it, besides its own special value. . . . The man who lives in the habit of prevailing prayer will necessarily find his faith grow stronger, the more he proves God's readiness to answer him. It would, indeed, be difficult for such a man to harbour sceptical doubts; the testimony of facts would be too strong against them. . . .
> It is not only with respect to faith that prayer proves a sort of moral athletic; it rouses all the dormant faculties of our higher spiritual nature; it brings us into touch with the realities of the spiritual world, until the visible seems for the time being constrained to give place to the invisible; it gives force to our aspirations by clothing them in definite form. It broadens our sympathies and deepens our interest in our fellow-men, for it gives us an opportunity of helping even those whom our personal efforts cannot reach; it enhances our love for the Divine Person, and deepens our humility; it quickens our spiritual intuitions to a clearer consciousness of need, while it arms the will with determination and perseverance.

Though profitableness as a spiritual exercise would amply justify the practice of prayer, it is frankly admitted that it would cease, that indeed most of the benefits would be forfeited, unless objective results were produced. It is shown, therefore, to be encouraged by certain definite "sanctions," which, though they are not established arbitrarily, and their scope is limited, are directly connected with the ordinance, so that reward is assured in one form or another, neglect involving the loss of the right to Divine and effectual intervention. A correct view of the subject is proved to guard against the loss of reverence induced by pagan theories, as well as against rationalistic denials of objective efficacy.

Such topics as petitioning for spiritual and temporal benefits, and intercession, are fully examined, and the position of the believer made clear. Much light is also shed on the devotional aspects of, and the elements of worship in prayer. An important section is devoted to the value, character, and uses of Public Prayer, and emphasis laid on the place for informal prayer-meetings of God's people. The most experienced Christians will not be content with one perusal of the chapter devoted to "Practical Thoughts." The need is pointed out for regular daily seasons of communion, with their complement of frequent ejaculatory prayer between—fulfilling the apostolic injunction to "pray without ceasing." The depths of a ripe experience are sounded in such sentences as these:—

> It is well, when we thus draw near to God, to begin by spending a few moments in seeking to realize that we are in his immediate presence. Prayers hastily and irreverently begun carry with them the presage of their own failure, while a reverent recognition of the fact that we are actually addressing the Divine Person, with a view to making our wants known to Him, and laying the tribute of our praise at his feet, has a tendency to induce a sense of reality in all that follows.
> The next step should surely be to renew our believing claim that his Spirit, dwelling within us, should inspire our prayer, so that we may really pray "in the Holy Ghost." . . . When this appeal to Him is not a mere form, but the expression of expectant faith, it is well to listen for his voice within; and, if He seems to speak, to give the first place to his Divine suggestions, whatever else may be on our mind.
> But inasmuch as God does not ignore the faculties that He has given us, if no such suggestions immediately present themselves to us, let us bethink ourselves of what we feel that we need, remembering that God may be leading us as truly, though less directly, by enlightening our own judgment as by a direct inspiration.

Ministers and evangelists are only too well aware how widespread is the need for instruction in this matter. We heartily commend this volume to careful study as a helpful elucidation of the true theory of prayer. The way is clearly pointed by which we may be able to give to ourselves and others a good "reason for the hope that is in us" in this respect, instead of allowing it to remain the most assailable point in our creed.

The Church and Missions.

THE facts stated under the above heading in your recent issues, by Rev. John Stewart, of Madras, have, I trust, made a deep impression on many hearts, and will be the means of bringing the glorious tidings of salvation to many dark souls.

Let all whole-hearted followers of our blessed Master lay to heart "the compulsory nature of the obligation resting upon" them, that "this business of Foreign Missions is not in any sense optional, but in the highest degree compulsory," since "to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams." The Lord Jehovah of old had delight in them that obeyed his voice (1 Sam. xv. 22), so hath He to-day as great delight in all who "arise and go" forth, hearkening to his voice, conferring not with flesh and blood. Let us one and all turn to the same Lord as Daniel did, in true humility of heart, confessing before Him daily, "we have rebelled against Him; neither have we obeyed the voice of the Lord our God, to walk in his laws which He set before us;" in thus doing, our covenant-keeping Father in heaven will beyond doubt "revive the spirit of the humble, and revive the heart of the contrite" (Isa. lvii. 15).

Oh for the spirit of Carey or Duff, to make us each and all realize that the evangelization of the world "is the chief end of the Church!" That every church member is in God's sight responsible for the giving of the Gospel to the heathen and Mohammedan world is beyond question, for we are saved to save, called out of darkness to let our light shine before men, by making his "way known upon earth," i.e., throughout the whole wide world, and his "saving health among all nations" (Psa. lxvii. 2).

We remember Jehovah's sovereign promise to Abram, right away back in Genesis xii. 1-3, when He called him and said, "Get thee out of thy country . . . and I will bless thee and make thy name great . . . and in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed;" this was reiterated several times afterwards, as we know, showing us this was the Lord Jehovah's purpose then, and, if then, is so still; the one great Divine commission is to "go" and help to fulfil our Master's Divine purpose! He longs to send "floods upon the dry ground," and to "have the heathen," i.e., the nations, "for his inheritance and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession." To think of the greatest mission field in the world, that great empire of China, only having one missionary to every 300,000 souls of her 400,000,000 inhabitants! Oh to be found working while it is called day, to hasten the coming of his kingdom, the Gospel being "preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations."

Littlehampton Convention.

FOR the tenth year a "family-circle" conference has been held at the Home of Rest, Littlehampton, by invitation of Rev. and Mrs. W. Darlow Sarjeant. The opening day was Saturday, May 24, when the largest number that have been present assembled for the evening prayer-meeting.

During the week meetings of various kinds were held, addresses were given, and great power was felt throughout. By far the most distinctive feature of the Conference, however, was the way in which the subject of a great coming Revival was kept in the foreground, and made a matter of earnest and definite prayer. In the invitation the following sentence had appeared: "The Lord is calling us together that He may prepare us for a mighty spiritual movement in these last momentous days." Almost simultaneously with this, Dr. Woods Smyth was present at Littlehampton, and did much to press home the important truths laid down in his pamphlet, "A Revival Call to the Churches." The opening address on the Sunday morning by Mr. Sarjeant and Dr. Smyth bore directly on the question, and before the week was over the outpouring of the Spirit in a great lasting Revival was the one topic of prayers, conversations, and addresses alike.

Among the subjects were—"The Love of the Spirit," by Rev. Darlow Sarjeant; "The First Revival at Pentecost," treated in various ways by Rev. W. H. Tindall, Mrs. Rendell Harris, and others; "Free-will Offerings," by Pastor Fuller Gooch; "Let God Arise" and "The Spirit as the Dew," by Miss Bessie Porter, of the South Africa General Mission; "The Potter" and "The Fall of Jericho," by Rev. J. Gregory Mantle. Other speakers included Mrs. Gardiner, of the Ceylon and India General Mission; Rev. Francis Paynter, Guildford; Rev. T. A. Carritt, Ipswich; Rev. F. T. Snow, St. Peter's, Islington; Rev. A. G. Whaley, St. Andrew's, Wakefield; Rev. R. Bradford, Northampton; and Rev. R. J. Eland, Reeth, Yorkshire.

A Foreign Missionary meeting was held on the Thursday afternoon, in which, in addition to the introduction of various spheres of missionary enterprise, a most interesting account was given by Mrs. Brewster of her own missionary tour through India. The "Key to the Missionary Problem," by Rev. Andrew Murray, received conspicuous attention.

The testimony meeting on Friday evening was remarkable. For four hours, without a break, except for an occasional chorus, a continuous stream of testimony was maintained.

Clapham Conference.

THE annual gatherings for the study of prophecy and the deepening of the spiritual life were held at Clapham Conference Hall last week. The general meetings were addressed by Revs. F. B. Meyer, N. S. Taylor, F. Paynter, W. Fuller Gooch and others, whose impressive discourses will long remain to stimulate the minds and hearts of those who attended. There was the usual communion service on Friday afternoon, and the closing meeting was held in the evening.

At this gathering, Dr. Cronin, who presided, directed attention to the subject set down for meditation—The Return of the King, in relation to Christian Character and Service. In a few earnest words, he emphasized the connection between a Christian's privileges and obligations in view of the great event for which Christendom is looking. Rev. N. S. Taylor gave a lucid and helpful exposition of Titus ii. 11, 12, 13, pointing out the importance of Christians taking to heart the Apostle's injunction, to live "soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world," in preparation for the Lord's return. Pastor W. Fuller Gooch followed with some inspiring words on the possibilities of being without spot and blameless at the time of the Lord's appearing, showing that constant abiding in Christ alone will lead to a life of practical holiness.

Samuel and Saul.

ENDOR AND GILBOA.
(1 Sam. xxviii.; 1 Chron. x. 13.)
By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

YEARS had passed since David's sling had brought Goliath to the ground, and the Philistines had fled headlong at Ephes-dammim before the onset of the men of Israel. A new invasion was now planned to revenge that disgrace, and re-establish the Philistine supremacy over the plain of Esdraelon, which was the necessary link between the wealthy cities of the Euphrates Valley, and the vast market for their wares and produce, furnished by the cities of the Nile Valley.

The sight of the great force which was arrayed against him, seems to have completely paralyzed Saul. The heroic courage which faith might have brought him, was not now possible, since the sense of God's presence was withdrawn. He could say with another, 'Behold I go forward, but He is not there; and backward, but I cannot perceive Him; on the left hand, where He doth work, but I cannot behold Him; He hideth Himself on the right hand that I cannot see Him' (Job. xxiii. 8). It was to this that the terrible series of tragedies, which we are now about to narrate, must be attributed. The restraining grace of God, which he had so long despised and resisted, no longer strove with him, and he was left to follow the promptings of evil spirits —"the rulers of the darkness of this world."

True, he inquired of the Lord, for probably the first time, after the lapse of many years; but there was no repentance or confession of sin, only abject terror and frantic despair. Therefore "the Lord answered him not, neither by dreams, nor by Urim, nor by prophets." 'If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me."

SAUL'S VISIT TO THE WITCH.

I. Endor.—At some previous period, as we have seen, "Saul had put away those that had familiar spirits, and the wizards, out of the land." He may have done this in one of those strange lucid moments, when he became conscious of the strivings of God's good Spirit, or as a set-off to the wild strivings of passion of which he was guiltily conscious—so often men seek to atone for the sins into which they have been betrayed, by some strong outward act, intended as a make-weight in the other scale, or a sop to an uneasy conscience. It became clear, however, that he had no heartfelt abhorrence of the crimes he thus punished, seeing that in his own dire extremity he had recourse to the very arts he had striven to abolish, and sought from the mouth of hell the help for which he had appealed to heaven in vain!

Whether it was by ventriloquism and sleight of hand that the woman simulated the voice and appearance of those who seemed to come from the other world at her bidding; or if there was more than that, we do not hesitate to affirm our belief that in all ages demons have been in collusion with necromancers and spiritualists, and have answered to their call. This is at the root and heart of the phenomena of modern spiritualism.

Very touching and thrilling was the conversation with Samuel. If, even then, Saul had turned to Jehovah with tears of confession and the simplicity of faith, he would have been answered according to the multitude of the Divine compassions. But there was no sign of such a change of temper.

But from the lips of the Prophet came no words of comfort or hope. It was useless to ask of the servant the help which was denied by the Master. His multiplied misfortunes were due to his disobedience, and the sin he now perpetrated put the last touch on all his transgressions. Nothing, at this hour, could stay or avert the descending avalanche. As he had sown, he must reap; as he had fallen, so he must lie.

Little wonder was it that the king fell straightway his full length upon the earth, and was sore afraid. He was already weak with watching and fasting through the previous day; the events of the night had completely unnerved him; and his nervous system collapsed under the terrible strain. The callous nature of the witch was smitten with compunction and pity, aroused by the awful horror that lay on his soul. "Let me set a morsel of bread," she pleaded, "before thee; and eat, that thou mayest have strength when thou goest on thy way."

At first he refused. It seemed as though he would not rise again from the mud-floor on which all the glory of his manhood lay prone. "But his servants, together with the woman, constrained him; and he hearkened unto their voice. So he arose from the earth, and sat upon the bed."

WHAT PAINFUL MEMORIES

must have passed before his mind as the witch prepared the meal! Did he not remember the first happy days of his reign; Jabesh-Gilead; the overthrow of the Philistines, not once or twice; and the love of his people? But, step by step, he saw how he had gone down from the sun-lit summits to the dark valley, where the black torrent ran, and the overhanging rocks met overhead. As with a drowning man, the whole of his previous career passes before him in a moment of time, so the whole panorama of his past stood in clear outline before the mental vision of the king. Then, hastily partaking of the calf and the unleavened cakes, the three figures stole through the darkness, back to the camp.

II. Gilboa. On the morrow there was some slight alteration in the disposition of the respective hosts. The Philistines moved towards Aphek, a little to the west of their camp; while the Israelites had descended from the heights of Gilboa, and taken up a position near the spring or fountain of Jezreel (xxix. 1).

Presently the battle was joined. In spite of the most desperate efforts to withstand the onset of the heavily-mailed troops that were opposed to them, the Hebrews were routed, and fled from before the Philistines. It is expressly noted by the historian that the lower slopes of Gilboa were covered by the wounded, whose hearts' blood bedewed the mountain pastures (xxxi. 1, R.V. marg.).

Saul and Jonathan made the most desperate efforts to retrieve the day:—

> From the blood of the slain, from the fat of the mighty,
> The bow of Jonathan turned not back
> And the sword of Saul returned not empty.

But it was in vain. "The battle went sore against Saul." "The Philistines slew Jonathan and Abinadab and Melchi-shua, the sons of Saul." The flower of his army lay strewn around him; the chivalry of Israel was quenched in rivers of blood. Then, leaving all others, the Philistines concentrated their attack on that lordly figure which towered amid the fugitives. He knew what fate awaited him if he was captured while his life was yet in him. Exposed to ignominy, tortured to death, it seemed to him that immediate death were far preferable to such a fate. "Then said Saul to his armour-bearer, Draw thy sword and thrust me through therewith; lest these uncircumcised come and thrust me through, and make a mock of me."

The armour-bearer dared not lift up his hand against the sacred person of his king, so Saul, placing his sword-hilt firmly in the earth, fell upon the point, which pierced his heart.

The narrative which the Amalekite gave afterwards to David suggests that the effort to take his life was not at once successful; and he seems to have asked this child of a race which he was once bidden utterly to destroy, to give him the last finishing stroke. "He said unto me, Stand, I pray thee, over me, and slay me; for anguish hath taken hold of me; because my life is yet whole in me." It may be, however, that all this was a fabrication, intended to win David's favour; for we are told that when the armour-bearer saw that Saul was dead, he likewise fell upon his sword, and died with him.

On the following day, the Philistines set to work to strip the dead, and finding the bodies of Saul and his sons, they despatched their heads, armour, and decapitated corpses to be carried in triumph through the streets of their principal cities, and finally to be affixed to the walls of Beth-shan. As the tidings spread, the people left the towns and villages in the neighbourhood, and fled across the Jordan. Roving bands followed up the victory, and carried fire and sword into all parts of the land. It was the tidings of their approach to Gibeah that caused the accident to Mephibosheth. "He was five years old when the tidings came of Saul and Jonathan out of Jezreel, and his nurse took him up and fled; and it came to pass, as she made haste to flee, that he fell, and he became lame" (2 Sam. iv. 4).

One brave deed relieved the sombre hues of that terrible catastrophe. The men of Jabesh-Gilead could not forget how nobly Saul had come to their aid in the early days of his reign; and they resolved, at least, to retrieve the royal body from the ignominy to which Philistine malice had exposed it. The valiant men therefore arose, and went all night, took down the body of Saul and the bodies of his sons from the temple walls, bore them reverently back to Jabesh, burnt them to conceal the hideous mutilation to which they had been subjected, buried them under "the tamarisk tree in Jabesh," and lamented with unfeigned grief this tragic close to a reign which had been once as a morning without clouds.

THE LESSON OF WILFUL SIN.

It is an awful thing when a man persists, as Saul and as Judas, to the end striving against God. We feel that it was a dreadful thing to do as he did; we are horrified at his temerity; we marvel at his infatuation; yet we may fall into his wicked ways, and be overcome of evil as he was. We, too, may have resort to things, habits, and people which we had once religiously tabooed. If a man, having felt the evil of covetousness, and set himself against the love of money, after awhile allows it again to invade his soul; if a man has been a slave of his appetites, and having realized their degrading tendencies, has acted, for a while, on a vow of temperance, but has gradually allowed them to resume their former sway; if after years of irreligion he has begun to be in earnest about his soul, but has soon relapsed into moral apathy—is not this like Saul seeking help in the cave of the enchantress, whose class he had proscribed? Such men are wells without water, clouds carried before the blast of the tempest, for whom, in the words of the Apostle, is reserved the worst of darkness for ever: "For if, after they have escaped the pollutions of the world through the knowledge of the Lord and Saviour, they are again entangled therein and overcome, the latter end is worse than the beginning; for it had been better for them not to have known the way of righteousness, than, after they had known it, to turn back from the holy commandment delivered unto them."

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, June 22. Numbers xxxi.

THIS chapter is terrible reading. At first sight, we cannot think of the summary extermination of so many clans of the Midianite people without emotion. But it should be borne in mind that the Midianites were not a Canaanitish nation, and that they would not have been molested unless they had enticed the Israelites into sin. It was a war of retribution and vengeance for the special temptations to which they had subjected the chosen people, and which were peculiarly subtle and diabolical. Probably for this reason, special prominence is given to Phinehas the Priest, and the holy vessels which were borne in the front of the battle (6, R.V.)

The unusual severity meted out to the women was partly an act of retributive justice to those who had occasioned the sin of Israel, and the ruin of their own nation; but it also suggests another and deeper reason, which concerned the physical and spiritual purity of the Hebrew people, which was gravely threatened by the virulent natural results of sin. It is easy for critics of the Divine government to say strong things against the love and justice of God, but sometimes evil in a family, a city, or a nation reaches so high a pitch, that extermination is the only way of safety for the existence and well-being of the race. For us the lesson is one of rigid separation. We must maintain our position as strangers and pilgrims who are cut off by fire and water—the fire of the Holy Spirit, and the water of separation—from the corruption that is in the world through lust. Some of us can stand God's fire, and let us not flinch from it; but He tempers his dealings with those who cannot abide the fire. It is enough for them to go through the water (23).

The law which subjected the victors to a whole week's separation, and to special purification, instead of an immediate welcome into the camp, was intended to wean away the Hebrews from the practice of war, and to give them a higher standard than the nations around. Thus God educates us yet, placing a higher, and again a higher, standard, as we are able to embrace and obey it.

MONDAY, June 23. Numbers xxxii.

The lesson of this chapter is a very grave one. The true goal of Israel was on the western side of the Jordan, with its arrowy stream as the boundary of their territory. There were to be the Holy City and the Temple. But the two tribes and a half were attracted by the luxuriant pasturage of the eastern lands. "They saw the land of Gilead, that the place was a place for cattle." They therefore elected to stop short of the Land of Promise. God often gives men their heart's desire, and sends leanness into their souls. When we are set on our own way at all hazards, we not unfrequently get it, to our eternal loss.

How often do God's children miss their covenant privileges! They are content with the life of borderers. Not unfrequently they make visits into the land of privilege, but they return to their self-indulgence and ease. If there is fighting to do, they are willing to lend their aid; but they love best to build cities for their little ones and folds for their sheep.

The result was lamentable. These tribes were the first to fall into the hands of the enemy (see 1 Kings xxii. 3). Yes, and there is nothing else for it. Those that make their nome in this world get carried away into captivity and bondage, and are practically lost to the Israel of God.

TUESDAY, June 24. Numbers xxxiii.

Here is the itinerary of the Hebrew exodus from Egypt to the plains of Moab, by Jordan, near Jericho (48). The principal stations of the weary desert march are mentioned between verses 8 and 36. The host seems to have come to Kadesh twice, once at the beginning (ix. 4-34; Deut. i. 45), and once at the close (37) of the forty years of wandering. And between those two visits, all that had come out of Egypt had perished. In the words of the divine sentence: "Their carcases had fallen in the wilderness."

Let us couple with this enumeration of the stations of the desert march those expressive words with which the Book of Deuteronomy abounds. "He knoweth thy walking through this great wilderness: these forty years the Lord thy God hath been with thee; thou hast lacked nothing." And again: "Thy raiment waxed not old upon thee, neither did thy foot swell these forty years." "The Lord knoweth" . . . "your Heavenly Father knoweth." . . .

What comfort there is in these words. He has the whole map of our life spread out beneath his eye, and though we may have been murmuring and disobedient, He does not forget, nor forsake, but in all our affliction He is afflicted, and the Angel of his Presence saves us. Let us cast our care on Him, that He may work in us, through us, and for us of his good pleasure.

The last paragraph is specially impressive. There must be no complicity with evil; or if there be, it will lead to endless suffering on our part. The prick in the eye and the thorn in the side are incessant means of fret and irritation. These are the greatest trials of life. We are able to brace ourselves to meet overwhelming sorrow; but the little perpetual irritants are so trying. Beware of permitting evil things in your early life, lest you have to rue their results as long as you live.

WEDNESDAY, June 25. Numbers xxxiv.

We have here the borders of the Land of Promise, which were never fully reached in the days of Israel's occupation, except, perhaps, for one brief bright space in Solomon's glorious reign. Far beyond all their realization lay God's ideal for the chosen people. But is not that always so? Does not his peace pass our understanding? Is not his joy unspeakable and full of glory? Does not the love of Christ pass knowledge? The best that was ever realized by mortal man came far short of what God wished for him.

Once into the studio of a young artist a great painter came, whose fame was world-wide. The young man was not there, and the elder took the brush, and without hesitation daubed across the picture that stood on the easel the words Ulterius, which might be rendered: "There is something beyond, seek it." Oh, that God might treat similarly our furthest conceptions of loyalty and service, filling us with a holy discontent, and inciting us to heights we have never scaled, depths we have never plumbed, and breadths we have never traversed! Oh, to know Him—though his nature is always past finding out!

It is a great honour to be chosen of God to divide the lot of the inheritance. In some parishes there is an old custom called "beating the bounds." We ought year by year to go throughout the possibilities which are ever the heritage of the believer in the risen Saviour, that people may be no longer satisfied with slight attainments, but, leaving the things that are behind, may press on to what lies before.

THURSDAY, June 26. Numbers xxxv.

This chapter is full of the provision made for the Levites, the chosen servants of the Tabernacle. They who serve the House of God may be at rest about their maintenance. God knows of that ailing wife, that weakly child. He is not unrighteous to forget their labour of love.

These forty-eight cities must have been centres of religious influence throughout the land. In little bands, or as individuals, these men of God must have gone forth to teach Israel the Divine Law. As cities set on a hill that could not be hid, as salt staying the progress of corruption, as lights along a rocky coast—so must these Levite cities have stood in the Holy Land.

Of the Levite cities, six (i.e., three on each side of the Jordan) were set apart for the hastening feet of the manslayer, who had killed a person unwittingly. We are all familiar with the distinction between manslaughter and murder. It is thought that the Jewish nation is in the position of the man-slayer. When they slew the Lord Jesus, they knew not what they did, and therefore they have been banished from their land, until the time arrives for the High Priest to issue forth from the sanctuary in the glory of his Second Advent.

Men like Saul of Tarsus, who verily think that they ought to do things contrary to the name of Jesus, may claim a similar asylum. Is there one who reads this, who has been living a light, careless life? Let that one come to shelter from the hand of the avenger. Jesus is the city of refuge. Abide in Him.

FRIDAY, June 27. Numbers xxxvi.

In chap. xxvii. the daughters of Zelophehad had applied to be recognised as entitled to inherit their father's property, because there were no sons. Now, however, application was made, on behalf of the tribe to which they belonged, that steps should be taken to prevent the alienation of the property from the family of Manasseh, supposing they married husbands from other tribes. The plea seemed reasonable, and Moses enacted that, while the daughters of Zelophehad were left free in the choice of husbands, they must marry only within their tribe, and within the limit of their fathers' family. The matter was finally settled by their marrying their cousins.

The faith of these young girls, in claiming their share of the land of Canaan, was very beautiful. In the teeth of grave disabilities they triumphed; but in the elevation and glory of that hour, there was danger lest they might forget the claims of others, and disturb the arrangements for their tribe. But this was also carefully adjusted, and individual claims were settled in harmony with the true interests of the whole community.

This is a great principle. In seeking the best for ourselves, we should look "not only upon our own things, but also upon the things of others." We are members of each other, and if we acquire any new share in God's heritage, we must look around to see that others do not fare worse, but better, because of our gains. It is only through the well-balanced action and working in due measure of every part that the body maketh increase unto the building up of itself in love (Eph. iv. 16).

SATURDAY, June 28. Deuteronomy i.

To the young new generation, Moses spoke the holy law of God, which they had never heard from the cliffs of Sinai; but which, with the most solemn sanction of the Law-giver's approaching decease, was now re-edited. The name of this book means the second giving of the Law.

In the first verse, the A.V. gives the Red Sea; more accurately the R.V. leaves the original word, Suph, untranslated, because it is evident that this second giving of the Law took place not far from that Mount of Pisgah up which Moses ascended to his death.

The recital of the past begins with the leaving of Sinai, when, after a year's sojourn, the great host, now properly ordered, resumed its desert march (6). One or two incidents are lightly alluded to, till the story reaches the sad disappointment of which Kadesh-barnea was the scene. Moses could never forget the joy that he felt when he came in sight of that spot, where the rolling hills of southern Canaan came in view, and it seemed as though his responsibilities were at an end. He must have thought, "Surely within these borders there is some sequestered nook where I may rest, and look back on an accomplished task!"

But what disillusionment was his! The first mistake was in spying out the land, the suggestion of which came from the people (22). The second was in laying so much importance on the discouraging report of the spies, instead of looking away to the Lord (32). The third was in dreaming that they could win by force of arms what was forfeited by their unbelief (44).

These things are full of warning for us. Let us also fear, lest any of us fall short of God's rest through the same example of unbelief.

F. B. M.

The Crowning of the King.*

(Rev. xix. 11-16.)

By Rev. Prebendary W. H. WEBB-PEPLOE.

TO offer the conclusions to be taken from God's Word with regard to the coming glory of Christ Jesus, our Redeemer, our Saviour, our King, and our Lord, is no light task—especially for those who have at all thought out the subject as brought before us from Genesis to Revelation. For them there are many points to consider of vital importance. It will be found, however, by the careful student, that there is one that takes the lead at every point, and is intended to be understood as a key to the whole revelation of God. It is meant that man should have a key. There is no doubt that God intended man to be his deputy and vice-gerent on earth, and that man should have dominion; but that dominion must be in submission to God, for God Himself was intended to be the one King, the one Ruler of all, as He must be hereafter.

For a time the devil may be the prince of this world. We know not the purposes why God has permitted an insolent intruder to hold sway for a time over a part of his creation; but clear it is that God has not given up or lost his right. He has simply permitted that there should be an interruption, very brief compared with eternity. Out of the distress there shall come better and brighter things for the preachers of God and for the glory of the Almighty.

One subject pervades the Book—the coming of the King, with the royal, the eternal beauty, glory, and majesty of that coming. As far as I have been able to count, the expression "king" is found no less than 2,484 times, "kings" are mentioned 320 times, "the kingdom" 350 times, and "kingdoms" fifty-seven times. We have, therefore, considerably over three thousand times the mention of king or kings, or the kingdom or kingdoms. The one subject which pervades the whole of Divine revelation, and is for a purpose brought before us in the only book which proves to be the revelation from the one high God, is Kingship.

MAN'S TRUE POSITION.

What may be the purpose why God should so bring before us the subject of the King? The answer is that while God appointed man to be his deputy on the earth, He intended that He Himself should be the King; and that if man was to know the high privilege of dominion, it must be as man in the true and proper sense of the term—man not as man would make himself under the dominion of the devil, but man as God intended that man should show himself to the creatures whom He would place under his charge.

When the Lord Jesus Christ was raised from the dead, He could only say (Matt. xxviii. 18), "All power (exousia) is given unto Me in heaven and on earth." What does exousia mean? It is the word always used for authority delegated from another—except in one place (Acts i. 7), where there has always been a certain degree of difficulty. There it would appear as if the word was given out of its own proper sense; yet, truly understood, I believe it is not so. God gave to man through the exousia, or delegated authority, the power by which he should rule over the earth; but instantly when man lost this through yielding to Satan, no dominion existed in him. Every single descendant of Adam is a slave, not a king—one who is under the power of another. Satan has stood forth as the prince (archôn) of this world. Three times did Jesus speak of him in this way, but no sooner has Jesus vanquished Satan than Satan ceases to be the archôn, the real ruler. In Rev. i. 5 it is the Lord Jesus Christ who is presented as "the Prince of the kings of the earth"—the archôn of the basileus, and Satan passes back into another position. In 2 Cor. iv. 4, Satan is "the god of this world," but a god is not necessarily one who has the power of dunamis, or exousia, or archôn; rather that to which the creature submits of his own free will, and sets up as his deity. Satan has become the god of this world by the will of man. There is but one God, and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by Him.

THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

There has been a false activity of the evil one during a certain period; but, blessed be God, the one yearning instinct of every soul here is to cry out, "When will the King come, and the kingdoms of this world be taken from Satan? When shall the kingdoms be visibly taken from false rulers, and be given to their only true Master?" The answer is, "Lift up your heads. Study the signs of the times. Look out and ye shall see that the redemption is drawing nigh." The man must be blind who cannot see that every sign the Lord Jesus gave as preceding his advent in kingship and glory has been, if not quite fulfilled, so fulfilled as to lead us to say, "The coming of the Lord draweth nigh."

It may be that there shall be activities of the powers of evil as never in the past; but all the time the head of the believer is lifted up, and he says, "My Lord is near." With our Lord's advent there comes the Kingdom of the whole world, which shall be the Kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. We wait for it, we look for it. Do we believe it is near? Then let us study a little more closely the glory that is to be revealed when the Lord Jesus Christ begins to reign in visible majesty.

Has there been no gain for God since the fatal day when Adam and Eve were persuaded that they should be as God? Carry your thoughts back to the day when Jesus bowed his head and said, "It is finished." Was there no terror that day in the courts of hell? It is of the King of Glory we are called now to think; and we may do it with joyful hearts when we think of what has been gained. We must go back to the moment when the King of Glory entered the courts of Heaven. How mounts He to Heaven? God yet, for He was God; but also Man, as substitute, as inclusive of the whole human race. In the victory He has gained, as He enters into the presence of the Father, what do you hear concerning Him? That the Lord God Almighty will give to Him gifts as the reward for tasting death for every man.

We are told there are many crowns upon his head. Let us watch, if we may reverently do so, the Father placing one after another on his head; but we must remember that He is the Son of Man as well as the Son of God. It is thus that we have to think of the Lord Jesus passing for our sakes up to the throne in Heaven, and saying to us, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with Me upon my throne."

CROWNED WITH MANY CROWNS.

There are four different kinds of crowns promised through the Holy Ghost for man, and one by one they exactly suit the case of Jesus, the perfect Man, who shall give them to us as his own brethren, if we can win them.

(1) The crown of life (Rev. ii. 10). Surely Jesus has won that crown. Surely He was faithful to his Father and to the trust committed to Him, to the point of death, and could say with joyful soul, "It is finished." The crown of life was due to Him. He had overcome, and had the right to it.

(2) The crown of righteousness (2 Tim. iv. 8) "which the Lord shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." Has not the Son of Man won that crown? You remember how not only did He give up life that we might have it, but abandoned his claim to righteousness. He was made sin for us—who knew no sin; and this has become his due because He has been made the righteousness of God for all men.

(3) The crown of rejoicing (1 Thess. ii. 19). What were the Apostle's joy and crown of rejoicing? The souls won from the world, from heathen darkness, and the helplessness of sin. They become the crown of rejoicing for him who wins them by the Holy Ghost. Has Jesus no right to the crown of rejoicing? Can He not look from the throne and speak of the wondrous winning of the souls of men which He has accomplished?

(4) The crown of glory that fadeth not away (1 Peter v. 4), for feeding the lambs of God, and tending the flock, and building up the believers in their holy faith. Has Jesus not won this by giving the Holy Ghost to instruct them, leading them by the green pastures and still waters, so that they have liberty and peace at every point? Is there no crown of glory for Him?

THE PERFECT MAN.

These are the crowns he wears as the Son of Man; but He is also the Son of God, and we think of the wearer of the crown that is connected with the Godhead. In the Epistle to the Hebrews and other similar passages we are told that, while He resigned the glory and "emptied" Himself, He never lost the reality of the Godhead.

In Hebrews (x. 12) we are told how, having accomplished his work, He is seated by the Father's side, and the Father and Son are rejoicing together. We watch the Godhead, as far as we may, in the person of the beloved Son. "No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, He hath revealed Him." While "no man hath ascended up to Heaven, but He that came down from Heaven," the Son is even now in Heaven, and there He testifies to the majesty of the God who reigns, and who has never ceased to reign, notwithstanding the outlook of things upon the earth.

But as we regard the future instead of the past, we are asked to see here the complete revelation of the events yet to be enacted when the fulness of the time shall come. When that shall be we dare not say. All we know is that there was a fulness of the time for the first creation and a fulness of the time for the Perfect Man, and that there shall be a fulness of time when the things that are now being carried out shall be accomplished. And what shall then be seen, when the Body of Christ is complete? The Church, which is his Body, is being gradually filled up, living stone by living stone, all making a perfect temple for God. Then, in a moment, in the twinking of an eye, Jesus the Son of Man, and Christ the Son of God, shall rise from the throne of God, and shall descend. Oh, wondrous coming! What a moment, when, as we read here, "I saw Heaven opened; and behold a white horse; and He that sat upon Him was called Faithful and True."

"ALLELUIA."

It is the coming of the Bridegroom. This is the only passage in which the word "Alleluia" occurs in the New Testament. Four times in this chapter we have it. It is the King coming to take his Bride; and blessed and holy are they that are bidden and are ready to meet Him. In the glory of the perfected temple you, the people of Christ Jesus, are presented to Him in your own perfection; but it is all his. While there will be many crowns upon each of us that day, down before the Lamb they go: "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto thy Name be the glory."

But He comes as the Rider upon the white horse. In Rev. vi. 2, we see Him introduced as the One "conquering and to conquer." Now He comes to display his conquest. Think of the wondrous names He bears—Faithful and True (11), the Word of God (13), King of kings and Lord of lords (16). Besides these there remaineth the Name which no man knoweth save He Himself (12). What does it mean? Something more than we can understand. He is One to be trusted, rejoiced in, bowed before; but He remains the unknowable One because of his essential Deity.

We may not lift the veil of the future; but there is coming a day when He shall reign for ever, and we shall reign for ever with Him. "Then"—when all his enemies have been subdued—"cometh the end, when He shall have delivered up the Kingdom"—including you and me—"to God even the Father; when He shall have put down all rule and all authority and power." "The end;" what is it? "That God may be all in all." You and I are delighted to think of the gentle, patient Holy Ghost who comes to work in our hearts; to think with joy of the gentle, loving Jesus the Saviour of Mankind; but we see behind these two Persons of the Deity, the great majestic Godhead which is to be all in all.

* Concluding address at Mildmay.

THE LATE

Mr. Henry Gammage,

OF BRIGHTON.

THE gay throng of pleasure-seekers on the Brighton front on March 5 were scarcely conscious how the heart of the people was being moved by the funeral of one of their townsmen. But had they turned northwards and entered the trams filled with people clad in mourning, or climbed to the higher cemetery and watched the thousands gathering there, they may well have exclaimed, "Surely a great man has fallen in Brighton." Though not great as the world counts, yet Henry Gammage was truly great in the sight of the Lord; an ordinary man in presence and speech, but with extraordinary power, through the anointing of the Holy Ghost, to win men and women to Christ, band them together as workers with Him, and bring them nearer to their living, loving Saviour.

The work left behind at the Connaught Institute is a lasting monument to his faithful service. The large hall where he ministered (holding 1,200 people) was built largely through his efforts, and hundreds speak of him to-day as their father in Christ Jesus. It was well said by one, "He made more men in Brighton think of God than any man who had lived among them for twenty years."

Mr. Gammage was a Brighton man, born in 1853. His father died when he was three years old, of scarlet fever, taken from his boy whom he tenderly nursed, the mother being at the time on a sick bed. The little Henry thus spared, with only pathetic memories of his father, was blessed with a Christian mother. She trained him for Christ, and with her he attended All Souls' Church during the ministry of Prebendary Snowden Smith, and later Canon Roxby, now of Cheltenham. But one outside the pale of the ministry had the honour of leading him to decision. During the Brighton Convention of 1875, Mr. Henry Varley was holding evangelistic meetings in Brighton. At one of the prayer meetings, a mother sent a request for prayers for her son's conversion. It was Henry Gammage's mother, and the desire of her heart was granted that night. At this time Mr. Gammage was engaged in business—a timid, studious youth; and to encourage other timid ones he would tell in after years of the struggles with himself to overcome this natural shyness. Too timid even to pray with his fellow teachers in the Sunday-school, he determined to conquer himself, and wrote out a prayer to read or repeat. But when the time came, he rose from his knees once more silent, and went home much cast down at his failure. At another time he accepted some bills to distribute for a young men's mission, and went out after dark to give them away, but so great was his timidity that he returned home, not having had the courage to offer one. Greatly distressed and ashamed, he was about to retire to bed, when a voice seemed to say to him, "If you allow yourself to be conquered this time, it may mar your usefulness for ever." With new impulse he started up again, went forth into the streets, and did not return until every bill had been offered and accepted. This moral victory gave courage and confidence for future service.

From that time he engaged in Christian work, had a class of boys in the Sunday-school, and helped at a mission held by Canon Aitken. At times he gave addresses in the Connaught Institute, started shortly before for soldiers and others, by Captain (now Colonel) Greves. His first audience there consisted of only twenty persons, but as he continued his ministry the numbers increased until the 500 chairs were filled every Sunday evening. In this service Mr. Gammage took great delight, and was most abundantly blessed. "Every Sunday," says one, "ten or twelve anxious inquirers remained behind, and every week souls were saved."

All this time the young evangelist still carried on his business as a linen-draper, giving only his spare time to other work; but in 1889, at the urgent request of many, he gave up business, at a great pecuniary sacrifice, and entered in his diary: "1889. Entered wholly into the Lord's work at the Connaught." His whole time and thought were now concentrated on this mission—days of thought, prayer, and quiet work, besides the public service. We are told that he never spoke without careful preparation and much prayer, that every convert was known and cared for, and every new scheme most perfectly arranged in long detail. "I care nothing what men say or think," he wrote to one, "so long as I am carrying out my Master's plan," and in this steadfast spirit his work was carried on. One great feature of Mr. Gammage's work was the expounding of Scriptures. A diligent Bible student, he was also a wide reader, and brought his knowledge to bear on his teaching. Lucid illustrations were drawn from nature and science, always to the point. He had travelled, too, in Palestine and in South Africa for his health, and many a fact noted by his observant eye was used with good effect in his preaching.

THE LATE MR. HENRY GAMMAGE.

As years went on, his power was felt more and more, and, after six years' ministry at the Connaught, it was found needful to erect a larger hall. Undertaken by the trustees, Mr. Gammage had yet a great part in this work. Through him £1,000 was raised towards the £3,000 needed, and he watched every detail of the building from the time the first stone was laid. When it was completed, there was a debt of some hundreds of pounds upon this building. The trustees were anxious to open at once, but he declined to speak there so long as there was a shilling owing. Weeks went by; nothing could move him from his principle to owe no man anything, and the hall remained closed until the money was given, and, free from debt, it could be wholly consecrated to the Lord.

This was in 1895. From that time the hall was well filled morning and evening, Mr. Gammage usually taking both services, assisted by a loyal band of workers, some of them once lads in his Sunday-school class at All Souls'. In every branch of the work his quiet, practical, spiritual influence was powerfully felt. The Temperance Band of 600 members, Band of Hope, Open-air Mission, and Sunday-school developed and expanded, as well as four other mission halls under his superintendence, each one a power for good in its own district. The extent and depth of his work can never be told. Henry Gammage was not a man to deal in numbers, nor would he talk of his success to others. Since his death letters have flowed in from all parts to his sorrowing widow and most valued helpmeet, telling of what her husband had been as a real and true helper, as well as spiritual father.

During these twelve years' ministry Mr. Gammage often failed in health, but with change and rest returned again to his post. For a year before his death, however, he was forbidden to preach, and could only attend as a worshipper with his beloved flock. But the work was in his hands to direct until the last, and in his heart up to his latest hour. His last sermon, preached in February, 1901, was a fitting close to his Christ-like ministry: "I am Alpha and Omega, the Beginning and the End, the First and the Last."

The funeral marked the affection and esteem in which he was held. Crowds thronged the hall and lined the streets to the cemetery. Rev. J. B. Figgis, who conducted the service, well described his "beloved brother" as "one who loved souls, but loved his Saviour more; a life given to God, wholly surrendered to Christ; and a spirit filled with the Holy Ghost." On the Sunday evening following, when Mr. Figgis spoke, an overflowing congregation of some 1,500 people crowded the hall. H. C.

Forthcoming Moral Crusade.

OUR readers will recall our report of last June of a Moral Crusade in Chatham, under the title of "The Shame of Chatham," which aroused the whole town, and resulted in the formation of a Vigilance Society, with the Bishop of Rochester as president. We are glad to learn that the society is now doing excellent work in the suppression of public vice, and the rescue of both men and women who have fallen. The Crusade received the public support, as our readers know, of the King, the Archbishop of Canterbury, and many leading men and women. Above all, it received the manifest blessing of God.

The National Vigilance Association, seeing that the time is fully ripe for a more extended effort, has resolved, with commendable promptitude and with the fullest assurance of the whole-hearted support of the Christian Church, to undertake a moral crusade throughout the United Kingdom. The Association has invited the minister who conducted the work in Chatham (Rev. James Marchant) to undertake this forthcoming crusade. We heartily endorse the views of Mr. W. A. Coote, the secretary, that there has not been for many years such an opportune moment as this for a national crusade for the promotion of public morals.

The recent action of the Westminster City Council, in interviewing the Home Secretary with a view to the suppression of the flagrant vice which parades our streets, and which it is very undesirable our visitors to the Coronation should see; the recent public utterances of several bishops of the Church of England; and the stirring references at the last Free Church Council at Bradford "to this crying need of the hour," of which Dr. Clifford wrote: "In the last few years, from all I hear, I am afraid it has grown rapidly, and if we do not bestir ourselves it will destroy us"—these are strong and unmistakable indications that this crusade is deeply needed. We commend Mr. Marchant in every city and town he may enter, to the prayers and loyal support of our readers in undertaking this heavy and serious duty.

Christian workers should read LIGHT FROM THE HOLY HILLS, by Rev. Kenneth Moody-Stuart. It is a most stimulating and practical repository of Gospel truth, presented in an interesting and attractive manner. (2s. 6d. Morgan & Scott.)

THE LATE

Mr. Robert C. Chapman.

A RECORD of Christian service, probably unique in the present generation, was closed last Thursday, when there came to Mr. Robert C. Chapman, of Barnstaple, the welcome summons into the presence of the King. He had lived through nearly one-half of his hundredth year. This servant of God was converted so long ago as his twenty-first year. At sixteen he had been exercised about his soul, but then happily realized that Christ was his wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption. From this time he gave himself to the study of the Word, and to preaching the glad tidings that now filled his heart. His ministry after some years was so much blessed that the large and commodious Bear Street Chapel was built, to which have since been added a large schoolroom and other convenient premises, and there are in fellowship some 200 God-fearing and well-instructed believers.

Mr. Chapman was an excellent linguist, and in addition to his knowledge of Hebrew, Greek, and Latin, he spoke well many of the European languages, including French, Spanish, Italian, German, and Swedish. Like John Wesley, he was always an early riser. Even in his later years he retired early, rose daily at four a.m., and before the majority of English Christians were astir, had spent four hours in communion with his heavenly Father. Of him it may truly be said, his delight was in the law of the Lord, and in his law did he meditate day and night.

His library is unique, and comprises Bibles in the different languages already mentioned, with dictionaries, concordances, &c. During a great part of his life he carried, as his constant companion, a Bible in a leather case, and when asked if he had read some new book, he would quietly lay his hand on his favourite volume, remarking, "I have not finished this yet." His treasure was not an earthly one. Some years ago a young man returned from Johannesburg, bringing a large sum acquired in the gold mines, of which he was not a little proud. Mr. Chapman's remark to him, again placing his hand on the Book, was, "Scripture is the gold-mine!" One of his latest sayings was, "Millionaires are paupers."

In 1863, Mr. Chapman was joined in his service for Christ by his dear friend, Mr. W. Hake, a true yoke-fellow in the work of the Lord. They had two commodious houses, Nos. 6 and 9, New Buildings, making together houses of rest for Christian workers, and of resort for young Christians. Of the latter class of visitors he was wont to say, "We seek to cheer them on their way." In the two houses there are some twenty bedrooms, and these were often filled by tired labourers in the Gospel from every quarter of the globe, to whom the hearty welcome and generous ministry for body and spirit were of the highest value. This loving service has been going on for over half a century, and those who have enjoyed it for weeks or months are best able to tell what a season of refreshment and uplifting it proved.

A Christian lady, Miss Paget, much beloved and esteemed by all who knew her, was invaluable to the two brethren in many ways. She lived at New Buildings, and ended her course of lovely service to be for ever with the Lord in 1863, leaving her house, 9, New Buildings, to Mr. W. Hake, Mr. Chapman would have no earthly possession. See his Hymn 68*. Besides his evangelistic labours throughout Devonshire, in London, as well as in many other parts of England, Scotland and Ireland, Mr. Chapman was busy with his pen, and has left in "Hymns and Meditations" 165 pieces which are models of Christian doctrine and elegant poetry. The meditations are on the first and second chapters of the "Song of Songs," and are among the most precious of his writings, being the only prose compositions which he himself put forth. The pity is that he did not finish the whole Book of Canticles.

Probably the most highly prized of his writings is "Choice Sayings,†" which has been already translated into French, German, and one of the Indian languages. This book was compiled by a member of the Bear Street congregation, now with the Lord, who took down from his sermons these words of wisdom, which are indeed choice sayings, as all will agree who have perused them.

During his itinerating service, Mr. Chapman was blest in the conversion, at High Bickington, of a shoemaker named Henry Payne, who went out as a missionary to Barcelona, and has been there over thirty years, founding large schools, and bearing a Gospel testimony which has been fruitful in blessing in that large and important town. Mr. Chapman for many years took a deep and practical interest in Spain. When on a visit to Vigo, many years ago, he went to the top of a neighbouring mountain, on which are the ruins of a Moorish castle, and from which a fine view of the busy town and its port can be obtained. The people were at that time plunged in the superstition and darkness of Romanism; and being much cast down in his meditation over this state of affairs, he offered up fervent prayer that the Lord would send a bright light to Vigo. It was found afterwards that about that very time Manuel Matamoros was born, who by printing in secret an edition of the New Testament was instrumental in sending the Light into many of the dark corners of Spain.

Mr. Chapman was much beloved by the people of Barnstaple. A friend once asked him if he ever went to the large covered market. He said, "Not often, for if I did I should with difficulty get out, by reason of the numbers of the farmers who would come to shake hands." He was of medium height, but stoutly built, with a very sweet expression of countenance, his hair being of a silvery white. Of him it may truly be said, "The hoary head is a crown of glory, when it is found in the way of righteousness."

His greatest charm was the grace of love. His greeting to those assembled for the morning meal at seven o'clock was, "Beloved Brother G., beloved Sister B., beloved Brother P., &c.," with a shake of the hand to each; and if conversation at the breakfast-table turned aside to worldly matters, he very soon brought it back to the living Father and the heavenly Home. There are four servants in the house, all converted; they are models of tidiness, order, and cleanliness, as are all the arrangements of the holy and happy family.

The joint ministry at New Buildings continued till 1890, when Mr. Hake departed to be with Christ. From a booklet written by his daughter, one of the very excellent of the earth, we make a short extract: "During very many years a humble dwelling in a small street of Barnstaple has been the loved resort of children of God from all parts, and very full and unfailing has been the testimony borne to the spiritual refreshment as well as the gracious hospitality experienced under that roof. The two 'patriarchs' as they were familiarly called, charmed all who visited them, by the apostolic simplicity of their manner, and the warmth of their loving and well-blended instruction."

As the survivor of the two, Mr. Chapman thus described the closing day of their long service together, and the peaceful departure of his friend and companion, William Hake, at the ripe age of ninety-five, and after eighty years of life in Christ:—

"On Tuesday morning, November 4, my beloved fellow-labourer, Brother Hake, joined us at our early breakfast hour, 7 o'clock. At our tea table at 6 o'clock we had a goodly company of young disciples of Christ, to whom Brother Hake spoke joyfully on the words, 'Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you.' The meeting afterwards began with the hymn, 'We go with the redeemed to taste of joy supreme that never dies.' All who sang, and some outside the room, felt the singing was heavenly, the deep bass of the dear aged one perfecting the harmony. After prayer the First Psalm was read. Brother Hake took occasion to draw contrasts with the walking, standing, and sitting of the first verse of the Psalm. 'Enoch walked with God; Elijah stood before the Lord; David sat before the Lord.' After he had then for about an hour been the brightness of the assembly, his speech failed, but with support he walked to his bedroom. A dear young brother (Idenden), in faithful love, sat up with him. I joined them about four o'clock in the morning. Brother Hake grasped my hand and held it until he could hold it no longer, and breathed out his spirit to the Lord at 7.10. His beloved daughter, Mary, is sustained of God. Surely our God is the Father of mercies, and the God of all comfort. He is wonderful in council and excellent in working."

Saunders, who was converted through the preaching of Mr. Hake, gave up his farm, and became afterwards one of the principal preachers at Bear Street Chapel, where his ministry is still highly appreciated.

Baptism in the river is administered to those who believe, and the Lord's Supper is celebrated every Lord's Day evening, not in the morning. At this feast of love Brother Chapman was never absent, except when hindered by infirmity. There has been a Bible-class on Thursday evening in No. 9 New Buildings in the dining room for the last fifty years, to which fifty can come. This used to be taken by Mr. Chapman, but for some years Mr. Saunders has carried it on.

For a number of years, on account of growing weakness, a devoted servant of Christ, Mr. Edward Pearce, slept in a room adjoining Mr. Chapman's, and also attended to all the business of the house, conducted the necessary correspondence, and saw the many visitors who were continually coming and going.

The funeral, which took place on Tuesday afternoon, was the occasion of a great gathering of friends from near and far, who desired to testify to their deep sense of loss. We hope to publish further memorials in our next issue.

The Morals of our Soldiers.

By ELLICE HOPKINS.

THE approaching return of the troops from South Africa calls for strenuous effort on the part of all who value the unexampled display of heroism, of brave endurance, and of chivalrous regard for defenceless women and children which has marked their conduct throughout the campaign, and which will do much to facilitate the future amalgamation of the two races in South Africa.

During the war, 85,000 leaflets of warning have been distributed by the White Cross League in South Africa, and "Blanco Books" have been issued to all home and many foreign stations, and also placed on board every ship in commission. These have done very much to bring home to our soldiers and sailors—many of them morally ignorant and thoughtless—their duty to God, and to the women and girls placed in their power to guard, not to betray.

But now that they are coming back to the temptations of barrack life, what are we going to do to help them, in return for their having so nobly fulfilled their duty, and to strengthen their moral fibre, without which we cannot hope to rule one-fourth of the human race?

The first necessity of the soldier is the improvement of barrack-life. A few White Cross men in each barrack, backed up by the power of the White Cross League—headed by our venerable Archbishop, and their beloved Commander-in-Chief, Earl Roberts—himself the very embodiment of a White Cross Knight—will do much to raise the moral tone, and put down the foul talk and obscene stories which have led many a true man to sell out in disgust, even though devoted to his profession.

The White Cross League earnestly desires, therefore, to utilize this opportunity, if possible, to perpetuate the lessons learnt in active service, to issue White Cross literature to all transports carrying troops from the front, and to the headquarters of every corps, as well as to add to their largely increasing roll of members.

I would especially ask the loving friends who, through the medium of The Christian, have given me such generous sympathy and help through many long years of work and suffering, to respond once more to my appeal, to show their love for our soldiers by helping them in a higher warfare with their strongest temptations and difficulties.

Communications may be addressed to Lieut.-Colonel Bourne, Secretary to the White Cross League, 7, Dean's Yard, Westminster Abbey.

Ministering to the Saints.

IN her manifold labours of love for the restoration and refreshment of tired workers in the Master's vineyard, Miss Mason continues to meet with much encouragement in her direction of the Houses of Rest at 10, Finchley Road, St. John's Wood, N.W., and at Eastbourne.

At the thirty-sixth anniversary of the work, held the week before last at the Parish Room, adjoining the Finchley Road Institution, Colonel Oldham, in presenting the annual report, sounded a note of praise for the blessings of the year. No fewer than 866 workers were received. It is satisfactory to notice that it is not only the creature comforts that are appreciated—although we by no means consider that these are either to be neglected or despised. All work that is to have the Master's "well done" must be "done well" in every department; but almost every letter alludes to the spiritual blessings received through the Scriptural teaching and holy influence pervading the Homes, to the sweet intercourse enjoyed by the visitors one with another as being most helpful. The meetings held in the Pillar Room in the London House, and the daily prayer-meetings at Eastbourne, proved seasons of refreshing, and brought many of God's children together to their mutual benefit.

A letter of appreciation, typical of many that have been received regarding the Finchley Road House, reads:—

I shall ever cherish the warmest regards for you all, and while spared in this world will look back with pleasure and gratitude to my sojourn in your home as one of the happiest incidents of my life. What a privilege it is to many to find rest in your home, where the comforts of life are so liberally bestowed to recruit the wearied bodies; and also their faith quickened and strengthened by an atmosphere of love pervading your whole establishment, where the name of our Heavenly Father is held in reverence and the name of our blessed Lord honoured and obeyed. I most sincerely thank you also for your expositions of Scripture which I enjoyed exceedingly, and for your prayers.

Of the Eastbourne House, a sample letter runs:—"I am writing to thank you so much for the time I and my friend have spent at Eastbourne. It was, indeed, a time of rest and refreshment, both of body and spirit, and of meeting with others of God's children; we did, indeed, have sweet fellowship one with the other. For the help and blessing received I would give praise and glory to God. I pray that others who go to your Houses of Rest may get as much blessing as I feel I have got."

FOR AGED WORKERS.

The Aged Workers' Home affords a life-long retreat to Christian women whose lives have been spent in some definite Christian work, either as missionaries to the heathen abroad, or as workers in some of the numerous Home Mission fields. There are twelve inmates, each occupying her own separate room, which is comfortably furnished and for which she has no rent to pay; coals and all renewals of furniture and household necessaries are also supplied free of cost to herself.

Miss Mason added words of gratitude to the friends who have stood by her so long, and, after a feeling reference to the loss sustained by the death of Miss Hawkes, who superintended the Eastbourne House so well, expressed satisfaction that Miss Emily Hawkes has taken up her departed sister's work. Referring to outstanding features of the recent May meetings as calls for (1) more workers, (2) greater efficiency, Miss Mason emphasized, in this connection, the value of the Houses in "renewing and edifying," in giving time for meditation upon the things of God.

EDIFICATION, LOVE AND WITNESSING.

A number of helpful addresses were delivered during the afternoon. Rev. W. H. Griffith-Thomas spoke on "Edification," building up in love to God and his people. The speaker dealt lucidly with 1 Cor. xiv. and Acts xx. 32, first bringing out the duty of witnessing for God, and then the association of edification with the Bible. "Those sermons are the most instructive, those lives the most blessed, which are saturated with Scriptural teaching. Sermons on the Word of God never grow stale; the King owns his sign manual."

Speaking from the chair, Rev. F. S. Webster said that love is the greatest power for bringing out the best that is within us, and the loving sympathy and gentle discipline manifested at Miss Mason's institutions tend greatly to spiritual development.

The value of the institutions in their social aspect was urged by Pastor Fuller Gooch. Rev. A. W. Evans concluded with words of hearty encouragement, in which he dwelt on the value of a margin of rest as a relief from the high pressure and bustle of life and work.

Midnight Meeting Movement.

WITH a fixity of aim and an activity which time does not impair, the Midnight Meeting Movement is an organization which contributes its share of active effort in the advancement of a higher and more healthful national life. The comprehensive work of the society was set forth at the annual meeting in Exeter Hall on Tuesday of last week. In presenting a summary of the year's operations, Mr. T. Nixon pointed out that while the movement is so closely associated with London, its efforts in the provinces are being considerably extended, and the possibilities of its usefulness are only limited by the small funds at the disposal of the committee. Following the meetings, numbers of cases have been dealt with; some of the young women have entered refuges, and others have been helped in various ways to retrieve their position.

PREVENTION AND CURE.

The preventive meetings have been particularly fruitful, being chiefly attended by factory and laundry girls. While visiting the streets, the missionaries have frequent opportunities for speaking a word and aiding those who are the special care of the Society. The West End of London is a source of much anxiety to the committee, as they experience great difficulty in hiring halls to hold the meetings in the neighbourhood of Piccadilly and Regent Street. Happily, Rev. F. S. Webster has generously co-operated with the committee by arranging gatherings at All Souls', Langham Place; and meetings have also been held at Orange Street Chapel, Leicester Square.

A warm tribute to the work of the Society was paid by Archdeacon Sinclair, who presided in the absence of the Bishop of London. He considered that in the midst of joyous celebrations of peace, it was fitting that our thoughts should be turned once more to one of the evils which, if unchecked, will sap the strength of the nation. His hearty sympathy was with those who, inspired by the Spirit of Christ, are endeavouring to seek the lost from the streets of London.

PERILS OF THE POOR.

The upper classes, the speaker continued, do not realize the terrible peril by which many in lower walks of life are surrounded, as a result of the scandalous overcrowding which exists. From early childhood the streets have been their playground, and they have become familiar with the evil sights and sounds, with the result that the step to vice is easily taken. There is also a large number of country girls who seek employment in the metropolis, and failing to secure work find their way to common lodging-houses, and fall into the hands of vicious people. Other conditions which call for the existence of such a Society were deplored by the Chairman, who pointed out that the victims of the war in South Africa and the disaster at Martinique in point of numbers are not to be compared with the multitude of women who are leading a wretched life on London's streets.

Stirring words of encouragement were spoken by Prebendary Webb-Peploe to the workers, urging them to be determined and win, and not rest until the blessed end of deliverance is attained. The Society came in at the last stage, when everything else had failed. It is well to do everything in preserving young women from the perils of a great city, but after all there is a mighty residuum of those who have fallen to whom attention must be given. An earnest address was also given by Rev. E. G. Gange, emphasizing the need for personal effort and individual appeal.

Protestant Women.

In many respects this year's annual gatherings of the Women's Protestant Union, held at Exeter Hall, will rank among the most successful and fruitful of the society's anniversaries. The Conference lasted three days, and many subjects of vital importance to Protestants were considered. The aims and methods of the Union, the difficulties and results of its work, were frankly set forth; the addresses being of an informing nature. Bible-readings were also given.

The society aims at uniting women of every class and denomination in maintaining and defending Protestant Christianity; it has enrolled more than 15,000 members, who endeavour by individual and combined prayer and effort to resist the encroachments of Romanism and Ritualism, which are undermining the spiritual, moral, and social liberties of our nation.

AGGRESSIVE EFFORTS.

Each evening a public meeting was held, being very largely attended. At the first of these gatherings, Sir George Williams presiding, Mrs. W. R. Arbuthnot gave a résumé of the year's activities. She remarked that from the beginning the Union had had to deal with the question of Romanizing in schools, knowing that the practice of Confession is inculcated in certain schools. In view of this there has been, during the past year, the gathering together of a children's committee from all the Protestant societies, and a list of schools where the charges were moderate and education good, and were free from Romanizing influence. The president deplored the freedom with which Protestants sent their children to Roman Catholic convent schools, which, in most cases, is owing to their being so cheap. The Union has also a list of convalescent homes, which they could recommend as free from proselytizing influences.

The speaker also referred to a special aid fund, one object of which is to help girls who had escaped from convents, giving some instances where such assistance had been warmly appreciated. Concerning the rapid growth of the Union, Mrs. Arbuthnot announced that in the five months of the present year, 621 members and associates have joined, while the local secretaries number 218, some of whom are in Australia and one in the West Indies.

AT HOME AND ABROAD.

Rev. F. S. Webster spoke on the recent Round Table Conference and its bearing on the question of Confession and Absolution, declaring the whole truth of the matter had been gloriously brought forward. An inspiring and instructive address by the Countess Schimmelmann followed, dealing with the difficulties and results of evangelistic work by women on the Continent.

Mr. W. Johnston, M.P., expressed his pleasure at finding that in the Coronation service the King will utter the words: "I, Edward VII., will maintain the Protestant Reformed Religion, as established by law." The more closely we are associated with Christianity, the more earnestly must we contend for "the faith once delivered to the saints." The heart of England is sound on the question. Protestantism must be the essence of politics. Mr. Johnston urged the necessity of being a Protestant first, and a politician afterwards, and mentioned that the Prince and Princess of Wales are sound Protestants, and are bringing up their children in that way.

In the absence of Colonel Sandys in the evening, Dr. Barnardo presided, speaking in hearty commendation of the Society's work. He urged that the Union has a definite mission, and was convinced that the influence of woman is growing politically, socially, and religiously. "England is, and still will be, the scene of a great combat; and we look to you, mothers, wives, sisters, daughters, to bear your part boldly and bravely in repelling the common enemy. I am sure that banding yourselves together in this Union will greatly increase your effectiveness.

"Manning said, and for once he spoke truly: 'Protestantism conquered in England is extinguished in the world.' That is why the conflict in this little island of the sea is so keen. The converse of Cardinal Manning's utterance is true. If Protestantism conquers here it will be the victor everywhere.

"In Ritualism the Protestant has an enemy as bitter as Rome itself. So much is the name Protestant hated, that it is confidently asserted (doubtless the wish is father to the thought) that the Church of England never was Protestant, that and the Ritualists alone are the Church's true and faithful sons. It matters not what history testifies.

"Any schoolboy could refute the pestilent nonsense if he studied our Protestant Articles and Rubrics, or surveyed the 'Book of Homilies,' a book to which every clergyman has subscribed, and which from beginning to end fiercely denounces every principle and nearly every practice of the Ritualistic sect.

"So your Union is set for the defence of the root-truths of the Protestant religion. You are engaged in no skirmish, no mere affair of outposts. You are resisting a frontal attack in force, and with flanking movements as well. Rome ever fights against our dearly-won Bible, our priceless boon of free worship, of direct access to the Saviour, of liberty and independence to follow the Master without the intervention of the priest.

"There is no third course between our Bible, Protestantism, and unconditional surrender to the Apostate Church. That is why it is of such unspeakable importance now to stand firm against priestly encroachments, and on the firm foundation of Bible truths and teachings.

"If Ritualism sweeps the Church of England into its net of forms and ceremonies, it means infinitely more than ecclesiastical millinery, incense, prostrations, and processions. It means the abandonment of nearly all that has made England great. It means the supremacy of the priest, the confessional, the enslavement of the intellect, the arrest of progress, a subjugated Press, and, in the end, the victory of all retrogressive influences.

"You women have a tremendous stake in the great controversy. I would like, as my single message to you to-night, to impress upon you that everything you hold dear is in danger if Protestantism fails or falters at this crisis."

A DESTROYER OF HOME LIFE.

The Confessional in the Church of England was the subject of a stirring address by Rev. Theodore A. Howard, Liverpool. He cited numerous cases in which this Romish practice has brought dissolution of homes and family circles. One case in his own parish was that of a boy who lay at the point of death. A curate, on visiting the sick lad the day before he died, donned his gown, lighted two candles, and demanded confession before he would administer the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. Happily the boy had been trained in a true Protestant home, and replied that he had confessed his sins to the Lord Jesus and should not confess to man. After considerable bullying, the priest grew impatient, blew out the candles, took off his vestments, and went out in a rage.

Mrs. K. Wheatley Bennett followed with an interesting review of the influence of woman for and against Protestantism since the famous Edict of Nantes in 1598, and the murder of 10,000 Huguenots in Paris, down to the present day. It was gratifying to think that there are now thousands of women giving their time, talents, and means to this great cause. Some idea of the strength of Rome in South America was given by Mr. J. L. Jarrett, who spoke on "Women in Peru under Romanism." But the situation is not without hope, for the speaker was able to state that while 1,092 women signed a protest against a Protestant school, many of the mothers brought their children. A few words of encouragement were given to the workers by Mr. John Kensit. While acknowledging that there is much to dishearten, he felt that there is also much to encourage, and believed that the church and nation will yet be saved from the perils of Rome.

The Indigent Blind.

In the annals of Christian philanthropy there is no more fascinating story than that which tells of the efforts put forth for ameliorating the condition of the blind, and particularly of the blind poor.

That efficient and far-reaching organization, the Indigent Blind Visiting Society, has, since its inception some sixty-seven years since, wrought a great improvement in the spiritual and physical condition of those afflicted with both blindness and extreme poverty. At the annual meeting held, on the invitation of Mr. and Mrs. John Tennant, at 19, The Boltons, S.W., striking testimony was borne to the blessing which continues to attend its ministry.

BLIND MISSIONARIES TO THE BLIND.

All the visitors employed are blind, experience having shown that when the right men are selected the blind make better visitors to their fellow-sufferers than those who see; and there is also this advantage—that the money subscribed for the blind is expended on them and not on sighted persons. A very useful branch of the work is to assist the blind to start in life; and, by grants or loans, to obtain the materials for their trade in larger quantities, and therefore at a cheaper rate than they could obtain them without such assistance; and to help them in times of sickness and temporary trouble. The classes of the society are held at a number of metropolitan centres; the class registers show an average attendance of 536.

The Annual Mission to the Blind was conducted by the workers of the Society under the superintendence of Mr. Mead. Meetings were held at eleven different centres, blind and guides to the number of 3,315 attended, and evangelistic addresses were given. Each meeting commenced with a tea and concluded with each blind person receiving an order for 2cwt. of best coals and a pair of warm cuffs, each guide also receiving a book. The old and sick people who could not leave their homes had a supply of coal sent to them, and the hundreds of blind people in the workhouses also received a gift.

THE LIGHT OF LIGHT.

Rev. Canon Fleming, who presided, pointed out that the guiding rule of the Society is so to educate and help the poor that they may be able to help themselves, and so well do the blind execute their work that it is difficult to realise that it represents the labours of the sightless. Most important of all, the Society's visitors carry the Holy Scriptures with them, so that the blind have "the light which is better than the light of the sun." At this time of national rejoicing, when so many are looking forward to what they shall see in connection with the Coronation, it is especially fitting that we should consider those who are without sight.

Rev. G. McLuckie, referred warmly to the general readiness of the blind to hear the Gospel story, as evinced in evangelistic services arranged for their benefit.

CHEERFULNESS UNDER AFFLICTION.

Mr. John Tennant, who followed, said that, apart from the teaching that is given, it is a blessing to the blind to bring them together, socially, out of the solitariness. Illustrating the cheerfulness with which the affliction is borne, Mr. Tennant told of "a poor blind woman, sixty years of age, from whose saintly lips there never comes a word of lament," and of an old man who, on being told that he looked very happy, replied, "Well, sir, I'm blind and my wife is paralyzed, but I've found the secret of joy."

After encouraging works from Rev. J. A. Faithfull, in which he congratulated the Society upon the economy with which its operations are carried out, Dr. A. W. Ranger earnestly advocated the cause of blind women and girls, and dwelt on the need to supply them with work.

The last speaker was Miss Douglas-Hamilton, who exhibited an excellent sample of needlework executed by an old lady seventy-three years of age, who, expressing the general need, said, "What we want is work."

Other Lands.

Notes from Calcutta.

THE WORLD'S C.E. CONVENTION, CALCUTTA.

SOME of the happiest recollections of our Indian trip relate to our frequent meetings with Rev. F. S. Hatch, M.A., the general secretary of the United Society of Christian Endeavour for India, Burma, and Ceylon. He seems specially created for this kind of work. Despondency flees where his face appears. Everyone, on seeing or hearing him, perceives that he is the possessor of a happy religion, and an ambition to infuse the energy of his own enthusiasm into the lives of others. He has a genial way of talking to and impressing the young, which does not miss its mark upon an older audience. Epigrammatically he describes the relationship of the C.E. to the S.S.U. "The S.S. Union stands for intellectual piety; the C.E. Society stands for active piety. All knowledge without loving service for others is nothing, and activity without knowledge is only beating the air. Know these things and do them."

Mr. Hatch wishes Christian readers to know that the invitation to the World's Union of C.E. to hold the World's Convention of 1904 or 1905 in Calcutta was entirely an act of faith. "We believe," he says, "that visitors will arrive from Europe, America, Australia, Africa, China, Japan and the islands of the sea. We do not know of one person who is sure to come from these lands, but we believe thousands will want to come and that hundreds will do so.

"We believe those who will come will be greatly enriched intellectually and spiritually. They will meet many missionaries without whom there would not be one Christian Endeavourer in all India. They will enter into fellowship with a host of Indian Endeavourers, as earnest and self-sacrificing as themselves. Their information will be enlarged, their judgment clarified, their sympathy quickened, their faith deepened, their hopes exalted, their love purified and intensified. These, and uncounted blessings besides, will reward the Endeavourers who come to the Calcutta Convention.

"Such a Convention will wonderfully bless India and all the East. As an object-lesson it would be impressive even to those who have no sympathy with the spiritual purpose of the C.E. movement; in a multitude of ways a Christlike traveller scatters blessing.

"Because our faith is strong, we ask you to begin now to pray for the world's C.E. Convention at Calcutta. Pray that He who promised to fill the evangelized world with the fragrance of Mary's anointing will penetrate all the world with the light reflected from this great assembly of the saints from every land."

We do not know which is the favourite motto of Mr. Hatch; but we should not be surprised if it were: "Open thy mouth wide, and I will fill it."

A VISIT TO SERAMPORE.

Serampore, only thirteen miles from Calcutta, is attractive for its missionary interest, as well as its pleasant situation on the river Hooghly, facing Barrackpur on the opposite shore, with the Viceroy's residence, to which in the winter season Lord Curzon retires for Sundays.

It is natural that a spot so rich in associations and so easy of access should be overrun with visitors and mere sightseers, not always to the advantage of busy missionaries who have a daily programme to fulfil.

We went, accompanied by a friend whose intimate knowledge of details connected with Serampore's mission history gave us a delightful peep into the past. It was here in the old Danish church that General Havelock was baptized, and it was there in the old, abandoned little Hindu temple where Henry Martyn loved to meditate. After visiting the graveyard and reading the simple epitaphs of the heroic pioneers of the Baptist Mission—Carey, Marshman, and Ward, and as we entered the library of the college building, we found that the night was overtaking us fast. In the shadows that darkened around venerated objects, relics of the past, and the works of the departed ones, we were reminded of words spoken more than a century ago by a grey-headed minister to an enthusiastic young preacher, who in a meeting in England pleaded the cause of mission work in Eastern lands: "Young man, sit down. When God pleases to convert the heathen, He will do it without your help or mine."

This sharp rebuke has passed into history with William Carey, who, nothing daunted, kept on expecting and attempting great things for God until he carried them through.

It was a king of Denmark who sent the first Protestant missionaries to Tranquebar in South India, 1706, and it was under Danish rule and protection that the first English missionaries were enabled to settle down in India, to establish schools, churches, and a printing-press from whence proceeded forty translations of the Scriptures.

The self-taught shoemaker, through his wise economy of time and unabated zeal and perseverance accomplished labours almost incredible, rendering invaluable services as teacher of Bengali and of Sanskrit. In addition to his translation work, he prepared grammars and dictionaries in several Oriental languages. He was also instrumental in suppressing two of the most revolting Hindu customs—drowning of young children in the Ganges for sacrifice, and the sutee, or widow-burning.

It seemed, indeed, a privilege to proclaim the blessed Gospel in the church at Calcutta which bears his name, and is fragrant with holy memories of its founder, and my husband felt it as such when, complying with an invitation of the present pastor, Mr. Hook, he preached there one Sunday evening.

Owing to Calcutta being now the centre of mission and educational work, Serampore has lost its original pre-eminence. The College, established in 1818 for the instruction of Asiatic Christian and other youth in Eastern literature and European science, and which included the study of Sanskrit and Arabic, was very useful, and for many years largely attended. In 1879 the College department was given up; but a Training Institution for Christian mission agents is still carried on in the building, under the principalship of Rev. E. S. Summers.

Opportunities in Basutoland.

IN acknowledging receipt of £200 contributed by friends in England to the Basutoland Mission, Rev. R. H. Dyke writes to Mrs. Sutherland Taylor:—"I do not think our church has ever felt so united and strong. Notwithstanding all its difficulties, and the efforts of the Ethiopians, Roman Catholics, and Ritualists to reap in our field of labour where we have sowed, and the efforts of others to spread discord, there has been a wonderful advance all along the line. The only truly sad part of it is that while there are urgent requests from many parts for new outstations (I think there must have been at least thirty), in many of them the missionaries told us they had been forced to commence at their own charges and risks, but the Sustentation Fund had to turn a deaf ear to all requests, and not one out-station was added to the list. We hope and trust that the Lord will send us funds, and that at our next meeting we may be able to grant at least twenty new out-stations."

At present two teachers are needed at the Training Institution, one as head-master and another as a junior teacher. The former must have experience ranging over some years, and should be married. It would also be well if he were an ordained minister, who has gone through a teacher's course. The junior teacher must be a Christian of decided missionary zeal, to have charge of classes under the senior missionary. Information will be gladly given by Mrs. Sutherland Taylor, 25, Brownswood Road, Clissold Park, N.

Among the Boers in India.

NOW that the Boer prisoners are returning to their farms, many will do so with grateful remembrance of those who sought to minister to their spiritual needs. Writing of the efforts which were made in the camp at Wellington, South India, Rev. R. J. Ward says:—

I visited the camp a few days ago in the company of Mr. Mallis, of the C.I.G.M., who is in charge of the Union Church at Coonoor. As we passed the sentry Mr. Mallis' bag attracted the attention of that functionary, who wanted to know what the bag contained, but he was satisfied when informed that the contents consisted of good Gospel literature, including Bibles and Sankey's hymn-books which I found were eagerly bought up by the prisoners.

We passed through the tents of the British soldiers on guard, a detachment of the Lincolnshire Regiment. Going along the Boer lines we noticed that several of the men were busy at work—one making brooches out of old bones, another carving an ornamental walking-stick, and so on. Mr. Mallis conducts a weekly service in the camp, the place of meeting being a hollow spot, which forms a convenient amphitheatre. Here, about 200 of the prisoners gathered for the service. I was particularly struck with the elderly appearance of many of them. They all had a rustic air, and a number of them reminded me so much of Yorkshire farmers or Scottish shepherds. Mrs. Mallis sang several solos, and some familiar hymns (such as "There is a fountain") were joined in by the majority. Mr. Mallis asked all who understood English to show it, and the greater number held up their hands. I had the privilege of speaking to them, taking for my subject the words of the Lord Jesus about the hen gathering her chickens under her wings. A more attentive and devout congregation I never addressed, and several were moved to tears as they listened.

At the close, Mr. Liebenberg (Boer pastor) prayed in Dutch, finishing off with a few sentences in very good English, asking God's blessing on the visitors and on the words spoken. Then the whole company rose and sang, with uncovered heads and very reverent air, a Dutch evening hymn.

The Boer pastor, Mr. Liebenberg, acts as chaplain among them. Before the war he had a church of 800 members in a place about eighty miles from Pretoria. His people were engaged in erecting a new building to hold over 1,000 people. I have had some very blessed fellowship with this brother. He was not an actual combatant, but went, as he told me, to the war because his people went, and he felt that the shepherd must follow the flock. He is personally acquainted with Mr. Dudley Kidd and Rev. Andrew Murray, of both of whom he speaks in loving terms, as being helpful to him in his Christian life. Some years ago he visited England and attended the Keswick Convention. He has a wife and children in South Africa, and that is the case with most of the prisoners here. They are all longing to get back to their loved ones.

One old man came up to me and said, "Mr. Ward, when are they going to send us home?" I never so realized before the position of the Jewish exiles in Babylon. But these exiles do sing the Lord's song in a strange land. Some of them go off into the woods for prayer every day, and Mr. Liebenberg told me of one man who said to him, "We are sighing for our return home, but the Lord is so precious to us here that if our home-going meant the loss of his fellowship, we had rather remain where we are."

Young Emigrants.—Mrs. Birt (Liverpool) sailed on June 5 with a party of eighty boys and girls for Canada. Bright, healthy-looking youngsters they were, and carefully and tastefully clad, they made a picturesque group on board s.s. Dominion. No tears were shed, all being hopeful, happy, and looking forward to a brighter life in the new world than has been their experience in this. Mrs. Birt expects to return in about two months. She hears from the Canadian Home that situations and homes are awaiting a large number of the children.

A Re-Start in North China.

WRITING from Tientsin, Dr. Arthur D. Peill (L.M.S.), gives interesting details of the present situation and distinctly encouraging outlook of missions in North China. After describing his outward journey, Dr. Peill says:—

"We were heartily welcomed by our fellow missionaries in Tientsin. After a few days came a meeting of the district committee, to discuss various important matters that could not wait over till the annual meetings in spring. Things are changed since the last district committee meeting, and in many instances work has to be begun again—houses, hospitals, chapels, schools, out-station chapels by the dozen awaiting re-erection.

"The meetings over, Mr. Murray and I set out on a tour to our district, T'sang Chou, Yen Shan, Ching Yun, and parts of a few more counties. Our hosts were most friendly and cordial, and seemed really glad to get us back. They hate the Boxer movement, realizing what folly it was, and how much trouble it has brought in its train. Our indemnity has been largely raised by fines levied on the Boxers in the neighbourhood; the people who did not follow the Boxers, though doing nothing to stop them, in most cases only being mulcted so far as we can gather, for small amounts.

A CHEERING OUTLOOK.

It was a rather pathetic business looking over our poor old ruins, and remembering the many happy associations therewith. Many of the walls are still standing, though some are cracked and need to be pulled down. The roofs, floors, &c., are entirely gone. We had an even narrower escape last year than we thought. The magistrate, Mr. Lin, and General Mei, were both full of it, and expressed great surprise, as well as satisfaction, at our marvellous escape. As we were leaving, General Mei said:—'Don't be troubled, you are bound to prosper; your Jesus is with you.'"

Dr. Peill goes on to say:—"The magistrate is very keen to start a college for foreign learning in T'sang Chou as soon as possible. It has been decided by Government that the T'sang Chou College is to be central for the six neighbouring counties, each of which is to have a lower-grade college as well. Shang is most anxious that Mr. Murray should help him, and has asked him to draw up a scheme of study, recommend text-books, &c. This is happening now all over the land, and the missionaries are being turned to, as the fittest and best leaders in the new development that must take place. The great difficulty, I fear, will be in providing suitable teachers for the schools."

With reference to the medical section of the mission, the writer is equally reassuring:—"Numbers of old patients came to see me, and attended Sunday service. Many of these adherents had been persecuted by the Boxers for the mere fact of having consulted a 'foreign devil,' but none that I heard of were severely injured or killed. Our adventures last year have at least done one thing, they have advertised us, and I was known and called by name in every street I passed through."

"Our Christians, on the whole," says Dr. Peill, "both in T'sang and Yen Shan, and in our other districts, have come out of it all wonderfully well. Out of the bitter trial of last year's martyrdom and persecution, they have come triumphantly; and out of this year's harder trial—when they have been necessarily much neglected, with preachers killed, missionaries away, older Christians, deacons, &c., almost exterminated, and opportunities for revenge, extortion, and extravagant claims for compensation—they have come more clean-handed and with a more Christlike spirit than we could have dared to hope. Over 250 of our Christians were cruelly slain; and then the tide turned, and our members had the upper hand to some extent over the unpunished murderers of their nearest and dearest. But not one Boxer suffered death or even injury at the hand of our Christians, except in cases where they joined the regular soldiery in legally resisting and putting down the Boxers."

Young Women in Johannesburg.

AN interesting meeting was held at Blackheath a few days ago, in aid of an effort to provide an Institute and Home for Young Women in Johannesburg. Amongst the many problems calling for solution in the Transvaal at present, is that of residence for women who are going to Johannesburg, Pretoria, &c., to earn their own living, but for whom no accommodation is provided, as all the hotels and boarding-houses are crowded with men. The South Africa General Mission is therefore desirous of adding yet another to its already fairly nnmerous branches of work, and to provide a Home in Johannesburg for our fellow-countrywomen there. They have secured a building in a central position, and are only waiting for the requisite sum of money, £10,000, to commence the necessary alterations, half of which sum the Society hopes to raise in England and half in South Africa.

There was not a large attendance at the meeting. Rev. A. E. Barnes-Lawrence was in the chair, supported on the platform by Miss Bessie Porter (who has been working in Johannesburg), Miss Reynolds (secretary World's Y.W.C.A.), Sir Robert Anderson, K.C.B., Drs. Edward Clapton and Walter Kidd, Colonels Wellesley Robinson, C.B. and Finch-White, and others. The chairman read a letter which he had received from the Commander-in-Chief, Lord Roberts, who said: "When the question was first raised about sending young women from this country to South Africa, I pointed out that success would depend on two things; first, careful selection at home of those who are to be sent out; secondly, proper arrangements for the care of the young women until they are provided with suitable employment in South Africa. I have no doubt at all that the first of these matters will be managed by the South Africa General Mission, and the second will be greatly assisted by the establishment of a young women's home at Johannesburg."

NOTHING DONE FOR WOMEN.

Miss Bessie Porter, who has spent nearly four years in South Africa, said that one of the first things which struck her when she went out to the Cape was that almost nothing was being done for the women. In nearly all the stores in Johannesburg the business women were British. Their life was one of terrible temptation, none of the large stores having boarding establishments for their employées. In Cape Town, for about the last thirteen years, there had been a most useful building belonging to the Y.W.C.A. There are others in Port Elizabeth and Durban. Johannesburg was far and away the largest town in South Africa, and they wanted to open a Home there, where women were frequently driven to desperation in their efforts to find a night's shelter. One girl once went to fourteen boarding-houses and was refused a lodging because she was a woman, so they would see the Home was a tremendous necessity. When established, it would be affiliated to the British Women's Emigration Association, the Y.W.C.A., the G.F.S., and the Travellers' Aid Society.

Sir Robert Anderson said they must remember that they were dealing now with British soil, and they must preserve their position as the nation at the head of civilization. While he was at Scotland Yard no subject interested him more than the efforts made to decoy British women abroad for evil purposes; and a young woman, without friends, on her arrival in such a town as Johannesburg, was like a caged bird turned out among the chimney-pots of London. But there was help in London; there was little or none in Johannesburg. They were, therefore, asked to help to found a place where the friendless girl would find a kind friend and a safe home, and so be kept clear of the manifold temptations which assailed her on every side.

The hon. treasurer of the undertaking is Mr. H. W. Maynard, and the secretary is Mr. Arthur Mercer, who may be addressed at 17, Homefield Road, Wimbledon, S.W.

Venice Industrial Home.

FROM time to time visitors to Venice have had opportunity for witnessing the interesting and diversified operations of the Industrial Home. At present, forty-five boys are being trained and taught a variety of useful occupations, after the foundation of a solid education is laid; and are being prepared for nobler service, several of the boys having graduated from the institute and become able teachers and ministers of the Gospel.

Most of the boys in the Home are orphans, and all are of Roman Catholic parentage. Needless to say, the work is difficnlt, and meets with much opposition. It is, however, winning its reward, and Venice is gaining the benefit of the self-denying and devoted efforts of Mr. and Mrs. Kool-Antonini and their helpers.

The hand of time has made itself felt in the walls of the Home (which was an old building when taken over sixteen years ago), with the result that urgent and expensive repairs are required to be done. It is to be regretted that towards the £600 required for this purpose no funds are available. Mr. Antonini will, with pleasure, send copies of the annual report to friends of the Home. He may be addressed: 923, Cannaregio, Venice.

Northfield Conferences.

THE Young Men's Conference, to be held at Northfield June 27 to July 6, promises to be interesting beyond precedent. Last year the delegates numbered about 600, and there would be an equal number who were not delegates. An interesting feature this year is the part which Harvard is planning to play in sending a delegation of 100 men, which she now proposes to do. Harvard in the past has been Unitarian in its sympathies, and has held itself very much aloof from all Evangelical movements. This past year has witnessed a complete change of front, and great things are now looked for from this oldest of American colleges. Among the speakers will be Rev. G- Campbell Morgan, Mr. Robert E. Speer (Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions), Rev. John Kelman (Edinburgh), Rev. Charles W. Gordon, and Professors King and Bosworth (Oberlin).

Until the present year, the Young Men's Conference has been succeeded by that of the Y.W.C.A., which this summer is held elsewhere. In its place will be held, throughout July, a Summer Bible School. During the month Rev. G. Campbell Morgan will give lectures daily (save Sundays and Mondays) on the "Crises of Christ;" and Professcr W. W. White, of the Teachers' Bible College, will lecture on "The Writings of Luke, the Physician."

On August 1 the General Conference begins. This lasts for seventeen days. This is the twentieth session, and it is this Conference which has placed Northfield in the position it now holds in the United States. It is to be distinctly understood that the Conference stands for no distinct line of teaching, or for any special school. It is undenominational, and it is not critical. England furnishes a strong quota of speakers in Rev. F. B. Meyer, Rev. W. Ross, and Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, whom America now claims. Among the Americans are Rev. C. I. Scofield, D.D.; Rev. A. C. Dixon, D.D.; Rev. Henry G. Weston, President of Crozier Seminary; Rev. H. W. Pope, and Rev. Tennis Hamlin, D.D. Another Englishman, Rev. Stephen Band, will conduct services for children. Mr. Band has been signally blessed in this work in the past, and his visit should do much good. The singing will be in the hands of Mr. D. B. Towner and Mr. George C. Stebbins, who have been closely connected with Northfield for a number of years.

For the benefit of those who desire to stay in Northfield, which is constantly growing in favour as a resort for the balance of the summer, there will be post-Conference addresses, at which Mr. Meyer will be the principal speaker. Thus there will be meetings continuously from June 27 to September 7.

Foreign Mission Week.

A Wonderful Chain.

THIS week I want to have a talk with you about a wonderful chain. It is more beautiful than one of glittering gold, and stronger than one of solid iron. Can you guess what it is? I mean a chain of boys and girls linked together in prayer for some definite object.

Once again we are turning our thoughts to Foreign Missions, and so we will think of this chain in connection with that special subject. But perhaps some of you may think that boys and girls are too young to unite in such a chain. This, however, is quite a mistake, for God loves to hear the children pray just as much as the grown-up people; and if you don't learn to speak to Him when you are young, I am afraid you will find it more difficult to do so when you are older. What ought girls and boys to pray about? Well, certainly for those things which are near to the heart of Jesus Christ, and one of them is the extension of his kingdom among men. There are millions of little children who are being brought up without any knowledge of Jesus and his love for them. Can you not pray that God will send out more missionaries to tell these little ones how to become good, true men and women? Can you not pray for them, that their hearts may be made ready for what the missionaries shall tell them?

Just now we are thinking a great deal about our country, its greatness and power, its vast dominions, and with grateful hearts you may well say—

I was not born, as thousands are,
Where God was never known;
And taught to pray a useless prayer
To blocks of wood and stone.

I was not born a little slave,
To labour in the sun;
Wishing I were but in the grave,
And all my labour done.

My God, I thank Thee, who hast planned
A better lot for me!
And placed me in this happy land,
Where I can hear of Thee.

But the very fact that you have so many advantages over other children should remind you of what you can render in return for all God's goodness to you; and I feel sure that if you join in this wonderful chain of prayer, you will also want to work for the coming of his Kingdom. There are unfortunately many Christian people who do not take any interest in foreign missions, but you must not be numbered among these. You must rather be God's enthusiastic little workers in his vineyard, doing your small share. There is a proverb which says that "a chain is no stronger than its weakest link." If you are to become the little links in this mighty chain of prayer, it is most important that you should be strong little links, or you will weaken the whole chain. By this I mean you must be in real earnest, for if even one of the children should grow cold and indifferent about the heathen, then the chain would be broken, and its strength and beauty marred.

There are many ways in which you can help. Your ministers and friends will tell you how, if you ask them. When you get old enough I hope you will join one of the existing Missionary Prayer Unions and read some of the many missionary magazines, in this way taking a more intelligent interest in the mission field, and thereby rendering better service.

I hope all Uncle Tom's "Searchers" will learn to say, "I am but one, but I am one. I cannot do much, but I can do something. What I can do I ought to do, and what I ought to do by the grace of God I will do." If you were all to say and live up to this, how the chain would grow! Union is strength, and together you might do great things to speed the coming of Christ's Kingdom on earth.

Do you know those verses by Frances Ridley Havergal on "The Ministry of Intercession"? Speaking of the many who join in this ministry, she says:—

There are little ones among them,
Child-ministers of prayer,
White robes of intercession
Those tiny servants wear.
First for the near and dear ones
Is that fair ministry,
Then for the poor, black children
So far beyond the sea.
The busy hands are folded,
As the little heart uplifts
In simple love, to God above,
Its prayer for all good gifts.

I hope you will become links in this beautiful chain which is encircling the world, this wonderful chain of prayer. K. H.

A Famine Orphan.

A TOUCHING incident is reported from the Boys' Orphanage at Aligarh, North-West India. Chunkoo, a boy of about fourteen years of age, lay dying. He had been ill only a few days, but the end was near, and he knew it. Two hours before his death he called around him a number of his special friends, and held a prayer-meeting, himself being the leader. He said, "I am not afraid to die, I am a Christian;" and in this strain he continued to talk as his strength allowed him. At last he shouted, "Jai, jai, Jisu," "Victory, victory, to Jesus," breathed his last, and was sweetly at peace in Jesus. We do not mourn for him. His was a glorious death; but his place is vacant, and we mourn our loss. Four years ago this dear boy was a heathen, and knew nothing of Jesus. Since he came to us, he had developed into a beautiful character, and his life was that of a true Christian.

Mission of Love, Liverpool.—Rev. Herbert J. S. Wood, M.A., the devoted superintendent and founder of this mission in Gay Street, Scotland Road, was formerly a clergyman in the Church of England. Coming to Liverpool about fifteen years ago, he commenced work in one of the lowest parts of the city, where he is greatly beloved. A useful and much-needed work is being carried on by Mr. and Mrs. Wood and a devoted band of workers. At the annual meeting, held recently at the Temperance Hall, Hardman Street, South, Mr. Alex. Guthrie (who presided), Mr. W. Arthur Weightman (hon. solicitor and treasurer to the Mission), Mr. Thos. A. Leigh, and Rev. Robert Lewis commended the work to the practical sympathy of Christian friends. Mr. Wood's address is 39, St. Domingo Grove, Liverpool.

True Humility (John xiii. 1-16).

We should notice that instead of "supper being ended," as A.V., it is better to read "supper being served," or supper-time having arrived. The pitcher of cool water, the basin, and the towel had been prepared as part of the ordinary furniture of the supper chamber, but none of the disciples showed the least sign of performing the tender and lowly service of washing the feet of the rest—so necessary when they were insufficiently protected from the heat and grit by a slight sandal.

The reason of this studied avoidance of the usual custom is suggested by the Evangelist Luke, who tells us that "there had arisen among them a contention, which of them is accounted the greatest."

They were in no mood to receive the exhortations of their Master; and it must have grieved Him greatly that on this, the last evening that they should be together, there should be such an ebullition of bad feeling. He could not leave them to the situation which their pride had created. He knew that Gethsemane was near, and Calvary, and He wanted them too badly; so He rose from the supper-table, poured water into the basin, girded Himself with the towel, and, to the astonishment of all, began to wash their feet.

Notice the emphasis that the Evangelist lays on the emotions which were at that hour filling the Saviour's heart. First, He knew that the hour of his home-going had nearly arrived; secondly, He was more than ever conscious of his Divine Sonship, and that the Father had given all things into his hands as the Mediator; thirdly, his love was at the full, "He loved them unto the end." Those latter words do not refer merely to the end of his life, which would have been a small thing, since, in one sense, it was so nearly ended; but to the infinity of love that filled his heart. He loved them to the end of loving. There was nothing that could be expected of love to which his love was not equal. It leapt all barriers, and sent its wavelets to the furthest shores.

Judas was among that group, and Jesus knew perfectly what was going on in his dark and treacherous soul; but He didn't unmask him; He made no difference between him and others; He took his feet in his hands and laved them with just as much tenderness and care as if he had been John or Peter. How difficult we should have felt it. How easy to have shown hauteur, a cold aloofness, a studied courtesy which would have preserved the outward appearance of piety, but would have conveyed the assurance to the traitor, that he was deceiving no one.

Nothing interfered with the silence and awe which reigned in the room, save the plash of the water, till the Master reached Peter, who stoutly protested, saying, "Lord, do you actually propose to wash my feet?" Then the Lord revealed the deeper purpose which was in his heart, that such washing was symbolical of the daily and hourly forgiveness which we all require at his loving hands, and without which we can have no part nor lot with Him.

Is not the Lord still washing our feet? He began to do so in the upper room, but has been pursuing the sacred occupation ever since. Ah, my friends, what grace and love is shown in this, that daily and hourly our blessed Lord is engaged in removing from our hearts all the stains that our daily walk encourages.

But we are to do as He did. We, too, are called to remove all deplement from the hearts and lives of others, not pointing the finger of scorn, or curling the lip, or making our brother's sin a matter of gossip, but meekly trying to recover him from the snare of the enemy.

C.E. NOTES.

The St. Helens (Lancs.) Y.M.C.A. is co-operating with the Evangelization Society in a three weeks' tent mission. Mr. R. McLean is the missioner, and there have been good attendances.

Societies in Turkey, on account of the despotic Government, labour under peculiar disadvantages. The very name, "Christian Endeavour," must not be used, nor can the badge be worn. The organization must be called simply "A Prayer Meeting." The constitution cannot be signed, nor can a copy of it be given to the members. Notwithstanding these disadvantages, almost every mission station in Turkey has one or more Societies.

At Samakov, in Bulgaria, Dr. Clark recently held fourteen C.E. meetings. At the close of the second day, at half-past ten o'clock at night, three of the leading young men in one of the highest classes in the College, came to Professor Thompson, the beloved principal, and told him that they could not sleep until they had let him know of their determination to be Christians. More than twenty of the girls expressed the same determination, and confessed their purpose to live for Christ.

Review Lesson.

Golden Text—Luke ii. 32.

THE Church of Christ, its foundation, upbuilding, and extension, has been the subject of our course of lessons during the past six months; drawn from the first sixteen chapters of the Acts of the Apostles, and covering a period of about thirty years, the power and work of the Holy Ghost being prominently demonstrated throughout the entire course.

This Book of the Acts of the Apostles has been called "The Book of the Acts of the Holy Ghost through the Apostles." The chief question at issue during the early part of the course was the resurrection of Christ; during the latter part, the reception or not of Gentiles into the Christian Church, and whether by Jewish ritual or simple faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. As an aid to memory the leading events described in chapters i. to xvi. may be indexed under the following headings.

I. The Ascension of Christ, with his promise of the Holy Ghost, and commission to his disciples to be his witnesses on the earth.

II. Promise of the Holy Ghost Fulfilled, and the witnesses endued with power from on high.

III. The Church Formed,
united in brotherly-kindness and love, and devotion to her One Lord.

IV. Opposition from the World, including arrests, stripes, imprisonments, and threatenings; but resulting in greater "boldness of speech" for Christ, and "multitudes added to the Lord."

V. Dangers from Within, through professed members of the Church yielding to the temptations of Satan (v. 1; viii. 9).

VI. Organization Necessitated by the continued increase of church members, for the government of the body, and works of charity (vi. 1-5).

VII. Persecution,
repeated and violent, even unto death (vii. 3).

VIII. Extension of the Church
by means of the persistent and fierce persecutions, new ground opened, and fresh workers added to the staff (Saul, Timothy).

IX. The Holy Ghost Fell on the Gentiles as Peter began to speak in the house of Cornelius (x. 44; xi. 15).

X. The First Gentile Church Founded at Antioch in Syria; and this city afterwards became the centre of foreign missionary work.

XI. The Charter of Gentile Freedom, signed and issued by the Council at Jerusalem.

XII. Europe Opened to the Gospel,
the Holy Spirit guiding and preparing the way.

The enemy was on the alert the whole time, willing to use any or every tool which would lend itself to his hand—religious leaders, rulers of the people, or the rabble, the mob, the common people; likewise professors or false teachers, Herod, Elymas, or the ignorant heathen at Lystra. Even the prejudice of believing Jews was utilized as an opposing force to the progress of the Gospel. But "God knoweth how to deliver the godly" (1 Pet. ii. 9), and the Holy Ghost wrought in the hearts of Jew and Gentile a brotherly-kindness, which could rejoice that they were "all one in Christ Jesus," with prayer as their never-failing means of victory.

Geographical Outline.

After the Ascension of the Lord from the slopes of Olivet, near the beloved Bethany, the disciples wended their way, orphaned for the time, but "full of joy," back to

Jerusalem, with its "upper room," temple courts, guard-room, house of Mary (iv. 23 and xii. 12), and council chamber; until from "outside the city" (vii. 57) the wind of persecution wafted the "seed of the Church" into

Samaria and unto the uttermost parts of the earth; Ethiopia (viii. 26, 27), Phenice, Cyprus (xi. 19), Damascus, Joppa, Lydda, Cæsarea, Antioch in Syria (xi. 26).

First Missionary Tour.—Cyprus, Perga, Antioch in Pisidia, Iconium, Lystra, Derbe; back to Antioch in Syria, and thence to Jerusalem.

Second Missionary Tour.—Through Syria and Cilicia, Derbe, Lystra, delivering the decrees ordained by the Apostles at Jerusalem, Phrygia, Galatia, Troas, Samothracia, Neapolis, Philippi, Athens, Corinth, Ephesus, and back to Antioch. During the Third missionary tour Paul visited Rome.

Among the chief persons mentioned are Peter and John, with their unflagging zeal, superhuman courage, and whole-hearted devotion to their Lord and Master; Stephen, the first martyr for the Cross of Jesus, "a man full of faith, and of the Holy Ghost;" Barnabas, also a deacon "full of the Holy Ghost," who devoted his possessions to the Lord and his Church (iv. 37); Saul, the persecutor until Jesus met and won him; henceforth his devoted servant, who is said to have done more for the kingdom of Christ than any other man; Barnabas, again, as companion missioner with Paul; Timotheus, Paul's son in the faith; and Silas, one of the deputation from the Mother Church, who accompanied Paul on his second missionary journey; Dorcas, the beloved worker, who served the Lord with her needle; Cornelius, the Christian soldier, anxious to share his blessing with his friends and neighbours (x. 24); Lydia, the first convert in Europe, the generous-hearted woman of business, and many others. Dark characters among the rest ring out their notes of warning against lies, deception, avarice, vainglory, self-seeking, hatred of the truth, rebellion against God, and wilful rejection of Christ.

FOR THE NEW QUARTER.

 Teachers will find Rev. F. B. Meyer's Moses full of suggestion for the lessons during the coming quarter, while his book, The Life and Light of Men, will be valuable to those who use the morning lesson. (2s. 6d. each. Morgan & Scott.)

The Good Ship "Harmony."

MANY gracious memories of the goodness of the Lord to his missionary servants were revived on June 6, when, after an interval of six years, the Moravian Brethren met on board their ship Harmony to say good-bye before she sailed for the coast of Labrador. No more deeply moving story is recorded in missionary history than that of this work among the Eskimos of Labrador, established in 1771 by a colony of brethren and sisters from England and Germany, who at once erected a station called Nain. Six more stations were subsequently added, at Zoar, Hopedale, and Makkovik to the south, and Okak, Hebron, and Ramah to the north of Nain. Zoar was abandoned in 1894. The distance from Ramah to Hopedale is about 300 miles.

Since 1770, when the Jersey Packet was sent out on an exploratory trip, the Brethren's Society for the Furtherance of the Gospel has maintained regular communication by despatching each year a ship, specially devoted to this missionary object. Twelve different ships have been employed in the service, ranging from a little sloop of seventy tons. Of these only five were specially constructed for Arctic service, including the vessel now in use, which was built in the year 1876, and is the fifth bearing the well-known name Harmony. The four predecessors were sailing ships only, while this has auxiliary steam. The gross tonnage is 408, net 222, and the average speed seven knots an hour. Sailing on June 10, it is hoped to reach St. John's, N.F., in sixteen to twenty days, the Labrador coast five days later; and after twenty days in visiting the stations, to reach England again in the middle of August. Should the experiment, based on an average of seasons, be successful, a second round trip will be complete by the beginning of November. The trade department of the Labrador Mission, which thus takes out all supplies and maintains communication with the stations, is developing satisfactorily and promises to be a growing source of income.

Rev. C. J. Klesel (secretary of the Society) introduced Captain Jackson, in whom the Moravian Brethren have found a commander from one of their own congregations. Rev. W. Wetton Cox (of the London Association) told the story of many answers to prayer in recent years, and pointed out promising features of the work. Dr. Hutton, who gave an address, is going out in the hope of founding the first hospital in the northern part of Labrador, where there is the deepest need for such an institution. The pure Eskimo population has, for a considerable time past, been decreasing, while a mixed race is increasing in number and importance. Missionary work is carried on among these so-called "settlers," and also among the crews of the fishing schooners, which frequent the coast in the summer.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

BALLYMONEY.

'IT was our privilege," writes an esteemed correspondent, "to have Rev. Dr. J. Q. A. Henry with us for one meeting on Friday evening, June 6, to give one of his stirring addresses on temperance. I am glad to say that we had a fairly good audience, and, what is better still, a deep impression was made, which I believe will lead to many taking a more decided interest in the cause. I think the friends of temperance never did a wiser thing than to engage our friend for this mission. I may add that I look for blessed results in the Presbyterian churches from his telling address to the members of Assembly recently met in Belfast."

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY MEETING.

The effect of Dr. Henry's recent address at the General Assembly meeting of the Irish Presbyterian Church has been deep and widespread. The Northern Whig says of it: "Dr. Henry was allowed to speak for a solid hour. He is a great temperance orator, worthy to stand in succession to the Goughs and other giants of former times. He held the Assembly spellbound, and was vociferously applauded. There can be no manner of doubt as to the moral passion of the speech."

Rev. R. H. Hamilton, of Lisburn, wrote to Dr. Henry: "Your services here were greatly appreciated, and I believe blessed to many. Your appearance at our General Assembly could not but have been an unspeakable blessing to all who heard you, and by the blessing of God shall surely bear abundant fruit."

SHEFFIELD.

In connection with the annual Conference of the British Temperance League, Dr. Henry rendered valuable service. "For the gatherings in the Albert Hall on Lord's Day, June 8," says the Sheffield Independent, "the League were fortunate in securing as preacher Dr. Henry, a temperance advocate of wide powers and experience, and a speaker possessing much persuasive eloquence. Dr. Henry is not unknown in Sheffield, having visited the city comparatively recently in connection with the Million Pledges Crusade, and addressed a series of meetings, which were uniformly successful. At the Albert Hall Dr. Henry covered a wide range of topics associated with temperance reform. His point of view was always that of a Christian minister."

FUTURE MEETINGS.

Personalia.

Rev. W. Darlow Sarjeant desires friends to note his new address—5, Wellfield Avenue, Muswell Hill, N.

Rev. F. C. Spurr is leaving England for two months on a visit to some Continental mission stations, and will be away until the end of August. No letters will be forwarded.

Dr. Baedeker, writing from Riga on June 12, says:—"I have made a journey round by Jönköping, Stockholm, Helsingfors, St. Petersburg. I now hope to go to Reval, and return by the same route to Christiania. I expect to attend a missionary conference on June 22, and afterwards to visit various meetings in Norway—Drammen, Laurwick, Skien, Arendal, Bergen till about July 10. Pray for us, also that the Lord may send forth labourers."

Mr. Charles Hill, the indefatigable secretary of the Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association, has, we regret to learn, broken down in health. For more than forty years he has worked ably and energetically in this cause, and we bespeak for him the prayers of our readers that he may be restored to health again. There is scarcely any cause that more urgently needs robust and earnest men than the preservation of the Lord's Day. We notice that some friends are interesting themselves in the raising of a fund.

The Holy Spirit and Missions.

AT the invitation of Mr. H. W. Fry, some thirty missionaries and friends, interested in missionary work, met in the drawing-room at Exeter Hall on Thursday last, for the purpose of considering the formation of an association with the object of bringing into closer fellowship missionaries and missionary Christian workers who desire that the person and work of the Holy Spirit should be accorded that honour and position in every Christian life and all missionary ministry, which is his due. Mr. R. Cope Morgan presided, and, amongst others, the following took part in the discussion:—Rev. F. Paynter, Dr. Warren, Rev. H. B. Macartney, Rev. Barclay Buxton, Pastor Fuller Gooch, Mr. Grant Jackson, Mr. J. H. Lowe, and Mr. John Cory.

All the speakers recognized that there was very great need for an organization the object of which should be to bring into greater prominence the necessity for a fuller realization of the "filling with the Spirit," which is the promise of the Father, and the gift of the Father for the sake of his Son Jesus Christ, and that therein lay the true centre of all missionary effort. Eventually a resolution was submitted by the chairman, and proposed by Mr. John Cory, seconded by the Rev. F. Paynter, and unanimously carried, to the effect that it was desirable to form such an association, and it was decided that it should be called "The Missionary Association." A small committee was appointed to assist Mr. Fry in organizing the Association, and in devising means for carrying into effect the objects for which it was formed.

The Late Rev. John Spurgeon.

AFTER a long and useful career, Rev. John Spurgeon, the esteemed father of Charles Haddon and of James A. Spurgeon, passed to his rest on Saturday last, at the ripe age of ninety-one.

Originally intended by his father for the Congregational ministry, he at first chose a commercial life. While engaged in a shipping office at Colchester he took occasional services in the neighbouring villages, and was in great demand as a preacher for special services.

It was after the birth of his two sons, James and Charles Haddon, that Mr. Spurgeon retired from business and undertook the pastorate of the small Congregational Church at Tollesbury, in Essex. Here he remained for fourteen years, and at the age of fifty-three accepted an invitation to the church at Cranbrook, in Kent. The church was at that time in a struggling condition, but by his zeal, sociability, and evangelical preaching he soon won the heart of the villagers, and succeeded in building up a compact and thriving society. In this village he is still remembered as a faithful pastor and a preacher of more than average ability.

After these two country pastorates he removed to London. Fetter Lane Church was under his care 1868-73, and he was pastor at Islington 1873-77. Here his ministerial life ended, although for years after his retirement his services were readily placed at the disposal of the churches. During the last ten or twelve years his appearances on platform or pulpit were mostly in connection with meetings at the Stockwell Orphanage, founded by his famous son, an institution in which he took almost a fatherly interest. He survived his eldest son by three years and his second son by ten years.

Up to the last few months Mr. Spurgeon made frequent and welcome appearances in connection with religious work in the neighbourhood of his residence at South Norwood, S.E. On July 15, 1901, which was his ninety-first birthday, he laid the principal foundation-stone in connection with the enlargement of South Norwood Baptist Church. He was then remarkably hale and hearty, and made a long and fervent speech. Mr. Spurgeon had been suffering from decay attendant on old age, but the immediate cause of death was dropsy followed by heart failure.

American Notes.

PASSING through an Italian neighbourhood in Brooklyn, recently, I saw a very curious spectacle. A number of Italian men bearing large Italian and American flags were having what a polite chemist on the corner opposite the starting-point told me was "a religious parade." Between the brass band and about a dozen small children dressed in white and carrying immense candles, came four men carrying, on a kind of stretcher on their shoulders, a gaudily-painted image about five feet high, of the Archangel Michael, standing on the Dragon. Just before the image started to take its place in the parade, there was a great feu de joie of Chinese firecrackers in front of the idol, terminating with the explosion of a large cracker, such as is used in China to salute high officials. This part of the programme of the "religious parade" was identical with what I have often seen and heard (and smelt) in China in honour of idols. The mixture of Stars and Stripes, Popery, and Chinese "joss-pidgin" in a first-class American city in the twentieth century struck me as having an almost comic side to it, in spite of its inexpressible sadness.

The American Tract Society, at its annual meeting, elected President Roosevelt an honorary vice-president, in the room of the late President McKinley. Seventy-five new publications have been issued during the year, including 46 in English, 10 in German, 6 in Spanish, 6 in Polish, and 1 each in Italian, Dutch, Bohemian, Chinese, Dakota, Creek, and Zulu. Y.M.C.A. Notes.

A Y.M.C.A. was formed among the men of the eighth contingent, which recently left Brisbane for South Africa, for work during the voyage. The men demonstrated in a practical way what they thought of the services of the Brisbane Association, by voluntarily contributing a sum of £12 towards assisting in the expenses of the work done among them prior to their embarkation.

In spite of hindrances caused by want of space in the rooms, the Ealing Association has been steadily progressing, and the committee have seen with deep thankfulness evidences of increased spiritual activity and earnestness amongst the members. More commodious premises having become an absolute necessity, a freehold house has been secured in Uxbridge Road, W. The friends are seeking to raise £2,100 to meet the expenses of purchase and alterations.

The forty-sixth annual report of the West Metropolitan District Centre shows that the work carried on is of an unpretentious character. Besides the evangelistic services and weekly lectures in Stafford Rooms, there is a regular open-air Gospel propaganda in Hyde Park, which has been attended from time to time with remarkable results. The weekly gatherings at the Cripples' Home for Girls have brought blessing and brightness into many lives; while another useful branch of service is the Hospital Choir, which continues its Sunday morning visitation, to the delight of the patients of St. Mary's.

The half-yearly meetings of the National Council' which were held at Exeter Hall on Founder's Day, June 6, commemorated the 58th anniversary of the commencement of the Y.M.C.A., and marked also the important step of the incorporation of the Council. The Colonial visitors bore most gratifying testimony to the progress of Y.M.C.A. work, and the appreciation in which it is held in Canada, India, Australia, and South Africa. Councillor H. A. Oliver, C.M.G., Mayor of Kimberley during the siege, expressed devout thankfulness for the blessing of peace, and expressed the conviction that, in the immense developments which would now take place throughout the whole of South Africa, there was unexampled opportunity and scope for the beneficent work of the Young Men's Christian Association. The four hundred members of the Y.M.C.A. in Kimberley, he said, had placed themselves unreservedly at disposal for the defence of the town, and had shown themselves capable of any sacrifice in the interests of the Empire. Information was also given of invaluable service rendered by the Y.M.C.A. among the military contingents sent to South Africa from Canada and Australia, as well as among larger bodies of troops at Cape Town, Pietermaritzburg, Kimberley, Durban, and other important centres.

Evangelists at Work.

Tent Work in Sussex.

A FIFTEEN days' mission has been conducted at Hailsham, Sussex, by Mr. and Mrs. George H. Dymock. In spite of the inclemency of the weather, there were good attendances, the tent ing filled twice each Lord's Day, and the power of .e Gospel manifested. On the East Sussex New sylum Works, two miles from the tent, there are 800 ien employed, and here a gracious work of God has been going on. Mr. and Mrs. Dymock, assisted by local friends and other helpers, have conducted large gatherings for the men. Rapt attention was given to the evangelists, and a number of the men found their way to the tent for the purpose of confessing Christ as their Saviour.

The Evangelization Society.

It will be seen from the extracts appended that, from North to South, the tidings all point to the fact of real work done for time and eternity, and of much stimulus being given to the friends, or to the Churches, who have sought our help.

From a minister of the United Free Church of Scotland:—"Mr. —— left us last week, and I now write to say how much he has been appreciated by us all. . . . The attendances throughout the mission were good, and just the class we wished to see at the meetings were present. It has been a great privilege to listen to the clear exposition of the Word, and to the powerful preaching of the grand old Gospel; such can never fail to bear fruit, and with us Christians have been stirred, many brought under deep conviction, and, so far as man can say, some truly converted to Christ. The meetings were to close on Sabbath night, but there was such deep interest manifest in the meeting that we asked the Evangelist to remain a day or two longer."

From a clergyman of the Church of England:—"Our Sunday and closing meetings have been crowded, and the faithful preaching of God's Word must produce lasting blessing. We have had several missions in the past, but never has there been the same impression on the hearts and minds of my people produced as during the last fortnight."

From a Congregational minister:—"Having now concluded our three-weeks' campaign, we have pleasure in reporting that the meetings were very successful. Our services were well sustained, and we had a great many who professed faith in our Lord Jesus Christ. Our experience in evangelistic work is considerable, but the series of meetings just concluded has been the most successful in our history. The evangelist, with his wide experiences, gave, night after night, fresh presentations of the glorious Gospel of the Grace of God, and in his hands the old Book was seen to be the new Book, old as coming from the heart of the Eternal, and new as meeting the wants of the human spirit." John Wood.

The Simultaneous Mission, Melbourne.

Later particulars of the Simultaneous Mission at Melbourne confirm the news of deep interest and widespread influence. On some of the afternoons in several districts Bible readings were given, and daily at the Melbourne Town Hall Dr. Torrey and Mr. Geil delivered addresses to business people from 1 to 1.45 p.m., and Bible readings from 3 to 4 p.m. These gatherings were constantly crowded.

At the close of the fortnight's general mission, during which probably some few thousands of converts, young and old, were gathered in, the mission started on its later stage. It was concentrated in two places, the nightly meetings being held in the Exhibition Buildings, Carlton (closely adjoining Melbourne proper), and in the Melbourne Town Hall. These latter were still further extended. Meetings for business women only were held from noon to 12.45, and for business men only from 1 to 1.45 p.m. These gatherings were denominated by Mr. Geil "the double-barrelled service." Then there were Bible readings at 3 p.m., and these have been crowded again and again.

In spite of some drawbacks the gatherings may be said to have been magnificent in result, and many a one will look back on these days just passed with glad hearts, saying, "I was born there," "There I subscribed myself on the Lord's side." The after meetings were well attended, and hundreds were dealt with in the open hall. Probably there have been far more Christian workers in proportion to the general public than are usually found in such a movement; and the regret is that so many others, possibly non-Christians, were shut out from the gatherings. Many up-country brethren and Christian friends have been enjoying these great meetings, and will return home to testify of what they have heard and seen. On the other hand, there has been much indebtedness to some of the up-country preachers who conducted most efficiently and successfully some of the local services during the first fortnight. The singing was conducted by Mr. Alexander from America and Mr. Virgo from South Australia, who sang solos and duets, led choirs, and played instruments. That these daily meetings and nightly preachings have done a large amount of good one fact alone abundantly testifies—one Bible seller has sold far more Bibles in the first few months of this year than he has ever done in a similar period before.

Probably the good work will be carried on vigorously throughout the city and suburbs for some time yet, especially in the way of gathering together the converts and getting them into Christian training and work. Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander are already about to commence a mission at Warrnambool, while Mr. Geil and Mr. Virgo go shortly to Geelong, Ballarat and Bendigo, where they will be followed by Messrs. Torrey and Alexander. L.

Messrs. Williams and Maxwell in Edinburgh.

During the past fortnight Edinburgh has been favoured by the visit of two American evangelists, Messrs. Williams and Maxwell. They have taken part on several occasions in the large Gospel temperance meeting held every Saturday night in Carrubbers Close Mission, where their efforts produced marked impressions, and helped to gather a large body of Christian workers around them.

Ten days' mission services were held in the Stockbridge United Free Church, the minister, Rev. A. Keay, and his assistant, Mr. Harper, as well as such prominent laymen as Sheriff Guthrie (son of the late famous Dr. Guthrie), rallying round them with great heartiness. The services here were greatly appreciated. Christians were much stimulated, a remarkable interest was awakened among the young, and some striking conversions took place.

Subsequently the evangelists conducted a mission in the large hall of the Carrubbers Close Mission. All through last week these meetings were continued with ever-increasing interest and attendances. So signal has been the blessing that arrangements have been made to carry on the work for at least another week.

Along with the evening meetings, which have been very largely attended, visits have been made during the day at the dinner hour to some of the great public works in the city. For this purpose a large lorry was requisitioned, whereon accommodation was found for the evangelists, several of the workers, and a harmonium. By this means the employés of such great works as Messrs. T. Nelson & Sons, the North British Railway Works, the North British Rubber Works, and several of the great printing and engineering firms were reached. Great interest was manifested in all these gatherings, and marked appreciation as well as impression was evident on the part of the crowds of sober, hard-headed working people. Many who were seen to be smoking at the beginning of the service became so interested and touched that the pipes soon disappeared, and ere the close the solemnity was as marked as at a church service. The result of these happy gatherings has been the means of bringing to the evening meetings at Carrubbers Close Mission many of the working people who have thus been reached.

It is too soon to speak of positive, permanent results, but it is at the same time right to say that some striking cases of conversion have taken place, and that not since the visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey has a more hopeful feeling of anticipated revival permeated the hearts of the Christian workers of this city as at the present time. Mr. Williams is pastor of a Presbyterian congregation in Illinois, and is an evangelist who is attractive and powerful to all classes, while Mr. Maxwell is one of the most gifted singing evangelists we have had from America.

Several strangers passing through the city, English, American, and Canadian, have rendered effective help. Among these is Mr. G. E. Monkman, a Canadian evangelist, whose speaking and singing has been greatly blessed. G. A. B.

Rev. J. Tolefree Parr has just concluded a very fruitful nine-days' mission at Guildford Congregational Church. His Bible readings were much enjoyed, and his Gospel appeals stirred the hearts of many to decision for Christ.

Under the auspices of the Ross Bible Carriage and Tent Mission (Mr. John Coates, director), tent work is being carried on in Cambridgeshire and Bedfordshire villages by three evangelists, Messrs. Geo. Bentley, Wm. Bilton, and Albert Richings. "Large audiences assemble night after night, and much blessing has been given."

Rev. James Lyall writes from Wanganui, New Zealand, under date May 16:—"I have closed a two weeks' campaign here. Wanganui has a population of 78,000. The opera house, seating over a thousand people, has been filled twice on Sundays, and the Presbyterian Church on week nights. The mission was a united one. Nearly 100 names have been given in of those who have professed faith in our Lord Jesus Christ."

At the invitation of the Free Church Council, Rev. Jesse Mayo has conducted a ten-days' open-air mission at Bingley, Yorks, ending Tuesday, June 10. Interested crowds assembled, and many of the non-Church-going class heard the Gospel very earnestly and tellingly preached by Mr. Mayo. Many were manifestly impressed, and several came to decision for Christ. His visit was much appreciated by the workers, and has left happy memories. J. Henry Carter.

Requests for Prayer.

For tent missions at Wellingborough and Tugby, conducted by Mr. C. Noakes and Mr. F. Chapman (of the Evangelization Society).

For Mr. Herbert R. Francis, who has been laid aside through a severe chill.

Another Indian Famine.

INTELLIGENCE has reached us of the suffering in the famine regions near us. Our pastor has made a tour to those parts. He returned bringing twelve boys and girls with him, and said there were many to be gathered in. All night my rest was broken with thoughts of these suffering ones.

I am asking the Lord if he would have us undertake this third famine. There is no money in hand, but instead a debt on our buildings. How I wish we did not have to be harassed with the money matters. Would that all our strength could be reserved for nursing our needy ones back to life.

Each time our Father has started us out with only a little of our private money to begin on, and then He has sent us more. Will He not do the same this time? When the second famine came, I shrank back and said, "Lord I am so tired, I can't go through it again." But God gave the needed strength and a greater work was done than in the first famine. Now again the suffering ones are calling. My flesh cries out "Lord, how can I?" But thanks be to Him—though I can't, He can. He will give the strength, spiritual and physical, and He will send the means.

Aligarh. (Mrs.) J. C. Lawson.

[Under these circumstances funds, and food, blankets, and cloths of all kinds to be made up for clothing are very urgently needed. Also funds for shelters. Rev. J. C. Lawson is now in London, and will be in England until August 1. He will be glad to give lectures with lantern slides on India, its Missions, Famines, and Industrial Work. He may be addressed at this office.—Ed.]

About Books.

TWO BIOGRAPHIES.

PROMINENT among the memorials of Christian men who have fallen in the South African War must be placed those of Charles Dixon Kimber, which have been made public by the loving sisterly hand of Mrs. Radford Thomson. (5s. Nisbet.) Awakened under the ministry of Canon Hay Aitken, this bright young life early showed the graces of a strong Christian character. The last entry in the diary seems to have been made early in the morning of July 16, 1901. When going to the succour of a sergeant, he was struck by a bullet. The man said, "This is hard on you, sir;" and with the words, "What could be better?" the young officer went home. A true soldier alike in the British Army and of the Lord Jesus Christ, Lieutenant Kimber's life will be to every reader a help in the spiritual life. All the proceeds (without deduction even for publication or production) are to go for the erection of a soldiers' home in connection with the South Africa General Mission.

Among modern biographies we should give a worthy place to William Garden Blaikie: An Autobiography, edited with an introduction by Norman L. Walker, D.D. (6s. Hodder & Stoughton). Dr. Blaikie was widely loved as a man and a minister, while as a writer on many topics and a professor in New College, Edinburgh, he exerted an important influence, for which he was held in high esteem. These pages give us glimpses of the life and times of a singularly useful man: we have the servant of Christ showing himself to be such in the Church and the world; also the Christian minister who with great ability served the ecclesiastical organization to which he belonged, and was ready to co-operate with believers of all orders and degrees. The outline of pre-Disruption times is very welcome, and the same may be said of Dr. Blaikie's academic associations and literary labours and friendships. The chapters on travel are instructive and diverting. The last pages are devoted to an account of Mrs. Blaikie's Orphan and Emigration Home (inspired by a sight of Miss Macpherson's work in East London), and to Mr. Moody's life-work, in which Dr. Blaikie showed a large-hearted interest. We have read this volume with great pleasure, and as a result we thank God more and more for the gift which He gave to the Church at large in the person of its beloved subject and author.

A welcome souvenir will be Miss Eleanor Bulley's Alexandra, Queen and Empress, in neat 48mo, with vellum cover and excellent illustrations. A fit companion is The Coronation Autograph Book, in art linen, with Charles Robinson's quaint designs on every page, leaving spaces for writing. These are in the "Midget" series. (1s. each. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.)

Light from Old Times; or, Protestant Facts and Men, is a remarkably interesting volume by the late Bishop Ryle. It tells the story of the Reformers with much vigour and thorough sympathy. Mr. C. J. Thynne has brought out an illustrated Coronation edition. (2s. 6d.) Dr. Ryle had the heart of a Puritan, so he included in his volume admirable sketches of Samuel Ward, Richard Baxter, and William Gurnall. This is a book for the times, and we should be glad to hear of its extended circulation.

The "Baptist Pulpit" series is growing apace. Volumes XXI. to XXIII. are before us—Christian Verities, by Rev. S. G. Woodrow, of Aberdeen; "Thou Remainest," by Rev. Archibald G. Brown, of London; and My Gospel, by Rev. Thomas Spurgeon, of the Metropolitan Tabernacle. (2s. 6d. each nett. A. H. Stockwell.) These are among the best books in the series. They are thoughtful and vigorous. Those who appreciate experimental teaching, simply delivered, would welcome more such sermons as those given us by Pastors Brown and Spurgeon.

The Holy City, Athens, and Egypt. Founded on Personal Observation and the Researches of Modern Explorers. By Sir William T. Charley, Knight, K.C. (10s. 6d. Marshall Brothers.) This handsomely illustrated book combines the charm of romance with high educational aims and purposes. The author knows how to entertain; and he is equally at home in the work of instruction. In the form of a story "founded on fact," Sir William Charley gives us the fruits of shrewd observation during travel on sea and land, and in a manner at once deft and welcome (with frequent footnotes) he presents many of the results of modern exploration. The volume bears eloquent testimony to the value and interest of educational travel, and is calculated to suggest to many home-staying folk the desirability of visiting the Morning Lands of History.

The Churches.

* The Editor will be glad to receive "post-card" notes for this page, of* SPIRITUAL PROGRESS AND EFFORT in the Churches. They must be prompt, reliable, and NOT TRIVIALITIES; and be accompanied by sender's name and address.

Church of England.

The rectory of St. Peter-le-Bailey, Oxford, has been conferred by the patrons, the trustees, on Rev. F. J. Dyson, rector of Bishop's Caundle, Sherborne.

The Secretary of State for War has appointed Rev. W. D. Keith-Steele, senior curate of Bradford Parish Church, to be acting chaplain to the colonial forces now encamped at Alexandra Palace for the Coronation.

The Archbishop of Canterbury has been very unwell since his return to Lambeth, and the meeting of his Diocesan Conference has been postponed until November. If the Primate is unable to officiate at the Coronation, his place is to be taken by the Archbishop of York, who, in that case, would crown both the King and the Queen.

It is announced by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners that they have not made arrangements for the sale of Hartlebury Castle. They have, however, informed the Bishop of Worcester that, provided a suitable residence can be obtained, or means can be found for erecting such a residence, they are not unwilling to approve of the sale of Hartlebury Castle.

Under the will of the late Mr. George McMinnes, of Brixton, one-sixth share of his residuary estate, amounting to between £6,000 and £10,000, has been left to the Building Fund of Christ Church, Brixton. The bequest is in recognition of the Evangelical and Protestant work of the vicar, Rev. W. R. Mowll, M.A., who will now be able to complete and shortly open his new church free of debt.

In the course of a discussion at Blackpool on Lord's Day observance, the rural dean (Rev. N. Jeffreys) said that Blackpool is becoming more and more a Sabbath-breaking place. Places of amusement are open on the Sunday, and there are Sunday concerts. Reverence for holy things is diminishing, and it is in consequence of a love of pleasure on the one hand and a worship of Mammon on the other.

Rev. E. J. Kennedy, vicar of St. John's, Boscombe, records with thankfulness in his parish magazine that the total parochial receipts for the year ending Easter, 1902, amounted to £7,450 17s. "I am more and more struck," he says, "with the great distributing powers conferred upon this parish, so that far and wide we are able to assist various societies in fulfilling the purposes of their institution."

At the request of the War Office the Church Army is sending out two more of its trained evangelists to assist the military chaplains in work among the sick and wounded who remain to remind us of the recent war. Nine of the Society's officers have already served in this way at the front, their work being highly commended by the authorities. The Chaplain General recently remarked that he hoped to derive much assistance from the Church Army's staff of trained and experienced laymen.

Situated in the midst of a poor and crowded neighbourhood, St. David's Church, Westbourne Road, St. James' Road, Holloway, under the care of its new vicar, Rev. J. M. Laycock, is maintaining its character for earnest Gospel Protestantism, in the cause of which it was founded by Rev. James Ormiston, now at Bristol. The service is united and hearty, and the preaching faithful and impressive. Various improvements to the building are necessary, but, owing to the parish being a poor one, only current expenses can be met.

Congregational.

Dr. Caleb Scott's condition having now materially improved, no further bulletins are being received by the Secretary of the Congregational Union from Miss Scott.

At the City Temple, on Sunday last, the pulpit was occupied by Rev. Arthur Mursell, who, during the morning service, announced that on Friday Dr. Parker had received injunctions from his physician to take a little further rest.

Rev. Henry Varley, B.A., who last September resigned the pastorate of Horton Lane Church, Bradford, has accepted a cordial and unanimous invitation to become the first minister of the newly-formed church at Bowes Park, London, N.

The forty-third anniversary of Avenue Church, Erith, now under the pastoral care of Rev. H. Rosier, has been celebrated. The secretary's report bears good testimony to the united effort of pastor and people. The congregations have become very large, and all the various branches of work are satisfactory.

Southernhay Church, Exeter, has recently, by a large majority, resolved to abolish the pew-rent system, and has substituted, instead, a system of weekly offerings on the self-assessment plan. The main idea of the new proposal has been that every worshipper shall become a subscriber to the church funds, and in return for such financial help shall be allotted a sitting. It is anticipated that the income of the church will be considerably increased under the new system.

In Raleigh Memorial Church, Stoke Newington, Rev. John Johnston enforced the suggestion made in these columns last week of a call to earnest prayer on behalf of the King, by consideration of the immense influence the Sovereign must have in relation to the great national sins of intemperance and gambling. This subject ought surely, in the highest interests of the Empire, to have a far more prominent place in our prayers at all times than it has had hitherto in any of the churches.

Some time ago a John Robinson Memorial Church was erected at Gainsborough by a joint committee representing England and the States, the foundation-stone being laid by the Hon. T. F. Bayard, the then United States Ambassador in this country. Tercentenary celebrations of the formation of the church have been held. A sermon was preached by Rev. Dr. Fairbairn, of Mansfield College, while Rev. Dr. Scott, representing the National Congregational Council of the United States, brought a gift which practically liquidated the debt.

Baptist.

The annual meeting of Woolwich Tabernacle (Pastor John Wilson), held recently, was largely attended. The secretary, Mr. C Newson, read the report, which showed that the debt has been reduced by £200, and £500 promised to the Twentieth Century Fund, £406 of which has been raised; the income being altogether considerably over £2,000. The membership has increased to 1,550, with 1,700 children in the home and mission school.

Services were held on June 8 and 9 at the Lighthouse Church, Bow Common, E., in celebration of the first anniversary of the pastorate of Rev. J. Menzies Love. The pastor preached on Sunday morning, and Mr. Joseph Benson, L.C.C., in the evening. A tea and public meeting took place the day following, Mr. E. A. Jennings presiding. Mr. D. Vaughan, secretary, reported favourably of all branches of the work, and stated that forty-one persons have been added to the church roll during the year, and thirty-one baptized.

The Southern Association of Baptist Churches held the annual meetings this year at Brown Street Chapel, Salisbury (Rev. A. J. Edwards). There was a large attendance. Besides the delegates, there were present thirty-seven pastors, four retired ministers, two missionaries, and seven colporteurs. The Moderator, Rev. W. Venis Robinson, B.A., gave a timely and important presidential address on the subject, "Stand Fast." Interesting, stirring, and important papers, speeches, and criticisms were given on a variety of topics touching Christian work in Church and school.

Pastor Thomas Spurgeon presided over the annual meeting of the Baptist Pioneer Mission just held at the Metropolitan Tabernacle. The object of the Mission, as explained by the founder and hon. director (Rev. E. A. Carter), is the establishing of Baptist Churches in large and growing centres of population, and the helping of weaker causes which would otherwise be compelled to discontinue their work. The Mission has been successful, Mr. Carter stated, both in England and Scotland, and has also just been the means of starting two churches in France. The chairman, and Revs. Principal A. McCaig, E. H. Ellis (East London Tabernacle), and others delivered congratulatory addresses.

Methodist.

Memorial stones of a Wesleyan church and schools in Bramford Road, Ipswich, to serve in place of a small mission hall, have been laid under most encouraging circumstances. The cost of the scheme is at least £3,600, and accommodation will be provided for about 400 persons, and in the schools for 350 children.

Dedicatory services in connection with the new Wesleyan church and school at Walkhampton, in the Tavistock Circuit, were held lately. A large company assembled for the opening ceremony, which was conducted by Rev. C. Holman. The new building, which has been placed on an excellent site, is quite an ornament to the village. It provides seating accommodation for 143 worshippers.

The Wesleyan Chapel Committee, at their monthly meeting, considered thirty-three proposals for the erection of new chapels, twenty of which are to be built in localities where hitherto Wesleyan Methodism has been practically unrepresented. These new structures, when complete, will provide sitting accommodation for between 10,000 and 11,000 worshippers. The estimated outlay is about £72,000.

Presbyterian.

The Presbytery of Liverpool was well represented at the meeting recently called to induct Rev. J. Stephens Roose, M.A., to the pastorate of Upton Church. A fair number of members, adherents and friends from the neighbourhood and outlying districts also foregathered at the quaint little country-side church. Situated within easy reach of the great cities of Liverpool and Birkenhead, Upton promises, in the near future, to become a very favourite residential district, and the new church an attractive feature.

At Heaton, Newcastle-on-Tyne, services in commemoration of the sixth anniversary of the opening of the church buildings were conducted on the 8th inst. by Rev. John Smith, D.D., of Broughton Place U.F. Church, Edinburgh. The forenoon service was very largely attended considering the inclemency of the weather, and in the evening the church was crowded to its utmost capacity. The sermons were received with keen attention and enjoyment. The offertories were larger than ever previously received in connection with anniversary services.

Fallen Asleep.

At Sheffield, aged seventy-one, Rev. Dr. T. D. CROTHERS, one of the best-known Methodist New Connexion ministers in the county. In 1886 he was appointed Principal of Ranmoor Training College, and held that office twelve years. He was president of the Conference in 1884.—At Scarborough, Rev. EDWARD SMITH, who commenced in 1885 the London Central Wesleyan Mission.—Mr. JOHN WILLIS, a highly-esteemed elder of the Presbyterian Church at Marylebone.—On June 7, in her sixty-sixth year, AGNES OSWALD, the wife of Rev. J. Oswald Dykes, D.D., Principal of Westminster College, Cambridge.

Notes & Comments

The Coronation. To-day the English people are absorbed with one sole topic of conversation—the Coronation. For most of us a Coronation has not yet taken place in our lifetime, and there is naturally on this account a greater interest in the present august function. To the man in the street it is simply a spectacle of unparalleled splendour; to serious and thoughtful people it will assuredly mean much more than this. It is an exceedingly great responsibility for any man to rule over such an empire as ours, and it is well that the King should be reminded, by means of the religious ceremony, of those things which a purely State function has no means of expressing. We can wish no higher good for the King, who to-day will be crowned, than that he shall always experience the double felicity of being a loyal subject of his King, and of so leading his people that he shall leave behind him the memory of one who was a true Father of the Country.

Day in the Country. The long-continued cold and wet weather has placed a special strain on the health of all, and this state of affairs is accentuated in the case of the dwellers in city courts and slums, for whom there is so little brightness in life. To those surrounded by fresh, pure air, the summer is a season of reinvigoration and upbuilding, and it is well that they should be reminded of the many who enjoy no such privilege. The importance of the "Day in the Country," and other similar efforts cannot be overestimated. Many appeals are reaching us, and every week is precious. Will our readers enable us, as in former years, to continue this much-needed benefaction?

The Life of Elijah. In our next and following issues, Rev. F. S. Webster will resume his studies in the life of Elijah. His former papers upon Elisha, and the early portion of Elijah's career, were appreciated by many for their practical usefulness; and we confidently bespeak for the new series the interested perusal of our readers.

The Education Bill. The more we consider the provisions of this Bill, the deeper grows our conviction that it is utterly retrogressive as to education, and Romanizing as to religion; that it will play into the hands of the Ritualistic party in the Church, and thus prepare our children for Rome. The Romanizing section in the Church is rapidly increasing, and nothing is more surprising than that the people of God in the Establishment—Protestant, Evangelical, and Evangelistic—do not all join hands with their Nonconformist brethren in prayer and effort to oppose this subtle and disastrous movement. It will tend to swamp Evangelical Christianity in England, and add to the already strong temptation and tendency of the sons of Evangelicals to travel Romeward. As a Churchman recently said:—"We want less Church-ianity, and more Christ-ianity."

The Roman Road. Viscount Halifax certainly has the courage of his convictions, and, unlike the large majority of the Ritualists, does not hesitate to state clearly the objects of the movement of which he is the accredited leader. Speaking at the forty-third anniversary meeting of the English Church Union last week, he said, after referring to "the Anglican tradition, if there was anything that could be called a tradition at all on the subject" to make the Lord's Supper an occasional and exceptional service:—

> We are bound, if we would do our duty as loyal English Churchmen, to put the Mass back into its proper place as the one service of obligation on Sundays and Saints' days, not to forego its celebration because there should happen to be none to communicate with the Priest. . . . There have been indications that some in authority, who seem incapable of learning from the past, and indifferent to the real shortcomings of the Church of England, have been trying to forbid the daily Mass, so happily revived amongst us, unless there should always be some to communicate with the priest. We all desire to see frequent communion, but the laity, who have learnt the happiness and help of attending Mass morning by morning, are not going to be deprived of that privilege because they are not able to communicate on every occasion.

Undoubtedly this is what Viscount Halifax terms "the Mass in the full plenitude of its powers."

The Things that are Cæsar's. Now that English and other pilgrims to Rome are "demanding" the restitution to the Pope of the temporal power, it is interesting to find in the current number of Blackwood's Magazine an article from the pen of a writer who is familiar with the Rome of the Papal Administration. The account is a vivid and striking one:—Filthy, narrow side streets, with all the dirt swept into them, huge dustheaps everywhere, the robberies and murders of Englishmen, the nameless other enormities, a Rome "with ten times more worldliness in it than religion." In this latter respect Rome may not have changed greatly, save for the development of the Protestant faith, but how much it has gained in a hundred other ways from the sweeping away of the Papal misgovernment is well known to the readers of Edmond About's scathing sketch of the corrupt system under the domination of Antonelli, when, indeed, the Papal States were a sink of iniquity, moral and political.

Another Revolt. The Sunday Magazine draws attention to a singular step taken by a number of Romanists in England who seem to be restless under the rule of the Pope and the Curia. The writer says:—

> A curious petition has been presented to Parliament by Roman Catholics, praying that all Ecclesiastical Roman Catholic property, secular and religious, in this country—the amount is about fifty millions sterling—shall be placed under the control of Ecclesiastical Commissioners chosen from the Roman Catholic clergy and laity. The petitioners complain that the claim of the Pope and his "sacred congregation" of an Altum Dominium over all Roman Catholic Ecclesiastical property in the kingdom has to be admitted, although they know it is dangerous to the country, and they point out that the rendering of accounts to Rome only, must give stupendous power to the Roman Curia over English temporalities.

In view of the recent "demand" made by the English Roman Catholic pilgrims in Rome for the restitution of the Pope's temporal power, this action on the part of their home-staying brethren seems somewhat remarkable, especially as we are so frequently assured that there is no disunion in the ranks of the Romanists.

Unto the Fourth Generation. Some striking and almost awful things were spoken at a recent lecture on Heredity at the Royal Institution. The unfortunate thing is that the very people who most need such instruction are never likely to hear such lectures. It would be infinitely to their advantage if, by some means, they could be compelled to face the terrible problem of heredity, as stated by competent teachers. The heredity of crime, it appears, extends far beyond the third and fourth generation, both in the family and in the nation, and when both parents belong to the criminal class, the child born of them suffers from an atrophied conscience from the commencement of life. We doubt if there has been a sufficiently strong testimony borne by teachers as to the undoubted effects of heredity. Youths and maidens are allowed to plunge into the responsibilities of parentage without any investigation into ancestry and the possible consequences of their union. Yet we strongly demur to the one-sided and brutal presentation of the truth of heredity as given by atheists and confirmed pessimists. The persons who alone are competent to teach the whole truth about the matter, are those who know the Divine remedy as well as the disease.

Leading the Way. The London County Council certainly recognizes the evils of the drink traffic, and, in addition to the reduction of the number of licensed premises, is in many ways endeavouring to lessen the temptation of intemperance in the Metropolis. Alcohol has now been banished from the eight asylums under their control, coroner's inquests are no longer held in public houses, intoxicating drinks are not now sold in the Council's open spaces, and good music and cheap refreshments have been substituted, and "itinerant canteens" have been provided for the use of the firemen when engaged at fires. All this points to a large amount of valuable work which will be fruitful in beneficial results to the people. It will also manifestly strengthen the hands of temperance reformers, and afford an example to the councils in the provincial centres.

France and Alcoholism. It is a matter for great gratitude that France possesses so many brave medical men who are warring to the death with the "murderous liquids" which are working such frightful havoc amongst the population. Dr. Vaillant has at least moved the Chamber to a resolution; the deputies admit the truth of his indictment, and the only argument urged against it is that if serious steps were taken, "one of the most fruitful sources of taxation would be destroyed." We in this country know something of a similar argument. Dr. Grisel, writing in a Parisian paper, puts the case before his countrymen in words which are as much needed here as in France. He says:—

> Suppose the State were . . . solely concerned with considerations of the budget, the time has arrived when we must ask ourselves whether it would not be better to renounce the revenue resulting from the sale of these alcoholic drinks than to see the profits go to the construction of asylums, of hospitals for drink diseases, and of prisons for the criminals that they create. Add to this a diminution of the birth-rate, an increased infant mortality, an augumentation of the number of idiots and cripples and wrecks of the race.

Profit and loss is the only argument that weighs with many. Even from this point of view the present liberty to drink oneself to criminality, lunacy, and pauperism is the liberty of fools.

The Price of Turkish Misrule.

The English consul at Bitlis, whose annual report has just been published, draws a dismal picture of the condition of Western Asia. The only change, he declares, that has taken place in his district is a change for the worse. The people are in a state of abject poverty, possessing only the barest necessities of life. All the reforms promised by the Sultan—that past master in the art of making "pie-crust" promises—remain, of course, in their original vaporous stage, and there is not the remotest prospect that any alleviation of the people's hardship will take place. The much-vaunted highway from Diarbekir to Alexandretta is collapsing as fast as it is being constructed, which is not surprising when it is remembered that only nine miles have been made during fourteen years. All industry is crippled, and the spirit of the people is crushed. The blight of Yildiz Kiosk rests upon all the province, and it will continue to rest there until Europe has the courage and the humanity to make the Sultan move for the people's good, or to make the Sultan himself move out once and for all.

Cruelty and Decadence.

The Madrid correspondent of the Daily Chronicle contributes to that journal an article on the Spanish bull-fight, and its relation to the national character. It is worthy of study for several reasons, the chief one being the connection that is clearly traced between the spirit which enjoys cruel spectacles and the loss of moral force which betrays itself in inability to keep pace with the demands of life. Bull-fighting, it is pointed out, is only one form of the cruelty which is common in many parts of Spain. The writer remarks :—

> Sights may be seen in the streets of Madrid which, while they pass unnoticed there, make the blood of a man of a more civilized race fairly boil. . . .

Donkeys pricked cruelly in the tenderest spots, "indescribable cruelties upon dogs," great numbers of maimed and crippled dogs, tortures upon cats, birds whose heads are perforated with pins—such are the things photographed in the Chronicle. The writer may well conclude that this wholesale cruelty and national decadence are related as cause and effect. All this is not to be wondered at when it is remembered that Spain invented the Inquisition—and, to-day, a league exists for its revival. Unable to torment men, they seem to have turned attention to beasts. It is a fine comment upon a country dominated by priests.

The Labourer's Hire.

The Archdeacon of Middlesex draws a very unhappy picture of the condition of a large proportion of the unbeneficed and other clergy. He says that there are to-day 7,500 livings under £180 a year, and that although the population is increasing 350,000 a year, hundreds less are being ordained. There are, he adds, 7,500 curates, more than 1,400 of whom have been ordained over fifteen years, and who receive an average stipend of only £118 per annum.

The National Outlook.

AMID the universal rejoicings of the present week, there is no loyal heart that will not join heartily in the pæan of praise for the blessings enjoyed in this our favoured land. "Blessed is that nation whose God is the Lord," and there are manifold evidences that God has blessed us in special measure above the nations of the earth. Among many others the following are

GROUNDS FOR EARNEST THANKSGIVING :

I. Our Freedom to Worship God.—This must necessarily appeal first and foremost to the Christian heart. A glance over the pages of history reveals a glad contrast to the sorry conditions of by-gone days, when the Bible was a forbidden book, when fidelity to faith meant trial by fire and sword, or torture by the rack, and a martyr's grave. These, thank God, are horrors of a dismal past, and now we stand untrammelled in the sunshine of a brighter day.

II. A Righteous Government.—The oppressive laws under which former generations have groaned are happily unknown in our midst. The march of the nations, and their advance in civilized thought, have secured to us immunity from the tyranny of cruel and unprincipled men. Our rulers rule in righteousness, at least so far as human justice is concerned ; and as a people we pursue our calling and follow our destiny, none daring to make us afraid.

III. An Honest Administration. — Not only are our laws equitable and just, but their administration is free from the bribery and corruption by which, even in modern times, some other nations are cursed. Our judges are men of probity and honour, who fearlessly do their duty in dispensing impartial justice to all. When we consider the appalling results that would otherwise ensue, we may well rejoice in this our grateful heritage.

IV. The Purity of the Court.—Here again history comes to our aid in reminding us of former times. The reformation in this respect brought about by our late beloved Queen has been an inestimable boon. Long may her strenuous and determined policy shed its beneficent influence upon our Court and country !

V. The Royal Interest in the People.—Seldom has this been equalled ; certainly it has never been surpassed. The heart of our Royal Family beats in unison with that of the people, be it in sorrow or joy, in disaster or success.

Surely in these characteristics of the times in which we live, we have unexampled cause for praise. "It is meet that we make merry and be glad" ; but let our joy ascend above and beyond all human instrumentality to the Lord and Giver of all ; and our song be to the Most High who ruleth in the kingdom of men.

Yet in view of the inspired dictum that "Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people," we cannot close our eyes to certain grave aspects of the national outlook. There are lying at our doors, with which our Legislature seems to have little time, and even less inclination, to deal.

The dwellings in which the poor live ; the shocking surroundings in which their children are dragged up ; the cursed Juggernaut of drink, that crushes thousands beneath its wheels ; the suicidal mania for betting and gambling ; the degrading literature and amusements in which our people delight ; the systematic neglect of Divine worship and Family Prayer ; the widespread disregard of the Lord's Day ; the growing indifference to the claims of God at home, as well as by our fellow-countrymen abroad—these are the foes we most may dread. They are not "political" questions ; they belong to every party, to every family, to every man.

As we look out upon the condition of the nation, we may well pause in the hour of our rejoicing, to ask the question : "Are we, as a people, drifting to glory or dishonour?" In so far as we recognise the God of heaven, not by mere formal worship, but in spirit and in truth, we shall become prosperous ; if, on the other hand, we despise Him in the heart or in the home, there will be a downward pull by which we shall forfeit our proud position before the world.

There is no more instructive chapter in the Word of God, as applicable to the Britain of modern times, than the message delivered to Tyre, the mistress of the seas, in Ezek. xxvii., xxviii. Seated at the head of the nations, enriched by their contributions in money and in kind, supreme in her commerce, and universal in her power—upon her this solemn verdict was pronounced :

> All thy company in the midst of thee shall fall ;
> The merchants among the peoples shall hiss at thee.
> Thou shalt be a terror, and never shalt be any more.
> Thus saith the Lord God, Because thine heart is lifted up, and thou hast said, I am a god, and sit in the seat of God in the midst of the seas ; though thou set thine heart as the heart of God . . .
> Behold, I will bring strangers upon thee, the terrible of the nations ;
> And they shall draw their swords against the beauty of thy wisdom, and they shall defile thy brightness.
> They shall bring thee down to the pit . . .
> Thou shalt die the deaths of the uncircumcised by the hands of strangers.
> For I have spoken it, saith the Lord God.

In every detail this has been fulfilled. Nought but the savour of Christianity has saved our own favoured nation up to now ; but as surely as our national heart is lifted up, and our ear grows deaf to the voice of God, so surely shall we degenerate, until the fate of Tyre be also ours. Men have shouted, "Rule Britannia !" and "God Save the King !" until their faces have grown purple, and their vocal chords hoarse ; yet what profit to gain victories over other peoples, while our own men and women in the prime of life are done to death in a public street, or scattered in pieces in a Lambeth alley ? The remedy is not in increased police protection, but in the spread of earnest and personal Christianity.

Here is the life-work of the people of God, to let the holy influence of our Christian faith permeate the corruption in our midst ; to let our light so shine before men that they may see our good works, and glorify our Father which is in heaven. Thus alone can we eliminate the hooliganism or the shoddy patriotism of the day, and help forward the blessed Imperialism of the Kingdom of God.

Well may we heed the warning note of Kipling's "Recessional" :—

> God of our fathers known of old—
> Lord of our far-flung battle-line,
> Beneath whose awful hand we hold
> Dominion over palm and pine—
> Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet
> Lest we forget—lest we forget !
>
> Far-called our navies melt away—
> On dune and headland sinks the fire,
> Lo, all our pomp of yesterday
> Is one with Nineveh, and Tyre.
> Judge of the Nations, spare us yet
> Lest we forget—lest we forget !
> If, drunk with sight of power, we loose
> Wild tongues that have not Thee in awe—
> Such boasting as the Gentiles use,
> Or lesser breeds without the Law—
> Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet
> Lest we forget—lest we forget !

Coronation Poems.

God Save Our Gracious King.

"God save our gracious King!"
A thousand peoples sing,
Hear, Lord, we pray;
All gifts of noble race,
All high and kingly grace,
In his exalted place,
Crown him to-day!

God bless our Queen as well!
Let world-wide praises tell
The love we mean;
Be hers a stainless crown,
Like that of pure renown,
Low at thy feet laid down—
God save our Queen!

God bless our native land!
Should foes our right withstand,
Take Thou the helm!
Forgive our sin and shame,
Check each ignoble aim,
In deed and truth and name,
God save our realm!

Lord of all thrones and powers,
For this vast world of ours,
To Thee we call;
Be every shore and sea
In league with love and Thee,
Brave, righteous, strong, and free.
God save us all!

Mary Rowles Jarvis.

The Shamrock to the Rose.

From the far sea-coasts of Erin,
From her glens and mountains green,
Bursts the Coronation greeting
To our gracious King and Queen.
O ye west winds of the summer,
Waft the fragrance as we pray,
From the Shamrocks to the Roses,
On this joyous Crowning Day.

We love the rule of Britain—
Her gentleness, her might;
Breaking every tyrant fetter,
Giving each man equal right;
Equal right to climb to fortune,
To obey or to command;
Equal right to climb to heaven,
With his Bible in his hand.

May this crowning hour, auspicious
With the peace-flag now unfurled,
Prove prophetic of the future
To our empire round the world.
Dear old England, may thy glory
To no dizzy height elate;
Ever hold your ancient motto—
"To be good is to be great!"

On corruption's rocks have perished
Other nations great as we;
On the shores of Time their relics
Lie as wreckage from the sea.
Yet the kingdom or the monarch
That to truth and justice clings
Is exalted over nations
By the King above all kings.

Now, while empires vast assemble—
All the world from zone to zone—
To instal the choice of Britain
On the earth's great Christian throne,
Even, with the shout of millions
At the Coronation scene,
Take a blessing from old Ireland—
O God! save our King and Queen!

Donegal. J. K.

The Christian's Prayer for King and Queen.

O God, through whom all monarchs reign,
And kings and queens their sceptres sway,
Our King in health and strength maintain,
And bless his "Coronation Day."

To King and Queen thy blessing give;
May both on Thee their burdens lay,
And in thy fear long may they live
Beyond their "Coronation Day."

May thy great love their lives possess,
Shine on them from above, we pray—
Thy joys their truest happiness
On this their "Coronation Day."

May all who form this vast empire
True loyalty to King display.
So grant their Majesties' desire
On this their "Coronation Day!"

And when the dazzling scene is past,
And all earth's splendour dies away,
May King and Queen both share at last
In Heaven's "Coronation Day!"

Henry R. Davis.

My King.

Thou art my King, Lord Jesus! Thou, the glorious,
The Mighty, the Eternal son of God;
Thou art my King! Thy Kingdom is victorious,
Changeless and everlasting, vast and broad;
And I, by grace brought into it, may sing,
Rejoicing ever, "Lord, Thou art my King!"

Edith C. Cherry.

The Crowning of the King.

"We see Jesus" (Heb. ii. 9).
"Wearing the Crown of Thorns" (John xix. 5).
"On his head . . . many Crowns" (Rev. xix. 12).

Lift up your heads, ye golden gates!
The Son of God comes out to reign.
While countless hosts of heaven prepare
(Rev. xix. 14).
To follow in his glorious train;
He comes with Victory's flag unfurl'd
To take the kingdoms of the world.

Upon his head are many crowns,
Each bathed in light beyond compare;
Conspicuous by its absence, one—
And one alone—is missing there.
Yet oh! what peerless grace adorns
Love's foremost crown—the Crown of Thorns.

No cruel thorns shall e'er again
Press bleeding drops from that meek brow,
Each anguished trace of grief and pain
Is swallowed up in victory now;
But still how dear that conquering morn,
The mem'ry of the Crown of Thorn!

It was for thee, his much-loved saint
(Treasure his heart can ne'er forget)
Man's hatred wove the curse of God
(Gen. iii. 17, 18).
Which Love with priceless blood-drops set;
Yea, matchless Love met depths of scorn,
The seal of both—that Crown of Thorn.

He loved thee well who wore that crown,
That He might give a crown to thee:
A crown of glory, life, and joy,
To wear throughout eternity;
Yet never would its rays adorn
Thy brow but for his Crown of Thorn.

The suffering and the shame are o'er,
We see Him crowned with glory now;
Proclaimed in heaven the Lord of all,
With many crowns upon his brow;
Yet—though in wondrous radiance worn—
Outshines them all, that Crown of Thorn.

But why so peerless, then, that Crown?
Ye saint of Jesus, answer why—
'Twas seal of love beyond compare
That brought the Son of God to die.
He saw thee lost, accursed, forlorn,
And bowed to wear that Crown of Thorn.

Thou glorious Lover, Bridegroom, Friend,
I long to see Thee as Thou art!
That brow, enshrined in dazzling light,
Once pierced for me with Hatred's dart:
Those eyes, obedient on that Morn,
Yet wept beneath the Crown of Thorn.

The royal diadems that day
Will fix our rapt adoring gaze,
Sweet love-light from thy glorious face
Wake ceaseless songs of rapturous praise;
But—deep in each fond memory borne
Will ever lie—the Crown of Thorn.

Light in Darkness.—For forty-six years the Home Teaching Society for the Blind has carried on a pathetic and much-needed ministry. It has provided the poor adult blind of London gratuitously, with books on loan in Moon's type, and for the last seven years in Braille type also. The Society maintains fourteen blind teachers, each having a lending library in his charge, containing from 400 to 500 embossed books. During last year no fewer than 1,830 persons were under visitation. It is gratifying to know that the work of the teachers is not confined to mere instruction in reading and writing. They act as Scripture-readers to the aged and to those whose hands are too hard to master an embossed type, and many of their fellow-sufferers by their ministrations have been brought to a saving knowledge of the love of Christ. This old and well-proved Society seems to have at its disposal all that is needed for providing the blind of London with good literature, except adequate funds. The secretary is Miss E. Bainbrigge, 53, Victoria Street, Westminster, S.W.

Children of our Father.

By Rev. T. L. CUYLER, D.D.

THE peace, the purity, and the power of every child of God depend very much upon his or her living very nigh to our heavenly Father. It is well for us not only to sing "Nearer, my God, to Thee;" but also to pray—"Nearer, O God, to me!" We are too apt to think of Him as dwelling at an infinite distance from us—as a Father up in heaven, and not as a Father close by us. His actual nearness should be both a solemn caution and a sweet comfort. Not a thought in our inmost heart is concealed from Him; not a secret sin we commit that is not as visible to his all-searching eye as the noonday sun. This ought to have a prodigious, restraining power upon us.

What a comfort it is that God is so close to us, that He is always within speaking distance! A Christian's prayer is not a message despatched to a far-away throne; it is his intimate converse with one near at hand. Childlike faith reverently and lovingly talks with God, breathes confession of sin into his open ear, tells Him its secrets, and unbosoms to Him its soul. In perplexity and trouble we want a helper near at hand.

Abraham Lincoln once said, "I have been driven many times to my knees by the overwhelming conviction that I had nowhere else to go. My own wisdom and that of all about me seemed insufficient for that day." What that heroic man often felt amid his distressing perplexities, we have often felt in life's dark hours. The child-feeling is waked up in us, and we want an Almighty Father close by us that we can talk to and lean upon.

The persecuted Apostle in Cæsar's judgment-hall, with guards in iron mail on every side, realized this cheering truth when he said, "No man stood by me, but all men forsook me; notwithstanding the Lord stood with me, and strengthened me." Every proper desire from the heart of God's child obtains recognition, and a proper answer in the heart of God Himself. The pull of our prayer may not seem to move the everlasting throne, but—like the pull on a line from the bow of a boat—it may draw us into closer fellowship with God, and into fuller harmony with his wise and holy will. When our desires chime with the will of God, we are sure to receive some blessing.

If we live near to our Heavenly Father, we should strive to realize his constant companionship. Wherever a devout soul meets God is a sacred spot, whether it be like Jacob's solitary pillar of stone, or a Sabbath sanctuary. We may make the workshop, the counting-house, the study, the kitchen, and the farmer's field sacred with God's presence. The nursery in which the pious mother trains her child is one of God's dwelling-places; and I have seen many a sick chamber that was the vestibule of heaven. Happy the pastor who, returning to his study for his year's work, finds both his Bible open and the mercy-seat close beside him with precious promises strewn thick about it! The nearer he gets to his Lord and Master in that study, the nearer will he get to the hearts of his people both in his pastoral work and in his pulpit. The man of business who gets a little time with God in the morning, over his Bible, or on his knees, will go all the stronger into the tumult of the day. To hem the day with prayer will keep it from ravelling out into many a folly or a sin. Stout old Luther used to say that he "could not get on without two hours a day in prayer and close fellowship with God."

The "higher life" is simply living close to God, on the Sabbath in his sanctuary, and through the week in our own dwellings and places of business. It is keeping our citizenship in heaven, and our eyes above the blinding mists of worldliness, and our hearts in close touch with our Divine Master. They that thus wait on God shall renew their strength; they shall mount up as eagles. Their outlook is wide; their spiritual atmosphere is bracing; they rehearse a great deal of heaven before they get there. Close to God here, they will find the gates of pearl opening to them all in good time, and they will go in to be "for ever with their Lord."

Religious Liberalism and its Counterfeits.

By Rev. J. GUINNESS ROGERS, D.D.

AN extremely suggestive view of the present state of religious opinion is given by Canon Hensley Henson in his recent volume on "Godly Union and Concord."

It starts with an observation that is positively startling in its pessimism. Speaking of a number of sermons, preached in Westminster Abbey, on the contrasts between the openings of the present and the last century, he tells us that they "were a public confession of Christian misgiving." He carries this point still further when he says, "We have but to glance at current theological literature to see that the mind and conscience of Christendom are afflicted by cruel anxieties." Probably there is in this presentation of the case something of rhetorical art. At all events there is sufficient evidence that the writer himself does not share these misgivings, but is only describing a state of feeling which he finds to be widely prevalent. Some admissions he does make, however, which are surprising enough. "There was a time (he says), not long distant, when the staple of Christian apologetics was the moral superiority of Christian civilization. Can it be honestly denied that it is increasingly difficult to take that ground?"

If an enemy had asked this, it would have been intelligible, and the challenge would not, in my judgment, be difficult to meet. But the significance of the question is due to the fact that it comes from a preacher of the Gospel, whose answer to it is anything but reassuring. As I shall have occasion to point out, there are other statements of his own which are not to be reconciled with this half-despairing utterance, which possibly may be traced to what I regard as a fatal tendency to judge of Christianity not so much by its fruits in individual character, as by its effects on a general society which has accepted its creeds, but has not been brought under the vitalizing influence of its spirit.

CONVENTIONAL RELIGION,

whether it is labelled with the Christian or with some other name, does not present many amiable features, and if its interests only were at stake there would be little to inspire the devoted loyalty necessary to a sustained and prolonged struggle. It is for the living power of the Christian faith, its force in moulding character and inspiring service, that I contend. Here there is no room for comparison, so immeasurably superior is the Christian to every other ideal.

And here I am happy to appeal to Canon Henson, who says: "All men are agreed that there is such a thing as the Christian character common to all the saints who have commanded the homage of mankind, and yet compatible with an endless variety of natural disposition; a plainly distinctive thing not to be found outside the Christian sphere, a subtle blending of the austere and the sympathetic, the lofty and the amiable, the heroic and the tender, which in pre-Christian and non-Christian societies was unknown. This unique and gracious moral type is plainly the creation of Christ."

With this statement I am perfectly content. It is in complete harmony with the declaration of Paul, who gives, as the opposite side of the truth, when he says, "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of us." There is no special exercise of liberality, therefore, in teaching that in the practical recognition of the supremacy of Christ by the striving after this lofty ideal, is to be found the one real test of orthodoxy. It has been the habit, indeed, to lay too much stress upon the acceptance of a creed. Not only have the creeds been too formal, too severely dogmatic, too elaborate even where they have been reduced to the simplest minimum—they have too often been regarded as religion, whereas a creed can be at best only the foundation on which the spiritual life is built up. "With the heart man believeth unto salvation." "Knowledge puffeth up, but love edifieth." What do these explicit statements mean except to distinguish between the mere understanding of the truth, and that acceptance of it by the head which converts it into (to use our Master's own figure) the leavening principle of the character and the life? If our fathers fell into the error of magnifying the creed unduly, their children have certainly done enough to correct any such tendency. The swing of the pendulum has been so violent and extreme that it might almost seem as though we should soon be taught that the less a man believes the better Christian he will be. Already the point has been reached of a charity so comprehensive that it is prepared to recognize the Christian life where there is not even a profession of faith in Christ.

THE FALLACY OF HUMAN JUDGMENT.

Perhaps there is no single truth which it is more important for us to remember than the very simple, but often forgotten, one, that the judgment of men is altogether beyond our province. "Are there few that be saved?" was the eager inquiry addressed by the Apostles to the Lord. His simple answer was, "Agonize to enter in at the strait gate." "Lord, what shall this man do?" was a question which seemed to come naturally enough after the forecast of Peter's own future. But the reply, as in the former case, recalled the Apostle to questions of personal duty. "What is that to thee? Follow thou Me." In short, judgment belongs to God, and all attempts to usurp his prerogative and anticipate his verdicts are sure to end in confusion. The truth, which we have learned, it is for us to maintain and obey, however hard it may be for us to reconcile with certain facts in human life. We are not asked to reconcile them. That God will do in his own good time. It remains for us to believe and wait for the salvation of God.

The religion of Christ differs so far from others which are set up as its rivals that comparison between them is impossible. It is not a theory, or a philosophy, or an ethical system, or a scheme of social reform; it is a Divine message, or it is nothing. That message is expressed in the simple verse, "Faithful is the saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners." That is true, or it is false. It is which has flitted before the imagination of some idealists, and which they have imposed on the credulity of large multitudes of men, but which has no reality. Beside these two there is no alternative, unless it be one which brands the story as an intentional deception.

To talk pleasantly about the necessity for keeping an open mind on the subject is to trifle with the greatest of all themes, the most sacred of all feelings, the most enduring of all interests. We are sometimes told that, even if we failed with the whole story of Calvary, if we lost Jesus and the resurrection, and, losing them, were robbed for ever of the Gospel of forgiveness, still there would remain to us the knowledge of the Father, and of his infinite love. But how? Who has taught the love of the Father? The only-begotten Son who was in the bosom of the Father, He has revealed Him. But, having lost the Son, what is left of the knowledge of the Father? We have parted with the Revealer, and can we keep the Revelation? No vainer dream could fly across human imagination than this, that we may lose Christ and yet retain that blessed knowledge of the Father in heaven, in which multitudes of weak and sinful hearts have found consolation, pardon, inspiration, and joy.

It would be to pass outside the realm of charity, were we, therefore, to treat uncertainty on this vital point as a matter of no importance? But this is really the drift of very much of the religious writing of to-day.

CHARITY OR TRUTH?

Charity is exalted at the cost of truth, and credit is given for breadth and liberality, which is neither more nor less than disloyalty to the Master. For this his followers must maintain, that the first and all-essential condition of a Christ-like life is humble trust in Him. The perfect ideal is found in Him, and it will be cultivated only by those who have first been led to love Him. But that love is itself the fruit of our belief in Him. We love Him because He first loved us. The whole structure of Christian character and life rests upon that.

But how much does it involve? The entire story of the Gospel is transformed by the knowledge that the babe for whom no room was found in the inn, the wanderer who had nowhere to lay his head, the accused whom his own disciples forsook in the hour of deepest need, the crucified whose last resting-place was a stranger's grave, was yet the Son of God, whose life and death were a ministry of love to man. Believe that, and, as multitudes of examples prove, the Christian ideal becomes possible. But if that be uncertain, we are left alive without the aim and the motive for the sublime idealism which is in the Christian character. We have lost both the Exemplar and the Inspirer, when we have parted with the Christ; and assuredly we shall part with Him if we are disposed to deal leniently with doubts as to the historic Christ which we find in the Gospels. It is in the assertion of this unique influence that Canon Henson finds his conclusive reply to any misgivings at which he hinted. "It is precisely the Catholic principle within historic Christianity. . . . It exerts its salutory empire over human nature as such. 'All are one man in Christ Jesus.' In spite of failures and blunders without number, Christian missions have demonstrated the absolute universality of the power of Christ to arrest, possess, and govern men. Therefore, I submit that on the two-fold basis of history and experience we may build again our palace of hope, and make our venture of faith."

The Cry of the Earth.

God's beautiful earth is a-weary;
  She sighs for her sabbath of rest;
Her children each day in their thousands
  Sink down on her pitiful breast.
She curtains them round from the day-light;
  And shelters them safe from the strife;
And hushes to slumber the hearts without number,
  That break in the "Battle of Life."

God's beautiful earth is a-weary;
  Her cry goeth upward, "How long,
How long ere the midnight of weeping,
  Be lost in the morning of song?
How long ere the strife and the discord,
  The grief and the struggle shall cease,
And the nations shall meet at the crucified feet
  Of the glorious Prince of Peace?"

How long? There is One who knoweth;
  And the signs that gather and throng,
Speak clarion-like his answer
  To his listening Church, "Not long."
Not long ere the voice of the Highest
  Shall hush all the discord and strife;
And call from death's slumber the hearts without number
  That broke in the "Battle of Life."

Samuel and Saul.

AN EPILOGUE.

(2 Sam. i. 19, &c.)

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

"THE Song of the Bow," for that is the title of the touchingly beautiful elegy with which David's muse mourned over the tragedy of Gilboa, is very pathetic and inspiring. It seemed as though the singer had forgotten the rough experiences which had fallen to his lot through the jealous mania of the king; and passing over recent years, he was a minstrel-shepherd once more, celebrating the glory and powers of his King.

"Thy glory, O Israel, is slain upon thy high places!

How are the mighty fallen!"

. . . . . .

Saul and Jonathan were lovely and pleasant in their lives,

And in their death they were not divided.

It makes us think of the love of God, to hear David sing like that. It reminds us that God has said, "Their sins and iniquities will I remember no more." Here at least, long before the Christian era, was a love that bore all things, believed all things, hoped all things, endured all things, and never failed; which cast the halo of its idealism around the memory of the departed; which thought only of what had been noble and beautiful in them, and refused to consider aught that had been base and unworthy. It is thus that we also would think of Saul, the first king of Israel.

It always seems to us as though Saul were one of those castaways of which the Apostle speaks, and among whom he feared lest he should finally be classed; who were once selected by God for some high and holy purpose, who bade fair to realize it, but who at last were cast aside from his use and service as salt which has lost its savour, and is cast out to be trodden under foot of men.

It is a very solemn thought! No career could begin with fairer, brighter prospects than Saul had, and none could close in a more absolute midnight of despair; and yet such a fate may befall us, unless we watch, and pray, and walk humbly with our God.

We cannot forget that representation on the pages of the "Immortal Dreamer," of the man in an iron cage. The man said, "I was once a fair and flourishing professor, both in mine own eyes and in the eyes of others; I once was, as I thought, fair for the Celestial City, and had then even joy at the thoughts that I should get thither; but I left off to watch and be sober; I laid the reins upon the neck of my lusts; I sinned against the light of the Word and the goodness of God; I have grieved the Spirit, and He is gone; I tempted the devil, and he has come to me; I have provoked God to anger, and He has left me; I have so hardened my heart that I cannot repent." "Well," said Christian, "this is fearful! God help me to watch and be sober, and to pray that I may shun the cause of this man's misery!"

But those who are most fearful of falling into such a case are they who are least liable to it. It is the disciple who says, Lord is it I? in lowly distrust of himself—it is he who will never be found guilty of treading the Son of God beneath his feet, and crucifying Him afresh.

But, deeper than all, the dispensational aspect of Saul's reign appeals to us with profoundest interest. He seems to represent the prince of this present age (or, as it might be called, "the world"), who was once Lucifer, the Son of the Morning; was appointed as God's vice-gerent to rule over his heritage, but who fell from his high estate, and in his fall not only dragged down a noble retinue of bright and beautiful spirits, but cast a blighting influence over the entire realm over which he had been set. In each of these points there is a close analogy between Saul, the king, and Satan, the fallen archangel. Both were favoured above most; both began with high promise; both were vice-gerents over God's heritage; both were disobedient, wilful, and proud; both fell from their high estate, and in their fall dragged many in their train, and left an entail of woe as their legacy and memento. And both incurred the sentence of deposition in favour of another kingdom, which was springing up in the heart of their kingdom. In the case of Saul, this was David's; in the case of Satan, it is that Kingdom which can never be removed, but abideth for ever!

That gathering to the Cave of Adullam of all who were in desperate circumstances, until by careful discipline and the infusion of his own heroic spirit, David moulded them into a great army, and won the empire of that time and land; that generous and noble disposition which stood out in such striking contrast to the character of his adversary; that incessant persecution and pursuit by the crowned prince of the realm—what are these but striking analogies, which have their highest counterpart only in the history of the Son of Man, who from his cradle to his grave was always subjected to the hatred and opposition of Satan!

Notwithstanding all that Saul's malice could desire to thwart and frustrate the Divine plan, yet Jehovah set his king upon the holy hill of Zion, and He came forth to declare the decree of his enthronement and coronation. Similarly the Divine purpose with regard to our Lord must stand, though demons and men oppose it. The Son of God is destined to be the crowned King of men. His kingdom is now hidden and in mystery; his followers are not manifested to the eyes of men; the full proportions of his empire are concealed. It has yet "to come." The overthrow of its great antagonist must precede its establishment. For the universe also there is to be an Armageddon, just as there was a field of Gilboa; and only when that last fight has been fought, and the powers of darkness have been shattered, never to be reconstructed, shall there be heard the sound of many voices, as of the tumultuous shout of vast multitudes, saying, "Hallelujah! The kingdoms of this world have become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ, and He shall reign for ever and ever."

"Wherefore we, receiving a kingdom that shall not be moved, let us have grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably, with reverence and godly fear: for our God is a consuming fire."

The reign of Saul would be almost too bitter to contemplate, unless under its rough cuticle and rind we could detect the formation of the luscious fruit of David's kingdom, destined to sow eternal seed over the world. Similarly, we might despair of the condition to which the Trinity of Evil has reduced our world, did we not know that in the days of these kings the God of Heaven shall set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed, nor shall the sovereignty thereof be left to another people; but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever (see Daniel ii. 44). The End.

The Pilgrim Fathers.—The opening at Gainsborough, by English and American Congregationalists, of a church as a memorial to John Robinson, the pastor of the Pilgrim Fathers, who was a native of that town, possesses a deep interest to students of history on both sides of the Atlantic. Few events have been more fruitful in results than the sailing of the Mayflower from the English shores with its brave company of men and women, who went forth to seek a land where they could serve God in peace and freedom. Writing to Dr. Scott, the delegate from the American Churches on the occasion, the President of the United States said: "It is eminently fitted that such a tangible tribute be paid to the memory of the great pastor and leader of the pilgrims, who did so much in laying the foundation of the world-wide supremacy of the English-speaking folk, and I congratulate you heartily upon your opportunity to share in the celebrations."

Christianity in China.

By Rev. W. REMFRY HUNT, Nanking.

WHEN the history of the Christian Church in China comes to be written, it will be seen that its real evidences are in its deeds rather than in its creeds or theologies. That this is in harmony with the original charter of our imperial commission will never be denied. The new life that is coming to China through the Gospel, is vivid, clean, and eloquent with the power of its transforming energies. In the redeemed lives of its emancipated sons and daughters we are daily witnessing miracles of grace. Compared with these facts and living proofs of the power and divinity of our faith, the scholarly, exhaustive, and critical treatment of authenticities are reduced to colourlessness.

The Christian faith has taken hold of the very fountains of the moral, political, and industrial life of Asia. In China, the victories of the Gospel are on daily record. This does not mean that there are no reverses, or that the magnitude of the work is under-rated. Never in all the history of Christian missions in China have we had so much cause to rejoice, or so much to solemnise us in view of the immensity of the enterprise. Better than all the railways, mines, telegraphs, arsenals, shipbuilding yards, universities, and radical changes in the government, are the evidences that we see in the changed lives of those who have come under the influence of the Gospel. It has made clean homes, created love between husband and wife, sanctified childhood, stimulated education, taught mothers to kiss a baby's face rather than a stone idol, and revitalised a dead manhood.

Here is a single case. Christianity in Chu Cheo changed clan fights into a common brotherhood. One hundred and forty who once bowed to images now sit at the table of the Lord, and are clothed and in their right mind. Recently one of the members died. Some dozen of the farmer class subscribed quite a nice sum of money to take the widow and two children back to their distant home. This wiped away the tears of the sad hearts, and was a beautiful illustration to all around of the love of Christ, and that the Gospel is not a mere cold, classic idea, but a warm, real, and practical exhibition of the fruits of love as taught and made immortal in the words of the Apostle James: "Pure religion and undefiled before God the Father is this, to be visiting orphans and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world."

Jerusalem.—Writing from Jerusalem, Mr. Dunn tells us, with much regret, that though better than last year, the rainfall has not been sufficient to fill the cisterns. Drinking water is now being given to many from Abraham's Vineyard. He also reports the satisfactory work of our seventy Jews at Abraham's Vineyard in stone quarrying and dressing, olive oil soap making, and the excavating in the rock of two large cisterns, for which friends in Halifax and Birmingham are providing funds. Only few Jews are admitted into Palestine now; but there are about 50,000 at Jerusalem. We ask for funds to enable us to give work, food, and water to more of these "in token of Christian sympathy."

Armenia and the Gospel.—It will be of interest to many who have at heart the progress of the Gospel in Armenia to know that there is at present in London a Christian refugee from that sorrowing country studying at the London Hospital. Artinian Hagopian for the past twelve months has been attending the lectures and walking the wards of this institution, with a view to returning to his own country people as a medical missionary. The period of his training is now drawing to a close, and the question awaits answer, What would the Lord have him to do? His heart and mind are fully set on returning. The means for his passage and overland journey, together with suitable supplies of medical and surgical stores, and the expenses of caravan transit, will be considerable. While studying at the hospital, Mr. Hagopian has shared Mr. Chorley's activity and service among the poor and outcast of the East End of London. Letters for him may be addressed to 6, Clephane Road, Canonbury, N.

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, June 29. Deuteronomy ii.

IN the first verse Moses comprised the whole of that wandering life, which lasted through thirty-eight years. What! Shall it come about some day, as we review our life from the retrospect of eternity, that we shall be able to comprehend all the bitter disappointments and deliverances of life in a single sentence? In any case, the Lord knows our walking through this great wilderness. He is with us. We shall not lack anything necessary to a complete and blessed life. "He that cometh to Me," saith Christ, "shall never hunger, and he that believeth in Me shall never thirst."

As the pilgrimage came to an end, Israel entered into negotiations with various nations on the borders of the Land of Promise. Edom was not to be injured, because of the well-known grant of Mount Seir to the children of Esau. They were forbidden to molest the Moabites in any way, not on their own account, for they were very wicked, but in virtue of their descent from Lot. (How much of God's delivering and blessed help may be communicated because of some ancestor, to whom special protection was vouchsafed?) The Ammonites also were to be treated with the same consideration, out of regard for Lot. These two people are mentioned as "brother tribes," the children of Lot; and their integrity was only conceded, because of his connection with the Friend of God. What a glimpse these four verses (20-23) give us into the early history of Palestine, and into the wars of conquest, and changes of dynasty that swept over it. But through it all a divine purpose was running. "I have given" (9, 19, &c.).

MONDAY, June 30. Deuteronomy iii.

Sihon, as we learn from the last paragraph of the previous chapter, had an alternative of hospitable kindness offered him, but his rejection of Moses' request, and his opposition to the advance of Israel (Num. xxi. 23; Judges xi. 26), drew down on him condign punishment, and opened to the pilgrim race a free access to the Jordan from the East. Og feared for himself, and, desiring to avenge the overthrow of his ally, came out into the plain with his hosts, and thus came within reach of such warriors and arms as Israel could muster.

There is an interesting suggestion which throws some light on this action. We find from Joshua xxiv. 12 that God sent a special scourge among these Rephaim, in the shape of swarms of hornets (says Fausset) which, we may suppose, harassed them so much in their stone houses that they preferred the alternative of meeting the Israelites in battle to being stung to death by these formidable creatures. Thus God fights for his people. All nature is under his control, and any part of its mighty resources will march to effect his will if He but speak the word—now ravens and then hornets; now doves with olive leaves in their beaks, and then worms at the root of a gourd.

Faith was required (18-22) by these two and a half tribes to leave their wives and children, and go over to succour their brethren! If we will see to God's business, He will see to ours. Let us put our dear ones into the hands of Him who neither slumbers nor sleeps.

It was great of Moses to speak of all the wondrous acts of the Exodus as being only the beginning of God's wondrous works (24). I suppose that through countless ages we shall always feel to be standing at the beginning of God's wonders.

TUESDAY, July 1. Deuteronomy iv.

Israel's tenure of Canaan depended on obedience to God's will, as statutes and judgments, the former including all ordinances touching religion, the latter all enactments touching civil matters. As long as they remained true in their loyal allegiance, God guaranteed them the Land of Promise. If only we live a life of undeviating obedience, we retain an ungrieved Spirit; and to have his gracious influence without restraint is to enjoy the manifested presence of the Lord Jesus—He is our inheritance.

Is there not every reason that we take heed to ourselves, and keep our souls diligently, lest we forget, lest we forget.

Moses was constantly bringing the people back to the great scenes of Sinai. There probably is a Sinai in every life—some remarkable manifestation of the presence and power of the Most High, some sweet declaration of his covenant, ordered in all things and sure, some distinct lessons and teaching in Divine things (12-14). We need to keep that experience always in view, as a starting-point from which we are never to recede, but go forward to perfection.

Do backsliders read these words? Let them take heart! You may have been scattered, and become few in number, and carried into captivity; and yet if you will seek the Lord, you shall find Him; even then He will not fail nor forsake you, for He is very merciful, and cannot forget the covenant (31, 37).

WEDNESDAY, July 2. Deuteronomy v.

Moses is a type of our Lord, inasmuch as he was the mediator of the first covenant, as the Lord is of the second (5; also Gal. iii. 19; Heb. viii. 6; ix. 15; xii. 24). This second giving of the law gives its name to this book; but it has an interesting further meaning for ourselves. In the beginning of our religious life, we come under Sinai, to be judged, condemned, and brought to an end of all confidence in ourselves. Then, we are led to see that the Lord Jesus has borne the curse and penalty for us, and are at peace. But soon we come for a second time to the Holy Law, not as at the first, but to observe and do, not from the standpoint of legality or merit, but of loving fellowship with God in the things that He loves best. We no longer keep the law because we must, but because we love the Giver, and drink into his Spirit, and are moulded by his Blessed Spirit to his will. For love of God we are prepared to do what would be altogether foreign to us—but his love constrains. May we not breathe the cry of verse 29? Oh, that our hearts were always inclined to thy statutes, to love and walk in thy ways! Create in us such a heart, we beseech Thee!

Notice the additional argument for the observance of a rest-day. They were to remember that they had been servants once, and were compelled to work week after week without a single day of intermission. Ah! how welcome a rest-day would have been under such conditions, and it would be similarly welcomed by their household servants. "Thou shalt remember . . ."

What a privilege it is when God addresses to any one of us the words of verse 31. Let us stand by his side, listening to his teachings and commands, that we may pass them on to the outer circles, to the end that many, many more may enter the land of victory and rest.

THURSDAY, July 3. Deuteronomy vi.

This book rings with the words, "Observe to do" (v. 3). The probability is that we shall not do, unless we observe to do. There must be scrupulous care, else we may lose our roll, as we sleep in the arbour of indolent neglect. See the benefits which accrue from obedience. It will be well; you shall increase mightily; you shall possess the land; your enemies shall be cast out; you shall find that it will be always for your good and righteousness (24, 25). We do not earn our salvation by our obedience, but being saved through the merit and blood of our Saviour, we walk as obedient children.

Notice that majestic affirmation of the Unity of God, which is reverently quoted in the Gospels (Matt. xxii. 37; Mark xii. 30; Luke x. 27). This great truth is for us all. We worship the Trinity in Unity. Though there are Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, there is only one God. "To us there is one God, the Father, of whom are all things" (1 Cor. viii. 6). I always shrink from hearing the blessing pronounced as proceeding from God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost, which merely suggests that there is a division of the Godhead. Surely the proper formulary is: "The blessing of God Almighty, of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost . . ." God is one, one in his being, attributes, and energies, whether they go forth in the direction of creation, of providence, or of redemption.

The Hebrew parent was enjoined to impress on the children's memories the very letter of the law; and it is a grievous thing to find how greatly we moderns have departed from this venerable practice. How well I remember the numbers of texts and hymns which I learnt as a boy to say on Sunday evening to my father. It came easily then, and it has endowed me with a wealth of sacred treasure ever since.

This oral teaching was to be supplemented by a liberal use of the walls, on which religious precepts were to be profusely inscribed. Jews at times wear four sentences from the law in a little roll on their foreheads. They are: Ex. xiii. 2-10; xiii. 11-16; Deut. vi. 1-8; xi. 18-21.

FRIDAY, July 4. Deuteronomy vii.

There must be no covenant with sin, but uncompromising war; otherwise there will be an inevitable declension and turning away of soul.

Oh, dwell for a moment on the unmerited and marvellous love of God. There is no accounting for it, save in the Love that loves because it will, that sets its love because of its own free choice, that keeps its oath and remembers its covenant. Before ever He took us to be his, He knew all the waywardness and rebellion with which we should return his gracious overtures; but He loved us, nevertheless. What a vista of blessedness extends before us through all coming days (13, &c.). Let us go forward against his enemies and ours. Let us never say of any strongly-entrenched passion in our heart, or of any great evil which "straddles across the way," like the drink curse, impurity, or betting: "How can I dispossess?" "The Lord in the midst of thee is mighty; He will save."

That phrase "little by little" is very suggestive. The omnipotence of God could have given them possession of the promised land at once; but the unburied corpses of the enemy and the portions of the country left suddenly desolate would have brought about an incursion of dangerous beasts (Ex. xxiii. 29, 30). A progressive conquest was therefore better; and so God deals with our hearts, giving by piecemeal his higher ideal, and then leading us to give up anything that conflicts with it, and step up to claim it.

SATURDAY, July 5. Deuteronomy viii.

Thou shalt remember (v. 2); thou shalt consider (v. 5); thou shalt bless (v. 10).

Let us often go back on the long catalogue of God's mercies, which lie behind us. All our past life bears witness to the divine leading (v. 2). And if the discipline has been hard, we will at least acknowledge that it has been eminently wise, and adapted to our special character, showing us what was in our hearts, that we might be humbled, and that God's grace might be magnified. Alas, what hearts are ours! How full they are of infidelity, inconstancy, rebellion, and perverseness!

But in spite of all, how unwearied God has been. If He has suffered us to hunger, in order to test us, before our pain has been severe, He has hurried to us with bread. We have lived on his words. We have been chastened as sons. We have marched over the desert wastes with unblistered feet. And we have been brought into a land of plenty and peace. What shall we say to our God? Shall we not trust Him? Shall we not be in subjection to the Father of our spirits, and live?

It is in the days of our prosperity, as Moses reminds us, that our hearts get lifted up, and we are tempted to forget. We are so apt to look round and say: "This mighty Babylon, which I have builded"; or to boast: "My power and the might of mine hand hath gotten me this wealth." To forget God like this is fatal (vi. 9). We must ever regard Him as the Owner and Giver of all, and ourselves as his stewards, put in to manage his property, of which we shall be called to give an account.

"Not so Respectable!"

A TRUE STORY OF "PIGGY'S ISLAND."

By GRACE PETTMAN.

PIGGY'S ISLAND! The name seems suggestive enough; but the real Piggy's Island was neither a wee islet washed by ocean waves, nor an isolated tract of beautiful country devoted to a particular class of four-footed animal. The real actual Piggy's Island was just a very humdrum and unsavoury row of tumble-down houses abutting on a blank dead wall down Hackney way, in north-east London.

A difficult sort of place to deal with, one that cost the faithful city missionary appointed to that district a good many sighs and achings of heart! On this particular day, he wended his way from one tumbledown hovel to another, not meeting, perhaps, with so much actual unwillingness to listen to his message, as with what is even harder to deal with than opposition—deadly apathy and dull indifference.

At length he entered a tiny dwelling, scarcely fit to bear the sacred name of home—the room on the downstairs floor forming a sort of workshop for the man—a cabinetmaker by trade—while the one solitary apartment above served as bed and sitting-room combined for the whole family, numbering six!

Mrs. Clare, the mistress of this miserable home, was one of the most hopeless cases with which the missionary had to deal. He visited her regularly, spoke to her concerning Christ and her soul's salvation; but she listened with that deadly indifferent listening he knew so well, as if the matter had no interest for her. It was something for the respectable and refined, the folks who lived in comfortable homes, and had not had all heart and hope crushed out of them, as hers had been long ago.

She was too indifferent now to care or heed. She let him say what he liked, but the words seemed to fall meaningless on her ears, conveying no more to her than the pattering of the raindrops on the roof.

Almost in despair, the missionary tried to lead her thoughts to that soul of hers which must live for all eternity, while she as yet had never troubled or cared to make sure that she possessed one.

It seemed impossible to make her understand that it was a matter of supreme importance; she could not grasp it, so the missionary thought. She always declared she was too bad to be saved—

TOO LOW DOWN FOR GOD TO NOTICE.

She had sunk beneath the surface of respectability, and the folks above her took no notice of her. Why should she dare to hope that God would care—the God who was worshipped by refined people in their Sunday best, in cushioned seats, amid arched pillars, coloured windows, and soft music of the churches and chapels round about? These things were not for her. She was not refined and respectable, and so, thinking God cared not, she herself like thousands of others, had ceased to care.

Little guessing what was passing in her mind, the missionary finished his appeal to her by saying, almost in despair, "Oh, Mrs. Clare, the Lord is willing to save you. He is no respecter of persons; if you would only give yourself to Him, and ask Him to save you and cleanse you in the precious blood He shed for you, He will, for He has promised." The missionary saw no response to his appeal, and with a sigh turned away to meet, maybe, with the same apathy and indifference elsewhere. But he was only human, he could not read the heart, he did not know.

Time passed; the rest of his district was covered, and the day came again for his regular visit to Piggy's Island, and Mrs. Clare.

When she opened the door of the miserable one room where she lived, the change in her face almost startled him; dull apathy and indifference were gone: instead, the light of a new joy shone brightly in her face.

"Oh, sir," she said, "I have been longing to see you again. Do tell me, what is that text—where is it—that one you told me last time you came?" The good man looked sorely puzzled. He generally repeated not only one verse from God's Word, but many during his visits; he had quoted several to Mrs. Clare, and paid scores of calls since that conversation—how was he to remember?

"Which text was it? What was it about?"

"Oh, that one—bless the Lord for it, sir—where it says He is 'not so respectable!'"

"Not so respectable!" Suddenly the light of a new understanding dawned in the missionary's face, and he repeated slowly:—

"God is no respecter of persons; is that it?"

"Yes, that's it; thank God it showed me He was not too respectable to listen to me. I couldn't forget it; after you were gone those words came back again and again. You told me He would receive even the likes o' me if I came to Him and asked Him to forgive me. So at last

I ASKED HIM, AND HE DID!"

There was no doubt about it, the light of joy on the woman's face told the change. To her, poor, dark, down-trodden woman in Piggy's Island, Jesus and his salvation had seemed so very, very far away—high up, above her, out of reach. But the glorious revelation of his willingness to save had come at last. That verse, with its strange application all her own, had broken the barrier down at last.

She had sunk beneath the surface of respectability in the world's sight. Oh, the pity of it! But now she had seen it was not respectability, the Saviour wanted simply a heart yielded, because she realized her need of Him! To have struggled to raise herself to a higher level would have been to struggle in vain. Thank God it was not respectability she needed, but Christ, and oh, joy! He was no respecter of persons, "not so respectable" that He would turn her away! So, just as she was, she came, and found his promise true. Jesus was willing to save even her from all her sins.

Weeks passed; the reality of Mrs. Clare's conversion was proved beyond a doubt. Then, when summer came, the tired-out city missionary went to the sunny south coast for a brief rest from his toil amid the slums; and, while he was away, the summons to a long, eternal holiday—an endless holiday indeed—came to the poor woman in East London. She was called from the grim poverty of Piggy's Island to the boundless joy of heaven!

"Not so respectable!" aye, the folks on earth had seemed far, far above her, but the Lord Jesus had stepped down and saved her sinful soul, and taken Mrs. Clare, a trophy of salvation, even from Piggy's Island, to dwell with Him in glory.

A last message was left for the City missionary. "Tell him, tell him I'm going to be with Jesus!" and then in triumph and joy the poor woman was promoted from Piggy's Island to the Land of Light.

Many a day has passed since then. The County Council has swept away the wretched hovels, and built model dwellings near at hand instead, and the spot where Mrs. Clare dwelt is now a recreation-ground. Piggy's Island is no more; but the down-trodden and the sunken in sin are with us still, lost to respectability, maybe, but not yet lost to God—to Him who lives and loves and saves, "not so respectable" that a single sinner who cries to Him for mercy is ever forgotten or passed by!

Keep Praising the Lord!

"I will bless the Lord at all times: His praise shall continually be in my mouth." (Psalm xxxiv. 1.)

Itinerating in Irish Fairs.—Two pairs of the trained evangelists of the Society for Irish Church Missions, working in eight fairs in a recent week, sold 173 Testaments, 149 "Pilgrim's Progress," 105 "Talk of the Road," and 439 other missionary publications—a total of 866. They preached and sang the Gospel to some 1,700 people, and had many interesting incidents. Earnest prayer is asked.

Quaint Texts from Queer Places.—1.

By CHAS. COOK.

REMOVED TO THE OTHER SIDE.

IT was a large poster on the shutters of a closed-up shop, and as I looked across the road, and saw the modern, up-to-date emporium, and contrasted it with the old ramshackle shop on which the bill was displayed, I judged the tradesman had "moved to improve."

It used to be said that in Fleet Street there was "a sunny side" and "a money side"; and there is a story of a man who moved his business from the last-named to the former, and soon after became bankrupt. There is a right and a wrong side (from a business point of view) to many thoroughfares; certainly, too, in there is the right and the wrong side, and it is evident that those who have come over on to "the Lord's side," which is the only right side, have "moved to improve." A friend of mine once said during preaching, "When I served the devil I lived in a court, but now that I am serving the Lord, I live in a square!"

I have recently written the life of a notorious burglar who became a devoted missionary; this change of life was a modern miracle; he said of himself whilst living in crime: "At this time I was a past-master in evil and wickedness." Afterwards, when he had long served his Lord in Africa, and just before he died, lamented by all his brethren, they said: "We can hardly believe he is the same man, so great is the change." How important for us to be quite sure that we have really "changed masters," as Bunyan's pilgrim puts it!

We are told "three moves are as bad as a fire," but this change over will repay us for any trouble we may be put to, for it is to our eternal interest to take the side of God and right.

Some texts have a two-fold application. This one has. Whether we are changed—that is, converted—or not; whether we are living in the world as worldlings, or have come right over the line of demarcation and are in Christ (unless He comes for us)—we must all pass over to the great majority, and thus literally we shall have "removed to the other side," for we all possess a deathless soul in a mortal body.

The Letter Mission.

A QUIET, almost unvarying ministry is that exercised by the Letter Mission. It is ever the same burden of sin that induces confidence; ever the same cry, "What must I do to be saved?" and the workers have had the joy of knowing that some whom they have sought to help have responded to the Saviour's "Come unto Me."

A young man who had been in correspondence with one of the helpers writes: "Since I had your first letter I have given myself to Christ, and He has accepted me as his own child. I do earnestly thank you for the help you have given me; it has changed the whole course of my life. Before I was living an uncertain life of pleasure, now it is completely changed. It is glorious to be a Christian. May God bless you for the truth that you have shown me—once his enemy, but now his child for ever more."

Another fervent testimony is that of a man who for thirty years had been in the service of sin. After two letters he writes: "The last few days have been very sorrowful. God has been revealing to me the exceeding folly and sinfulness of my past life, which, although forgiven, can never be recalled. I have read the portions of God's Word you referred me to. I thank God for raising up in you one who does not shrink from writing to me, an unhappy sinner. May the Lord help me never again to yield to sin." Later he says, "It seemed as if I had sinned away the day of grace, when your welcome letter led me to search God's Word, and Jesus called me away from sin to Himself."

The Late Mr. G. H. Lord,

BUCKHURST HILL.

FOR over a quarter of a century the name of Mr. G. H. Lord was a household word in and around Buckhurst Hill—in the heart of Epping Forest. Here he spent his strength and substance to win men, women, and children to the Master whom he so ardently loved, and whose service was ever his chief delight. Many are poorer to-day through the removal of this much-loved servant of Christ. At the age of sixty-one he "fell on sleep," and "entered into the joy of his Lord."

At the age of sixteen he was brought to the saving knowledge of Christ. A terrible accident had occurred at the Victoria Theatre, resulting in the crushing to death of eighteen people. Rev. James Sherman—the predecessor of the late Dr. Newman Hall at Surrey Chapel—preached a special sermon at Maze Hill Chapel, Blackheath, on the following Sunday, entitled, "Those Eighteen" (Luke xiii. 4). The earnest appeal, "Except ye repent ye shall all likewise perish," went straight to the young man's heart, and he there and then gave himself to Christ. He ran all the way home and made known to his friends what great things the Lord had done for him.

He got into harness at once as a Y.M.C.A. worker at Blackheath, where the Bible meetings then held were a great stimulus in developing the young convert's spiritual life; and he ultimately became secretary of the Blackheath Association. Afterwards for five years he acted as secretary to Rev. Thomas Jones, the great Welsh preacher, and for a time was also secretary of the South London Union of Sunday-schools.

Removing to Buckhurst Hill in 1875, Mr. Lord commenced the work by which he will be best remembered. A few scattered residential villas only were at that time on the hill itself. In a tiny cottage below the railway line a few people were gathered to hear the Gospel. This soon became crowded out, and the meetings had to be held in the open air, where numbers of people were brought to Christ. The need of some suitable home for these new converts was soon apparent, and ultimately Princess Hall, which had formerly been used by a Masonic lodge, was taken for Gospel and fellowship meetings. From the very first this building was crowded, and for over twenty-five years a constant work of grace went on, many of the very worst characters in the district being reached.

Before the Corporation of London took over Epping Forest, the gipsy encampments were scattered here and there, and to these the Gospel was taken by Mr. Lord and his band of helpers. A rough shelter was erected, and many a gipsy found Christ amid unconventional surroundings. From this beginning the Forest services developed, till often 1,000 people were present. On bank holidays most helpful conferences were attended by Christians from all parts of London. These were held in close proximity to Princess Hall, which adjoins the Forest, so that on wet days there was no difficulty in holding the meetings indoors. A Young Men's Bible Class, with an average attendance of forty, was a means of great blessing to many in the neighbourhood, and from this class one at least is labouring in the foreign mission field, after a course of training at Livingstone College.

For many years Mr. Lord took the deepest interest in the temporal and spiritual welfare of the girls in the three Preventive Training Homes of the Rescue Society at Buckhurst Hill and Woodford. In the Gospel services which he arranged specially on Sunday afternoons at the Hall, he always gave the first consideration to them and their comfort, and was never more pleased than when he had these young people about him teaching them some sweet hymn or speaking to them. He always had a bright smile, a kind word, and a warm shake of the hand for any of them. It was a touching sight on the day of the funeral to see the long procession of these young people, who had lost a true friend. At the grave side they joined in singing a hymn which he himself had taught them—"When the roll is called up yonder, I'll be there."

In 1880, and once since, Mr. Lord spent a few months in the East, visiting the Great Pyramid and "those holy fields," travelling 600 miles in the saddle, and living for a month with the Bedouin. These journeys furnished him with a storehouse of information confirmatory of the Gospel story, and he was ever giving thereout "things new and old." His illustrated lectures in many parts of the country were greatly used to confirm Scripture truth.

He was essentially a man who lived for others, and no labour was too hard that had in view the blessing of those for whom he toiled. Nor did he spare his means. While continuing in his business of spice merchant, what he gained by trading he gave with a liberal hand, carrying the main responsibility of the work he inaugurated at Princes Hall through all the years. He was a faithful steward and a gracious servant of Christ.

Billingsgate Medical Mission.

VISITORS to the busy centre of Billingsgate cannot fail to realize how numerous are the risks run by the wharf labourers, barrow hands, van drivers, guards, &c., in performing their daily work. The useful and far-reaching ministry which is exercised by the Billingsgate Medical Mission is being appreciated by an ever-widening circle of these employés, as is shown by the daily attendance at the dispensary, which in 1901 was double that of the previous year. As a result, it has been found necessary to engage the services of another fully-trained nurse to assist the resident sister.

Patients have been attended to medically as well as for accidents, and while the doctor's prescriptions have been dispensed free of cost, in many instances men only earning a few pence have returned to place an offering in the box, having had nothing to give at the time they were attended to at the dispensary.

Another encouraging outcome of this benificent ministry is the number of men who, almost absolutely degraded through drink, have been led to take their stand on the side of temperance.

The mission is conducted on the most economical lines, and there are many things needed to render the work more effectual which at present cannot be supplied through lack of funds. Letters for convalescent homes, clothing (new or worn), surgical instruments, and other help will be welcomed by the secretary, Mr. A. Walters, 19, St. Mary-at-Hill, E.C., who will gladly forward copies of the annual report.

Archdeacon Madden.

THE Rev. T. J. Madden, the subject of this sketch, has been for many years one of the best known among our northern Evangelical clergy, not only in his own diocese and city of Liverpool, but by his frequent appearance on the platform in London and elsewhere, to plead the claims of all our great Evangelical and Protestant societies. In temperance work he has by his voice and his pen exerted a wide influence, while few clergymen have been more successful in reaching men, and especially young men.

Mr. Madden was ordained by Dr. Jacobson, the late Bishop of Chester, on Trinity Sunday, 1879, to his first and only curacy, that of the well-known parish of Christ Church, Everton. Entrusted with a mission district, the outcome was a new church costing £5,000, and a new district known as St. Polycarp's. Five years later Mr. Madden came to London as Metropolitan Secretary for the Church Pastoral Aid Society; but he was not long to remain out of parochial work, being appointed within eighteen months vicar of St. Mark's, Barrow-in-Furness. The work here was chiefly among the working-classes, and the church was crowded, the attendance on Sunday evenings varying from a thousand to twelve hundred. At Barrow, Mr. Madden found free scope and ample opportunity for that work among men which has always been a feature of his ministry. Hardly a week passed without real "conversions" among the roughest class of artizans. A series of Saturday-night talks was commenced in one of the large public halls in the town, and here week after week an attentive audience crowded to hear addresses full of practical common-sense, showing how Christianity could be brought to bear upon the social realities of everyday life. "Men, let us be practical, common-sense Christians," was a favourite expression of the speaker's, and it was this spirit of earnest reality which appealed, as it always will appeal, to men. I remember the late Bishop of Carlisle, saying, at an annual meeting of the Christian Evidence Society, that the Barrow meetings were one of the best proofs that Christianity, when put plainly, logically, and earnestly before men, has not lost any of its power or attraction.

On New Year's Day, 1889, he was inducted to his present charge of St. Luke's, Liverpool. St. Luke's is a handsome church, standing on an elevated and central position in the town, and which I have often heard observed, has far more the appearance of a cathedral than the Cathedral Church of St. Peter. The congregation includes many of the leading professional and business men of Liverpool, but there is a large proportion of the working-classes, a noteworthy feature being the fact that at Holy Communion the attendance of men frequently exceeds that of women, an unusual experience in city churches.

Archdeacon Madden believes in open-air preaching, and in the crowded alleys and courts to be found within a few paces of the church, he and his band of lay helpers are well known; temperance addresses, preaching in the open air, and cottage meetings being systematically conducted.

Mr. Madden regularly holds a monthly service for "men only" after the usual evening service, and the large attendances show that he retains to the full his gift of drawing men. His addresses—some of which have obtained a wide circulation in book form, under the titles, "Addresses to All Sorts and Conditions of Men," and "Tombs or Temples"—are usually taken from the questions of the day; but in dealing with them he never fails to reason of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come.

The late Bishop Ryle, always a warm friend and admirer of Mr. Madden's work, conferred on him the archdeaconry of Warrington, and the present Bishop has appointed him one of his chaplains.

So far I have given the outline only of a busy life; but if you wish to know Archdeacon Madden you must meet him in his own home, and note his extraordinary energy and his readiness to undertake whatever work comes to his hand. I go back to a sunny day in May, 1899, when, during a visit to Liverpool, I found him in his study busy with a brief account of the episcopate of Bishop Ryle, which he was writing for one of the church papers. We talked of many things—of the late Bishop, of whose steadfast life he spoke to me in words of the deepest tenderness and love, and then we passed on to the question of a magazine article. A good title, I suggested, would be "The First Cathedral of the Twentieth Century." "Yes," said the Archdeacon, and then like a flash he added the complement, "and Liverpool will be its site." After that it required little persuasion to induce him to write one in which he pleaded that the hour had come for Liverpool churchmen to build a cathedral worthy of the second city of the Empire, a cathedral not only as a beautiful building, but one which would meet the necessities of diocesan life and organization. The article was written, as I remember, on what should have been the author's holiday. It was largely quoted by the Liverpool Press, public interest was aroused, and donations and subscriptions began to pour in. Since that date the words with which Archdeacon Madden closed his plea bid fair to be accomplished: "There is no lack of wealth, there is no lack of generous men. Then let the first decade of the new century see the foundation stone of Liverpool's cathedral laid amidst the shoutings of the people of God. 'And all the people shouted with a great shout when they praised the Lord, because the foundation of the House of the Lord was laid.'"

In person the Archdeacon is a man of average height, and of sturdy, athletic build, with a singularly cheerful smile and manner. His voice is strong and penetrating, and he has the power of expressing his thoughts in vigorous Anglo-Saxon. Speaking without notes on some favourite topic, he carries his audience with him in an irresistible way. Frequently Mr. Madden is invited to address special gatherings of men, and, as a mission preacher, he makes "men's meetings" a special feature of his work. From time to time he addresses undergraduates at Cambridge with the best results, while secretaries of the Y.M.C.A. are constantly trying to secure his services. Mr. Madden is a decided Evangelical, and in his hands, indeed, "the old, old story," which he never tires of telling, gains new force and beauty every time. His open-air services on the steps of St. Luke's Church are largely attended, and are an answer in themselves to the question, "Has the old Gospel—ever new—lost its power to attract and draw the masses?"

Mr. Madden is in the best sense a "Gospel" preacher, and yet he does not forget to feed the sheep. The fact that he has weekly Bible-readings in the church, and a monthly class for communicants, shows that he is of opinion that "You cannot give God's children too much of their Father's Bread."

His great interest in the temperance movement and Sunday-school work is well known. He is vice-president of the C.E.T.S. Diocesan Council, and for two years, 1899-1900, was chairman of the Sunday-school Institute. Mr. Madden is a popular writer, especially on topics of the moment. One of his tracts, "Why I am an Abstainer," perhaps the best and most telling plea for total abstinence in a small compass we have read, has obtained an immense circulation, a fifth edition of 70,000 having just been published.

Such is a brief sketch of one whose personality is too strong to be conveyed in a few pen touches. To know the man, and to feel the pulse of his warm true heart, you must know him as a friend. C. Ashton Bullock.

Dublin Medical Mission.

AN accession of vigour and enterprise has marked the commencement of the second decade of the work of this mission. This is at once obvious to a visitor to the mission premises. The residential part has recently been remodelled, and the surgery arrangements greatly improved. The cost of these alterations has been met by generous friends.

The burden of debt now presses on the committee, £175 being owing. This debt is due entirely to the ordinary expenses incurred during the last financial year, a time of expansion of the work not balanced by a proportionate increase of the income. The secretary is Dr. J. A. Percival Barnes, 6, Chancery Place, Dublin.

"As Doves to their Windows" is the title of an attractively-written and deeply-interesting publication, setting forth the doings of the Open-Air Mission during its forty-ninth year of evangelistic ministry. Serving as a bond of union for open-air preachers, the Mission has, during the year, revived and stimulated drooping energy, directed and encouraged zeal, taking the Gospel to races, fairs, fêtes, and wherever pleasure-seekers have assembled. Many will be refreshed and encouraged as they read in this record of the wonderful response which is being made to God's call to men to repent, sounded forth by his servants. (6d. 11, Adam Street, Strand, W.C.)

The Late Mr. R. C. Chapman.

THE affection in which Mr. Chapman was held by the whole Christian community at Barnstaple was manifested at the funeral on Tuesday of last week. Friends had gathered from far and near, and in addition to members of assemblies in which he was personally known, the Established and Nonconformist churches were well represented.

The hymns were selected from Mr. Chapman's compositions. After "No more we seek a resting-place," Mr. R. S. Saunders offered prayer, making appropriate reference to the blessings which had resulted to Christ's Church and to the world from the labours of Mr. Chapman, who was a bright and blessed example to all, in faith, patience, and love for Christ, righteousness, and truth. During the whole of the past sixty years he never knew him to say an improper word. He was a lover of good, gracious, and loving words, and sound speech.

Mr. W. H. Bennet (Yeovil) mentioned that when Mr. Chapman stated his belief that God had called him to the ministry of his Word, the answer of his friends was that he would never make a preacher. He replied that while there were many who preached Christ, there were not so many who lived Christ, and it would be his aim to live Christ. During the seventy years the deceased lived in Barnstaple he had been God's witness in the town and neighbourhood, indeed in the world, for his name and his life were known world-wide. After the hymn, "Can heavenly friendships pass away?" prayer was offered by Mr. Geo. Hake (Bideford), son of Mr. Chapman's former co-worker.

At the graveside, Rev. T. C. Chapman (vicar of Christ Church, Clifton), the only relative present, led in a prayer of thankfulness for the ministry of his great-uncle. Mr. G. F. Bergin (Bristol) read a portion of Scripture, and recalled the intense value the late Mr. Chapman put on the Holy Scriptures, while Dr. Soltau (London), speaking particularly to the children, remarked that this life was better than all sermons. Mr. W. H. Bennet read from Cor. xv., the interment took place, and the service concluded with prayer.

HIS CONVERSION.*

"For, lo, the winter is past, the rain is over and gone" (Canticles ii. 11).

Lord, I remember Thy dealings with me! When Thy hand at first arrested me, and Thy Spirit convinced me of sin, my cup was bitter with my guilt and the fruit of my doings. My joy was turned into mourning, my soul was like a salt land accursed of God; the hail and the storm swept aside my refuge of lies! I was alive without the commandment once, ignorant of the holy law of God, while yet I was under it; but when the commandment came, sin revived, and I died.

Then all was dreary winter within, and therefore was it winter without. Sick was I of the world, hating it in vexation of spirit, while yet I was unable and unwilling to cast it out. I found no city to dwell in; I wandered in the wilderness in a solitary way.

In the good and set time Thou speakest to me, saying: "This is the rest wherewithal ye may cause the weary to rest, and this is the refreshing." And how sweet Thy words: "Son, be of good cheer, thy sins be forgiven thee."

How precious the sight of the Lamb of God! and how glorious the robe of righteousness, hiding from the holy eyes of my Judge my sin and pollution. Then did the lame man leap as a hart, and the tongue of the dumb did sing. In Jesus crucified—in Thee, my Lord, my soul found rest, and in the bosom of Thy love.

Still, indeed, I have griefs, and still the tears stand in my eyes; but, Lord, I love my griefs and welcome my tears, for now I know Thee, my Brother, born for my adversity; and when, oh, when, art Thou so near as when Thy tender heart takes part in Thy people's sorrow?

Nor would I barter my bitter cup, which my Lord's love makes so sweet, for a world of carnal joys. R. C. C.

* From Meditations on the Song of Solomon. (Pickering & Inglis, Glasgow.)

"Absent from the body, at home with the Lord."

Were I from this, my house of clay,
By death's kind hand set free,
My spirit would, by angels borne,
To Jesu's bosom flee.

My cares all hush'd in lasting sleep,
My toil and sorrow gone,
Then should my lute and harp awake
Before my Father's throne.

No guilt can there benumb the soul,
Escap'd from Satan's wiles;
Atoning blood perfumes that place,
And nothing there defiles.

Ceaseless my new and holy song,
And sung with heaven-born skill,
Of Christ the Lamb that soon shall be Enthron'd on Zion's hill.

R. C. C.

"Them that sleep in Jesus shall God bring with Him."

Can heavenly friendships pass away,
So true and tender-hearted?
Can death make any saint his prey,
When from the earthly house of clay
The spirit has departed?

Behold, at God's right hand the Man
In whom the dead are sleeping;
The Lamb without a spot or stain,
The Lord who died and rose again,
Their dust in safety keeping.

In heav'n with Him their spirits rest,
By angels thither carried;
No foes assail them or molest,
Who oft were out of measure pierced,
While here on earth they tarried.

In heav'n they see the Saviour's face,
So bright yet so endearing;
His bosom is their resting place,
They call to mind their finish'd race,
And wait for his appearing.

He tells us from his mercy-seat,
How short our night of sorrow;
Departed brethren we shall meet,
And all the saints assembled greet,
The Bridegroom on the morrow.

THE SINS OF BELIEVERS.*

The heart of man is a restless deep, ever casting up mire and dirt (Isa. lvii. 20); but in the sins of God's children there is a pre-eminence of guilt.

Jonah could not sin himself out of the love of God; therefore, sinning himself out of communion with God, he had the greater guilt.

I count myself more vile than the murderer who suffers death by the hangman's hand, because the atoning blood of the Son of God acquaints me with myself. . . . That which shows me my forgiveness reveals to me my pollution.

By far the greater part of the sins of God's children are sins of ignorance. How needful therefore the cry, "Cleanse Thou me from secret faults" (Ps. xix. 12)—faults hidden from mine own eye and from mine own conscience. Without atoning blood they would bring down God's curse on the offender's head. Oh, let us not make light of sins of ignorance!

The sins of our unregenerate state should indeed be ever before us; but by frowardness, since we tasted that God is gracious, we sin (as natural men cannot sin) against the heart of Christ, against God's love and his Spirit, who seals us unto the day of redemption. The natural man is a rebel against his Maker; but it is against a Father that we, the saved, offend. Forgetting the cross, we go astray. The remedy is true and speedy confession; for we have an Advocate with the Father (1 John ii. 1).

We must be ever waging war with the secret workings of sin. Where it is but in a little measure allowed, God may suffer his child to go further and further in that allowance, until the seven locks are shorn on Delilah's lap.

To be doubting Christ's love, to be limiting his grace, is alike unworthy of us, and grieving to Him. The last offence of Joseph's brethren (Gen. l. 15-21) was not the least.

There is no fault in our character that the grace of God cannot cure. It becomes us, therefore, to give no quarter to the Canaanites (Judges ii.).

* From Choice Sayings. (9d. upwards. Morgan & Scott.)

God deals with us after conversion otherwise than before it. He, as a wise Father, has a rod of correction for his children, and smites them when he might let them alone, did they not know his love.

Peculiar temptations bring forth peculiar corruptions, after neglected warnings.

The Lord Jesus took loving pains to make Peter acquainted with Himself, and was compelled to humble him by his threefold denial of his Lord, but without exposing him to the eye of enemies. Overcome by a sudden temptation, he was quickly forgiven and restored (Luke xxii. 55-62). Whereas David, who had deliberately transgressed, and who had long been in a backsliding state of heart, was exposed to the people, as well as made loathsome in his own eyes (2 Sam. xii., xvi.). When Christ restores a fallen one, He often makes that disciple stronger than before his fall. "When thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren" (Luke xxii. 32). So it will be with those who, like David and Peter, have been wont to follow the Lord fully.

The people of God are, in general, slack and slothful in searching out sins of ignorance; but if we persevere in the search, asking God to reveal them to us, He will give us very humbling knowledge of ourselves and of our secret faults: with it also, blessed comfort and communion, which otherwise we could not enjoy. R. C. C.

The Borrowed Rose-Bud.

Affectionately dedicated to my wife in memory of our beloved daughter Cleo, who was born into eternity, Easter morning, 1902, aged twenty years, eleven months, and twenty-five days.

One day a fragrant flower
Was placed upon my breast.
I kissed the sacred treasure,
And laid it down to rest;
A tender blooming rosebud,
Still moist with morning dew,
An angel gave it, saying,
"I lend this bud to you."

I dearly loved the flower,
And pressed it to my heart,
We never wished to sever,
We would not live apart.
I watched it without ceasing,
I saw the bud unfold
And blossom into beauty
With charms that ne'er grew old.

My love for it grew stronger
As months and years went past.
We spent the time together,
I thought that it would last;
But lo! one Easter morning
A messenger drew near,
To take away the flower
That long had blossomed here.

I asked, "Who claims my treasure,
The object of my love?"
"The Gardener," was the answer,
"The Husbandman above;
The Father sent me for it,
Fear not the parting sting,
I weave it in a garland
For our beloved King.

"I take this precious treasure,
Remove it from your care,
And flee away to Jesus,
To place it gently there,
Among the choicest flowers
That lie upon his breast,
That He may share the sweetness
That makes her mem'ry blest."

"My heart will break with sorrow,
Without my treasure near;
Why take this loved one from me,
And leave me lonely here?"
"Just why, I cannot tell you.
The Gardener only knows.
'Tis well, I'm very certain,
So spare Him this sweet rose."

I said "Farewell, my darling,"
Then kissed the precious one,
And whispered in my sorrow,
"Dear Lord, thy will be done.
Sometime I'll know the reason—
If it is best to know—
So, Father, take the flower
That I have cherished so."

Home Missionary Circle.

THE object and aims of this organisation may be summed up in one word—"Others!" The membership is comprised of Christians who link themselves together in prayer and faith for the purpose of striving to reach and influence unsaved souls for Christ. Surely, the three-fold method of doing this must commend itself to every true child of God—(1) Bible study—(2) Bible speaking, (3) Bible living—in brief, doing the work of missionaries in the opportunities afforded in daily life and work. In some towns there are branch circles containing regular bands of Christian workers, and these meet weekly for prayer, testimony, mutual help, &c.; but there are also individual members living in parts where branches have not yet been opened up, and such isolated Christians find the link of membership a help and inspiration.

One writes: "Will you please enrol me as a member of H.M.C.? I thank you for your kind letter, and may I ask for prayer that I may be used by the Master in his service? I am a comparative stranger here, but He will open up the way where it is needed."

A lady thus: "Many thanks for your letters and enclosures. I am very happy to become a member of the H.M.C., and have signed the membership form. If at any time a branch circle is organized here, I shall be glad to help. The Christian is a paper I greatly value, and have been taking in some time. Trusting I may be remembered in prayer."

It is thus evident that many of God's children are both willing and ready to work on behalf of perishing souls, if only a helping hand is reached out to them. The Home Missionary Circle aims directly at helping and encouraging timid yet earnest Christians to "launch out"; and many have blessed God for the glorious results to themselves and others in putting into operation the three conditions.

One such recently wrote: "Will you please send me form of membership and particulars of the H.M.C. of which you write in The Christian as an organization calculated to ensure an affirmative answer to your questions—(1) Does your life bring God down to men? (2) Does your love lift men up to God? I can only give a sorrowful negative and confess that above all others I come under condemnation for 'buried talent' and 'light hidden.' Your words, 'To every one,' have inspired the hope that God may yet in his mercy use 'even me.' May He abundantly bless this effort of yours to set before his people their duty and privilege!"

"But do the principles of H.M.C. lead to definite and practical results?" is the question sometimes asked. The principles, being entirely Scriptural, invariably bring about practical, spiritual results whenever adopted. Hear the testimony of—

A Branch President: "God is very good to us! The meetings are flourishing, and under God are doing real work. The largest attendance was sixty at our house a fortnight ago. . . . We are full of praise."

From a Branch Secretary:—"At our H.M.C. last Friday week a poor fellow came and found Christ, and went away rejoicing. He came to church on Sunday so happy in Jesus."

Readers are invited to join the Home Missionary Circle, and then to influence others to do so. Full particulars (send two stamps) from the hon. organizing secretary, Mr. Albert E. Sims, Hope Gospel Mission, Northsea, Portsmouth.

Mission Efforts in Sheffield.—Under the superintendence of Mrs. Corbridge, the workers of the Rescue and Evangelistic Mission continue their endeavours with cheering results. The preaching of the Gospel in the Mission Hall on Sundays and week days has been effectual in bringing the unsaved to a sense of need of a Saviour; while in the open-air many have come under conviction of sin. The home for girls receives servants out of situations, where they are cared for and recommended for domestic service. Fatherless girls or orphans are also sheltered, as well as others who are in danger of being led astray. Mrs. Corbridge may be addressed 97, Gell Street, Sheffield, and will be glad to forward to friends copies of the annual report.

Welsh Forward Movement.

IN submitting to the General Assembly of the Welsh Presbyterian Church the annual report of the Welsh Forward Movement, Rev. Dr. Pugh, superintendent, stated that there are forty-one centres, besides branches, while the number of communicants is 3,309—a large increase.

"The movement," said Dr. Pugh, "emphasizes conversion, and every member is expected to be a total abstainer. The workers have a fierce battle to fight, and realize that their success depends more upon quality than quantity. They are most careful who they enrol as members." The results are far greater than appear in the statistical returns. As an illustration of this, out of 200 seekers at an evangelistic mission, the majority became members of other churches. The spirit of the movement indeed encourages converts to join the church of their fathers, if Evangelical.

REACHING THE CHILDREN.

Much attention is paid to the needs of children. Halls are built for the young as well as for adults, and children's services conducted at the same time as those for the seniors.

"It is found that the children of the slums can be easier won for Christ than the adults, and that children are among the most useful workers. They not only reach their playmates, but their parents, even when the adult worker fails. If the present children of the slums can be saved, there will soon be no slums! The progress of the work among child-life of the slums may appear slow, but it is sure. Over 2,000 children are now enrolled as junior members, and there is every reason to believe that a large percentage of them are truly children of God through faith in Jesus Christ. There are about 7,000 children in the Sunday-schools, and over 20,000 regular hearers."

NEW OPPORTUNITIES.

Three new halls, accommodating 3,000 persons, were opened during the year, and a new hall and school premises are to be a feature of the work at Barry Dock, to follow up the excellent commencement made in a temporary building. The demand made by various churches for visits by some of the best known evangelists of the movement has become so great that a committee has been appointed to see if an arrangement can be made to release them from their present charge, that they might be free to conduct special missions in connection with the older churches. Among other evangelistic efforts is a Bible van, under the care of two evangelists, who go from place to place preaching the Gospel, paying house-to-house visitations, and selling Bibles and Gospel literature, as well as distributing tracts throughout the year.

Although "Welsh Wales" is the freest from crime of all the British dominions, Glamorgan and Monmouth are black spots. Yet, through the Forward Movement preaching the "good tidings," many a dark place is being changed into a bright one, through the Gospel.

Caledonian Christian Club.

A LARGE gathering took place at the Morton Hotel, Russell Square, W.C., last Friday afternoon on the occasion of the 15th annual meeting of the Caledonian Christian Club, Lord Aberdeen presiding.

The report read by Mr. Arthur Robertson (secretary) showed that there had been 149 residents during the year, while about 100 others were guided on arrival in London to safe quarters. These also participated largely in the benefits of the Club while in quest of situations. They are welcomed at the Club, and frequently to its social board and good cheer at "At Homes" and social gatherings.

Lord Aberdeen referred to the unique and practical character of this work. While in hearty accord with other great associations for the benefit of young men, in its residential department, its "open-door" to the stranger met a great want at the most critical time in a young man's life. Rev. Dr. McGaw, general secretary of the English Presbyterian Church, and Mrs. Burnett Smith (Annie S. Swan) cordially moved and seconded the adoption of the reports. Among other speakers were Mr. James Reid, M.P., and Mr. A. M. Black, M.P

Obituary.

DR. JAMES MACAULAY.

WE announce with sincere regret the departure of our old friend, Dr. James Macaulay, so long and honourably associated with the Leisure Hour. The son of Dr. Alexander Macaulay, of Edinburgh, he was born in 1817, and thus had reached the advanced age of eighty-five. Educated at Edinburgh University, where he graduated in arts and medicine, he travelled in Europe before the railway epoch. Choosing a literary career, he wrote books and edited papers, and was highly esteemed for his intellectual versatility and nobility of character. Dr. Macaulay was editor of the Leisure Hour from 1858 to 1895, and alike in his influence and his personal writings he was true to Protestant principle and Evangelical sincerity. He was remarkably deft in the collecting of anecdotes and compiling biographical sketches for the million; and his books have had many readers, and been productive of great good.

MR. R. A. PHAIR.

The mission to Brazilian Indians, close to the British Guiana border, has sustained another serious blow. Simultaneously with the removal from earthly service, on January 1, of Mr. John Edward Nonnen, Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Phair arrived at Demerara from Canada, to join the labourers. Mr. George R. Witte having been prevented by illness from meeting them at the coast, Mr. Phair, after waiting a month, decided to undertake the journey alone, leaving his wife with friends. Starting on February 1, with two Indians as guides, he succeeded in reaching the station, only to learn that Mr. Witte's health had been shattered by an attack of fever, after his two companions had both succumbed to the same disease. Mr. Phair then started for Demerara alone, and lost his life by drowning in the rapids of the River Essequibo.

THE LATE REV. EDWARD SMITH.

The death of Rev. Edward Smith, of Scarborough (to which reference was made in our last week's issue), removes a well-known and devoted Wesleyan Methodist minister, remarkable for many spiritual gifts and a ministry of rich fruitfulness.

Born in Lancashire in 1849, his early life spent as a timekeeper and in other offices among the navvies gave him an insight into the ways and needs of working-men. After three years' ministry at Cheadle, he was set apart, in 1874, as the first Connexional District Evangelist, and appointed to the Lincoln District. After that he went to Leeds, to the Macclesfield District, and to Manchester, but the climax of his useful career was reached by his appointment to the London Mission in 1885. After six months in South London, he went to St. John's Square, E.C.

Mr. Smith effected a complete revolution at St. John's Square. Rev. John Wakerley, the present minister, truly says: "For four years and a half he gave the best of his brain and heart in his endeavour to solve one of the most difficult problems of Christian activity that a man could have to face. What he left we have witnessed, to the glory of God, and it is not too much to say that St. John's Square became an object-lesson to the Church of Christ. As a pastor he will be long remembered, and few equalled him in that department of ministerial toil. How persistently he watched by the sick and dying many can tell. He had a well-furnished mind and was a diligent reader. He was one of the men who had helped to redeem the verdict of some people that an evangelist is necessarily less educated than those who occupied other spheres. His 'Evangelist's Note-Book,' his Prize Essay on 'The Relation of the Churches to Evangelism' (originally published in The Christian), and his book describing the work at St. John's Square, show that he had both grit and grip."

Among Mr. Smith's papers was found a characteristic request that on his tombstone should be the simple inscription, "Edward Smith. Satisfied with Jesus."

Other Lands.

The S.S.U. in India.

"AN Indian Banyan tree was planted in 1876 by a number of experienced botanists. The soil was unusually fertile. Dew and rain, sunshine and storm, played their part. Gardeners were needed to prune, protect, and water. The tree waxed strong and fruitful, and great was the size thereof. And it came to pass at the end of twenty-four years that the measure of the tree was taken. Those who measured declared that the number of leaves was 263,221, the number of stems 10,573, the number of twigs 6,846, the number of branches seventy, and that the central trunk had become the parent of seventeen large aerial roots. When the measuring was done it was said, 'Still it grows.'"

In this original manner begins the report of twenty-five years of Sunday-school development in India. We shall interpret the parable as we endeavour to give the contents of this interesting paper in an abridged form.

A company of missionaries and others, of eight different societies, met in Allahabad in the spring of 1876, where the I.S.S.U. was founded. Dr. T. J. Scott, the honoured founder, largely did the secretarial work up to 1890, in which year Dr. J. L. Phillips was appointed and supported by the S.S.U., London. On his removal to the Better Land, five years later, the present general secretary, Rev. R. Burges, took his place, and has been on the field under the same auspices since October 12, 1896. The Banyan Tree which he is tending has spread its sweet and sheltering shade over India, Burma, and the Straits.

One out of every five babies born into the world looks up into the face of an Indian mother: three out of every five babies born in the Empire of King Edward VII. do the same. Therefore three-fifths of all British subjects and one-fifth of the world's people constitute the sphere of the I.S.S.U.

Leaves, i.e., Scholars.—Sunday-school work in India has existed since 1803, but there were no authentic records before 1891. The number of schools in that year was 4,608; of teachers, 8,910; of scholars, 152,002; of total membership, 160,912. In 1899 there were 6,846 schools, 10,573 teachers, 263,221 scholars, 273,794 total membership, consequently the total increase in nine years was 112,882.

Stems, i.e., the Sunday-school superintendents, teachers, and officers. These are drawn from various classes, missionaries, pastors, and business men, Indian or foreign, both men and women, who give their services freely for the sake of the Master.

The educational system of India costs the Government the modest sum of over 3·5 crores of rupees, and each of its schools is supposed to observe the policy of religious neutrality. The Sunday-school movement is an unfettered agency, fearlessly teaching the Holy Scriptures, neither asking nor desiring even a fraction of Government financial aid. "We claim," says Mr. Burges, "that the Sunday-school teacher is to an extent indispensable to Government, because he inculcates the great principle of righteousness."

Twigs, i.e., Sunday-schools, are generally found where there is a church, a missionary's home, a mission day-school, a theological seminary, a Christian college, or a hospital. Sunday-schools are also conducted, but not to the same extent, in railway and military cantonments, in leper asylums and industrial institutions, on tea, coffee, and indigo plantations, on street or field where a tree shade protects, in a forest, in the entrance to a Hindu temple, in the drawing-room or on the verandah of a home. In some cases the managers of Hindu day-schools allow Sunday-school teachers to come each Sabbath and teach Christian truth in song and story.

The types and traits of Indian Sunday-schools are legion. As to lessons, probably four-fifths of all the Sunday-schools in India use the International syllabus, founded by Mr. B. F. Jacobs, and which is used by 20,000,000 out of the 25,000,000 of the world's Sunday-school membership. The readings were first published in 1873, and are now used in thirty languages, sixteen of which are Indian. Sunday-schools are conducted in thirty-two vernaculars.

In 1897 there were over 750 vernacular newspapers published in India. As many of these are either non-Christian or anti-Christian, there is need for an abundance of Christian literature. The I.S.S.U. fosters the growth of such, suited to teachers and scholars. It is produced in twenty languages, and in fifty varieties, by individual, denominational, and Sunday-School Union enterprise.

The examination, which began by way of test in 1896, has now become known as the All-India Sunday-School Examination.

The Branches, i.e., the Missionary Societies to which the Sunday-schools belong. Among the seventy foreign missionary societies existing in India, some are found which lay very little stress on the value of Sunday-school work. Others, again, look upon it as the most fruitful form of Christian activity. Lessons from history teach us that the Society which is most likely to strike its roots deep into Hindostan and Malaysia is the Society which does the most and the best for the children and youth within its churches.

The Aerial Roots, i.e., the Sunday-school Auxiliaries. Affiliated with the I.S.S.U. are seventeen auxiliaries, the boundaries of which are co-extensive with those of the provinces. Every live banyan tree has some aerial roots on their way down to the earth, but not yet actually rooted. The Sunday-school banyan tree has such roots, e.g., in the Nizam's dominions, N. Travancore, and Assam. Some of them are very vigorous.

The Central Trunk, i.e., the I.S.S.U. Constitution and its Executive Committees, which provide for the proper management of the whole work. It is composed of twelve representative persons who reside in Calcutta.

The Gardeners are those who help the Sunday-school cause in any way. Such a huge tree could not grow so rapidly without much care, and those who pray help far more than they imagine. Subscribers to the funds have mostly been from Calcutta. Others will be welcomed, as funds are urgently needed.

In the famine of 1900 an appeal was penned to the Sunday-schools of the West, through the pages of the Sunday-School Chronicle, to come to the rescue of the starving children of the East. It elicited a most cheering response. Sunday-scholars and Christian Endeavourers in many lands, and speaking many tongues, vied with Great Britain's youth in self-denying effort for the relief of their suffering sisters and brothers in the stricken land.

Two-thirds of all contributions were set aside for the support and education of a definite number of children for a period of five years. The orphans thus cared for approach one hundred in number. They have been placed in carefully-selected orphanages under the management of missionaries.

The general secretary is an indefatigable traveller in the interests of the I.S.S. Union. His tours generally last several months. From his arrival in 1896 until the end of 1900, his tours ran up to 47,969 miles. He gives every year several hundreds of addresses to Sunday-schools in various denominations.

Since March 11, 1901, the Union has had a children's missioner in Mr. W. H. Stanes, who gives his services freely with all the enthusiasm of a consecrated worker. Travelling over the empire, he holds series of meetings for children in different places, using objects and lantern-slides largely. We may state that Mr. Stanes is now in England, open to any engagement. We quite agree with Mr. Burges when he says:—1. We have the best section of the non-Christian world in which to work—Southern Asia. 2. We have the best conceivable work to do—teaching the Holy Scriptures. 3. We have the most impressible class to teach—the children and youth. 4. We have positive certainty of success—our Master's precept and practice.

W. M.

A Remarkable Incident.

HAVING spent some eleven years in the heart of South America engaged in exploration work for the Bolivian Government, Mr. Geo. Whitfield Ray, F.R.G.S., in an interesting address at Jersey City, U.S., told how, on one occasion when about 2,000 miles up the Plate River, he heard of a certain tribe of Indians who had never been visited by any whites. He decided to go and see them, and reached their location after seven weeks' severe and arduous labour in getting through forest and jungle. These men performed religious acts in honour of the sun, sitting in rows and shaking rattles made of gourds, while they sang a kind of chant. These exercises were led by a high priest, who was a very peculiar and fanatical old man.

After Mr. Ray had been with the tribe a few days, he asked the old priest to allow him to preach to his people, and tell them something new. The old man's reply was to the effect that he and his people had lived where they then were from the foundation of the world, and that they had no use for their visitor or his doctrine—indeed, the sooner he took his departure the better it would be for all concerned. Mr. Ray, however, was not the guest of the priest, but of the king. King, queen, prince, princess, three dogs and Mr. Ray all reposed peacefully on the same floor at night.

A day or two later the gift of a knife to the priest, and of a small round mirror to his wife, modified the priest's ideas as to preaching, and at a given time he gathered a large congregation to hear

they had ever seen. Mr. Ray began to talk to them in this strain: God, who lives above, is a very great man, who made this world, and all things in it, including the people. One day He came to the edge of his world, and looking down on this earth, saw that all the people in it were doing bad things all the time. He went back to his Son, and fetched Him to the edge of his world, so that He could also see that everybody was wicked and doing wrong things all the time. Then it was agreed between them that the Son should come down to this earth to die, so that all the wicked people could be saved. And the Son did come to the earth, where He went about doing good. Some people liked Him, but others did not. Then, one day some of those who did not like Him took Him to a tree, and, driving nails through his hands and feet, fastened Him to the tree. Then a man took a spear and thrust it through his body."

At this point the priest interrupted, saying, "That is not right at all! You don't know anything about it." "Well," said Mr. Ray, "if you know the story better than I do, go ahead and finish it." Then, to Mr. Ray's great astonishment, the old priest said: "Ages ago our people were dying of hunger. One day our God came down that road, and our chief went out to meet him. Our God said to the chief, 'Your people are starving to death. Are you willing to die that their lives might be spared?' 'Yes,' replied the chief. As He said this, He dropped dead instantly. Then our God came to the people and said: 'Your chief is dead in the roadway. Go and bury him. Then in three days' time, go to his grave, and you will find a plant growing out of his mouth; and if you eat of the fruit you shall never die.' And," said the old priest, triumphantly, "our people ate of the plant, we have never died, and here we are to-day."

Where did that tribe of people, in the heart of South America, get that story, including in itself the doctrines of the Atonement, of (practically) the resurrection after three days, of eternal life, of that eternal life being obtained through the voluntary death of the chief, by the permission of God? Many inquiries satisfied Mr. Ray that he was the first white man the tribe had ever seen. The name of this tribe is the Caingwabravos. The question as to where that story came from has not yet been answered.

Notes from Spain.

THE occasional allusions to the young Spanish soldier, whose confession of Christ has called forth universal expressions of admiration and sympathy, induce me to write that a wrong impression may be removed, and continued prayer offered on his behalf. The statement that he has been acquitted, much less pardoned, is entirely unfounded; indeed, after calling only yesterday at the War Office I fear that, as in another instance where military discipline, not religious persecution, is the lever used, the law will be upheld until public opinion may compel an alteration.

The real state of things is that the military prosecutor withdrew the charge, but before this could be confirmed by the Captain-General of the province, then the Supreme Council of War here, no effect resulted; and this young brother is still in prison, though, owing to his transfer from Santiago to Corunna, he is in somewhat better circumstances. I was assured yesterday that the Supreme Council of War will uphold the accusation also the demand of punishment of the prosecutor, and will reprimand him for withdrawing after the defence had been made, and this is quite consistent, as I have before indicated, with the law as it exists at present. God grant that whatever results, liberty may yet be granted to this unhappy country where the real king is not Alfonso XIII. but the Pope. This has been lamentably but palpably demonstrated within the last few days by the way the Prime Minister acted in the matter of the religious associations; the Nuncio's threat to leave had its desired effect.

Despite the heavy political clouds, and the general religious indifference, it is good to be able to speak of progress, and the Second Convention of Christian Endeavour that for two days awakened deep interest last week, and brought together large congregations, especially at the evening sessions, is one indication of this, and shows what might be were there full liberty for all to worship according to their conscience. The presence of the esteemed and honoured founder, Dr. F. E. Clark, lent a special interest to the gatherings, and he expressed himself as highly gratified by all he saw and heard. The North, East, and South sent delegates, and some came at their own expense, and the general tone of the gatherings was distinctly spiritual and elevating.

The four Evangelical churches of the city opened their places of worship to receive the Endeavourers, and happy and profitable moments were spent in social intercourse between the meetings; the looking-off to the things of others has, I trust, lent a breadth of sympathy to the Churches; and though there is as yet no branch of the movement here, under other names, or without any, the spirit of it certainly exists, and proof of this was seen in the very successful Convention that has left most happy memories with both conveners and convened.

Last Lord's Day we were gladdened by distinct manifestations of the Spirit's power, not a few of those who for a long time have been interested expressing their desire for salvation.

The Cry of the Beasts.—Another Parliamentary return of vivisection experiments has just been sent out, and, like its predecessors, it is as unsatisfactory as it is misleading. There has been an increase of about 240 recognised vivisectors during the last quarter of a century, a period otherwise remarkable for the development of humane feeling and practice; and most of the authorized experiments performed last year were under certificates which "exempted the vivisector from the necessity of using an anæsthetic." A number of these experiments were "mere inoculations," performed for the prolonged study of effects and results, the animals lingering in the torture which necessarily and inevitably follows the operation. Some idea of the extent of the cruelty committed day by day may be formed from the fact that five of the licensed vivisectors performed no less than 2,636 experiments upon living animals during the twelve months in question.

Home for Women in Alexandria.

UNDER the above name we are now carrying on the work which has, until quite recently, been maintained by the World's Y.W.C.A. in Alexandria, Egypt.

It is still the same work, with the same basis and principles, but for financial and other reasons it was felt that local government would in future be best. For three months the Home is in charge of Mrs. Poole (daughter of Mr. Gurney Sheppard), while I am away in America gathering funds to—(a) do away with the debt; (b) have a small annual income in hand; and (c) start a building fund. My finance committee have written, urging that I shall at once send money to prevent the work being closed. We have firmly decided not to go into into debt—rather to close than that.

Last year we helped 481 women of many nationalities, and could have helped many more, especially among the Syrians, Armenians, and Italians, had we had the funds. Alexandria is a city "where Satan's seat is." The bare thought of lessening the work appals me. "Come over and help us!"

Subscriptions can be paid to the Anglo-Egyptian Bank (London) to the credit of "Johnson House," Alexandria; and our hon. treasurer, Mr. R. H. Hoare, will acknowledge such gifts.

A Moslem Conversion.

MANY will, I believe, be interested to hear of the case of a recent Moslem convert in Tunis. I am quoting from Mr. J. H. C. Purdon, one of the North Africa missionaries, who has been used in his conversion.

"Some months ago there came to our evening Gospel meeting, at the Bible Depôt in Tunis, a Moslem—a little man, and very rough in his style of speaking. He brought another fellow with him, and both withstood the Gospel message as proclaimed by one of our number, Miss Grissell, and vigorously argued against the truth. After many evenings of opposition, to our surprise the 'little man' (as we then called him) abruptly and dogmatically confessed that he believed that Christ died for his sins, and asked what was now the next thing to be done or believed. He was immediately pointed to James ii. to show him how true faith always produces a change of life. We naturally doubted our little man, and watched to see what earthly motives prompted so bold an averment of faith. But we found none; on the contrary, our new friend became very much interested in 'faith with works,' and asked us what were the commands of the Messiah, that he might obey them, seeing he had salvation by Christ's death.

"For several weeks he visited our houses, and was always present at our meetings. We laid constantly before him the teachings of the Bible in relation to holiness of life, but spoke little about baptism or the Lord's table. Omar, however, is of a most inquiring disposition, and having heard these subjects alluded to, asked to have them explained. This having been done, he said, 'Now I have faith, I must also have faith with works, and by no means must I fail to obey these commands.' His desire to come to the Lord's table was so strong, and his frequent request to be baptized so apparently sincere, that we all felt it was right to baptize him, although only two months had elapsed since he professed his faith in our Lord Jesus.

"As he went away from the Lord's Supper, of which we partook in the evening after his baptism, he said, 'I am very tired, but a joy has come into my heart to-day as if I was entering into heaven,' and some days after he said to me, 'Ah! that day was a great day, the memory of it is continually before me.'

"When Mr. Glenny was pointing out to him that even death might follow his confession of Christ—in speaking to him before his baptism—Omar replied, 'And if they do, they can only take me; my salvation they cannot take.'"

Being completely boycotted by his former clients in business, he has been obliged to sell his clothes in order to live, but has steadfastly withstood Mr. Purdon's entreaties to take meals in his house, saying, "Why, I have often been idle for weeks before I knew Christ; it isn't much that I should be idle again, and I'm only doing what I always did in such a case before, by selling my clothes!"

British Syrian Mission.

HAVING just returned after making a thorough and quite independent visitation of the work carried on by the British Syrian Mission among women, children, and the blind, the heart of Rev. H. B. Macartney is full to overflowing with praise for the results which have been achieved, while he is at the same time deeply impressed with the need for the maintenance and extension of all the efforts.

The fifty branch day schools for Mohammedans, Druses, Jewesses, Oriental Christians, and Protestants, in Beyrout itself, Damascus, Mount Lebanon, Baalbec, Tyre, &c., have 4,262 pupils; while there are also schools for the blind, and a staff of twenty-five Bible-women and Scripturer-eaders, with women's classes showing an average attendance of 417. The sum needed for maintenance is £6,000 per annum, and a special £1,000 is asked before June 30.

The Training Institution at Beyrout includes girls of all denominations, the most promising of whom are adopted by friends in England at a cost (each) of £10 or £12 a year. These protégées are under contract to teach, and a great number are now at work in the B.S.M. and other missions. In all the schools the Bible is the foundation of instruction, whatever be the denomination of the pupil.

The most recent extension has been evangelistic work among the Bedouin, and medical work in Baalbec, Damascus, and Tyre, where 4,389 sick people were attended to during the year. Interesting work continues among the soldiers of the Lebanon army, many of whom are searching the Scriptures for themselves.

The offices of the Mission are at 29A, High Street, Wimbledon, S.W.

The St. Vincent Disaster.

DEAR SIR,—All the accounts state that Wallibou was wholly destroyed. I have known the owner, Mr. George Robertson, and his family, for thirty-eight years, and received from him by the last mail an account of their agonizing experiences during those fateful days and nights, when the burning mountain rained fire-balls upon them, the lava and dust burying the sugar and arrow-root works and dwelling house, and covering the land to a depth of from fifteen to twenty feet. The family had a marvellous escape, running under showers of hot mud and stones, wading hot rivers, throwing themselves into frail boats at the seashore, and reaching at last—faint and half dead—a place of shelter.

Mr. Robertson is one of the few planters who, by diligent attention to business and economy, have maintained their position during many years of depression in the sugar industry. But none can stand against the act of God. Three and a half years ago the hurricane swept the estate clean of everything—buildings, crops, trees—and left the land a withered prairie. This brought him to ruin. He was then seventy years of age; but he was a man of pluck and tenacity, the son of a Scotch planter, who knew not when he was beaten. A generous public, in response to an appeal I made on his behalf, helped him to start afresh. He built up rough sugar-works and other necessary buildings, and little by little the land was brought under cultivation. Now the cup is dashed again from the lip. Once more all is gone, and this time the estate itself is destroyed.

Our friend is now seventy-three, but he is a wiry veteran, and he has a son who is one with him, and a real chip of the old block. He has a brave wife, and two intelligent and courageous daughters. They are all ready to begin again. Wallibou is lost; and their only chance is to establish themselves in another and safer part of the island. But they have no means, and only with the help of others can they make a fresh start. It is a worthy Christian family, and any moneys entrusted to me shall be gratefully acknowledged.—Yours very truly,

(Rev.) Slater Sunderland, Wesleyan Minister,
Formerly Missionary in St. Vincent.

A Coronation Guest.

I HAVE just been reading about the arrival of King Lewanika, of Barotseland, who has come to England to attend the Coronation of King Edward VII., and who said on his arrival, "He could not do anything until he had seen the great white King." It made me think of John xii. 20.

"And there were certain Greeks among them that came up to worship at the feast:
"The same came therefore to Philip, which was of Bethsaida of Galilee, and desired him, saying, 'Sir, we would see Jesus.'"

Jesus is the true Great White King. Would that every boy and girl and man and woman were as eager to see Him as Lewanika was to see the King of the British Empire, and could say, "I will not do any other thing until mine eyes see Him." This would be seeking "first the kingdom of God" (Matt. vi. 33).

Jesus is a great King, for "his kingdom ruleth over all" (Psa. ciii. 19). And He is a White King—white in purity, for "in Him is no sin" (1 John iii. 5).

As soon as King Edward heard of Lewanika's desire to see him he graciously appointed an interview. Do we wish to see King Jesus? We need not wait for the great day of his public coronation. He will meet any one of us privately this very day, for He has promised, "Those that seek me early shall find me" (Prov. viii. 17).

Are we black with sin, and therefore unlike the Great White King? He will receive us notwithstanding—yea, He will by a miracle change our blackness, and make us like unto Himself, washing us from sin, till "whiter than the snow."

On coming before the king, Lewanika made a very low obeisance, going through the striking ceremony of his country when receiving royalty. When we come before our heart's King, it must be with humility and submission.

The king received him graciously, and told him, through an interpreter, that he was welcome. Our Lord speaks to us through an Interpreter, the Holy Spirit. Have you heard the welcome of the King in your heart, hushing all fear, and telling of grace and peace? "The Spirit beareth witness with our spirit" (Rom. viii. 16).

In reply, Lewanika said how highly he appreciated the honour of seeing the king, and of being permitted to take part in his Coronation. This honour have all the Lord's guests. They see the King privately to-day; but they are to take part in his great Coronation in the day of his glory, and perhaps then, as at Jerusalem, the children will be to the front, for even to-day—

Around the throne of God in heaven
Thousands of children stand;
Children whose sins are all forgiven,
A holy, happy band,
Singing, Glory, glory, glory.

The black king did not come before "the great white King" with empty hands; he presented him with what he called a small present, a splendid ivory tusk and a rich skin rug. What can we give Jesus? His Word has told us, "My son, give me thine heart" (Prov. xxiii. 26). Then will follow a host of other presents.

The Barotse king was only with Edward VII. about ten minutes. When we come to King Jesus, He bids us abide in his presence. We have "Not a brief glance I beg, a passing word," but a continued audience now and here, and a promise of being presently in his palace home to go no more out for ever.

The papers said Lewanika expressed the greatest gratification at his reception, and said he was now perfectly happy. This, in a far higher degree, is the experience of all who come to the King of Love. Have you ever known anyone who came to Him say they were not satisfied with the reception they received? Never! Please set it up in capitals, Mr. Printer. NEVER!!!

"How perfectly happy." If perfect happiness depended upon seeing any earthly king, many would be shut out from joy; but all and any may have an interview with our King, and we are sure the result will be, "Now I am perfectly happy." Here is the Royal assurance, "Him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out."

William Luff.

Coronation Day.

SHALL you be crowned? Not as the king who is to be crowned Edward VII., God willing, June 26, for that title can only be borne by one, the legal heir to the British crown. But there was one who wrote, even when in prison: "There is laid up for me a crown." Now that crown—"not for me only," as he himself said—may be yours as well as mine (2 Tim. iv. 8, 1 Pet. v. 4, 1 Cor. ix. 25, Rev. ii. 10).

These crowns, too, will last for ever, when all earthly crowns and their possessors have long ago perished. Seek, then, on this Coronation Day, to be yourself crowned with the "crown of life." He, who is King of kings and Lord of lords, is the Giver, and for the sake of the Lord Jesus Christ, who died for you, you may have, if you ask in faith, this everlasting gift.

All hail the power of Jesus' name!
Let angels prostrate fall.
Bring forth the royal diadem,
And crown Him Lord of all.

V. M. C.

"Honour the King."

(1 Pet. ii. 17.)

"Honour all men," saith our God,
"Love the holy brotherhood;
Fear the Lord in everything,
Honour the anointed King."

This, the message from on high,
Sent to every girl and boy;
Thus commanded, Lord, we pay
Honour to our King to-day.

Blest by Thee our thanks we give,
That 'neath British rule we live;
Where thy holy Word is free,
Shedding light and liberty.

Bless our Sovereign, bless our Queen,
On thy strong arm may they lean;
And when days on earth are past,
May they rest in heaven at last.

Lest We Forget (Patriotic Meeting)

(Deut. vi. 10-13; Prov. xxiv. 34).

THE poet has spoken of the Pleasures of Hope. Here the great Lawgiver describes those of memory. The words which stand at the head of this article remind us of Rudyard Kipling's "Recessional" hymn, of which they are the refrain.

There were two ways in which the Hebrews had kept from forgetting. First, because they were always teaching them and speaking of them to their children; they were the constant subject of table talk; they were the commonplaces of the home-life when the family gathered to meals, or walked under the sky, or came home from their labours to rest, or went forth from their rest to work. The whole of the homestead was literally adorned with texts out of the Word of God, but the life of the people was so permeated and penetrated by them that every moment, the life of every hour, might have some verse of Holy Writ quoted for its guidance. How well it would be if we could more often lead the conversation of our homes in such directions, if the Word of God could be more constantly referred to and quoted, and instead of merely having texts upon our walls we would have them written upon our hearts, and embodied in our lives.

It is a good thing when young people especially are taught to learn passages of the Word of God, which they may repeat to their elders. It is good when the memory is stored with passages of Scripture and hymns, which in days of darkness and silence come trooping back to the memory, bearing with them encouragement and strength. Happy are the parents whose minds are well stored with Scripture, and who inspire their children with love for it! Happy are the children whose parents insist upon the weekly tale of verses. It is not difficult for the young memory to retain in those early years of its plasticity. Sunday-school scholars should be specially encouraged to commit to memory verses and papers.

The second way in which the Hebrews were kept from forgetting was by associating God's hand with all the mercies of their life. When they looked upon their cities they were not to think of them as the product of their own skill, but as having been built by others, and given as the direct donation of God for their enjoyment; and when they saw their houses full of all good things, they were bidden to remember that they did not fill them, but received them as they stood from their Almighty Friend. So with wells, vineyards, and olive trees, always they were to bear in mind that these were not the result of their own prudence or labour, but were the direct and undeserved donation of the Eternal God, their Friend.

Similarly it well becomes us to turn from every gift to Him who gave, associating friendships, salaries, homesteads, lucrative businesses, every good and perfect gift, with the Father of Lights, who giveth liberally and without upbraiding. It is a beautiful thing in a Christian home to see the daily rendering of thanks in the family prayer, and in the thanksgiving before and after meals, by which the goodness of God is acknowledged.

The quotation from the Proverbs seems to indicate that if we do not recognise God's hand in the good things of life, we expose ourselves to their withdrawal and withholding. We must choose, however, to recognise God, not because of anything that He may give or withhold, but for his own sake; to thank Him because it is right to thank Him; to praise Him because it is becoming and seemly. The indirect result of this, no doubt, will be that He will trust us with more. But He can only do so if our heart is pure and simple, transparent, and sincere. Above all, let us thank Him for his supreme gift, and never forget that it is through what Jesus Christ did for us in our redemption that we have any claim on Him, and that He is able to treat us as his beloved children.

C.E. NOTES.

Christian Endeavour is advancing triumphantly in Sweden. There are about seventy societies, and more are being organized.

* * *

One of the most welcome telegrams received at the recent Convention in Manchester was that which read, "Italy salutes you." It came from the Italian C.E. Union, which had then only been in existence a fortnight. Already a number of societies are known to exist in Italy, and others will soon be formed.

* * *

There is a flourishing society in the girls' boarding school of Erzeroum, in Turkey, started some years ago with twenty-five members. The committees are actively at work. The Visiting Committee find the poor and sick in plenty, especially since the earthquake. Besides carrying food and medicine they read the Bible to those they visit.

THE GIVING OF MANNA (Ex. xvi. 1-15).
GOLDEN TEXT.—Matt. vi. 11.

THE march of the children of Israel towards the Promised Land is the subject appointed for our present course of study. They took a revered casket with them (Ex. xiii. 19). From being slaves in Egypt, and working under hard task-masters, Israel had been brought in safety through the Red Sea by the mighty hand of God, and had stood freed-men upon its shores; had looked back on its receding waters and the vanquished foe, and joined their voices with Moses in singing his song of triumph and redemption; had known the bitter waters of Marah sweetened for their special use, and drank refreshing draughts from the clear, cool springs under the palm trees of Elim; yet, before six weeks had passed, the same lips which had sung the triumph-song of Moses united in a chorus of murmurs because their stock of grain had begun to run low, and they were journeying in a land where, humanly speaking, it would be impossible to get sufficient food to maintain life.

Better sudden death in Egypt and burial in a grave (a matter of importance to the Israelite) than death by slow starvation, and their bodies left to bleach on the desert sands. Not their first murmur (see xiv. 11 and xv. 24).

Unbelief lies at the base of every murmur. Grumblers have bad memories, short sight, but busy tongues. We have two eyes to see God's mercies and deliverances, two ears to hear his sure promises and commands, but only one tongue. Let us use that for praise and prayer, and not misuse it in murmurings.

The Israelites remembered the fleshpots and the cucumbers, the bread in plenty and the gorgeous tombstones of Egypt, but they seemed to forget the lash (v. 16), and the burdens and the bondage (vi. 5, 6, 7); forget the deliverance (iii. 8), and the sympathy of the Lord (iii. 7), and the land of heritage promised to them (vi. 8). They remembered the food-supplies above the slavery, they forgot the freedom in the scarcity. They could see the circumstances around, but not "the living God" behind the dark outlook. He who had delivered them from from Egypt, and given them the land of promise could surely guide them (xiii. 21) there, and supply their needs by the way. God hears the grumblers (xvi. 7, 8, 12) counts the murmur as directed to Himself (xvi. 8, Num. xiv. 27). He hears the thanks too which go up from grateful hearts (1 Cor. x. 31; 2 Cor. ix. 15). JESUS GAVE THANKS (Mark viii. 6; John vi. 11; Luke xxii. 17, 19; Matt. xxvi. 27; James i. 17).

How much sweeter the manna would have tasted if they had prayed and trusted, rather than murmured for it. The Lord noticed the crumbs (John vi. 12). A discontented people and a merciful God. While Israel was fretting, God was planning for their welfare (read here Matt. vi. 8, 22). Theirs was a great need, for they were many. Six hundred thousand men could not have meant less than two and a half million, including women and children. It is calculated 94,666 bushels of manna was needed each day of the forty years, equal to 1,370,002,600 bushels.

In his long-suffering patience and grace God sent them by miracle the food they needed. Not a confection, but a substantial bread; something which answered to the treatment for cooking which we give to our corn. Ground or beaten, baked or boiled (Deut. xi, 8, Ex. xvi. 23) Manna—"What is it?" A query which has never been answered (Deut. viii. 3), except as Moses replied in verse 15, and John vi. 31. "What is it?" Food for the wilderness. Unasked. Undeserved. Placed within reach of all. Food to sustain life. Enough, but none to spare.

Conditions on which it was available: (1) The people must take by gathering the gift. (2) They must trust for to-morrow's supply. (3) The Giver must be recognised, and (4) his laws obeyed, which were, save none for the morrow, and look for none on the Sabbath. (5) Gather it before the sun was up. The Lord supplied their needs, but not all their fancies (Phil. iv. 19).

The quail (v. 13), a migratory bird common in the East, leaves Syria and Arabia in the autumn, winters in Central Africa, and returns in the spring. After their long flight over the Red Sea would fall exhausted, and so be easily taken. Sent as a luxury, not as a permanent food, like the manna. Another proof that God was with them of a truth (v. 12). The manna was God's appointment, the quails they cried for (Numb. iv. 5).

JESUS THE BREAD OF LIFE.

Who is He? A mystery to all, until He reveals Himself to the soul (John i. 48, 49; Matt. xi. 27; Luke x. 22). The gift of God from heaven (John vi. 32, 33); the "Bread of Life" (John vi. 48, 49, 58); placed within the reach of all (John vi. 37); each must feed on Christ for himself (John vi. 51, 56); early (Mark x. 14; Prov. viii. 5); daily bread (Matt. vi. 11); daily communion with Christ keeps the spiritual life He gives strong and vigorous (John x. 10; 1 John v. 12); Christ never fails his people (John x. 28, 29). Let us trust and thank Him.

Day by day the manna fell;
Oh, to learn this lesson well!
Still by constant mercy fed,
Give us, Lord, our daily bread.

Illustrations of the Lesson.

DAILY SUPPLIES.

"MY house is well made," said a farmer, "for it was built by the day." This is the way in which the best, strongest, and happiest lives are built. They are not constructed "by the job," but one attainment in grace is laid upon another, as are the bricks of a solid house wall. Each day brings its duties to be done, its temptations to be met and conquered, its burdens to be carried, and each day brings as well a sufficiency from above to meet its needs. "I will rain bread from heaven for you, and the people shall go out and gather a certain rate every day" (v. 4).

MURMURING AGAINST THE LORD.

In the spring of each year "hirings" take place in many districts of the north of England, servants being engaged from May-Day to May-Day. It is usual for employers to arrange for the contemplated changes some weeks in advance. There are many servants who love the excitement of leaving their places, and new "masters" are often sought merely because of a desire for change. In becoming tired of Moses, their earthly leader, the Israelites were in reality murmuring against Jehovah, their heavenly Master (v. 8), and but for God's merciful patience and provision the people would have soon regretted their foolish discontent.

MANNA AND THE BREAD OF LIFE.

Not only was the manna promised; the glory of the Lord appeared (v. 10). The bread from heaven had a higher meaning, and symbolized something better than a mere food for the people. While making investigations at Capernaum the Palestine Exploration Society discovered over a synagogue doorway the sculptured marks of a lamb, a candlestick, and other Jewish signs. Above all was a carved pot of manna and our Saviour, who at Capernaum glorified the symbol by referring to himself as the "Bread of Life," may have been prompted to make the remark by a glance at the very doorway discovered in recent years.

GOD'S POWER OVERLOOKED.

On a certain occasion an old Indian was discovered wandering into one of the western settlements of the United States. He begged his way, and greedily devoured the food bestowed by the hand of charity. Someone questioned the old man about a small, dirty pouch hanging round his neck, which he said was a charm given to him in his younger days. On opening the pouch it was found to contain a greasy paper, a discharge from the Federal Army, and entitling the holder to a pension for life. The old Indian did not know that he possessed the means of sustenance; and the children of Israel, in murmuring, failed to realize that the power of Jehovah was already at their disposal for the asking. "Ye shall know that I am the Lord your God" (v. 12).

Welsh Notes.

THE annual meetings of the North Wales Baptist College were held at Bangor on June 11. The number of students entering the beginning of the term was given as twenty-one, all of whom are total abstainers.

At the annual meetings of the Merionethshire Congregational Union, held at Llandrillo, near Corwen, the statistics submitted showed a membership of 5,460 in fifty-four churches; Sunday scholars, 6,444; with 763 teachers.

At the last meeting of the executive committee of the Welsh Baptist Forward Movement, under the chairmanship of Rev. Owen Davies, D.D., Carnarvon, thirty-five applications were received from different parts of Wales for help to start new churches and Sunday-schools, also to build new chapels and school-rooms. Owing to the insufficient funds at their disposal the committee were unable to accede to all the requests made.

Rev. Dr. Pugh, the founder of the Welsh Forward Movement, has now issued his annual report. Certain features of that report have already been referred to in these columns. Among others of equal interest is the account of the Bible van. During nine months ending last March the evangelists in charge of the van held 179 meetings, with an approximate attendance of 30,065. The number of house-to-house visitations during the same period was 14,620.

A correspondent of the Goleuad has forwarded a translation of a report of the mission work carried on by the Roman Catholics at Llanrwst, North Wales. According to the statements made by the two priests in charge of the effort, the chapel erected at Llanrwst is already too small to accommodate the people. That such a mission should be successful in a stronghold of Protestantism cannot but be disquieting, and is surely a call to all lovers of the Protestant faith to awake to the gravity of the situation.

The Welsh Wesleyan Assembly held its annual meetings at Llangollen. In the course of an address by Dr. Davison, president of the English Wesleyan Conference, it was declared that the present problem in Church and State is how to combine and centralize, and at the same time to secure autonomy. Further on, the speaker said that, in order to avoid our work becoming mechanical, personal effort, personal testimony, and especially personal character should be maintained. Ecclesiastical organizations would ultimately pass away, but work supported by character struck a note of the eternal.

The meetings of the Welsh Congregational Union were held recently at Carnarvon. On Monday evening an immense congregation assembled at Moriah Chapel to listen to the Union sermons by Revs. H. M. Hughes, B.A., Cardiff; and D. Adams, B.A., Liverpool. The proceedings on Tuesday were begun by a prayer-meeting at 7 o'clock. Following this were two conferences, the first dealing with the Education Bill. At the afternoon conference the statistics of the denomination were submitted. These showed considerable increase in every direction. In the evening a crowded temperance meeting was held. The speakers were Rev. J. J. Jones, B.A., Llanelly; Dr. Daniel Evans, Hawarden; and Rev. Evan Richards, Tonypandy.

On Wednesday morning Rev. Principal Rowlands, of Brecon Theological College, delivered his presidential address. The subject chosen was, "The Kingdom of God." The learned principal set himself three questions in order to define the principles of the kingdom. These were: "What was Christ's idea of the nature of the kingdom? How far had his idea been held by the Christian world? and By what means were the principles of the kingdom as conceived of by Christ to be extended?" The address contained a strong plea for loyalty to the foundation truths of the Gospel. An able paper was also read by Professor Thomas Rees, M.A. (Brecon) on "The Pulpit and Present Aspects of Biblical Exposition."

Stockwell Orphanage Festival

"ALL goes well at the Orphanage, thank God!" writes Rev. Thomas Spurgeon in a prefatory note to the annual report of the admirable institutions at Stockwell which is so indissolubly linked with the memory of its founder, C. H. Spurgeon. The note of praise thus raised by the president was predominant in the very interesting proceedings at the yearly festival celebrated on Thursday, the 19th inst.

CHRISTIAN AND INTERDENOMINATIONAL.

Covering an area of nearly four acres, in one of the healthiest suburbs of London, the orphanage is admirably planned for keeping up as much of the family spirit as is possible in a public institution, being conducted on the "separate home" principle. Both boys and girls assist in the domestic duties of their respective establishments. Family worship is conducted in each department morning and evening. In the schools, under the experienced direction of Rev. Vernon J. Charlesworth, it is aimed to equip the boys thoroughly for commercial pursuits, while the girls are trained to earn their livelihood as domestic servants in Christian families, or in houses of business. The institutions are, of course, quite unsectarian; children are received from all parts of the kingdom, and selected from the most needy applicants.

The festival was an altogether delightful occasion. The great quadrangular buildings, with their centre expanse of green sward, are admirably fitted for such a function. The houses were thrown open for inspection, and during the afternoon a vast assemblage of visitors expressed high appreciation of the the homeliness of the institutions and the skill of the management. In the centre of the grounds the children sang hymns from time to time, and at a special gathering on a huge platform in the open air, each of the young people was the recipient of a "coronation" Bible.

Speaking at a gathering of friends and supporters in the C. H. Spurgeon Memorial Hall, Rev. Thomas Spurgeon, who presided, said that the work proceeds "on the good old lines"; the melancholy prophecy made in past days that "the work of C. H. Spurgeon would not long survive his departure" has been falsified. The speaker strongly emphasized the interdenominational character of the work.

WISE AND CAREFUL MANAGEMENT.

In the course of a breezy speech, Rev. John McNeill, who followed, spoke in laudatory terms of the institutions, and said that many people might well take therefrom hints in the wise and careful management of children. Mr. McNeill concluded with an eloquent appeal for the support of this truly Christian undertaking.

At the evening gathering the hall was thronged. Mr. G. W. McAlpine presided, and among those who took part were Gipsy Smith and Rev. Charles Spurgeon. While the meeting was in progress, those who preferred the alfresco attractions rallied to the central platform, where musical drills were given and the Orphanage choir rendered religious and patriotic hymns, to the entire satisfaction of a great audience.

Christian Temperance Campaign.

REV. DR. HENRY'S FUTURE MEETINGS.

June 29, Sheffield; July 13, Marylebone Presbyterian Church, 11, a.m. (Dr. Hanson's); July 20-23 and also 27, Bromley, Kent; July 31, Alford, Lincs.; Aug. 1-30, "Edinburgh Castle," Limehouse, E.; Aug. 31, Lincoln; Sept. 4, Louth; 6-9, Taunton; 10, 11, Newport, Mon.; 12-14, Taunton; 15, 16, Llanelly; 18, 19, Dunfermline; 21, Free St. George's, Edinburgh (Dr. Alex. Whyte's); 22-24, Dunfermline; Sept. 26-Oct. 3, Alloa; 4-17, Perth; 18-31, Greenock; Nov. 2-Dec. 4, Ireland (Nov. 2-5, Cork; 6-9, Limerick; 24-Dec. 4, Dublin; other announcements later); Dec. 6-16, Worcester; Jan. 9-15, 1903, Motherwell.

From Ireland to Keswick.—Mr. W. A. Boyd, Secretary of the Dublin Y.M.C.A., is making arrangements for an excursion party to visit the Keswick Convention, and will be glad to hear from friends desirous of joining. The rates will be moderate and early application is desirable. Particulars may be had from Mr. Boyd, 44, Upper Sackville Street, Dublin.

Work Among Our Soldiers.

SIR,—Owing to the bye-laws of the Alexandra Palace, which prohibit all religious services from being held in the building or grounds, the Soldiers' Christian Association has been prevented from carrying on our work there among the Colonial troops, notwithstanding the fact that we had received permission from the military authorities to erect our marquees.

Your readers will be glad to know, however, that through the kindness of the Chaplain-General and the Commandant, General Cooke, our 3,000 specially-bound copies of the New Testament will be distributed to the Colonials at the parade service on Sunday, July 6, when the Archbishop of Canterbury is expected to preach. The supply of specially printed notepaper, which we had provided, will also be given to the men.

Although shut out of the Alexandra Palace, we have been permitted to erect our tent in Kensington Gardens, in the centre of the 9,000 troops gathered there from all parts, and it is being greatly used and appreciated by the men. While our purpose will be largely affected at the Palace in the distribution of the 3,000 Testaments, we have a far wider sphere of usefulness in Kensington Gardens, where we are free to preach the Gospel every night.—I am, dear Sir, yours faithfully,

Sam. E. Burrow, General Secretary.

Portsmouth Seamen.

IT is to be regretted that the financial position of the Portsmouth and Gosport Seamen's Mission is far from favourable. Already the work has been curtailed through lack of funds, but it is earnestly hoped that further retrenchment will be avoided. The Mission was founded in 1853 by the late Mr. Henry Cook, and is now carried on under the superintendence of his widow. At Gosport, evangelistic and social reclamation efforts are put forth at the shore headquarters, while afloat regular visits are paid with Gospel literature and words of cheer to the crews of merchant vessels, yachts, and fishing craft.

Mrs Cook writes:—"On Sunday afternoons it is our joy to see over 200 sailor lads from the training ship, St. Vincent, in our institute, listening to a Bible reading or an earnest friendly talk by a Christian officer or one of the workers. Then on 'leave' days during the week they come and spend most of their time with us; reading, quiet games, and refreshments occupy their time, and many are the opportunities to speak the quiet word, or give the earnest entreaty to make the best use of their time. Many of these lads have said, 'This is a bit of home to come to a place like this.' A Christian mother from the country came last Sunday to see her boy, and said, 'I do thank God for putting it into your heart to care for our boys like this.'"

Friends may communicate with Mrs. Cook at 47, Stoke Road, Gosport.

The Open-Air Mission.

IN connection with the Open-Air Mission, meetings have been held on Saturday and Sunday evenings in High Street, Maidstone, since May 25. Some of the surrounding villages have also been visited in the evenings by Colonel Major, Sergeant Pullinger, and Messrs. Gray and Rayner. Some thirty meetings were held during the past week, and many cases of personal dealing have been most encouraging. The speakers are everywhere welcomed, and the work is to be continued until August 31.

King Lewanika.—The visits of distinguished persons to this country for the Coronation have afforded opportunities for meetings of which the missionary societies have not been slow to take advantage. Among the most interesting of these was a gathering at the Bible House, 146, Queen Victoria Street, on Monday evening, to meet King Lewanika, of Barotsiland, East Central Africa, of which we hope to give some account in our next issue.

About Books.

REV. F. B. MEYER'S "PAUL."

THAT the volume just issued in improved form—Paul, a Servant of Jesus Christ—should have been to the author by far the most interesting of Mr. Meyer's Sacred Biographies, is sufficient to awaken keen expectation on the part of readers of the series. Many have brought together the facts of the life and times of the Apostle, and have made him stand out as probably the greatest man of the Christian centuries. Here we have in addition a searching and helpful analysis of the inner workings of heart and mind. Utterances and writings are made to yield an amount of help on the subject which could be found only by one who was himself deeply taught of God. Our deepest sympathy is called forth by the sufferings and burdens of our great brother-man; but it is with a feeling akin to awe that we realize his tremendous persistence in the face of difficulties, or his power of standing alone in the presence of the enemy. Chapter by chapter the nearness of the invisible Comforter, and the unfailing support which this man of God realized, are not only pressed home as the right and privilege of every believer, but presented in such fashion as to awaken longings that can only be satisfied by a like consecration.

No follower of Christ can read this volume without being helped to see the things of God more clearly, but especially to the young believer who will make a painstaking study of the New Testament with it as a guide, the Acts and Epistles will be made to shed such light on one another as will reveal depths of meaning otherwise hidden. How few even among professing Christians have any clear idea of the distinctive messages of the Pauline Epistles! Yet they are deprived of blessing, and crippled for service, by this very ignorance. Such a book as this will help much in the development of Christian life and in preparation for usefulness.

This volume completes the series of ten in the new style of printing and binding. (2s. 6d. each. Morgan & Scott.)

No 76 of "Books for the Bairns"—I Wish I Were the King—will have fulfilled a useful purpose if the youthful readers give good heed to the lesson.

Valuable lessons for the guidance of believers are drawn in Crowns for Christians, by Jesse Page. The crowns treated of are those of service, suffering, testimony, victory, life. (1s. Marshall Bros.)

Printed in large type, and containing many coloured pictures, A Child's Life of the King will probably meet with some acceptance among young people. The illustrations are of unequal merit. (1s. 6d. net. Heinemann.)

Mr. William Luff has written a thoughtful and eminently Scriptural little work, Our King. A perusal of its pages will help to fuller knowledge and clearer vision of Him whose kingdom is not of this world. (6d. Drummond Tract Depôt.)

The Searchlight Tracts display passages of Scripture and verses of hymns, specially designed to strike the minds of the careless and instruct them regarding the way of salvation. There are eight in the series, and they have been largely adopted for City Mission and general work. (100 assorted for 6d.; 1,000 for 2s. 6d. Gowans Brothers, 8 & 9, Clerkenwell Green, E.C.)

The New Testament division of "The Century Bible" is within sight of completion. The eleventh volume of the thirteen is before us, and is devoted to Ephesians, Colossians, Philemon, and Philippians. Edited by G. Currie Martin, M.A., B.D., it is a good contribution to a series that will prove of great value to students, teachers, and preachers. (2s. each volume. T. C. & E. C. Jack.)

Simplicity of treatment and plainness of speech are characteristics of Rev. Hugh C. Wallace's little volume, After this Manner. Originally preached as a course of Sunday morning sermons, these ten discourses are full of spiritual fervour, as well as practical adaptation to the actual needs of thoughtful minds. They form a freshly-written and suggestive study of the Model Petition. (1s. 6d. net. Stockwell.)

Rev. Thomas Spurgeon has rendered good service to a far wider community than his own congregation by gathering together and publishing a selection of his sermons which have King Jesus as their special theme. The pages of God Save the King sound forth that clear Gospel ring which is associated with all the utterances of the pastor of the Metropolitan Tabernacle. The discourses are practical, pithy, full of homely illustration and appeal, conveying high and noble truths in terse and simple language, and with an earnestness of conviction that will not fail in its issue. (2s. 6d. Passmore & Alabaster.)

Many who have listened to the Gospel, in word and ong, from Mr. E. C. Cuthbert, the singing evangelist, ill welcome the series of "Soul-stirring Strains" hich he has composed. No. 1, "Don't you see the ootprints?" is a song of encouragement for Christian orkers; while No. 2, "Sign the pledge to-night," is persuasive appeal for use at temperance meetings. Vords and music are simple, yet effective. (1d. The uthor, 189, Liverpool Road, Islington, N.)

To read Mr. William Sampson's latest book, Just in ime, is to come into touch with one who well merited ie name by which he is so popularly known, "The ornishman on Fire." In relating his experiences as n evangelist, the author does so with a candour and irectness which hold the attention throughout. Iany who are similarly engaged in promoting the xtension of Christ's kingdom among the masses in the ace of formidable opposition will find in these pages esh stimulns and encouragement, demonstrating as ney do again and again the comforting assurance nat "when a man's ways please the Lord, He aketh even his enemies to be at peace with him." 2s. 6d. Stockwell.)

A fitting companion volume to "The Queen's Re- olve" is Crowned to Serve, by the same author (Rev. has. Bullock). Appearing at so eventful a moment, ie book is eminently adapted for a Sabbath or day- chool reward, P.S.A. prize, or birthday gift. Its eynote is the royalty of service, and, besides being a omprehensive and fascinating biography of the King nd Queen, it illustrates from a general standpoint the ading features and characteristics of regal life in ngland, and the far-reaching privileges and responsi- ilities of Empire. Some sixty illustrations add much o the value and attractiveness of the narrative. 1s. 6d. "Home Words" office.)

Baptism and Regeneration: What is the relation- hip between them? By Werner H. K. Soames, M.A., icar of St. George's, Greenwich. (1s. 6d. Elliot tock). A very thoughtful work from the pen of one ho in recent years has done much to vindicate vangelical views in the Church of England. It were uch to be wished that some of the clergy, who, in the ords of the author, are "hankering after and readopt- ng the long-ago exploded and rejected errors of acerdotalism," would read these papers. If they did ot readily agree with all the author's contentions, ney would assuredly become impressed with his desire o ascertain the teaching of Holy Scripture, and ould thus come under influences that might direct eir minds to conclusions according to the mind of od.

A notable addition has been made to the discussion f the relative claims of religion and science in The onflict of Truth (10s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton), y F. Hugh Capron, who finds in Scripture "not only ie laws and history of matter and motion," but also the nature and characteristics of the universal law f evolution." Dealing with the same problems, Dr. Villiam Woods Smyth supplies, in an enlarged dition of Divine Dual Government (6s. H. Marshall & on), another "key to the Bible, to evolution, and to fe's enigmas," which is also built on the foundation f "the great doctrine of evolution." From a ifferent point of view difficulties in reconciling revela- ion and evolution are treated in The Crown of Science 3s. 6d. Melrose), by Rev. A. Morris Stewart. The eader will, however, find that, though all are evolu- ionists, the three writers use the word evolution ith widely varying shades of meaning.

The current issue of the Westminster Teacher main- ains the former high level. Every section of the school provided for, and the teacher so provided can be very arely at a loss.

A memoir of the late General F. T. Haig has been ompiled by his widow, and will shortly be published by Iarshall Bros. It deals with General Haig's pioneer issionary experience in India, Egypt, and Arabia, and his ork in connection with the Society for Irish Church issions to the Roman Catholics.

An admirable booklet for placing in the hands of young omen is Royal Womanhood in Every Rank, by Alfred S. yer (2d. Kensit, 18, Paternoster Row); to which Mrs. Dyer as added a "Postscript Concerning Certain Consecrated ndian Women," giving interesting information regarding andita Ramabai's work. Both sections are fully illustrated.

Among recent series of pictorial postcards published by aphael Tuck & Sons are "The Connoisseur," "Rough Seas," Sunny Childhood," "Laus Deo"—Peace Souvenir, Rural England," "Marine Studies," "Coronation Sou- enir," "Thames River Scenery," "Britain's King and ueen" (1s. each); also photogravure "Coronation," two ries (1s. 6d. each). These and many more will be wel- ome additions to collections.

The Life of King Edward VII., which forms an extra umber of The Graphic, is especially interesting from the ct that it was written by the late Sir Walter Besant, who nally revised the proofs only a short time previous to his eath. The number is profusely illustrated—all the chief vents of His Majesty's life being depicted by well-known tists. A handsome plate of the King and Queen in their oyal robes is presented with this issue.

The first three of a useful series of four-page leaflets in onnection with the Education Crisis are Appeals for ction, "from our Free Church leaders at the St. James' all Conference;" A Call to Arms, by Alderman George hite; and A Statement of What it Means and What Will Do. (1s. 6d. for 250. "Light of Home," Crane Court, leet Street.) The Light of Home for May contains state- ents likely to prove most serviceable.

Evangelists at Work.

Tent Mission, Sittingbourne.

A FIVE weeks' tent mission has just been concluded at Sittingbourne, Kent, by Mr. Herbert Pont (Evangelization Society). Despite the cold, wet weather, the week-night services have been capitally attended, while on Sundays the tent has been crowded out, numbers being unable to obtain admission. There have been many seeking Christ, while backsliders have been restored.

Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Sims in Cork.

The Gospel effort during the Cork Exhibition, which was continued for five weeks, came to a conclusion on Monday evening, June 16, when a thanksgiving meeting was held. A goodly audience of about a thousand persons gathered. Christians expressed gratitude for help derived in a fuller realisation of salvation, and many others intimated that they had been brought to the Saviour through the mission. The proceedings were hearty and happy, and when Mr. Sims made a forcible and solemn last appeal to sinners to close with the offer of salvation, the deep feeling was intense. Matters were brought to a conclusion by Mrs. Sims singing the much appreciated "Story of a Hymn," which was listened to with rapt attention.

Messrs. Williams and Maxwell in Edinburgh.

The opening weeks of the mission conducted by Rev. E. L. Williams and Mr. H. L. Maxwell at Carrubbers Close Mission, Edinburgh—of which we have already given an account—were crowned with such a measure of blessing that a second series was immediately arranged to follow without a break. The interest deepened as the days passed, and last Friday's assembly showed that the gathering in of sheaves from the harvest field had been real and large. Having read the story of the Transfiguration and Luke xiv. 15-24, Mr. Williams preached with much power on the danger and results of making excuses in spiritual matters. The Gospel as presented in song by Mr. Maxwell was also owned and used of the Holy Spirit in carrying conviction and light to the hearts of hearers. These American brethren have won for themselves many friends among the Christian workers of Edinburgh, who esteem them highly for their work's sake and as vessels meet for the Master's use. R.S.

Countess Schimmelmann's Work.

Describing her recent evangelistic tour on the Continent, the Countess Schimmelmann writes:—"Everywhere the work was blessed, in Denmark, in South Austria, but most of all in Würtemburg. Daily addresses were given there during six weeks, and were largely attended—from 1,000 to 5,000 persons coming together according to the extent of the halls available. At some places the railway authorities had to run extra trains, one of which carried 300 passengers who attracted much attention by singing hymns.

"People from the mountainous districts walked long distances to attend. Sometimes the hall would be filled at one o'clock, although the meeting was not to commence until three. At the conclusion of an afternoon gathering, the people would continue in their seats until the evening meeting.

"Gospel preaching seems to grow scarcer, but souls are hungry for it. All other teaching binds the soul to a yoke, but this makes them free. I have been privileged to see hundreds seeking the Lord Jesus Christ."

Ascot Races.

The Open-Air Mission and the Race Course Mission were in evidence upon Ascot Heath from the commencement to the close of the races. If a reverse was reported at Epsom in answer to united prayer the Gold Cup day at Ascot proved to be a splendid opportunity for the heralds of the Gospel in witnessing for their Master. The crowd beat all records. The commodious grand stands were packed with visitors. The racing standards of spotless white were crowned with golden ornaments. The dresses of the ladies, sheltered beneath their many tinted parasols, added to the brightness of this great carnival.

No Royal Standard, however, was unfurled. Bare poles were the order of the day. The King was not there. "Man proposes, but God disposes." Everywhere the evangelists had free course. Bales of Gospel literature were, for the most part, kindly received. Earnest requests for the marked Testaments were so numerous that as addresses were handed in promises were made for postponed deliveries. Without reference to some special cases, the bread of life cast upon these mighty waters will appear after many days. "Praise ye the Lord." The thanks of the missioners are due to the police of all grades for their courtesy and help all over the field. B. B. W.

Mr. W. R. Lane at Market Drayton.

A mission has just been concluded by Mr. W. R. Lane at Market Drayton. The services were held in the Town Hall. At all the Sunday gatherings the place, which holds close on 1,000 people, was packed. Mr. Lane's meeting for men only was attended by a great crowd of old and young. The week-night services were exceptionally well attended, especially the Friday night address on Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress"; then there was standing room only for a great number.

To the great disappointment of very many, Mr. Lane was unable, through indisposition, to speak on the concluding Monday night, on the story of his own life. Rev. R. Corlett Cowell (Wesleyan), however, very kindly gave a short address. Rev. G. G. MacArthur, the secretary of the Market Drayton Free Church Council, who presided, said he thought they as a congregation ought to convey to Mr. Lane their deep sympathy for him in his illness, and their profound gratitude for the noble service he had rendered them.

The local council are much indebted to Mr. Lane, and to the National Council, for the timely visit. Not only has it deepened the spiritual life of the different Free Churches, but the influence has been felt by very many who are identified with none. It was inspiring to witness the very large congregations who met night after night to listen to Mr. Lane's eloquent words.

The Wesleyans of Ebbw Vale (Mon.) organized a ten-days' mission, which was held in their two chapels, June 7-16. On the first Sunday Bethcar Chapel was crowded, and sixty-eight temperance pledges were taken at the close. Interest in the mission increased nightly, and on Sunday, June 16, James Street Chapel (seating over 1,000 people) was packed, and hundreds failed to gain admission.

A month's mission has been held at Woodford, Essex, in a tent, conducted by Mr. Goudie, of the Evangelization Society. In spite of unfavourable weather the mission was a time of blessing. The meetings were well attended, and about 100 anxious inquirers were dealt with by the workers. The Thursday afternoon Bible readings were seasons of refreshing.

Evangelists' Engagements.

 This column is intended for Missions of some days' duration, not for engagements of a single day. The evangelists ask prayer for their respective missions.

Rev. J. Bennett Anderson.—During June, Belfast (Open Air Gospel Temperance Missions).

Mrs. Baeyertz.—June 29-July 14, Cardiff.

Mr. R. S. Bradbrook.—June 26-29, Croydon (Temperance Hall); July 6, Bishop's Stortford.

Mr. Chas. E. Barraclough.—Till June 27, Chathill, Northumberland.

Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh.—June 29-July 6, Grimsby.

Mr. Geo. Bentley.—Till June 29, Swaffham Bulbeck, with Ross Gospel Tent (No. 1).

Mr. John Coates.—With Ross Gospel Tent (No. 2), till end of June, Dymock.

Mr. Monro Collings.—During June and July, Norfolk Tent Campaign.

Mr. W. D. Dunn.—Till June 27, Dundee.

Mr. James Dixon.—During June, Londonderry.

Mr. William Hill.—During July, Ballyclare, co. Antrim, Ireland.

Mr. J. S. Harrison.—June, St. Giles' Christian Mission; July, Stratford Conference Hall.

Mr. John Hawkins.—June 21-29-July 20, Aberdeen.

Mr. P. Russell Hurditch.—July 5-7, Hastings.

Mr. Newton Jones.—July 9-August 26, Margate (services on sands).

Rev. J. Jameson.—July 5-10, St. John's, Bridlington.

Mr. Herbert Pont.—June and July, Tent Mission, Ashford, Kent.

Adeline Countess Schimmelmann.—Mildmay Conference Hall, July 1-3; Exeter Hall, 16-18.

Messrs. Weaver Bros.—July 6-30, Great Assembly Hall, Mile End, E.

A Somersetshire Village. — Mr. W. T. Brooks, grandson of Johanna Brooks, the "the handmaid of the Lord," whose memoir proved so helpful to Christians of many years ago, has long been carrying on a very interesting work in Somerset. With headquarters at West Buckland, Wellington, it embraces a circle of eight miles in diameter, thus covering a large tract of country between Wellington and Taunton. There are three meeting rooms, in which believers assemble and Gospel meetings are held, with Sunday-school and other agencies. The fellowship numbers about ninety; the number was much larger years ago, before the depopulation of the villages set in. Hundreds of souls have given evidence of conversion, and encouraging success has attended the work among the young. In all parts of the world are to be found men and women whom God called to his service in the out of the way district of West Buckland. The work is well known to Colonel Molesworth, Mr. F. S. Arnot, and others.

An Opening in Egypt.

A BOOKLET bearing the title, "The Nile Mission Press and Christian Literature Society for Egypt, Arabia, and the Soudan," hast just been issued, giving the united opinion of missionaries in Egypt on the desirability of establishing an Arabic Mission Press for the Nile country. There seems to be great unanimity among them on this matter. They believe it would be a power for good.

A publisher with a missionary spirit is wanted to give himself to this branch of work. The printing will chiefly be done by native workers who are familiar with Arabic type, but a man is needed with literary ability who is experienced in the business of bringing out books and papers.

There may be some would-be missionary to whom this will come as a call from the Lord for a life to be devoted to his service. A mission press in these countries is likely to prove a most important factor in the work of bringing the Gospel to the Moslems.

The enterprise is commended to Christian people in England and the Colonies by many whose names are well known, amongst whom we note the following:—Mr. Albert A. Head, Revs. Evan Hopkins, Charles Inwood, H. B. Macartney, Norman Macleod, D.D., F. B. Meyer, F. Paynter, S. A. Selwyn, and Mr. Eugene Stock.

The addresses of the honorary treasurers are given: Mr. Percy K. Allen, Kingsmead, Curzon Park, Chester, Miss E. M. Blackwood, Gogar Mount, Ratho Station, N.B. The honorary secretary is Miss A. van Sommer, Cuffnells, Weybridge.

Irish Notes.

THE past week has been a very notable one so far as public functions are concerned in this country. For example, the ninth annual Conference of the Irish Women's Temperance Union was held at Cork, under the presidency of Mrs. J. H. Murphy, and lasted two days; then the annual meetings of the Irish Congregational Union were held in Coleraine, under the presidency of Rev. D. Samson, when a resolution against the English Education Bill was passed, and also a resolution to reorganize the Irish Congregational Temperance Association; and, further, the annual meeting of the Reformed Presbyterian Synod was held in Belfast, when it was stated that the foreign mission scheme of the Church closed the year with over £400 in hand. Moreover, Rev. F. B. Meyer, President of the Sunday-School Union, London, and Mr. F. F. Belsey, J.P., visited Belfast and addressed a series of largely attended meetings in the Y.M.C.A. in the interests of Sunday-school work; and the annual meeting of the General Assembly's Colportage Association was also held at Belfast, and showed that its colporteurs are doing excellent work through the fairs and markets of Ireland. In addition a new Home was opened, at a cost of £10,500, for the purpose of rescuing fallen women at Ballynafeigh, and the Belfast Prison Gate Mission for Women, which carries on its benevolent work very unostentatiously, held its annual meeting, and showed that sixty women received the benefits of its home at various times during the year. This brief summary shows what a large amount of missionary and philanthropic effort, which the public hardly ever hear, except, perhaps, once a year, is being put forth at present in Ireland.

Picturesque Durham.—It is startling to find another of our Cathedral cities in so many respects far below what we are in the habit of assuming to be the minimum standard of such centres. At a recent meeting in the parlour of the Mayor of Durham, it was stated that in that city there are no fewer than 439 one-roomed homes, there being numbers of cases in which six, seven, eight, and eleven persons live in the one chamber. In "two-roomed houses" a similar condition of things was said to exist, even twelve persons occupying the two rooms. It is inevitable that in such circumstances the infant mortality should be very large, and the medical officer stated that it reached 211 per 1,000 born, or, in other words, only one in four born in the slums survived the first year.

A Haven of Refuge.—Ever foremost in good works, the Earl and Countess of Meath have just added another to the various institutions with which their names are honourably associated. The Brabazon House in Moreton Street, London, S.W., which was opened on the 17th inst., if by no means a charity, will be none the less a blessing to many girls, Civil Service clerks, typewriters, and others, who, without parents or relatives in London, require a friendly happy home. The Countess states that such homes have been her dream for years back, and that in the present one, in which eighty-five inmates can be accommodated, excellent board and residence will be provided for 16s. 6d. per week. She has omitted to say, however, that her own contribution to the work was £2,500.

The Churches.

Church of England.

In response to the appeal of the Dean of Peterborough, and other friends of the Church Missionary Society, for funds to wipe out the adverse balance of £27,603 on last year's working, a sum of over £8,000 has been received.

The Church Pastoral Aid Society is now engaged in distributing a sum of £10,000 in the augmentation of poor benefices. This money was given to the Society by a church layman in commemoration of the Coronation. The grants are assigned in such a manner as to call forth local aid as well, so it is hoped that really substantial relief may be afforded to some of the poorer clergy.

The progress made by Rev. J. G. M'Cormick since he became vicar of St. Paul's, Princes' Park, Liverpool, has been encouraging. The congregation and offertories have increased, and the organization is satisfactory. Mr. M'Cormick asked his congregation to give £600 on a recent Sunday, in the offertory for the improvement of the church. He wished the contributions to be, as far as possible, anonymous. The response was a collection of over £720.

Congregational.

A meeting was recently held in College Chapel, Barkerend Road, Bradford, for the purpose of discussing a proposal of the students of the Yorkshire College to establish a settlement in Wapping, London, E. The meeting was well attended; Dr. Simon, the Principal, occupied the chair. Rev. T. Rhondda Williams delivered a powerful address on settlements, their history and aims. Mr. Griffith John, Mr. Forster, and Mr. A. E. Hutton, M.P., also supported the proposal, and a committee was nominated to carry the scheme forward.

Baptist.

In response to the very earnest appeal of the church and congregation of Victoria Road Church, Leicester, Rev. J. G. Greenhough, M.A., has consented to withdraw his resignation of the pastorate.

The new church at Muswell Hill, erected under the auspices of the London Baptist Association, was opened on Tuesday, 17th inst., amid scenes of deep interest and enthusiasm. Alderman White, of Norwich, presided at the opening ceremony, and Revs. J. H. Shakespeare and Charles Brown took part. The pastor elect is Rev. W. J. Mills.

Methodist.

The Wesleyan work among soldiers at Canterbury has commenced a new epoch with the opening of six rooms for the exclusive use of the soldiers. Since the chaplain (Rev. Richard Hall) was appointed in September last to take up the work at the garrison the whole aspect of affairs has improved. The rooms are situated in an ideal position. A Bible-class has been commenced by Staff-Sergeant Sharp.

Preparations are being made at Lerwick to provide for the spiritual needs of the fishermen and their wives who gather in that district next month for the fishing season, to the number of 15,000. The Wesleyan Home Mission Committee is sending Mr. Raymond Preston, Connexional Evangelist, to conduct services; and Rev. Thomas Champness has appointed Miss Hall, of the Joyful News Mission, to look after the women.

There has recently been formed "The London Wesleyan Methodist Choir Union," the chief objects of which are to improve the singing of choirs, and render mutual help at various Church festivals. The first festival of the Union was held on Monday week at Wesley's Chapel, City Road, chiefly to show those responsible how much more attractive the singing would prove if the ideals of the Union were adopted. Nearly 1,000 choristers were assembled, and a sermon was preached by Rev. C. H. Kelly.

The London Wesleyan Mission is now seeking to establish its beneficient work in another needy district. An aggressive movement at Deptford has long been contemplated, and at last the scheme has been set on foot. The freehold site secured for the buildings is a very prominent one. It is proposed to erect a large and attractive hall, seating 1,650, a secondary hall (with ample provision for Sunday-school work), and fourteen large rooms for the varied operations of the mission. The total outlay will be about £26,000.

The anniversary of the combination of extensive Wesleyan circuits, known as the Wilts Mission, was held at Devizes and proved to be a day of much blessing. In the morning the ministers and staff of the Mission met together for mutual intercourse and consultation. The energetic superintendent of the mission, Rev. S. Wilkes, speaking at the public meeting, outlined a scheme which will involve an outlay of £20,000 during the next five years. This sum would cover a number of undertakings, such as the clearance of the debt on the chapel at Devizes, and building new churches at Chippenham, Corsham, Westbury and Tetbury.

Presbyterian.

Rev. James Lees, for thirty years minister of the St. Andrew's Church, Oxford Street, Manchester, has informed the Manchester Presbytery of his intention to resign the charge in September.

Lord and Lady Aberdeen on Saturday afternoon last laid the memorial stone of a new church which is being erected at the corner of Finchley Road and Frognal Lane, Hampstead, N.W., to accommodate 750 worshipers. There was a large and representative gathering, including the Mayor and Mayoress of Hampstead, and Revs. Dr. J. Monro Gibson and C. Anderson Scott, Moderator of the Presbytery of London North.

The forty-second anniversary of the opening of Wallace Green Church, Berwick-on-Tweed (Rev. J. A. Irvine, B.A.) was held on June 15, when the services were conducted by Rev. Dr. John Watson, who preached to large congregations both morning and evening. In the evening the preacher, taking for his text "This people's heart is waxed gross," delivered an address on the "Coarsening of Ideals—national and personal," and made a stirring appeal for a return to simpler and more religious habits.

After a prolonged vacancy, St. George's, Newcastle, is soon to welcome a new minister. Rev. J. D. Dowie, M.A., is leaving his charge at Houghton-le-Spring, which he has been instrumental in resuscitating, to undertake what will be an arduous enterprise. St. George's has removed to a new site at Akenside Terrace. There will be a new church to build, and the congregation is not larger than what makes a fair nucleus. Mr. Dowie has been appointed, also, to act as Moderator of Houghton-le-Spring during the vacancy.

Society of Friends.

In connection with Munster Quarterly Meeting at Limerick a social meeting was held at the house of Joseph Bennis, and was devoted to the consideration of the state of the Society in the south of Ireland, an interesting and earnest discussion resulting. The desirability of Friends visiting small meetings more frequently was expressed.

By kind invitation of Dr. William and Hannah Wilson a representative company of about sixty Friends recently met together at breakfast to greet the three Friends from Ohio who are on their way to East Africa for missionary work—Willis R. Hotchkiss, Arthur B. Chilson, and Edgar T. Hole. After a time of Bible-reading and prayer, addresses were given by the three visitors and other Friends. Other visitors included Dr. W. N. Whitney, of Japan; Henry H. Swift, of New York State; and William Cooper, of Sydney.

In connection with the morning meeting for worship at Burley Road, Leeds, which averages about thirty in attendance, a gathering for members and attenders was held lately. It was decidedly inspiring and instructive. After a time of social intercourse, a meeting was held at which many points of Quaker practice were dealt with in a very helpful paper by Henry Harris, of Esholt. Many Friends took part during the evening; the need for faithfulness in the ministry, for purity of heart and life, and for mental cultivation being spoken to. "We separated with a desire that even a small branch meeting, such as ours, may take its place among the many others where, because each member seeks 'reverently to present himself before the Lord,' and the power of the Spirit is realized, all are enabled to go forward, letting their 'lights shine in lives of honest industry and patient love.'"

The National Protestant Federation has called the attention of the King to the action of the bishops of Bath and Wells, Ely, and Bristol in issuing "dispensations from fasting" on the day of the Coronation. The committee points out that the issue of such dispensations on the part of these bishops is both illegal and unscriptural.

Protestant missions are being vigorously conducted by the Wickliffe preachers in Berkshire, Gloucestershire, and Liverpool. Mr. John Kensit has been most favourably received, and violent opposition has entirely ceased. The preachers report that priestcraft is rampant in many villages, and the poor people listen with great attention to faithful Gospel preaching.

Fallen Asleep.

Aged sixty-six, Mr. GEORGE CARTER, senior deacon of the Baptist church at Shooter's Hill Road, S.E., was suddenly removed to glory on Saturday morning last.—Mr. F. LEAH, who had been a member of the Baptist Church at Bishop's Stortford for seventeen years. From the beginning his chief work was in the Sunday-school.—Rev. R. G. W. TUCKER, rector of St. Nicholas, Colchester. Mr. Tucker was an enthusiastic supporter of the C.M.S., the C.P.A.S., and the Bible Society. He was clear and decided in his Evangelical views. He was always ready to rejoice when he saw the Lord's work done by whatever agency, and quick to perceive the grace of God in others, especially in young Christians.—Mr. OBED HOSEGOOD, a prominent Wesleyan Methodist of Bristol. On more than one occasion he was a lay representative to Conference, and in 1891 he was appointed a representative to the Œcumenical Conference in America. Mr. Hosegood was a generous supporter of religious and philanthropic movements.—Aged thirty-nine, Rev. Professor ANDREW HALLIDAY DOUGLAS, who resigned his pastorate of St. Columba's Church, Cambridge, last summer to undertake tutorial duties at Knox College, Toronto.—Rev. GEORGE HOBSON, aged sixty-three. He entered the Wesleyan ministry in 1860, being sent at once to Shetland, in which district he spent, though not continuously, eight years of his ministerial life, the rest being passed in Scotland and the North of England. Mr. Hobson was appointed to Saddleworth in 1900, but retired last year.—On May 4, at Denver, Col., U.S.A., Rev. WILLIAM DAVIS, who was well known in South London as a Christian worker in connection with Peckham Rye Tabernacle and other Baptist churches. He went to Denver in 1890, and soon was brought out into special work among the Congregational churches. He was ordained as pastor of Olivet Church, Denver, in 1892. He was highly esteemed as a man of God and a remarkably clear teacher of the Word. Of late years he has been assistant to Rev. Addison Blanchard, of Denver.—At Worthing, Rev. JONATHAN LEES (L.M.S.), formerly of Tientsin. Mr. Lees, who was one of the Society's best-known Chinese missionaries, spent nearly thirty years in Tientsin, and was a distinguished scholar. He returned to England in 1900.

Personalia.

Rev. JESSE MAYO tenders his thanks for the kind sympathy of Christian friends on the sad occasion of the death of his eldest son.

MR. CHARLES COOK has removed from Shepherd's Bush, W., to 11, Walpole Gardens, Chiswick, W.

Mr. Will R. Moody advises us of the hope of Mr. C. N. HUNT (Minneapolis, Minnesota) to arrive in Great Britain in July, on a visit of about four months. Mr. Hunt was formerly a successful lawyer; at personal sacrifice he has become an evangelist, his work having been richly blessed at many centres.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for THE CHRISTIAN should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for THE CHRISTIAN by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "THE CHRISTIAN" POSTAL DEPARTMENT, BOUVERIE HOUSE, SALISBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

"God Save the King!" The prayers which day by day thousands of men and women throughout the Empire were putting up for the Divine blessing upon the King have now been intensified by the deep sorrow which has fallen upon the Royal household. Once again faith has expressed itself in supplication for the life of the present sovereign, and it can rest calmly upon the working of the will of God. As a thoughtful writer in one of the daily papers has said, "Thirty years ago, the Christian world tested triumphantly the power of prayer," and despite the foolish sneers of the Huxleys of each succeeding generation, it is to intercessory prayer that the noblest and best life of the nation turns in the times of its deepest trouble. England has again been upon its knees, for "the things that come alike to all" (Ecc. ix. 2); bridge the distance between the palace and the cottage, and emphasize the oneness before God of human life in all its diversities. We have learned in many ways that even ill that God blesses turns to good.

Our Humbled Pride. On pages 11 and 12 we give thoughts on "God's Call to the Nation," and an account of some of the many meetings of Intercession for the King. To all loyal subjects the past week has been one of great mental strain; to Christian patriots it has been a season of much heart-searching. God give us grace, individually and nationally, to learn the lessons of humility and righteousness; then, in due time, we shall praise Him for His manifest goodness in permitting deep affliction to come upon us as a people. We have reason to be encouraged in view of the gracious dealings of our God. The door of amendment is yet open to us, and avenues of service are still afforded us. Only let us cast aside self-sufficiency and a haughty spirit, that we may be of a mind to repent and ready to serve. "The Lord of hosts hath purposed it, to stain the pride of all glory" (Isaiah xxiii. 9).

The Influence of Christian Kings. If some of the German newspaper editors knew what was good for them, they would be exceedingly grateful that the Kaiser has set up so high a moral standard for his people. The exhortations to which his Majesty has, from time to time, given utterance, are worthy of a better reception than the covert sneering which, more than once, has been accorded to them. But Christian men everywhere may well be thankful for such a speech as that which he delivered a few days ago at Aix-la-Chapelle. It was Imperialistic in the finest sense, for it recognised throughout the fear of God as the true ruling principle for any nation. That one sentence, "He who does not found his life upon religion is a lost man," should become classic. Not Germany alone, but the civilized world benefits by such royal confessions of faith.

Day in the Country. It is a truism to say that hot weather places a special strain on the health of all, but this state of affairs is accentuated in the case of the dwellers in city courts and slums, for whom there is so little brightness in life. To those surrounded by fresh, pure air, the summer is a season of reinvigoration and upbuilding, and it is well that they should be reminded of the many who enjoy no such privilege. The importance of the "Day in the Country," and other similar efforts cannot be over-estimated. Many appeals are reaching us, and every week is precious. Will our readers enable us, as in former years, to continue this much-needed benefaction?

A Great Preachers' Testimony. From the quiet of his sick chamber, Rev. Dr. Parker sent a timely message to the service of intercession for the King, held in the City Temple on what should have been Coronation Day. His words should especially appeal to ministers of the Gospel:—

> If I rise again, and I am permitted to lift up my voice in public, I shall be more intensely and pathetically Evangelical than ever. If I were speaking as a literally dying man, I would exhort my brethren never to omit an opportunity of declaring the infinite grace and complete priesthood of Jesus Christ. I join with you all most heartily in praying for the King in this the midnight of his life. When he becomes the chief lay preacher of the nation, these islands will become true jewels of the sea.

This reminds us of the heart's desire of Dr. Dale, of Birmingham. When looking back upon a long and fruitful ministry, he wrote:—

> It seems to me sometimes that I am only just beginning to catch a faint glimpse of the glory and power of the redemption which God has wrought for us through the Incarnation, Death, Resurrection, and Ascension of our Lord Jesus Christ. If, through God's grace, I am allowed to preach for a few years longer, I pray that I may be able to serve you—if not with greater energy, for this I cannot hope for, yet with a clearer knowledge of the Gospel of Christ, and a deeper concern for your salvation than in the years which have gone by.

"Salvation by Education." Mr. Holt Schooling, who has such a genius for presenting statistics in the most striking manner, has an article in a contemporary which may do something to silence those agitators who are seeking to show the completeness of a purely secular education from which all religion has been carefully excluded. These secularists, who possess an unreasoning hatred against Christian teaching, affirm always that "education" is sufficient of itself to banish crime and violence; and they seek to prove their contention by an appeal to the reduction in the number of crimes of violence, &c. One thing, however, they have omitted to state, i.e., that if the forms of crime have altered, crime itself flourishes in other forms amongst the educated. Mr. Schooling shows by statistics, that fraud, which requires some education to carry out, has largely increased during recent years. Ordinary crimes have decreased by 10 per cent.; but fraud has increased by 38 per cent., and, as the writer says, whilst a crime may injure only one person, a fraud may injure thousands. The friends of "salvation by education" should seriously ponder these facts. Education may make sin less violent and more "refined," but it does not remove it from the soul.

The Value of Dogmatism. We are glad to think there are signs that the invertebrate attitude towards definite Christian doctrine, which has been popular in certain religious circles for so long, is losing its charm. It is quite a marked feature of late that great emphasis has been laid by prominent men upon the necessity of dogmatic teaching, as opposed to the easy-going spirit that accepts darkness equally with light. A few days ago Dr. Forsyth told a large audience of students that their ministry would be no use unless it was both certain and dogmatic. Professor James also, in his recent lectures on psychology, laid great stress upon the same point. The attacks of such men upon the laissez faire spirit will do something to rob it of its fascination. The human heart craves for certainty; the Gospel is a Gospel of certainty, and they who preach it must, therefore, be dogmatic. Scientists and philosophers are dogmatic enough upon the facts of the moment, which, later, may be disputed and re-arranged. Christian teachers have far greater reason for firmness, for their proven facts are beyond dispute. Yet must our dogmatism be not fanatical, but intelligent. (See "WHAT IS A CHRISTIAN?" page 13.)

The Pathos of Agnosticism. There is something pathetic beyond description in the confessions of a deep soul need, which Secularists and Agnostics so often utter. Not long ago we referred to the passionate yearning for immortality which Mr. Holyoake expressed to an interviewer. Now, the leader of the Agnostics, Mr. Herbert Spencer, in a recently published book, which he announces as his last, allows to escape the desire of his heart, which his philosophy eternally contradicts. It is an old man's word, voiced thus:—

> It seems a strange and repugnant conclusion that, with the cessation of consciousness at death there ceases to be any knowledge of having existed. With his last breath it becomes to each the same thing as though he had never lived. . . . It (our consciousness), we can only infer, is a specialized and individualized form of that Infinite and Eternal Energy . . . and at death its elements lapse into the Infinite and Eternal Energy whence they were derived.

And to counterbalance the "strange and repugnant conclusion" that death ends all, Mr. Spencer consoles himself with refuge in . . . energy! It is pathetic to those who have experimental knowledge of the living God to see a human heart struggling against the overbearing power of an hypothetical philosophy.

The New South Africa. Mr. Bennet Burleigh's correspondence, from which we give an excerpt on page 12, seems to bring the New South Africa very near. During the years of conflict, the Lord's remembrancers have given Him no rest regarding the future of the lands in which, by His providence, British and Dutch live side by side. Can we not see the hand of the Lord in the progress of settlement? Let us not be slack in praising Him. In view of the political outlook in the territories which so recently were the scene of bloodshed and distress, we may invoke the rich blessing of God upon those agencies and workers who are prepared with plans for evangelistic endeavours, carried out on a large scale, in various parts of South Africa.

The Latest Death-Roll. Up to the date of the happy proclamation of peace, we had lost from all causes during the War in South Africa no fewer than 1,072 officers and 20,870 men, and the number of those who have succumbed to disease is still being added to day by day. Yet there are those who strive to tone down those terrible figures by stating that in proportion to the hugeness of the army employed, the loss is vastly smaller than that of the Crimean War, who refer glibly to the dread possibilities of a coming war with certain European powers, and find unemployed armaments a source of home danger. Well may earnest prayer ascend day by day to the Prince of Peace, "to whom all power is given in heaven and on earth," to grant us continued peace in our time.

The Returning Army. Lord Roberts' appeal on behalf of those whom he terms "my comrades," unhappily is based upon the experience of previous welcomings, for, as Bishop Ryle said a few Sundays ago, "the English notion of festivity mostly runs to drink," and it is too much the public habit to degrade the soldier by mistaken and ill-judged kindness. In view of the fact that we shall soon have fifty or sixty thousand returned soldiers in our midst, something practical should be done to take from the welcome as far as possible that element of drunken festivity which has been a shame and disgrace upon previous occasions of the kind.

The Farnham Victory. Temperance workers have watched, with the greatest interest, the struggle between the "trade," and the Farnham magistrates who had the courage to oppose themselves to its encroachments. The Appeal Court has upheld their action, and the deliberate judgment given by the Master of the Rolls puts it beyond doubt that local licencing magistrates are fully empowered to exercise their discretion as to the number of licences necessary for a locality. The "trade" acts upon the presumption that it exists for its own ends; His Majesty's judges have decided that the benefit of the public at large is the first item for consideration. We may be very thankful, therefore, for the reiteration of this principle, and we trust that the fullest use will be made of it elsewhere. It is of no use for magistrates to be timid over the drink question; justice and firmness are needed, and if these were more scrupulously exercised than they are at present, we should soon see some startling results in many quarters.

The Brewer's Mite. So much is said in regard to the generosity of the huge brewing firms that it is quite startling to find from some figures in a Board of Trade return that the drink manufacturers do less for their work-people than perhaps any other trade. For each £100 of value produced, its workers receive only £7; whereas the shipbuilders pay £37. Perhaps, however, the brewer and the distiller may reasonably claim to be the cause of so much outlay in the building of prisons, asylums, and workhouses at the cost of the nation, that the smallness of their direct contribution to the revenue of the labouring classes ought to be pardoned!

Boys and Militarism. We confess to some degree of sympathy with the criticisms which have been recently passed upon certain features of the Boys' Brigade movement. We are bound to admire the attempt made to bring boys under the spell of healthy discipline; it is far better in every way that they should learn to obey and to submit themselves to exercises whose tendency is to develop manliness, than that they should become loungers at street corners, idlers, and ne'er-do-wells. It has been said of the Boys' Brigade that, "so far from teaching the lads to fight, it takes the fight out of them." In a sense this is true, and so far, so good. But after all, instruction in war is instruction in killing, and people to-day need no encouragement in that art. The duties of firemen, sailors, &c., present a fruitful study for those who would, through discipline and drill, aim at effecting real good amongst boys. We should like to hear less of the sword and the gun, and more of the plough and the life-saving apparatus, in these brigades.

A House of Merchandise. In the compact little volume recently issued by the Free Church Council, wherein all questions concerning legal matters which affect church work are dealt with, Mr. Rawlings calls attention to the fact that raffles, where goods are disposed of by tickets, and "fishponds" or "bran-tubs," where the prizes are of uncertain value, come within the Lottery Acts. The promoters of some church bazaars, perhaps, do not understand this; but it is well that they should know it, since what they often permit at bazaars is illegal, to say nothing of the moral question. We should be glad to see the reproach, often so justly made against these methods of raising money, entirely swept away. The house of prayer should not be turned into a house of merchandise where money is obtained in any manner.

The Two Poles. The recent charge given by the Archbishop of York is a noteworthy one in several respects, but chiefly owing to the plain and unmistakeable language in which he dealt with the question of Reservation of the Sacrament. The Archbishop, after pointing out incidentally that there is no mention of Reservation in the Scriptures, that the teaching of the New Testament "had in view far more a holy life than a happy death," asserted that the Prayer Book instructions recognised and provided for "the social character of the Eucharist":—

> It was an inherent and important feature in the ordinance itself from the day of its institution. Even in the extremest cases of plague or any contagious sickness, if there were no other communicants, the priest himself was required to communicate with the sufferer. The idea of solitary masses, or of such Communions as accompanied the reserved Sacrament, were alien to the very spirit of the Holy Sacrament itself.

The Term "Catholic." The Archbishops and Bishops of the Church of Ireland have issued an official protest against the usurpation by Romanists of the term "Catholic" as applied exclusively to themselves. The manifesto says in part:—

> This is not a mere question of names and words. The catholic character of the Gospel of Jesus Christ and of the society which He founded, is one great feature which distinguished Christianity from all other religious systems. Christ's Church is universal or catholic in the fullest sense of the term; its mission is to all; its membership includes persons of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues.

Appeal is therefore made, "whenever the need arises to speak of Roman Catholics, whether in public or in private, to give them their proper designation of Roman Catholics, and not to speak of them as 'Catholics.'"

The late Mr. George Pearse. Many of our readers, the older especially, will learn with chastened interest of the death, at an advanced age, of Mr. George Pearse, who for many years rendered devoted service to the cause of foreign missions. Our departed friend, who was in early life on the Stock Exchange, gave himself with characteristic zeal to the Lord's work in France and in North Africa; and it was the investigations in Algeria, which he began in 1880, which led to the formation of the North Africa Mission. For a few years past he had resided in England, and the home-call came on Sunday last at Hastings. His widow was well known as Miss Jane Bonnycastle. She shared his practical interest in missionary operations, and did valuable work among soldiers in France. We hope in an early issue to give a sketch of Mr. Pearse's useful career.

The Church and Foreign Missions.

BY "the Church" we mean all who "love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity and truth." From the papers in THE CHRISTIAN under this heading lately, those who have read them carefully will have no doubt put up many a prayer to God, that the Church as a whole may indeed be raised up to realize her solemn responsibility in this the greatest of all subjects, and let us all continue to do so.

The suggestions put forward by the writer of them were admirable, and now it remains for the servants of Christ who have read them, to see what they can do. This is the point: What can I do? Let us everyone apply this question in a peculiar sense to OURSELVES, before God in our private rooms; let us lay this momentous matter of the evangelization of these dying millions, month by month, before the Lord of the harvest with much concern. Let us be desperately in earnest, since we profess to love Him, for the dying masses in India, China, Africa, and the wide world over; let us one and all set apart a time daily to plead with God to "thrust forth labourers into His harvest." This is the very beginning and secret of all true success in the Master's service; so shall we not begin at once in our closets? For He "seeth in secret," and it is there the greatest victories the Church has ever seen have been won, when the individual believer puts Jehovah "in remembrance, pleading together"—let us ponder the word—proving himself, or herself, the "priest of the Lord." Then it is that the blessing comes.

Well do I remember, in 1885, travelling with that saint of God, the beloved Mr. Reginald Radcliffe. Visiting some towns in the North, holding meetings for foreign missions, he said, "Let us get down before the Lord, for there is the source of power," and down on our knees we would get, pleading with Him for definite blessing on the work we were engaged in. Mr. Radcliffe's burden was world-wide evangelization, and who shall say how much the Church as a whole does not owe to his prayers and efforts! He believed in each one getting to work on our knees, humbled with a sense of the gross neglect of our stewardship; and this is what we would now solemnly urge upon every reader of these lines. "Oh, that Thou wouldest come down, that the mountains might flow down at Thy presence!"—these huge mountains in the churches of indifference, lukewarmness, and unbelief! "All things ARE possible to him that believeth"; therefore let it not be said of us, "There is none that calleth upon Thy Name, that stirreth up himself to take hold of Thee!" (Isa. lxiv. verses 1 and 7). NOW is the time to betake ourselves to fasting and prayer! May we one and all do so in very deed! Then of a truth we shall see "greater things."

W. HOPE GILL.

God's Call to the Nation.

GOD is unmistakably speaking to the English people. A man must be both blind and deaf who fails to see and to hear in the events of the last three years the hand and the voice of Him who is King of kings and Lord of lords.

When the war broke out in South Africa thirty-three months ago, the mass of the people entered into it in a spirit of rollicking bravado, relying solely upon the arm of flesh. Then came the first humiliations and the sense of soreness. For a time we prayed to the God of Heaven for succour, and the nation paused. But at the relief of Mafeking it was apparent that we had not deeply taken to heart the lesson which had been so painfully forced upon us. God and prayer were all banished from life, and the old bragging returned.

Then the Queen died, and again the country was sobered; too soon, however, to resume the old ways. These recent events have shown that, for the many, the lessons of the past three years have been practically thrown away. In every way, by shame, and loss, and weakness, our lack of moral fibre and force has been brought home to us. And with what result? To their credit, be it said, there has come into the hearts of many a deeper sense of responsibility than ever, with a profound yearning that the nation may shake itself from the dust and put on its beautiful garments. But to the disgrace of more, it has to be said, that they seem to have experienced no compunction whatever at the thought of the ills from which we suffer. The mad game goes merrily on, as if there were no fifty thousand mothers' sons lying buried on the veldt, and there had been no reverses, no humiliations. Not a race has been curtailed, not a bet withheld, nor a pleasure abandoned, on account of the sorrows of the nation. The publicans are brazen as ever, our drink traffic increases rather than diminishes, and all who have called the country to consider its ways have been pilloried as fanatics or fools.

The country as a whole has learned none of the lessons which have been taught in the school of adversity. The proclamation of peace wiped out all sorrowful memories, and the Coronation opened the way for the completion of our hilarity. And now "the bolt from the blue" has come. Within forty-eight hours of the great event for which men and women had assembled from the uttermost parts of the earth, at the moment when our pride was about to be crowned, God spoke again.

The King lies prone with a serious illness. We offer him our respectful sympathy, and we pray for his speedy recovery. But why the stroke at the particular moment when it came? There is a God of nations, as well as a God of individuals, and we cannot regard it as a "coincidence" that this moment of our national splendour was the moment of this great collapse and disappointment. A royal illness at an ordinary moment is sufficiently alarming, but a sudden collapse at this moment, when all the world is looking on with admiration and expectation, is not to be put amongst "coincidences." It is the voice of God to us, and this time we have been compelled to listen. Our pride has been touched, our splendour laid low, and we have seen that, after all, we are but men. When the Coronation comes off, it is impossible that the same splendour can attend it—the spell has been broken.

What is the nation to learn from this visitation? Is it really necessary to say? We have too long trusted in our might and in our splendour; we have been proud and haughty. We have treated the world as if it were ours by right, forgetting that it is owned by Another. We have gone mad over pleasure and money-making; creating millionaires on the one hand, whilst on the other we have permitted the tyranny of landlordism to override the sentiments of justice, and to offer the abominable spectacle of human beings crowded together in conditions worse than those offered to cattle.

Above all, we have quietly, politely, but firmly dispensed with God and His worship. We do not longer deny Him—blatant Atheism is out of date—but we ignore Him. And for all this God has something to say to us. He is speaking to us paternally, but clearly. Will the nation have the sense to understand? If not, then after the rod will come the fire and burning. If love will not cure us, then wrath will befal. May God give to the people the wisdom that will understand and turn their hearts to Himself!

Intercession for the King.

AMID the excitement attendant on the Coronation arrangements, while the public mind was concentrated on matters of pomp and ceremonial, festival and pleasure-making, it was well that Christian people should hear the call to prayer for the well-being, in the truest sense, of King and Empire.

The meetings for Intercession observed at several important centres would assuredly have been timely had the programme of national celebration run its expected course; they were rendered all the more solemn and impressive by the knowledge that the King lay stricken and suffering. The hush of God was upon the assemblies.

THE SICK-ROOM AND ITS LESSONS.

A vast audience, reverential and prayerful, came together at the service held on Thursday last at St. Paul's Cathedral. A striking feature was the presence of many holders of tickets for the Coronation Service, which was, of course, to have taken place at Westminster Abbey on the same day. The Bishop of London preached a powerful sermon.

At the City Temple, E.C., a crowded service was held. Dr. Parker, from his sick-room, sent a touching message, and Rev. Dr. Horton, in a spirit of loyal affection, spoke of sickness as "a greater sacrament than coronation." In a moving passage of his address, the speaker said that things are learned in the sick-room that cannot be learned amid the pomp of ceremonies. "It may be, in the goodness of God, that King Edward will emerge from his sick room anointed with the oil of gladness, because a Divine and Gracious Spirit has touched his heart."

Lord's Day last was observed throughout the country as a time of intercession, and in spite of the hot weather very large congregations were general. The Queen and the Prince and Princess of Wales attended Marlborough House Chapel, where an impressive service was conducted by the Bishop of Winchester. In the course of a telling address at Christ Church, S.E., Rev. F. B. Meyer said that men from all parts of the earth, gathered in London, have been taught in a dramatic way the old, old lesson, "vanity of vanities." God has said to the English nation, and to all the nations of the earth who have sent their representatives and embassies: "You have not taken Me into account."

AT QUEEN'S HALL.

For Wednesday last a day's meetings at Queen's Hall, W., for "Intercession and Conference" had long been arranged. Under the altered conditions, there was assuredly an increase of earnest attention and prayerful spirit.

The proceedings began at 7 a.m., when a prayer meeting was conducted by Rev. F. S. Webster, and Rev. F. B. Meyer gave a deeply spiritual address to a large gathering. One of the most notable features of the occasion was the forcible array of Anglican and Nonconformist speakers, uniting as brethren in voicing the call of the Church of God to the people of the land.

A vast audience assembled for the 11 o'clock meeting. The subject announced was "Personal Consecration"—"that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith." The Bishop of Ripon, who presided, said that we have received a significant reminder of the evanescence of the joys of the world; rejoicing has given place to the deepest solicitude, and our thoughts are all of suffering; yet affliction and anxiety shall help to bring about a manifestation of the works of God among us. Linking this thought with that of individual consecration, Dr. Boyd Carpenter urged a translation of mere orthodoxy of belief into personal self-denial, so dedicating time and talent and opportunity, that every gift, sorrow, and anxiety may be co-operant with our Lord's will in working out blessing for others.

With much tenderness, Rev. Dr. Monro Gibson dwelt on the thought, regarding both monarch and people, that "the mighty God, even the Lord, hath spoken." For the King, God visits him, not in the splendour of a Westminster Abbey function, but in the cloud. For the people, we are reminded that while we sing, "Lest we forget," we are always forgetting. Are there not gods of gold among us? Are we loyal to our Lord? Does not the nation seem to grow more and more indifferent to the things of God? "Let not our prayer for revival be a thing of a day; let each one plead, 'Anoint me, O God,' as we pass under this shadow of visitation."

The dangers of spiritual "maladies within" were touched upon by the next speaker, Bishop Taylor Smith (Chaplain-General), who also led his hearers to think of the might and ability of the Great Physician. Prebendary Webb-Peploe, who followed, added cogent words on the two-fold aspect of consecration, (1) separation from evil, (2) the yielding of our all to God. Rev. J. Gregory Mantle, in the closing address, applied the parable of the potter and the clay (Jer. xviii. 6) to the present position and needs of the nation.

Rev. Evan H. Hopkins, Rev. J. Tolefree Parr, and Mr. Albert A. Head also took part in the meeting.

OUR IMPERIAL RESPONSIBILITIES.

For the afternoon meeting, the building was crowded with a reverent and prayerful audience. The Bishop of London, looking at our imperial responsibilities as a people, said that God has assuredly called us (1) to be apostles of freedom and right government; (2) to realize the responsibility which lies in the fact that "Englishman" and "Christian" ought to be synonymous terms; (3) that we are "put in trust with the Gospel." We are to take the glorious tidings to every land. In view of these important truths, we must purge ourselves of such evils as the drink curse, the "white slave" traffic, apathy with regard to missionary work, laxity in the observance of the Lord's Day, and forgetfulness of God. The speaker concluded with an earnest appeal for unity of purpose and labour in "keeping the heart of the Empire God-fearing and holy."

An impressive address followed from Rev. Principal Rainy. "All we are spared, and the Divine hand is laid upon the one person who was absolutely indispensable to the great ceremony that was to have been performed. Such a call has rarely visited a whole empire." Proceeding, Dr. Rainy urged that what is most to be desired from us as a people is a manifestation to the world of true Christianity. Statesmen do all they can, but it remains for us to create a spirit of Christian regard both for our own countrymen abroad and for the native races committed to our care. "I think that I echo a feeling which is widespread among earnest people when I say that of late we have been experiencing a 'flatness' of Christian spirit and work. Our circumstances send us, and God calls us, first to think, and then to pray."

"SAVED TO SERVE."

The wide distribution of British people and power over the face of the earth, in the course of God's providential permittings, was dwelt on by the Bishop of Durham. This great position and this purpose are matters as far above national vanity as the heavens are above the earth. It is for duty, for Christ, for God, that we are to contend. Our sense of imperial mission has grown enormously of late years; so, too, should that of holy purpose. God has assuredly so dispersed and yet united the British people to help in preparing the way for the crowning of our beloved King, the Lord Jesus Christ; that is the "divine event" (let us not always quote, "far off") which is the ultimate aim of the great Strategist. True, there has been among us slackness of Christian enterprise, and much to humble; and if, to counteract this, there is to come general advance, we must first seek from above a revival of personal faith, and a fresh realization that we are "saved to serve," with the assurance that we have, as our life and inspiration, not an abstract idea, but the Master Himself.

Other speakers were Lord Overtoun and the Bishop of Winchester.

THE ELEMENTS OF NATIONAL GREATNESS.

At night, Lord Kinnaird presided over a large and attentive audience.

Prebendary H. E. Fox, in a telling appeal to Christians, said that national greatness does not consist of a strong fleet, or mighty army—nor in the extent of our commerce or the genius of our learned men. It is found in the purity of our religion, the justice of our laws, and the Christian character of our people. Two of its elements are reverent regard for the Word of God, and reverent regard for the Day of God—both of which are designed to lead us into closer communion with the Almighty. Not only does belief in the Bible humanize and civilize; it sanctifies and transforms. The Lord's Day is intimately connected with the Lord's Book. Neglect of the one means neglect of the other. The secret of the influence of the two is that each combines a personality. Christ is the central figure of all the Bible; it is focussed in the living Jehovah-Jesus. The Day of Rest was not discovered by man, nor was it merely a Jewish institution; it was made by God for all, and it is a perpetual memorial of the resurrection of our Lord.

A TRINITY OF EVILS.

With characteristic vigour, Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, who followed, dwelt on the application of Christian principles to social and political needs, thus realizing the highest sense of the word "patriotism." "He that doeth righteousness is righteous;" we are not yet a Christian nation; in vain does any nation call itself Christian unless its laws and policies are essentially Christian. The speaker referred with pungency and force to the nation's "trinity of evils," drunkenness, immorality, and gambling. With God, however, all things are possible, and we look forward, in the spirit of the prayer, "Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven," to the happy day when England shall indeed be Christian.

Rev. C. Silvester Horne dwelt on the insensate pursuit of wealth and luxury which marks our days, and spoke of the intimate connection between the sensual in life and the sensuous in worship.

The last speaker, Archdeacon Madden, concluded with a solemn and searching appeal, founded on the words, "They feared as they entered into the cloud." Yes, we so entered the cloud of national affliction; but we met the Lord with manifestations of divine purpose, and are constrained to say, both for King and Empire, "Lord, it is good for us to be here." The speaker's impassioned appeal for national righteousness made a fitting conclusion to this memorable "Day of Intercession."

A Boon to Business Girls.—In affiliation with the Y.W.C.A., a Convalescent Home has been opened at 53, Carisbrooke Road, St. Leonards, for business girls, teachers, and others. It is intended to benefit chiefly those who cannot be received at the ordinary holiday homes because of being invalids and needing extra care or attention. The Home is situate in sight of the sea, and offers every comfort to those who are seeking to regain their health. Miss Barton, the superintendent, is a trained nurse of many years' experience, and hopes in time to make the Home self-supporting.

The Coronation.

By WILLIAM LUFF, Author of "Our King."

The crown was ready, and a wondering world
Had gathered round to marvel and behold;
The throne was ready, and the star-gemmed throng
Were keen to shout the Coronation song;
The car was ready, through the flag-hung way,
To bear the king on the long-looked-for day.

But God, the King of kings, majestic, grand,
In silent splendour raised His royal hand—
And all was stayed. The flashing crown unraised,
Pressed on its crimson cushion, where few gazed
Upon its gems; the throne remained unfilled:
The car unused; for so Jehovah willed!

Then like a dream the vision passed away.
The bannered stands, the garlanded display,
The fair designs in rainbow colours bright,
With star-like glory to illume the night,
The tramping crowds, that o'er the footway trod,
All passed and left the world alone with God.

Had we forgotten that He governed all?
And in our glory had we failed to call
Upon His Name? Was it a formal thing
To write upon our walls, "God save the king"?
Men read the words in a new light, when he,
Whose Coronation all had come to see,
Lay at death's door. Lord, grant our nation grace,
On its stripped walls Thy holy Name to trace.
"God save the people," humbled we would sing,
And earnestly entreat, "God save the King."

The Nation's Prayer for King Edward VII.

By Rev. J. MOUNTAIN, Tunbridge Wells.*

So near the hour of solemn Coronation,
So near the day of festal joys and songs:
Low lay our King in deadly tribulation,
Awestruck and stunned, the mighty grieving throngs.
"Lord, why is this?"—in solemn tones was spoken—
"Why brightest hopes give place to darksome fears?
What message comes from Thee in such a token?
Oh, spare our King! and wipe away our tears."

"'Tis not in wrath, 'tis fatherly correction;
Fain would I lead a nation in My ways:
Long have I sought your wills' complete subjection.
Why, O My people, why these long delays?
Had ye but hearkened unto My commandments,
Surely your peace had like a river flowed;
Why still deceived by this world's vain enticements?
Flee from your sins! 'Prepare to meet your God!'"

"Lord, we have oft most grievously offended,
Pride and self-will have led us far astray;
Well might our Empire's day of grace have ended;
Each one has turned to his own evil way.
Yet, in Thy mercy, pardon our transgressions,
For Jesu's sake, in whose great Name we plead;
Spare Thou our King! Oh, hear our intercessions!
Grant him Thy help in this his time of need."

Oh, say, "'Tis done; the healing word is spoken."
Grant him Thy health, and comfort Thou his soul.
Thou hearest prayer; be Thy command the token—
"My son, arise! Christ Jesus makes thee whole."
So shall descend on him high benediction;
His stricken form shall slay our hateful strife;
Strong shall he rise from out this dire affliction—
God's call to him, to us, for noble life.

A Bishop on Young Men.

THE Bishop of Hereford (Dr. Percival), in the course of an address at a garden party at Ealing, held in furtherance of work for young men throughout the area of the West Metropolitan District Union of Y.M.C.A.'s., stated that the preponderating numbers of young men in our great cities, the monotony of their lives, the dangers and temptations to which they are exposed, and their relation to the welfare of the country, constitute a call upon the Christian churches to do everything in their power to help young men. He valued the Y.M.C.A. because it keeps the religious motive uppermost. Only thus could it hope to achieve its purpose of leading young men into the discipleship, love, and service of the Saviour. The large membership of the Association is marked by an enthusiasm in doing good, which is contagious in reaching other young men, and helping to make their lives bright, happy, and useful.

Thanksgiving in South Africa.

The following very encouraging report is extracted from an article in the Daily Telegraph, by Mr. Bennet Burleigh, Special War Correspondent to that paper.

MY occupation is gone, and I regret neither the fact nor the cause thereof. Joy-bells are ringing, there are jubilation and hymns of praise, and, most astounding of all events in history, victors and vanquished unite in the pæans and prayers. Was ever war so happily ended? Was ever Peace so nobly triumphant? A change has been wrought in the land; foemen have become brothers, strife is already, in measure, a hundred years behind us, and all is presage of the mighty New South Africa. The whole country has blossomed with Union Jacks and Royal Standards. To-morrow morning there is to be a public Thanksgiving Service of Praise for Peace in Pretoria. Lord Kitchener and 5,000 troops, with bands and choirs, will be there to take part in the solemn Te Deum, and I warrant twice as many civilians, with plenitude of Brer Boers, will join in the service. The great function will be conducted in front of the principal Dutch Reformed Church. What a dramatic conclusion to the long-vexed and for-ever-ended struggle 'twixt Briton and Boer.

On reaching Vereeniging, the whole party proceeded to the convention camp, where Lord Kitchener was warmly greeted by all the burghers. A meeting was held in the large marquee, at which General Beyers presided. Lord Kitchener, being loudly called upon, told the burghers how pleased he was to meet them under such happier circumstances. They had fought splendidly, most gallantly; no nation and no people had ever done better or could have done better, and it was no reflection upon them, but quite the contrary, that, as brave men, and men of sense, they had accepted the inevitable. He was proud to be amongst them; more valiant troops none had ever fought against. The contest had been fought out, and in a most honourable fashion, and neither side had anything to reproach themselves with in the general conduct of operations. The Government was ready to assist them in every way, to restore their farms, and help to reinstate them in their homes. He personally would do anything in his power for them, for he entertained the greatest respect for all, and his one wish now was that both should forget the war as quickly as possible, and join hands as good citizens and brothers to make the country great and prosperous.

The Boers repeatedly cheered his lordship's remarks, and at the conclusion not only renewed their plaudits, but called for and gave three hearty cheers for King Edward VII. General Beyers, in reply, said a few words in acknowledgment, speaking much in the same strain as his lordship, and he promised that the Boers would keep faith and act as loyal subjects. Subsequently Generals Louis Botha and C. De Wet thanked Lord Kitchener, to whom they were all indebted for many kindnesses. It was an honour, said they, to have been able to hand over their arms to him, and the terms of peace were most generous, and they were grateful for them. The burghers would act loyally and honourably, and assist to keep the peace and work for the regeneration of the country under the changed conditions, and for their Sovereign. Lord Kitchener spoke to and shook hands with most of the delegates before he left the camp, and returned by "special" to Pretoria. Later on Generals Louis Botha, C. De Wet, Delarey, and others held semi-private meetings of their commandants and others. They warned them that they must personally see to it that the burghers brought in every arm and cartridge they possessed. There was to be no half-dealing, but full and complete surrender. They were bidden to bring in hidden as well as open stores of arms, every rifle, and every cartridge. "You know," said General Delarey, "you as Boers have the honest plan of serving only one master. As you long and truly served your then master—Kruger or Steyn, as the case might be—so now you are called upon to render upright and faithful service to the King. Let there be no hanging back, no duplicity. No man who does either need count upon my sympathy or my assistance."

Mildmay Mission Hospital.—To commemorate the Diamond Jubilee of our late, yet ever-beloved, Queen Victoria, a bed, bearing her name, was started in the Mildmay Mission Hospital, Bethnal Green. Her Most Gracious Majesty, by special request, afterwards sent her portrait to hang over the bed, on condition that it should be permanent. In loving memory of her, and as a thankoffering to God for her long and happy reign, we desire to raise £1,500 to endow this bed, and make it a lasting benefit to the sick poor of East London. £600 towards this amount has already been received. The Hon. Sec. is Miss Thrower, Deaconess House, Mildmay Park, London, N.

What is a Christian?

By Rev. J. GUINNESS ROGERS, D.D.

THERE is no more crucial point among the burning religious questions of our time than the elementary and simple one—What is a Christian? The term is frequently used in all kinds of connections; but it is seldom carefully defined, and, as a matter of fact, is employed in a number of senses, which exhibit not only variety, but distinct antagonism. It is an indirect evidence of the extraordinary hold which our great Master has gained on the thought of the world, that the name which was once everywhere spoken against has become of such charm and power that a large section of men, who have no sympathy with the Gospel, and yield no allegiance to the Christ, are yet indignant if they are not reckoned as Christians. They lead true and honourable lives, their names are synonyms on the Exchange for probity and truth, they are prosperous and are generous in the use of their abundance, they are earnest workers in the cause of humanity and progress—what can a Christian be more? It is not necessary to be able to answer this question in order to justify the refusal to comply with their desire to be described as Christian. For the term is not a synonym for a good man. How far one of the type we are considering is to be classed as a good man is one point; whether he is a Christian is an entirely different matter.

There are, that is to say, other qualities, besides those which we have described, which enter into the conception of a Christian. He, too, must love his neighbour as himself, but beyond this he must be a believer in the Lord Jesus Christ, seeking in all things to do His will. It is not enough that there should be an outward obedience, even to that great law of self-sacrifice, which is the crowning point of the Lord's teaching and example; but his whole character must be inspired and shaped by love to Christ. The Christian mark is this—

"THE MIND THAT WAS IN CHRIST JESUS."

If this were only a point in nomenclature, it might be dismissed as a matter of but secondary importance. Even so, however, it cannot be forgotten that the misuse of words leads to a certain indefiniteness or perversion of ideas. Here, however, the change in the thought is so marked that it cannot be left out of consideration. In the judgment of those who use the term as distinctive, the word has become debased by reason of this vagueness.

Let me illustrate this point by a slight but yet significant incident. A Christian friend was speaking to me of a member of her circle, who was confessedly outside the pale of the churches, and who did not profess any faith in the Christian doctrine, but whom, nevertheless, she described as "Christlike." The term is even more august than that of Christian. I cannot conceive of one which gives a more sublime idea of character. But here it was applied (and the case was not an exceptional one) to one who did not own the authority of Christ, or draw the inspiration of his life from Him. Such a mode of speaking may be cultivated as gracious and charitable, but it can hardly be admired even by those whom it is designed to propitiate, and unfortunately it gives away the case for the Gospel itself. This, of course, was not the intention of the speaker, and it would be unjust to construe an amiable weakness into an act of deliberate treachery. But whatever be the purpose, the result is obvious enough. If it be possible to attain to such a lofty height of Christian excellence as is denoted by this epithet "Christlike" without faith, where is the great value of Christ and his work?

The view implied is that the highest ideal of character may be realized even though every element of the Christian creed has been renounced. For be it observed, the suppressed premiss in the argument is that likeness to Christ is independent of theological opinion, and that there may be a Christlike character where there is simply rationalism in belief. It is only necessary to in order to see the utter fallacy of such contention. His own account of his work is this: "Father, I have glorified thy name upon the earth; I have finished the work which Thou gavest me to do." Here the desire to do God's will Himself, and then to get it done on earth, is recognized as the ruling idea of His whole life. Benevolence, philanthropy, meekness and unselfishness, sympathy and sorrow for the suffering children of men—all these were mighty forces in Him, but all of them owed their strength and their influence to His central passion—love to God. "The zeal of Thy house hath eaten Me up." How is it possible that a man can be Christlike, that he can in any true sense be a Christian, of whom it may be said that "God is not in all his thoughts," that God can hardly be said to form even an article in his creed?

We are thus forced on to the conclusion that even though the acceptance of a Christian creed does not make a Christian, yet that is to be found in a creed. The strong reaction today against the tyranny of dogma, and the forms in which it is expressed, has gone far to induce an utter indifference to belief of every kind. But the weakness of such an idea is so apparent as to need little argument. If I do not believe in the historic Christ, in His death on the Cross, in His ability and willingness to save sinners to the uttermost, there is certainly no motive power in Him by which I can be inspired or controlled. The love of my heart cannot be stirred by a mere name, or even by some historic character, great teacher or otherwise, whom I may admire, but to whom I have no vital and inspiring relation.

There is all the difference in the world between a character which has in it elements of virtue and even nobility, for which a kind of special dignity is secured or claimed by its being labelled with the name of Christian, and a life very similar in many of its outward features, but which has this essential distinction, that it is not only named Christian, but that in its very essence it is Christian, its dynamic power love to Christ, its ideal the life of Christ, its aim the glory of Christ. "I will make you," says the Lord, "fishers of men"; and this He did by the discipline of character. The Christian ideal has its own clearly marked features, and is different from any other form of human character.

Among Christians themselves there are varieties in its development, but its leading qualities are common to all. Diversities of temperament or of training are reflected in external forms of service, or in various laws as to the relations of Christian men with the world. But underneath all these outward diversities of ceremony or church law, there lies a wide stretch of sentiment and rule, which is common to all Christians.

The whole duty of the Christian may be summed up in the words of the old prophet, as being to "do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with God." These are simply separate parts of one whole, and the removal of any one of them is the destruction of the ideal itself. It would be unfair to deny the righteousness or benevolence of men who are not Christians. It is when we come to the quality of Godliness that the real deficiency is manifest. To numbers, indeed, this very conception of Godliness is an offence. It belongs to the emotional side of religion, and in truth they are inclined to regard it as unreal and visionary, even if it be not a piece of cant and hypocrisy. It is just at this point that some of the most vital differences of our day appear. Men are supposed to be liberal who accept what they are pleased to regard as the practical teachings of Christianity, but reject its distinctive message, that "Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners."

To such a spirit we must not, to use one of Paul's strong phrases, "be in subjection—no, not for an hour." He was sufficiently broad on questions which did not touch the inner life of Godliness. In relation to them all, he laid down one comprehensive law, the grandeur of which we have hardly realized: "Let every man be thoroughly persuaded in his own mind." But when he comes to deal with the central truth, he adopts an entirely different tone. Then are his words stern and searching: "If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be anathema." About that which is talked of to-day as the mystical part of religion, he admits of no uncertainty, he will accept no compromise. It is because this central point is so often weakened by airy and pleasant judgments of men, that it is important very strongly to insist on the necessity of maintaining the definite character of the Christian name.

God's Witnesses.

THE testimony which a member of a missionary society bore recently to us, with reference to a lonely worker, was this—that though a great show of converts was not made, those who were received were such as endure, and did not go back. This is valuable testimony, for God looks for quality more than quantity. One Koh-i-noor is better than a thousand inferior stones. The saying that "the good is the enemy of the best" may be applied to the various ideals of missionary work.

Thomas Arnold took his hat off to the boys of Rugby School, not because of what they were as a crowd, but because there might be a Luther or a Bunyan among them. A Phœbe or a Priscilla, a servant of the Church, or a saintly woman, able to teach an eloquent man mighty in the Scriptures the way of the Lord more perfectly, may be one of the little band gathered out of the world by a lonely worker.

Moses and Elijah and John the Baptist, synonyms of the law; Joshua and Elisha, prototypes of the Gospel; and Jesus, its Fulfiller, were all individuals of God's own sending, called, and chosen, and faithful.

Who teacheth like Him—whether his training ground be the land of Midian for Moses, the mountains of Gilead for Elijah, or the wilderness of Judea for John? Or, again, the camp of Israel for Joshua, the journey from city to city for Elisha, or Galilee of the Gentiles for the Son of God, the King of Israel? God has generally wrought his mightiest works by men or women singled out from among the people.

There have, indeed, been false prophets and false Christs, as there are now men who have arisen trom the churches, teaching perverse things to draw away disciples after themselves. But the remedy for this is not to ignore or contemn men because they stand alone, but to try the spirits whether they be of God; lest we forbid those whom the Master vindicates, and incur his rebuke that we know not what manner of spirit we are of. "Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, July 6. Deuteronomy ix.

WHO is there amongst us that can read this chapter without emotion and admiration for its sublime eloquence? It is one of the most striking and touching of the appeals of this book. On the one hand, there is the assurance that Israel was to become possessed in the easiest possible manner of Canaan; but on the other hand, it was distinctly announced that this would not be attributable to their superior righteousness.

Moses repeats the story of the past, referring to several memorable occasions, when there had been special outbreaks of the most unblushing and persistent murmuring and rebellion. They had provoked God to wrath in the wilderness from the day that they had departed out of the land of Egypt until that hour. Their sin had been immediately recognized by God, though not revealed to Moses until he was about to leave the mountain summit and descend to the plain. It had seemed to him that God must destroy the people whom He had chosen, and that only his fasting and prayer could avert their doom. At Taberah, at Massah, and at Kibroth-hattaavah, similar scenes had taken place, and in each case his protracted intercession had been elicited, and had prevailed. It was, therefore, not due to any special excellence in Israel that Canaan was to become theirs, but because of the Name, and because of the Covenant.

Ah, my soul, ponder this, for this is true of thee also. If thou art still the object of God's love, and art used for His high and holy purposes, and enjoyest a name and place among His people and in His Church, it is all of grace—it is because Jesus pleads.

> A debtor to mercy alone,
> Of covenant mercy I sing.'

MONDAY, June 7. Deuteronomy x.

This second writing of the law is significant of the work wrought by the Holy Spirit's grace within our natures. When first we know of the holy law of God, it condemns us with the voice of Sinai. But when we have repented and believed, God graves it upon our hearts, and writes it in the inner places of our thought and love, so that we keep it, not because we must, but because we desire His commandments more than gold, yea than much fine gold. And with this deep love of the law of God, there comes over us the fervent desire to enter into the spiritual equivalent of Levi's position, as bearing the ark, standing to minister, and blessing in His name. Levi had been cursed for fierce anger and cruel wrath; but see to what an inheritance the tribe was promoted! Is there not some hope for thee and me? (Gen. xlix. 5-7; and vv. 8, 9).

Every word of the magnificent paragraph from the twelfth verse, deserves careful pondering. Let us learn what God requires, and then turn to Him to create such things in us. St. Augustine says: "Give what Thou commandest, and then command what Thou wilt." We are asked, however, to enter into the true and inner meaning of the initial Jewish rite, the lesson of which is also taught in baptism. With all emphasis, these ordinances taught and teach humility, dependence on God to work in us to will and to do, and the putting away of the filth of the flesh (Rom. ii. 26-29; Col. ii. 11, 12). Only thus can the great God have fellowship with us, and achieve His purposes by us. Let us cleave to Him.

TUESDAY, July 8. Deuteronomy xi.

Two arguments are now brought to bear on the heart of the chosen people, to induce them to love God and keep His charge. The one has already been referred to, and consisted in those marvels and miracles of awful judgment with which God had punished the stiff-neckedness of Pharaoh, and the rebellions of the wilderness (2-9). The other, is new, and derived from the nature of the Land of Promise, which was specially dependent on His bounty.

In Egypt there was always the river, and the irrigation of the land was effected by the ingenuity and labour of the people. They watered it "with the foot," which either refers to the treadwheels, which are still used in that country to raise water, or to the runnels which conveyed water from reservoirs through the gardens, and which were opened or closed by moving the earth with the foot. In the case of Canaan, on the contrary, there were annual rainy seasons, the earlier during September and October, when the land was prepared for sowing; the latter during March and April. This blessing, to which the fertility of Palestine was due, was promised to Israel as a temporal reward for their fidelity to the national covenant. It was threatened to be withdrawn on their disobedience or apostasy; and the execution of that threatening is abundantly manifest in the present sterility of the land.

These two arguments are still cogent, and especially the second. There is still the life of constant effort in Christian work; we raise the water by our foot. And there is the life of obedience and faith, when God gives us rain from heaven—"days of heaven upon earth." Ah! how blessed is our work for God under such conditions!

A third reason is introduced, true of us as of Israel, that a life of perfect obedience is always one of victory and possession (24).

WEDNESDAY, July 9. Deuteronomy xii.

Israel was commanded to destroy all the memorials of idolatry, which might tempt them by obscene emblems. The chosen people were even forbidden from inquiring after the idolatrous customs of the Canaanites (30, 31). We should be very careful of our eyes and thoughts, and of even seeking to know, for mere curiosity, of the evil practices of sinners. To do these things makes the inner conflict harder. We receive germs of corruption which work in our natures, and eventually breed in us the fever of passion. If we have to inquire into such things, we must first be well protected by the antiseptic of the Holy Spirit.

Israel was to bring all sacrifices and oblations to one central locality, though flesh which was not offered in sacrifice, and which had been carefully cleansed of the blood, might be eaten anywhere. Even those who were ceremonially unclean, through some slight defilement, such as would debar them from partaking of sacred meats, were at liberty to share in the common articles of food. The great convocations, first in Shiloh, and afterwards in Jerusalem, must have been very joyous occasions. In this chapter we find three injunctions for rejoicing. "Ye shall rejoice" (7, 12, 18). Oh, for more joy in our religious life—always dwelling on our own sins, or the sin of the world, but, in the light of faith and love, keeping bright and happy faces amid the gloom around us.

In the ninth verse the people were reminded that they had not yet come to God's rest. Is this true of us? Let us not miss the rest and inheritance of Faith (Heb. iv.).

THURSDAY, July 10. Deuteronomy xiii.

The counsels of this chapter rise naturally out of the last three verses of the preceding one, and are directed against those who would seduce Israel from allegiance to God. These are divided under three heads:—

The Prophet (1-5).—Prophets might arise performing feats and predicting events, who would urge national apostasy. But such were to be judged by their fruits. The greatest prodigies of eloquence or power were to be set aside, if the moral results were deficient in reverence, obedience, and faith. Whatever might be the astonishing accompaniments of a prophetic utterance, that utterance could not be accepted if it were out of harmony with the love and truth of God.

The Near Relative (6-11).—No degree of kindred, however intimate, could be allowed to screen from the death-sentence the man who seduced another to idolatry, for this was a breach of the national covenant, and treason against the reign of Jehovah.

Men of Belial (12-18).—Swift and condign punishment was to be meted out, even to the cities that turned aside from the service of God. They were treated as plague-stricken; and as though the moral infection must be stamped out with the most searching care.

It was on precepts such as these that the Puritans justified their iconoclasm. They felt bound to purge the land from all vestiges of idolatry, and from everything that might seduce the heart from God. We may regret Puritan excesses, but it is certain that in our inner life "nought of the accursed thing should cleave to our hand."

FRIDAY, July 11. Deuteronomy xiv.

Notice the repeated reminding: "Thou art a holy people" (2, 21), and of the august title, "The Lord thy God" (2, 21, 23, 24, 25, 26, 29). All is done to impress the people with a deep sense of their obligation in every act, however trivial, and specially in food, to walk worthy of their high calling.

They were forbidden to disfigure themselves when mourning for the dead (1-3). And for us the counterpart is, that we shall not mourn for the departed, as those without hope. But in our darkest hours of loneliness and bereavement, whilst we give way to tears, which are natural and permissible, since Jesus wept, we must not repine against God's will; we must believe that our dear ones are taken away from the evil to come, that in Christ they are still near us, and must anticipate the joyful time of reunion in the presence of the Lord.

They were bidden to be very careful in the articles of diet (3-21). And this has several bearings on ourselves, though these specific restrictions have been removed (see Acts x. 15, 1 Tim. iv. 4). Whether we eat or drink, it must be to the glory of God. We must not seek to pamper or titilate our palate by rich and stimulating diet, but eat what is wholesome and strength-giving. We must also beware as to what we feed our thoughts and minds with.

They were bidden to tithe the year's produce (22-29). This injunction is more than applicable to us, who profess to be entirely yielded to Christ. Many who profess to hold all as God's stewards, would be surprised to find how little they give to His cause. Give by rule and systematically. Never give less than a tenth, and as much more as you please.

SATURDAY, July 12. Deuteronomy xv.

Some suppose that the release meant that repayment of a debt should not be insisted on during the seventh year. But it seems more likely, in the light of verse 9, to think that the whole indebtedness of one man to another, especially if that other was poor, was remitted. It always comforts me, when I see mention of these release years. I class with them the words of Christ: "A certain man had two debtors, one owed 500 pence, and the other 50 . . . but he frankly forgave them both." Is not this year of release significant of the abundant mercy and forgiveness which are ours through the blood of Jesus?

Notice, also, what a claim poverty had. The heart was not to be hardened, nor the hand shut towards the poor brother. "Thou shalt surely give him, and thine heart shall not be grieved when thou givest him . . . thou shalt open thine hand wide unto thy brother, to thy poor, and to thy needy." These are great arguments to be used with our God, for surely He would not tell us to do what He is not prepared to do. Did not the spirit of this command underlie our Lord's words about the three friends, and especially of the one who saw that his house was bare, and that he had nothing to set before his poor friend who had come to him? We have every claim on God, but we must ask in faith, nothing doubting. "Believe that ye have received, and ye shall have."

Notice the generosity with which the Israelites were expected to treat one another (verses 13, 14). Freely they had received, and freely they were to give. O redeemed child of God, see that thine ear is bored to the door-post of the cross, binding thee for ever to His service, and then live a rich generous life, giving up to heaven's measure: They that receive the abundance of grace, shall reign in this life as well as the next.

Elijah: The Prophet of all Time.

By Rev. F. S. WEBSTER, M.A., All Souls, W.

IX.—Under the Juniper Tree.*

(1 Kings xix. 1-9).

THIS is a sad sequel to the triumph on Mount Carmel. There Elijah felt so secure in the guardianship of Jehovah that he seemed utterly impervious to fear. Here he flees before a woman's threat. Truly, the best of men are but men at the best. We welcome the honest impartiality of the Bible portraiture revealing to us the failures of the saints as well as their triumphs: and while lamenting the sudden breakdown of Elijah's faith, we draw a mournful encouragement from the thought that as he at Jezreel showed himself one with us in human weakness, so we may hope by God's grace to show ourselves one with him in the splendid courage that he displayed at all other times.

(1) Elijah had forgotten Jezebel. This is surely the explanation of this painful episode, for the unexpected danger is always the most serious.

Up to this point Elijah had carried everything before him. Following Divine directions, the immediate and obvious difficulties of the campaign had been magnificently met and overcome. Elijah had rightly measured the character of Ahab, and met his blustering attack with a calm and dignified rebuke, so that the king quailed before the home-thrust, and, instead of handing the prophet over to the executioner, fell in with his proposal, and allowed him to plead Jehovah's cause before the assembled natives.

Elijah thoroughly understood also the character of the people. He knew that they had no real faith in Baal. They were halting between two opinions, now listening to the voice of conscience and now giving way to a desire for court favour and to the sensual attractions of idolatrous worship.

And he understood the character of the prophets of Baal. They were men who had sold themselves to falsehood and iniquity. Their fatal influence could only be checked by inflicting the full penalty of the law, as traitors to the nation's welfare.

All this he had seen, and all his steps thus far had been crowned with success. The wavering multitude had been won over by the open manifestation of Divine power. Carmel's height had resounded with their enthusiastic shout, as they saw fire from heaven consuming Elijah's sacrifice. They had helped him to destroy the false prophets of Baal, and Ahab had not dared to protest against what all regarded as a just act of retribution. Jehovah had heard his prayer, and sorely-needed rain was falling in heavy showers upon the parched earth. Elijah had conquered, and the work of reformation had made such a start that it would never cease until all the temples and altars of Baal were overthrown and Jehovah alone was worshipped in Israel.

FORGETTING THE CHIEF ADVERSARY.

But he had forgotten Jezebel. Not present herself on Mount Carmel, she had received with sceptical scorn the reports that had reached her. The fire from heaven she looked upon as a mere conjuror's trick. The rain following the prophet's prayer was a mere coincidence, and, like all others who speak so glibly of coincidences, she never asked what power had made them coincide. So she felt utter contempt for the cowards who had stood by, while her prophets were butchered by a madman. In a passionate fury she declared that she was no turncoat to forsake the gods of her fathers at the bidding of a wild Bedouin. If no one else had the courage to withstand Elijah, she would do it herself. So the letter was sent which made the prophet flee.

Are we not all in danger of repeating Elijah's mistake, and forgetting our chief adversary. We reckon with the opposing forces that we can see, but we forget the unseen array of principalities and powers whose hostility is implacable, who with deadly craft and subtlety wait for our unguarded hours.

(2) Elijah had taken his eyes off God. "When he saw that, he arose and went for his life." It is impossible for us to justify his flight. He acted in a panic. There was no waiting for Divine guidance. At other times his steps had been directed by a Divine command. "Get thee hence, and hide thyself by the brook Cherith," or "go show thyself to Ahab." But as he fled to Beersheba, he had no staff of the Divine word to rest upon. He had, as it were, forgotten Jehovah. He saw Jezebel and her passion for revenge, and in a moment the shield of God under which he had been resting for three years and more seemed to vanish out of sight.

Oh, the sad pity of it! A moment's reflection would have changed the whole aspect of affairs. The very fact that Jezebel was content with sending a message showed how really he had triumphed. The queen, though defiant and determined, was afraid to strike. She saw the influence the prophet had gained over the people, and did not dare to injure him. So a threatening letter was sent, not a poisoned dagger. "Let me once get the prophet out of the way," she said to herself, "and I'll soon stop his work of reformation. I won't make a martyr of him—that would rouse the nation—but I'll make him turn tail and flee"; and she did. Where, then, was the spirit that prevailed on Carmel? Oh, that he had replied as Chrysostom did when he received a threatening message from the Empress Eudoxia, "Go, tell her Majesty that I fear nothing but sin!"

It is a solemn lesson. We are often urged to watch against our besetting sins, but this story shows that the temptation against which you think yourself secure may, in a moment, if your eyes are taken off God, prove your downfall. Yes, we may well pray, "Take not thy Holy Spirit from us," for all our strength is utter weakness if for a moment we are left to ourselves. The strongest faith is never very far removed from bitter unbelief. Even the stout-hearted Jairus was staggered when he learned that his little daughter, for whom he was pleading with Jesus, had died. Alas for those who, when they learn that some unexpected or long-dreaded blow has fallen, do not hear the Saviour say, "Fear not; only believe." This was the word Elijah needed.

JEZEBEL MAY RAGE, BUT JEHOVAH LIVES!

One such word—a child might have spoken it—and the prophet's faith would have leaped up, his old courage would have returned; and instead of fleeing from Jezreel, he might have driven Jezebel out of the kingdom.

(3) But why were his eyes off God? I think because, though to a certain extent unconsciously, his eyes were upon himself. "It is enough; now, O Lord, take away my life, for I am not better than my fathers." Had he thought that he was? Had he been uplifted at the success God had given him? Fire had fallen upon his sacrifice, the heavens discharged their rain at his request—had his thoughts turned to himself as he sped along towards Jezreel, keeping in front of Ahab's chariot? Had he thought that the shouts of the people would end the conflict? Was he pleased with himself for his skilful management of the campaign, and did he begin to see himself accepted by King and nation as God's prophet, the reformer and saviour of the nation? We must not judge him unkindly. It is easy to excuse his failure, though we dare not justify it. God most mercifully forgave it, and the tender and thoughtful way in which He dealt with his servant suggests two secondary causes which contributed to the sad disaster. God's first care was to give him rest and sleep. Overwrought nerves, a tired brain, and physical exhaustion had much to do with the prophet's fall. The meeting with Ahab, the preparation for the contest, the strain of the conflict itself, with its tremendous output of faith and prayer, the excitement of the grim work of judgment, the fatigue of the long, quick run to Jezreel, had left the prophet in a state of physical tension, which nothing but calm, trustful confidence in God could have endured.

LOW SPIRITS AND UNBELIEF.

Much of the low spirits and unbelief among Christians to-day is the result of rush and overstrain. A healthy body is a great help to a vigorous soul. So in this case God saw His servant's need, and an angel stood guard over his slumbers, and gave him both supper and breakfast. And after this Elijah was not left without a congenial friend and companion. Elisha was called from the plough to follow him and to minister unto him. For it is not good for man to be alone. Solitude, while a real means of grace, may easily become a means of sore temptation.

Just as Queen Eleanor was said to suck the poison from her husband's wounds (thus saving his life), so the sympathy and love of wife or sister or brothers in arms are most effective in removing the sting and virus from life's sorrows and temptations. If Elijah had had Elisha at his right hand, he would not surely have forgotten God. Let us value our Christian fellowship; let us be only jealous over anything that might narrow it or mar it; and let us be heard in prayer for the lonely ones scattered in distant lands among the heathen.

CHURCH DISCIPLINE.

THE discipline exercised by the Church of God should be a picture of our Heavenly Father's character.

A sober mind, a tender heart, a watchful spirit, should mark those who put away the evil doer.

All God's corrections and judgments are designed to bring to repentance. So, likewise, any censure pronounced by an assembly of saints, while manifestly righteous, should be as a medicine to restore, that the spirit may be saved in the day of Christ (1 Cor. v. 5).

Paul says not to the Corinthians, when he reproves their evil, "lest my God should humble you," but "lest my God should humble me among you;" not "lest I should be wrathful and cut off many," but lest I should "bewail many which have sinned" (2 Cor. xii. 21).

My brother defiling himself, is my own hand touching pitch. In this mind we are like Christ, who is touched with the feeling of our infirmities, and is able to succour the tempted.

In how many instances, alas! where sharp or bitter reproof is given, heavenly wisdom would deal in tender-hearted counsel and admonition.

Col. iv. 10 is a testimony that Mark was restored and stablished after having forsaken Paul and Barnabas. We find him not with Barnabas, but with Paul, who had so gravely judged his fault. "Rebuke a wise man, and he will love thee" (Prov. ix. 8).

Let us imitate our Lord in his pity toward those who have erred from His way; thus we best discountenance their sins, and help them to make the confession that obtains forgiveness from God. Carnal severity hardens the heart which might be won by heavenly tenderness and compassion.

In the fellowship of saints' assemblies are many joys and many comforts. It is not, however, a bed of roses; for it is in the intercourse of that fellowship that the infirmities and faults of believers especially appear. In the church's best state there was always the flesh to be subdued, and Satan resisted. Hence "forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, if any man have a quarrel against any: even as Christ forgave you, even also do ye" (Col. iii. 13).

Judgments of offences should be such as to commend themselves to the common conscience. All are accountable to God for those judgments.

The love of Christ filling our hearts, we shall be keen-sighted to discern, whether in ourselves or others, whatsoever pleases not the Lord. This love, and this love only, will enable us to maintain the order and discipline of the house of God, so as to be approved by the Son of God, the Lord of his own house. We shall thereby, while observing the laws of Christ as to offending brethren, be raised above the fear of man that bringeth a snare; and, what is higher still, be free of false love, which spares the rod when God would have us smite. "Let the righteous smite me; it shall be a kindness" (Psa. cxli. 5). "Faithful are the wounds of a friend" (Prov. xxvii. 6).

STRENGTH AND CONTINUANCE.

Phil. iii. 12. It is Christ's hold upon us that enables us, by faith, to lay hold on and to keep hold of Him.

They who seem the most tried are not always those that have the sharpest warfare.

Sometimes things appear to us so difficult that we are daunted, at other times so easy that we think we are equal to them, and thus in either case we fail.

He that is running a race looks not at witnesses admiring, but only at the mark.

We need to "discern the Lord's body" [i.e., Christ as having been crucified] (1 Cor. xi. 29), for steadfastness of communion with God, no less than to trust in His blood to obtain salvation from wrath to come (John vi. 54, 56).

The fulfilling of God's promises depends not upon the creature's strength, and cannot be prevented by the creature's weakness.

We need a close walk with God, a having respect to all his commandments, if we would obtain of Him whatsoever we ask.

True persevering diligence in spiritual things always begins in self-abasement.

It is one mark of growth in spirituality to be more afflicted by the pleasing—than by the distressing—temptations of Satan.

We should always take great trials and great temptations as the forerunners of great blessings and growth of fellowship with God.

The obedience of grace obtains for us the profitable knowledge of truth, and teaches us to prize it more than much fine gold. Mere knowledge puffeth up, and the talk of the lips tendeth only to penury (Prov. xiv. 23).

Deep spirituality of mind is only obtained by a thorough crucifixion of self; self-denial is discipline for life—the work of every hour.

To make a good soldier, put him in front of the battle; a good seaman, let him brave the storm. So with the Christian.

True readiness to confess sin, and joy in self-abasement, mark a growth in grace and knowledge of the character of God.

I know of no one who, with so little promise in his beginnings of faith, had a sunset so glorious as had Jacob (Gen. xlviii., xlix.).

It is the constant crucifying of the flesh in little things that makes a giant in the Christian warfare. But true self-crucifixion is a thing impossible, save by grace; and to have the needful supplies of that grace we must be in perpetual communion with God: it is only thus we shall overcome in little things.

It is a great salvation wrought for us, if the soul be resolved to suffer the will of God, cost what it may.

Do you desire a humble mind, a soft heart, an obedient spirit? Ask and receive, that your joy may be full. But remember, "The soul of the sluggard desireth, and hath nothing" (Prov. xiii. 4). Be the clean vessel that God delights to fill and use.

Not God's answering prayer in respect of earthly things and earthly gifts, but growth of the new man, is the true proof that we please God.

We are commanded to lay aside every weight, and the sin that does so easily beset us; if we contend not against the latter—that is unbelief—how shall we rightly deal with the former? We have every one in himself his own peculiar hindrances—weights which, if not laid aside, will clog the soul in her race.

How shall I run my race and not stumble? how shall I have Christ's approval in the day of His appearing? are questions to be daily put by every child of God to his own soul.

The Faithful.—To those that believe—Christ is precious, the Word is sweet, sin is bitter, prayer is delightful, saints are dear, religion is their business, the world is a broken idol, and death is welcome.—Mason.

The Late Mr. L. K. Shaw.

THE founder of the Manchester and Salford Refuges for Destitute Children, Mr. Leonard Kilbee Shaw, passed to his rest on Sunday, June 22. He was in his sixty-ninth year.

A devoted philanthropist and skilful organizer, Mr. Shaw was privileged to see his zealous labours bear rich fruit. The institutions with which his name had been so long and so honourably associated grew out of his work as a teacher at St. Ann's Sunday Ragged School. On a Sunday night in the autumn of 1869 the school had been dismissed, but two very ragged boys, with pinched and weather-beaten faces, lingered at the top of the stairs. Questioned as to why they did not go home, they replied they had nowhere to go. Further investigations showed that one had been sleeping under a railway arch and the other up an old staircase in an entry.

A REFUGE FOR BOYS.

To meet this need, which was distressing in its extent, a Refuge was founded for homeless boys. Then some suitable work was found, while those who were too young or too weak were tended until they were fit for employment. The foundation principles guiding the committee by trust deed are as follows:—To receive homeless and destitute children found in Manchester and district; to give immediate admission to such without distinction of creed; to provide such with suitable food, clothing, and industrial training; to educate such in Christian principles based on the Bible only.

FROM SLUM TO FARM.

In the third year of the work emigration began, when nine boys were sent to Canada. The following year saw sixteen go, and with few intermissions the stream flowing Westward has continued ever since.

An arrangement was made with the Indefatigable Training Ship at Liverpool to receive some of the lads anxious for a sailor's life. The ship became very popular, and every year since has seen some boys pass from Strangeways to it.

Another important development occurred in 1873, when the first home for working boys was added. As the Central Refuge became full, some fifteen of the elder lads who were in regular work, and had become steady and reliable, were formed into a separate Home, and under the care of a new father and mother grew up in true family life. Three other Homes on similar principles were established at intervals during succeeding years, ultimately forming, when the work was concentrated at Strangeways, the Working Lads' Home and Institute.

HOMES FOR ORPHANS.

The generosity of a friend enabled the Committee to establish the first Home for Little Orphan Children. In the years that followed, five additional orphanages were opened, each one the gift of an individual or of a family; and now there stand in one group at Cheetham Hill six Homes filled with fatherless and motherless children of tender years. The family principle has been consistently carried out, a mother and helper with fifteen little children forming a true family group, gathering at one table, and sharing in the duties and privileges of a common home life. The children (with no uniform dress) attend neighbouring Board Schools, and thus are merged in the community like other children in the district.

It was not until eight years' work on behalf of the boys had been accomplished, that a Home for Girls was added to the trust. A neighbouring Home with which Mr. Shaw was associated had met the need to some extent, but was now full. With the call to widen the scope of the effort, there came, in the providence of God, means to do so. A lady sent a cheque for £1,000 to provide the first Home, which was the forerunner of four others for girls, added in succeeding years.

LEGISLATION AND AUTHORSHIP.

Many other homes and shelters have been added from time to time, notably a day nursery, a prison-gate mission, and a seaside home for ailing children. Thousands have been benefitted, and representatives of the Strangeways Homes are to be found in other lands, as well as at home; some are ministers of the Gospel, doctors, and lawyers, while others are themselves at the head of Rescue Homes, and seeking to continue the work.

Mr. Shaw made many valuable contributions to the improvement of legislation regarding cruelty to children and the dangers of street hawking. He gave evidence on these and similar subjects before Committees of the House of Commons on several occasions. He was the author, too, of "Street Arabism: Its Cause and Cure," "The Cry of the Children," "From Twilight to Sunlight," and "Noontide Thoughts for Busy Lives." These deal either with philanthropic work or religious experience. Mr. Shaw's achievement in the foundation and enlargement of the institutions with which his name is so closely associated, is all the more remarkable in that it was accomplished in the leisure of a busy commercial life.

Volunteers on Salisbury Plain.

IT may interest some Christians in the ranks of our Volunteer battalion, to know that an experiment has been tried, and met with marked success, in the 4th V.B. Hants Regiment, at Parkhouse Camp, Salisbury Plain. It was made by the Committee of the Soldiers' Home, Christchurch, in placing one of their tents in the camp, and stocking it with daily and weekly papers, magazines, writing materials, &c. The tent (named the Volunteer Soldiers' Christian Association) was in charge of Mr. Albert E. Bast, superintendent of the Christchurch Soldiers' Home, and under his management. The tent became popular with the men of the brigade, and was freely and gladly patronised. Each evening bright and hearty Gospel meetings were held, were well attended by men of all denominations, and proved a blessing to all. On Sunday evening the tent was full.

The work has met with the hearty support of the officers in camp, including the Brigadier-General. The men of the whole brigade hope the tent will become a yearly institution in their camp. Some 1,800 sheets of notepaper and envelopes, twelve bottles of ink and pens, and 714 stamps were used, all (except stamps) supplied free of cost. The work carried on by the Soldiers' Home, Christchurch, is supported by voluntary contributions. The treasurer is General the Hon. B. M. Ward, of Norwich Lodge, Staplecross, Christchurch.

THE LATE

Mr. John Jewell Penstone.

BY the falling asleep of our beloved brother Mr. John Jewell Penstone, at the advanced age of eighty-five, a great and good man was called away to the mansion prepared for him above, and sorrow filled the hearts of thousands.

Endowed with a powerful intellect, and gifts which fall to the share of but few, he cast behind him selfish aims and ambitions, let go that which could raise him to merely worldly eminence, and without reserve laid all at the feet of Jesus, content himself to be nothing. In his later years his presence was a link with the past, as well as an example to the present, and we very regretfully parted with him.

From the time of his conversion to God, while quite a young man, he continued to serve the Lord diligently. The record of his life was truly the history of the Brethren. Taking a prominent part in the revival of the early "forties," he was intimately associated with the late Messrs. Robert and John Howard in the work of God at Tottenham. From the opening of Brook Street Chapel he continued to be closely associated with the work of God carried on there, and afterwards at Bruce Grove Hall. While he was known and loved all over the country, the Tottenham meeting had a special place in his affection. Some years ago, when recovering from an illness, he dreamed he was in France visiting the Louvre, and on telling this to his old domestic, she exclaimed, "Why, master, that must surely mean you are going to Tottenham soon." This pleased him greatly, and was often recalled with evident pleasure.

There were two things about our brother which even anybody enjoying only a slight acquaintance with him could not fail to notice, viz., a deep reverence for, and knowledge of, the Word of God, and a strong personal loyalty to our Lord Jesus Christ. Very few were better acquainted than he with the history of our English Bible, and probably fewer still had more of its contents committed to memory. Yet it was noticed, and more than ever latterly, that all his Bible-readings had only one object in view, namely, a better knowledge of his Lord and Master, Jesus Christ.

Some few years ago, when spending an evening at Stamford Hill, he told the writer that as a young man, when he commenced to preach the Gospel, he used to fear he would soon lack subjects for his discourses; and that he was led to communicate his fears to a godly relative, who was then a prominent member of the Society of Friends. The advice received was, "Let the Book speak to thee, Johnnie, then thou wilt have no difficulty in speaking to the people." This advice was very closely followed throughout his long and laborious ministry, and was, no doubt, the secret of so much of the success and blessing that attended his work.

A marked feature of our brother's ministry at Tottenham was his Bible-readings, which for many years were greatly valued and enjoyed. His addresses on the Psalms and the Epistle to the Hebrews, from which, perhaps, in recent years he discoursed most, were particularly helpful. Difficult renderings and obscure passages were brought forward and discussed in a wonderfully reverent manner, which won the hearts of all, and made the hearers see, not so much the great knowledge possessed by the speaker, but the close personal intimacy existing with his Master.

Those who were privileged to know Mr. Penstone in his home life appreciated best his deep, personal loyalty and love to Jesus Christ. All who loved his Master were welcome, and his wealth of experience and knowledge was unreservedly held at the disposal of any who sought advice or counsel. When he said, "I will pray for you," one felt that he was among those who had power with God and prevailed, and went home from such a visit strengthened and encouraged.

How much we need now to remember his advice to fellow-servants, which he so admirably put into verse :—

For mastery strive not, remember thy Lord—
(Although his was God's universe, heaven and earth)
Became servant to all, both by work and by word,
For "He humbled Himself," lowly One! from his birth.

Mr. Penstone well remembered this himself, for his courtesy and kindliness, which had such an old-time air with it, were indeed beautiful to see. He had "studied well how to be quiet," and was always so considerate for the feelings of others that all who knew him loved him. More especially was this the case with the poor and humble, for whom he ever had some kindly word of comfort and help. None were too lowly for him to notice and visit when health permitted, for he delighted to follow closely in the footsteps of Him who was meek and lowly in heart, and to go wherever that Master was loved and served. We may say of him as he said so sweetly of his friend, J. G. McVicker :—

Oft wearied in thy much-lov'd Master's service,
Yet never of it—take thou now thy rest,
Until the morn of resurrection glory,
Upon His breast.

"Sleeping in Jesus," His dear arm around thee,
Thy conscious spirit wakeful to His voice,
Which, telling of the love that sought and found thee,
Bids thee rejoice.

. . . . . .

Yea; sleep in Jesus; where there is no dreaming,
But all are perfect pure realities—
Until, His word thy dust from Earth redeeming,
He bids thee rise.

Bible Training Institute.

THE first decade in the history of the Glasgow Bible Training Institute has just been closed. At the public meeting held a few days ago there was a good attendance of deeply interested friends. Lord Overtoun, who presided, in a review of the excellent work accomplished, declared that the record was better than the founders had even hoped for. A deeper cause for thankfulness lay in the testimony received from every part of the world to the good work accomplished by those who had gone forth. At the outset some had doubted the finding of openings for those who were trained. As a matter of fact, the difficulty had been to supply applications.

The report submitted by Mr. John Anderson (superintendent) showed that during the session the students had numbered seventy-nine resident (fifty-nine men and twenty women), four outside, with 250 in evening classes. The applications for next session are more numerous than in any previous year at the same date. An ex-students' union is being formed. Twenty missions and a large number of services had been conducted in Glasgow and neighbourhood. In all 1,312 meetings were held, with an aggregate attendance of 135,075, and 2,803 persons were dealt with individually.

Meal-hour meetings were held in some of the large workshops in the city, also in the night asylum and lodging-houses. Bible-classes have been held regularly in Duke Street and Barlinnie prisons, and regular visitation has been carried on at some of the police courts. Marked success has attended this work, more especially at Barlinnie, and men once only too well known to the police and prison officials, are now filling respectable positions with credit and satisfaction. The total number of services held by students for the ten years since the Institute was opened is 13,606, with an aggregate attendance of 1,460,703, and during that period 28,759 persons have been spoken with individually.

THE USE OF COMMENTARIES.

After testifying to the deep interest with which he had all along followed the work of the Institute, Professor Stalker addressed some words of counsel, more particularly to the students, on the subject of books and reading. He urged the importance of mastering completely at least one of the great authors, and also of knowing the best work of a number of others. Speaking of commentaries, he said it was good to have one which gave the exact meaning of a text in the simplest possible language, and then another which went on to expand, illustrate, and apply. "Matthew Henry" was indispensable, but his advice was, "Do not take 'Matthew' without the others, and do not take the others without 'Matthew.'"

Having just returned from a meeting of the Home Mission Committee of the Church of Scotland, at which the members had been perplexed by the difficulty of meeting the demands made upon them, owing to the dearth of available licentiates, Rev. Thomas Martin said that, if the Institute continued to turn out such men as it had hitherto produced, he had no fear as to openings being found for them. He spoke in terms of high appreciation of the excellent work being done by several men, trained in the Institute, who were already on their staff. To the students Mr. Martin's word of counsel was: "Covet earnestly the best gifts"—good health, intellectual vigour, and spiritual power. Of supreme importance was the culture of the inner life. "It is that indefinable something, behind words, that tells."

Diplomas were then presented to the outgoing students, whose future spheres of service are as follows:—Africa, two; India, one; China, two; S. America, two; Australia, two; Canada, five; Home field, seventeen. Brief addresses were given by six of their number.

Other Lands.

Through Equatorial Africa.-I.

By Mrs. A. B. FISHER (C.M.S.), of Toro.

Mrs. Fisher will be better known to many readers as Miss Ruth Hurditch, of Uganda. The tour described is Mr. and Mrs. Fisher's journey from Kabarole to Entebbe (the Government headquarters in Uganda) to have their marriage officially registered.

WITH our black porters carrying our home furniture, food, and clothing, my husband and myself set off in a south-westerly direction, intending to pass through the districts of Ankole, Koki, Budu, Buganda, and back home by Bunyoro; a circular tour covering from 700 to 800 miles of country. Our first halting-place was a delightful spot, on the shores of a large crater lake, which is one of some eight or nine others in this immediate vicinity. There are hippopotami to be seen here, which at night come out of the water and tramp from one lake to another in search of food.

Passing on from Isunga, we continued our way, visiting and marking out the boundaries of the church sites which hitherto had not been officially measured up by a European in this direction; the scenery became very striking as we reached the high land toward the north and north-east shores of Lake Dweru. Here the Ruwenzori range of mountains presented a really fine view with its rugged, lofty, and intersected ridges, down which rivers can be seen descending from an altitude of 4,000ft to 5,000ft, which break up into broad and swiftly-flowing streams through the forests that crossed our path.

THE SAZA'S CAPITAL.

After four days' marching we reached the capital of a "saza." To explain this word I must tell you that Toro is divided up into eleven large chieftainships, or "sazas," each of which is governed by its chief, who himself has tributary chiefs.

The head of Kitagwenda saza was here when we arrived, and a right royal welcome awaited us. His house is built on the brow of an imposing hill, surrounded by a tall plaited reed fence. As we slowly climbed up the broad, well-kept road or path, the chief, "Nikodemu Katambala," dressed in spotless draperies, came down to meet us with a large crowd of followers, accompanied with a drum and native horn. The excitement of the people was very great, and their greetings quite overwhelming. Quantities of food were brought in for our porters, and a fat-tailed sheep each for the "Bwana" and his "bride."

It was to this place that two of our first women teachers were sent, and so I had a splendid opportunity of looking into their work and giving them a few words of advice, and I asked the women to come to the little mission church next morning so that I might speak with them. Quite 150 came together, and I urged them all to rally round the two women teachers, and with them seek to win their neighbours and friends for Christ.

Two days' more tramping and we reached the borders of Ankole. The people appeared quite unaccustomed to the sight of Europeans, and, as we halted on the road, we saw the men collecting all their women and goats from the distant huts and sending them quickly away to hide in the swamps and hills, evidently mistaking us for a raiding horde.

WOMEN BREADWINNERS.

It was quite refreshing to see the men here doing the hard work of digging the road and their banana plantations as well as the women, for in Uganda and Toro the women only do this kind of work. Quite recently a man came to Mr. Fisher and thanked him with deep gratitude for giving him potatoes, beans, and matoke (bananas). When asked what he meant, as Mr. Fisher had sent him no present, the man replied, "Did you not marry me to my wife?" Christianity is, however, instilling respect for women.

Our poor old donkey becoming ill on the road, we were obliged to send it back, and trust to our own feet to carry us to Mburaro, the capital of Ankole, four days off.

We were considerably surprised in the character of Ankole, having been given to understand that it was one vast stretch of plain; instead of this we found a mountainous country, entirely covered with long grass. Here and there small acacia thorn bushes lay dotted about, but with scarcely a sign of cultivation. Yet during the four days' marching we saw no game, excepting one antelope and a few partridges. One can scarcely believe that in a country so void of food there can be a large number of people; yet such is the case, for it is a tribe of herdsmen, who live almost entirely on the milk from their cows. As we passed along the road we saw two or three large herds of these cattle on the hill sides. They are splendid creatures, with immense horns, but without the hump which is a peculiarity of the Buganda cows. In Ankole there are two distinct races, the Aberu, who are the original inhabitants of the country, and the Bahima, the ruling and by far the more powerful race. Generally speaking these are of lighter complexion, with features of a more delicate type, and free from negro characteristics. It is believed that they emigrated from Abyssinia or Somaliland. Probably disease among the cattle drove them from their native land, and they travelled south until they reached this ranch-like country of Ankole.

BRITISH ADMINISTRATION.

The country is quickly growing in importance. The English Government have built a strong fort at the capital, and have a large force of Nubians and Bogandas under civil and military control. Excellent roads have been cut for transport to Entebbe (the Government headquarters on the shores of the Victoria Nyanza), Albert Edward Lake, Toro, and Koki. The native population is considerable, and the king is building a large, double-storied mud house, while on the hills round are hundreds of little grass huts standing out on the bleak hills with no sign of cultivation or garden around, or even a fence. It is now just over a year since missionaries were permitted to enter the country, and now there is a splendid mud church, with a large number reading with view to baptism, including the king, his minister, and some of the chiefs, and already there are some sixteen mission stations around. It seems an impossibility that such an immense district as Ankole, as large in area as Uganda, should be worked by one European missionary. We found Rev. Mr. Willis in charge here, and spent five very pleasant days with him visiting the people and getting an insight into the magnitude of the work before him. Although only out in this sphere for eighteen months, he can preach to the people in the language of the country. His plan is to remain some weeks superintending affairs in the capital, then itinerating round that he may gradually get to know his "parish," and so be able to station his teachers in the more thickly populated districts.

STRANGE NATIVE CUSTOMS.

The constant drinking of milk makes the people horribly fat; the king, although only about twenty years of age, weighs twenty stone, and one little boy of seven years, an important chief, could scarcely walk, and although tall, is almost as broad. They are simply obliged to drink gallons each day, and the stouter a person is the higher he is held in esteem and fear by the people. In another place we heard, while walking along the road, screaming and shouting coming from a hut, and on going in to find out the cause, my husband found a young princess of about eighteen with her eyes bandaged and her face covered with milk, being beaten by an old hag because she could not swallow down any more, and already she was abnormally stout. And we hear this is quite the customary thing to do. The women of Ankole are kept in strict seclusion as in the zenanas of India; you never meet a woman on the roads unless of the working class, and when I went in to visit they remained hidden inside their bark cloths.

Tract Work in Central China.

A REPORT of no ordinary interest lies before us from the Central China Religious Tract Society. With headquarters at Hankow, where it has been associated for more than a quarter of a century with the honoured name of Rev. Dr. Griffith John, as president, the Society exists for the purpose of preparing and circulating as widely as possible among the Chinese Gospel truth in the shape of tracts. It is composed of the members of all the Protestant Missions in Central China, united under honorary officers, for work which can be done best in common, and all the funds at its disposal are strictly devoted to the printing of tracts, and to native colportage. Upwards of seventeen millions of Christian books and tracts have already been circulated among the Chinese, and now, in consequence of the recent favourable change in the attitude of the Government with regard to mission work, the Society finds itself overwhelmed by the demands made on its resources.

Many instances are given of the value of this work. We read of one man, a contractor, led to become a Christian through a tract given him by one of his workmen who had found it in the street. A yamun runner was first awakened by a tract on "Redemption," and became a Buddhist priest. After twelve years he met with further instruction, became a Christian, was baptized, and is now studying in the theological school with the object of becoming a native preacher. But perhaps the most striking instance is given by Dr. Griffith John, who tells how the London Mission has had thrown upon it, in South Hunan, the care of thirty new stations with about 5,000 members and adherents, as the direct result of the labours of native evangelists and colporteurs, there having been previously no foreign missionary stationed in that district.

WHAT A REPRESENTATIVE COSTS.

It is sometimes said that the world cannot be evangelized till every home church, in addition to maintaining its own pastor, maintains also its own representative in the mission field. The way is opened up here by which not a few but many Christians at home might easily have each a personal representative in the mission-field; for £10 will support for a year a native helper in this tract work, and ten shillings will circulate five hundred books and tracts among people who can read for themselves the message of salvation.

The report goes on to add: "Many years ago an old Chinese Christian woman called on her pastor, the missionary of the place. He inquired after her welfare and the welfare of her family in the country, whence she had come in the day before to attend the services. 'Times are very hard,' murmured the old dame, 'and the season is a bad one.' 'Ah,' said the missionary, 'It is good to trust in God.' 'That is true,' replied the old dame, 'it is good, indeed, to trust in God, but it is good to trust in the pastor, too.' Of course, no tender-hearted pastor could be proof against such an argument as that. One smiles at the artlessness of the transaction, but, after all, was not the old lady's philosophy very sound? She merely stated, in her ignorant fashion, a profound truth, that God sends his gifts and blessings to mankind through appointed channels. We confess to a feeling very much akin to that of the old, untaught Chinese woman as we look out upon the work which lies before us during this year of grace, 1902. We know it is good to trust in God, and we do trust Him, but our eyes are also fixed upon his people, to whom He has committed the sacred trust of funds. With such an opportunity for spreading the knowledge of his precious love as now lies before it, whoever has the power to become, even in the smallest degree, a channel of God's grace, and closes up that channel, incurs a tremendous responsibility. . . . Here is a field which pays enormously for the comparatively small amount of money and time and labour put into it."

The secretary is Mr. John Archibald, who may be addressed care of the National Bible Society of Scotland, Hankow, China.

The Indian Famine.

WRITING from the Mission House, Ahmedabad, Dr. G. P. Taylor describes the position of affairs as follows:—"The scanty crops that did appear were attacked by caterpillars, on which followed a flight of locusts, and after them swarms of rats. Thus, in many places, the peasants have recovered from their fields absolutely nothing. . . . West of this district, in Viramagam, some forty miles distant, and Radhanpur and parts of Kathiawar, the need is clamant, and a very large proportion of the entire population is either working at the relief camps for a subsistence wage or in receipt of doles."

Dr. Taylor also sends a cutting from The Voice of India, of June 7, which says:—"The total number of people on relief works during the week under report was 252,310, as against 252,028 last week, Ahmedabad claiming the largest number of increase. Several new works have had to be opened; for instance, the work of improvement to the Nawda water-supply channel in Ahmedabad. The numbers in receipt of gratuitous relief in villages and poor-houses have also increased, except in rare cases."

SEED-CORN FOR THE BHEELS.

"The help you have forwarded," writes Mr. G. W. Blair (of the Irish Presbyterian Mission, Jhalod), "came very opportunely, as I have had a number of applications recently from Bheels, who are in great need of bullocks. As soon as the rains burst (and we are now, June 12, anxiously awaiting their coming) I shall have a crowd of applicants for grain for seed corn. I shall now be enabled to give seed to a large number. The Bheels will need help."

"You will be glad to know," writes Pandita Ramabai, "that we have now 1,950 girls, of whom 1,600 are baptized Christians, and nearly all the rest have professed faith in the Lord Jesus. Please pray for me, and for the work we are carrying on at Mukti."

DYING OF HUNGER.

Rev. E. C. Lewis, of the Kurku and Central India Hill Mission, writes:—"Though this year we have not famine in the Central Provinces, yet, owing to the poverty of the people, caused by the last famine, and by the ravages of locusts and rats among the crops, the condition of many of the people in the villages round us calls for help. The chief need now in addition to the food they will require in the rains is seed-grains so that they may sow their fields and thus be saved from want and suffering next year. In going round the district, I saw in one village a poor man who the people said was "dead" of hunger—by this they mean dying—and a sad sight he was; a mere skeleton, with just sufficient strength left to crawl to the door to see me.

"A deputation of ten men has come twelve miles from their village with a letter from their Patwari, or village officer, to ask if we can help them in getting seed-grain.

"The people are now subsisting chiefly on a jungle-fruit called mobu; those who live near enough to the forests earning their living by cutting timber and carting it, or carrying it on their heads, to a distant market, the journey and labour occupying several days. But during the rainy season there is no timber-market, and the condition of these people will be indeed pitiable; many fields will be left untilled, and many of the people will, I fear, go away to Berar, in the hope of finding work there. The plan of giving relief followed in our mission, has been to give out cash for seed-grain, in loans, and we believe that, should a good season follow, the people will make an effort to repay the money lent them."

After Many Days.—Mr. Stephen Burrowes, superintendent of the Naples Sailors' Rest, passes on to discouraged Christian workers the following incident:—"A few days ago an engineer in a neighbouring port sent a written message of his having visited Naples some years ago. His fellow-engineers desired to go to Pompeii on the Lord's Day, but he persuaded them to go the service for seamen. The blessing they received at the meeting, remains to this day."

Notes from India.

THE CARE OF ORPHANS.

THE second annual report of the Faith Orphanage, Ongole, is a statement of encouraging progress. Some 250 orphans were cared for last year, and it is gratifying to learn that the health of Pastor Huizinga and his charge has been wonderfully preserved. The supreme object of the institution is the complete training of the individual life, and no pains are spared in the effort to attain this end. The children are diligent students of the Word of God, and their earnestness and sincerity are shown by the fact that quite of their own accord seventy-eight girls and fifty-eight boys have requested to be baptized. In all branches of their education they are reaching a high standard of proficiency, and a small beginning has been made in industrial training. The orphanage is not a mission institution, but is supported by voluntary contributions.

THE Y.W.C.A. IN INDIA.

Two years ago you were good enough to insert a letter of mine about a Holiday Home which we were opening in Simla for the benefit of young women who work for their living in the plains, and who sorely need, for a few weeks in the year, a rest and change. When I wrote last the Home was in the experimental stage; it has now thoroughly justified its existence, having been full during the past two seasons.

Letters written by those who have been with us, will speak for themselves. Says one: "My stay in Simla has done me good in more ways than one. It has been a spiritual uplift, as well as a physical benefit." Another: "You helped me to know Jesus better, and now I long to win others to Him." These are two among many.

The time has now come when the only one house in Simla which will meet the requirements of a combined Holiday Home and Institute is to be sold. Unless the Y.W.C.A. is in a position to buy it, the hope of having a building for our own will be indefinitely postponed. We have as yet hardly one-third of the whole amount in hand, and until that increases we dare not go forward. Communications may be addressed to Miss B. Picton-Warlow, Eurenny Priory, Bridgend, Glamorgan.—Yours, &c.,

E. Picton-Warlow.
Hon. Sec., Y.W.C.A., Simla.

PROTECTION OF CHILDREN IN INDIA.

As secretary of the Society for the Protection of Children in India, the writer has been watching a case in Calcutta Police-court in which a Hindu and his mother were charged with causing grievous hurt to the child wife of the former. The wife, a sickly, emaciated child of nine years, informed the Court that the accused had dragged her about by her hair, that her mother-in-law had twisted her finger, had broken one of her teeth with a stone, had scratched her face, and had caught her by the throat; that her husband had struck her on the foot with an iron hammer, and that together they had burned her with matches. A thrill of horror went through the court as this child described how the accused would light matches, let them burn until they became live coals, and then apply them to her body. The doctor who had examined the child corroborated the story as he spoke of a number of abrasions about the body caused by friction with some hard substance, of scratches on the face, of finger-nail marks on the throat, of blisters caused by burns, of hair torn out, of a severely sprained finger, a broken tooth, and a contused foot. In the end the accused were sentenced to nine months' hard labour. During the trial it was elicited that the man had had two child wives before this one, both of whom were dead.

This is but one side of the work. One has only to walk through certain streets of Calcutta to see another need. Hundreds of girls under the age of twelve may be found doomed to vicious lives. But, however much one may be stirred, practically nothing can be done as the law stands at present, and the Society is about to agitate for the enactment of a law which will enable such minors to be handed over to suitable guardians. For such an agitation to be carried on effectively funds are urgently needed, and the Society appeals to all lovers of children for assistance. Rev. J. P. Ashton (of the L.M.S.), 40, De Vere Gardens, Ilford, Essex, representing the Society in England, will gladly correspond. (Rev.) A. E. Summers.

Opportunity in South Africa.

WITH the end of the terrible war, the new South Africa is beginning to be evolved. The future of this new South Africa will be largely influenced by the tone given at the outset. Is it to remain essentially commercial and worldly, or is it to be more Christian? The military forces of the Empire have rallied in a remarkable way to preserve this land for the Empire; will the Evangelical Churches make an effort, which will cost them something, to render it more truly part of the kingdom of their King?

It seems certain that there will be a great opportunity in the near future for an evangelistic campaign throughout the land. The hearts of many have been turned to serious thoughts by the sad days through which they have passed. Hundreds are softened by bereavement. Surely in such well-ploughed soil, the good seed should be sown, and sown freely. Moreover, a true revival of spiritual religion, reaching to British and Dutch alike, would do more than anything else to remove the bitterness resulting from the struggle.

To carry out a well-planned evangelistic campaign in all the towns and larger villages a considerable force would be required. The colonial churches cannot set free an adequate number of suitable men for such an effort, hence this appeal. Is it too much to ask the great Evangelical Churches each to commission two of their ministers, men who have proved themselves able evangelists, for a six months' campaign in South Africa? A brotherly welcome and cordial co-operation could be reckoned upon from nearly all the ministers on this side; and a grand result could be confidently looked for.

Rev. David Russell, who has recently withdrawn from the co-pastorate of St. Andrew's Church, Cape Town, and is devoting himself with much success to the work of an evangelist, might, perhaps, be induced to act as organizing secretary for the campaign. His personal knowledge of South Africa, extending as it does from Cape Town to Bulawayo, and his practical experience of the possibilities and difficulties of evangelistic work in its towns and villages, would make him an invaluable helper in such an effort.

A well-organized force of twenty to thirty men could overtake the greater part of South Africa in six months. The winter months here—May to October—would be the best season for such work, and, provided the country is then sufficiently settled, the campaign should not be delayed later than May, 1903. It is impossible to estimate what such an effort, backed by the prayers of God's people, might do for the future of this land, and, indirectly towards the evangelization of the whole continent.

A Needy Effort in Rome.

THERE has just been sent to us in our time of need a fellow-worker. Our good Mr. Areas, who for so many years worked as assistant missionary here, broke down in health, and was advised by doctors to leave Rome for the north. He is now settled in Turin.

Rev. Rosario Giampordare, who has taken up the work, is always ready to visit, and is well received. It seems a sad pity that we should lose the services of such an efficient man, and yet I have had to tell him that unless funds come from a new source, his modest salary cannot be paid after this month, as the London Jews' Society, with a deficit of £5,700, cannot undertake new expenses.

I hope some of your readers may feel moved to unite in paying the £8 a month, which would secure his services for the remainder of this year. Otherwise he must seek work elsewhere, as he has a wife and children dependent on him, and we lose a valuable worker.

I have also a hope that, being an ordained man, he may be more successful than I have been in leading those Jews and Jewesses who undoubtedly believe in their heart to confess Christ in baptism.

Protestant Filipinos.

I HAVE lately made a trip of three days into the interior of Panay Island, to the town of Janiway, twenty miles distant, where there is a barrio, or settlement, composed entirely of Protestants and called Calvary Barrio.

At Janiway, I was surprised to find a beautiful old Roman Catholic church, as fine and imposing as any I have yet seen in the island, with a large convent building in connection with it, the latter being built of expensive wood brought from Masbale Island, I was told. The friars must have spent at least 100,000dols. on that church and convent. The greater part of the town is now Protestant. Some of the very people who helped to build this church and cemetery, compelled to work without pay, have been baptized into our membership.

A BORN LEADER.

I found Calvary Barrio a very interesting place. It is made up of people who have come from six or eight different towns, who moved there because they had become Protestants, and were being persecuted where they formerly lived. They have gathered about a young, boyish-looking pastor who does not look to be twenty years old, though he has a fine-looking head and face, and is plainly fitted to be a leader to them.

This pastor's name is Zamora, and he is a cousin of the Zamora who was executed by the friars in Manilla in 1874, for advocating liberal education for the natives. Zamora told me that he had always been a Protestant, though he had never had possession of a Bible until within a year. He has had almost no instruction, having merely heard the Gospel preached by Manikau a few times. He knew well that he was not intelligent enough about the Gospel to preach it, but he is studying as best he can by himself, with God to help him; and he is coming to study with Manikau and me for a few weeks as soon as possible.

He is the real head, the feudal lord of the barrio, if there be any such official. He directs the interests of the barrio in many ways, having secured a large tract of land to plant on shares, and now that they have harvested their rice they have a good supply of the necessaries of life, and as soon as the rice was harvested they replanted the ground with Indian corn. Zamora shows much energy and ability as a leader, and will be of great service to us and to God. I heard him preach once while there, and he talked very simply but earnestly about the danger of denying Christ, as Peter did. He told the people to stand fast for the Gospel, even though it cost them their lives at the hands of their Catholic neighbours, and that is no small thing to preach in a time and neighbourhood like the one they live in.

WELCOMING THE EVANGEL.

We had services that filled the greater part of the day and all the evening, the three days we were there, and many heard the Gospel who had never heard it before. Manikau was at his best, and the great crowds that came from surrounding towns were enough to make any preacher enthusiastic. Doronila made his first attempt, and though he is a man of forty-five years, he will soon learn to preach very powerfully. He is going to be a good worker for us.

The barrio itself—Calvary—contains some 200 houses and less than 1,500 people, but in Janiway altogether there must be at least 5,000 Protestants, possibly 7,000. I found that we have another entire barrio of Protestants at Bototan, five miles further north, and that there are very many people in that section who call themselves Protestants and are doing all in their power to get the Gospel. Of course, but few of them as yet, relatively, are evangelized.

Jaro is the centre of it all, for here the little printing-press is busy all the time, and the Gospel is being preached nearly every day, and some days for many hours consecutively. Hither these peasants come by hundreds every week to hear the preaching, buy literature, and get a new load of enthusiasm to take back into the town, and sow the seed along the way and in their respective neighbourhoods.

We tell our people to be the best citizens, the best workers, and the best Christians in the town, and they enter into the spirit of this. We tell the children that now that they are known to be Protestants they must be especially faithful in the schools, for Christ is being judged by the way they show up. Nothing has done me more good for a long time than to learn that a large body of natives, working on the roads being built by the Government, had been discharged because they did not work faithfully, but that the fifty men from Barrio Calvario had been retained, and that 400 more men from the same barrio had been asked for; and this, though the contractors on this road are mostly Romanists, who have been mocking us and seeking to discredit our work.

Last Sunday I baptized sixty-three more of these Christians who have been hearing the Gospel for six months or more, and I had great joy in examining them and finding that our work here is not in vain. C. W. B.

Mussoorie Convention.

THE annual Convention for the deepening of spiritual life was held at Mussoorie, India, June 3-5, when the presence and power of the Holy Spirit were manifested throughout the gatherings. As usual, prayer meetings had been conducted during the preceding week by a number of missionary brethren. Among the speakers were Revs. P. M. Buck, Dr. Hooper, A. Boyd, and J. Lyon, with Mr. K. C. Bannerji and Miss Hewlett. The general theme was "The Person and Work of the Holy Spirit," with the motto, "Looking unto Jesus" (Heb. xii. 2). Some of the speakers dwelt upon this as affecting the past, present, and future. The past took us to the life, death, and resurrection of Christ; the present to his work in heaven, and with us here by his Spirit; and the future to Christ coming to judge and to save. Other addresses directed us to the work of the Holy Spirit as symbolized by fire, oil, and water; the power of the spirit; the conditions of receiving the spirit; the good fight of St. Paul as accomplished in the power of the Spirit.

There was a feeling of unity throughout the Convention, and many received blessing through the Word. The evening meetings were well attended. We believe Jesus was glorified and his waiting people were equipped with power for new conflicts in holy life and service. The addresses were marked by a close adherence to the teaching of Holy Scripture on the ideal Christ life as a glorious possibility, and the blessed privilege of all believers entering upon the Spirit-filled life. The gatherings, which were presided over by Rev. J. Lamb (Calcutta), were brought to a close by a praise meeting, when many testified to having received blessing. We ask the prayers of God's people everywhere that the effects of this Convention may be far-reaching, and that great glory may come to our God in the consecration of believers, thus hastening the conversion of the heathen round about.

Italians in Geneva.

FOR many years the spiritual needs of 10,000 or 12,000 Italian workmen in Geneva have been ministered to by an Evangelical congregation, under the direction of Pastor Carmagnola, which, as far as attendance goes, is in a flourishing condition. In addition to the largely-attended regular services, there are a night-school and reading-room for adults, while young people are provided for by Sunday-school, with drawing and needle-work classes during the week.

Owing to the increasing number of worshippers, a small church, or chapel, is greatly needed. For two years the Italian Roman Catholics in Geneva have had a church, for which they are indebted to the generosity of their co-religionists in other countries. The Evangelical congregation consists chiefly of people in a humble condition of life, and the church is entirely maintained by voluntary gifts; but present resources are not sufficient to admit of the erection of even a simple building. Pastor Carmagnola's address is 3, Rue Amé Lullen, Geneva.

Scriptures for India.

WHEN expressing thanks for some hundreds of Scriptures sent out to India for medical practitioners and students under Lord Radstock's scheme, Mr. E. H. Hamilton, of Poona, writes thus:—

"I sincerely wish that someone who is anxious for souls would come out and take up the work of teaching the English-speaking natives about Jesus. Of all work in India, this is the most neglected, and seems to be one almost entirely overlooked by the missionary societies now working in India. The complaint among the missionaries is that they have no time for English work, and no men or money to spare for it. I see no difference in this kind of work and other native work, only that it is easier because we can reach them in our own English language. There are thousands of young men educated as far as the fourth standard and beyond, many of whom ultimately become Bachelors of Arts. I wish that an earnest Christian graduate and his wife could come and give all their time to this work. They would meet with hearty sympathy from every Christian worker here. All that has been ever done for this work, save on a few special occasions, is that a meeting is held once a week in a small unsuitable room by anyone we can get to speak to the students for an hour. Considering the thousands of people who may be met speaking the English language, we ought to consider this a crying need, and one demanding our immediate attention."

It is well that something has been done in the way of sending the Scriptures, and much more may be done in this respect; but Dr. McAdam Eccles (124, Harley Street) hopes that a personal response may be made to this call, direct from the educated men of Poona, to take them the Gospel which alone can save them from the unbelief which they are ever prone to entertain when their original faith is shattered. He would be glad to communicate with anyone desiring further particulars.

A Pathetic Service.

WRITING from Bitlis, Turkey in Asia, "R. M. Watchman" gives particulars of a recent missionary tour. His experiences indicate that while there is much to encourage Christian workers in Asia, there is also much to dishearten. In the course of this tour through wild Kurdistan, the missionary was able to visit about a dozen outstations, in eight of which there were communion and baptismal services.

"One very sad baptismal service," says the writer, "was for little Hagop (James), and in prison, because his mother, long harassed and again imprisoned on false charge of sedition, was not permitted to come to our chapel, even with prison guard, to stand up with her young husband at this service in honour of their first-born. Under police guard, the husband and I, with a few witnesses, took a solemn march to the filthy place where this innocent young woman, former graduate of the Mount Holyoke Seminary, is incarcerated with a murderess and several other females, reputed culprits, under sentence for five years—all because a copy of an article printed in an old Armenian paper, published in Van long before she was born, was found among her pupils' things during a search instituted by the local Government.

"Before beginning the service, in spite of all we could do, the poor discouraged mother cried as though her heart would break, and it was with difficulty any of us could restrain the tears, even to the police set to watch us! We ask prayers that the poor innocent one (formerly a valued teacher for girls in Moush city) may be freed when the Sultan comes to realise she is innocent of all intrigues."

Troops at Lydd.—Mr. F. E. Wootton, of the Soldiers' Home, Lydd, writes that he has been given permission to resume his open-air services on Sunday afternoons on the camp ground. He will be glad to welcome Christian workers at these gatherings, also gifts of Marked Testaments and Gospel literature. He may be addressed, North View, Lydd, Kent.

Obituary.

MRS. BRAINERD RADCLIFFE.

THE death is announced of Sarah Joanna, widow of Mr. Brainerd Radcliffe, son of the late Mr. Reginald Radcliffe. She passed away peacefully after intense suffering.

REV. DR. BOWDEN.

Wesleyan Methodism loses a devoted son by the death of Rev. Dr. Bowden, which took place on June 19, at Banwell, Somerset. Dr. Bowden was accepted in 1850. His first appointment was to Barnsley; while here, it was his habit to visit the day-school to learn how to interest children. Among the centres in which he "travelled" in his later years were Liverpool, Manchester, London, Llandudno, Bristol. In 1885 he was appointed Governor of the Kingswood School, where he remained seven years. In 1892 he received his last Conference appointment to the Wilts and Somerset Mission. In 1895, after a long period of loving and faithful service, he retired from active work, and resided at Chew Stoke, in the Bedminster Circuit, Bristol, until little more than a year ago, when he removed to Banwell. Dr. Bowden, in reviewing his life work, delighted most of all to talk of his work among children in connection with his Saturday afternoon classes. He regarded this as the chief feature of his ministry, and as producing the best and most abiding results.

REV. ALLAN WEBB, OF GEELONG, VICTORIA.

While taking part in the Simultaneous Mission so recently held in Melbourne, Mr. Webb was suddenly called to the eternal glory. He had often expressed the desire that he might know the joy of service until ushered into the presence of the King. The Lord granted His beloved servant his heart's request. Before me lies the latest sermon that he preached, delivered but a few hours prior to his departure and presence with the Lord. The work in this great Australian evangelistic mission has, it is believed, been eminently successful. Amongst the most devoted and zealous of the goodly company of preachers was Allan Webb, pastor of the Baptist Church, Aberdeen Street, Geelong.

It might interest your readers to know that in 1856-7 I was associated with that church and people, and took part in Sunday-school teaching in that city. Only a few short months ago, dear Mr. Webb wrote me asking if it were possible for me to preach in connection with the jubilee of the church, which was held but a few weeks since. As one of the oldest associates in that work, I wrote a letter telling something of early days. Little did I then think that we should see our brother's welcome face and form no more. He was a brave and faithful man of God, strong and able both in his defence and representation of revealed truth. He believed the truths he preached; the sound ring of conviction was ever identified with his utterances, and they yielded weight and authority to his words. He was well known throughout the Australian Colonies, also in New Zealand, as an able minister of Christ. His practical leadership of the well-known Geelong Convention for some years increased his power and usefulness. Our brother did useful work as the editor of a Baptist weekly, and conducted an admirable paper called "Light and Life." HENRY VARLEY.

Brixham Gospel Mission.—For some years a progressive Gospel Mission has been carried on by a number of fishermen and others of the working class at Brixham, Devonshire. They have been considerably aided by Mr. and Mrs. Baxter, of Drayton Park, who have supplied evangelists and in other ways liberally supported the work. In the rented mission hall Gospel services have been regularly held, as well as Bible classes, Band of Hope, &c., while open-air meetings and the visiting of fishing smacks, are among other efforts which have been made with encouraging results. From various causes Mr. and Mrs. Baxter are no longer able to give the support which the mission has hitherto enjoyed. Of the £130 per annum needed for its maintenance, a sum of £80 is contributed by the members, chiefly poor people. The evangelist is Mr. John B. Pickstock, Mission House, Brixham.

To a Young Missionary.

YOUTHFUL pilgrim! can it be
God hath thus commissioned thee,
Called thee with His loving voice
In His service to rejoice—
Orphan'd hearts to render glad Gathered at Hoshangabad,
Where Nerbudda's waters run
'Neath a burning tropic sun?

In that sad benighted land
Thou shalt take them by the hand,
And with gentle, winning ways
Brighten e'en their darkest days:
Little ones thy hands shall feed,
Tend them in the hour of need—
Ere the storms of life they meet
Guide them to the Saviour's feet.

Should thy tender, loving heart
Feel of solitude the smart,
Gloom oppressing heart and mind,
Home and kindred left behind,
Cling to Jesus. He will be
Friend and Comforter to thee;
In the lonely hour of grief
Prayer will bring thee sweet relief.

Should the sun's oppressive power,
At the weary noontide hour,
Fill with languor and dismay,
Chasing all thy zeal away—
Till the waves of heat abate
At the Saviour's footstool wait;
Though disheartened and oppressed,
In His shadow mayst thou rest!

Should the fierce tornado burst,
Let the storm-fiend wreak his worst—
Hark! a tender voice Divine
Whispers: "Fear not, thou art Mine!
Mine Thou wast in childhood's years,
'Twas My hand that dried thy tears,
When, with anxious thoughts oppressed,
Sleep refused to give thee rest."

Shouldst thou e'er with sadness fail,
Darkness o'er thy spirit steal,
'Neath the fears that bring distress,
Conscious of unworthiness—
With contrition bending low,
Where the streams of mercy flow,
Drink, beloved, drink thy fill:
He who called thee loves thee still.

Should the heathen darkness round
Crush thy spirit to the ground,
Cruel rites and wicked ways,
Idol feasts on festive days,
Yet the light of heaven will shine,
With its radiant beams Divine,
Where your Christian household share
Songs of praise and fervent prayer!

God thy steps in safety guide,
In His love mayst thou abide;
In His favour shalt thou trace
Tokens of abounding grace.
Trust Him in the noonday bright,
Trust Him in the darkest night:
Every fear can He dispel,
Youthful pilgrim, fare thee well!

Oxford Notes.

GREAT efforts are being made to secure an Evangelical church in the north part of the city. St. John's College, and the vicar of St. Philip and St. James are willing to give a site; and, if negotiations issue satisfactorily, the patronage will be vested in the Council of Wycliffe Hall, Oxford.

Ruskin Hall has been bought by the Roman Catholics, and as a result new buildings and a wider range of influence are to be attempted. Ruskin Hall was founded three years ago for the purpose of educating men, chiefly from the working classes. Two gifts of £1,000 have already been promised.

Mrs. Annie Besant drew a very large audience at the Assembly Hall. In the course of her address she maintained that Theosophy showed the communication of spirit with spirit and mind with mind to be as real and true to-day as when Jesus walked in Judea, and showed how men to-day could cross the boundaries of the invisible, turning faith into knowledge and hope into realization.

A Good Life.—It is a good life which is attended with a faith of righteousness and a sense of corruption. While I know Christ's righteousness, I should have the less care to know my own holiness. To be holy is necessary; to know it, sometimes a temptation.—John Owen.

The Name "Jesus."

SIR,—In his address at Mildmay Conference, Sir Robert Anderson, as reported, quotes the words, "Wherefore God hath highly exalted Him, and given Him a name that is above every name;" and then says, "It is a mystery what that name really was, but it was not the name 'Jesus.' If the name referred to was Jesus the passage that we have read, to my mind, loses its whole point and purpose. Jesus is part of our Lord's humiliation, and there is no music like it. . . The name referred to by the Apostle was, perhaps, that name spoken of in the Book of Revelation: 'The name written that no man knew but He himself.'"

"God gave unto Him the name which is above every name." The speaker stopped there; the next sentence reveals to us that name—"that in the name of JESUS every knee should bow, &c." Thus, though He has been received into glory, and no more has a body "like unto the flesh of sin" (Rom. viii. 3), yet He still is known by the name of Jesus, and before Him as Jesus every knee shall one day bow, and acknowledge "Jesus Christ as Lord to the glory of the Father."

St. John, who brings out perhaps more often than the other holy evangelists the Divinity of Jesus, speaks of the name JESUS nearly 250 times. When Saul was arrested on his way to Damascus, his Holy Capturer thus addressed him: "I am JESUS whom thou persecutest." Furthermore, in that grand epistle—the Church's great storehouse of precious truth concerning her one great High Priest—to the Hebrews, the inspired writer says, "we see not yet all things subjected to Him, but we behold Him who hath been made a little lower than the angels, even JESUS . . . crowned with glory and honour." It was Jesus crowned; it was "King Jesus"!

Lastly, in turning to "the Revelation of JESUS Christ" (a precious gift is this holy book to the Church and concerning the Church's suffering and glory)—there the name Jesus is pre-eminent as that the struggling saints glory in: "Here is the endurance of the saints; here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of JESUS." The harlot of Rev. xvii. is "drunk with the blood of the martyrs of JESUS." The holy angel said, "I am thy fellow-servant, and of thy brethren that have the testimony of JESUS; worship God; for the testimony of JESUS is the spirit of prophecy." The latter-day martyrs in the Church of God are to be "beheaded for the witness of JESUS." And, to crown all, the last words given to us from heaven, the seal stamped upon the whole Book, bears the impress of Jesus, for "I, JESUS, have sent mine angel to testify unto you these things in the churches. I am the Root and Offspring of David, and the Bright and Morning Star."—I am, yours faithfully, W. LANCELOT HOLLAND.

25, Royal Crescent, W.

Sir Robert Anderson writes in reply:—The meaning of Phil. ii. 5-11 is of such immense interest and importance that I am glad of an opportunity of dealing with it. I will not take up space by repeating what I actually said upon the subject at Mildmay. I turn to the passage. Relying on the reading of our A.V., the word name here is by the best expositors interpreted dignity (as in Rom. ix. 17, ex. gr.). But if the new reading—"the name"—be accepted, the question arises, What is that name? And here three indisputable facts will guide us. The first is that the name intended was given to the Lord after the resurrection, and because "He humbled Himself and became obedient unto death." The second is that it was not then that He received the name of "Jesus." And the third is that the only name known to us, "which is above every name," is the great name of JEHOVAH. That, therefore, is, I think, probably the name intended. But as an alternative I suggest that it may be his "new name"—the name which, as we would say in the language of the present moment, He is to assume at His coronation (Rev. xix. 12). If the exegesis to which I lean is right, the word "Lord" in verse 11 is equal to Jehovah, which name is translated Kurios in the Greek Bible. And for the sake of some it may be well to explain that verse 10 should read "in the name," &c. The reading "at the name" has no doubt suggested the popular view that "Jesus" is the name of verse 9, as it has led to the Roman Catholic practice of bowing whenever that name is uttered. The Greek preposition en is often untranslatable. Its force in this passage appears to be that upon the humiliation of Christ will be based the homage of all created beings. The Jesus of Nazareth and Calvary is the Jehovah of the throne.

"Oh that I were King!"

"OH that I were made judge in the land!" These words were spoken by Absalom when he "stole the hearts of the men of Israel" by inducing them to rebel against his royal father, David. In those days the king used to be the judge of his people's wrongs, so that when Absalom said, "Oh that I were judge in the land" he really meant that he wished he were king, as is evident from the way in which he afterwards acted (Read 2 Sam. xv.).

There are three motives which may give rise to such a wish. 1. Merely to gain power and admiration. 2. For an unworthy purpose. 3. For a good purpose to set wrong things right.

1. As children, we have all of us indulged in "building castles in the air;" perhaps we have lain awake at night pondering the wonderful things we hoped some day to accomplish.

Last week many of you saw the grand decorations made to celebrate the Coronation of the King, and felt much disappointed that the sad illness of his Majesty caused all the preparations to be made in vain. Perhaps you even wished it possible to have such a great occasion in honour of yourselves, to be dressed in fine clothes, and to ride in a stately carriage, so that people might come out in crowds to look at you. If this could have been, how carefully you would have practised graceful bows and charming smiles! But now that the King has been so seriously ill, I am sure you have not wanted to change places with him, for you would much rather be a healthy boy or girl, enjoying the beautiful sunny weather, than be even a king or queen, suffering pain in a sick room.

But even if your wish to be a king could come true, it would not be really best for you. Have you ever seen a young fruit tree with a slender stem bent down by the weight of fruit? The roots or the stem were not strong enough, and therefore the tree had either to bend or break. It needs strong people to bear much admiration, lest their characters should become twisted by it. In this sense the wish, "Oh, that I were king!" may be regarded as innocent, but unwise.

2. But Absalom's motive was to gain an advantage for himself. He said that if he were king he would put right the wrongs from which the people suffered, though he did not really care for the people, but only for himself.

Perhaps the same spirit may be found in some of us to-day. At school we wish that we were very clever, or at play very active, not for the sake of others, but in order that we might "score off" them. I used to wonder why poor children in the street were so fond of "playing at school," as I thought they would surely have had enough of school without introducing it into their play. But I noticed that the one who proposed the game generally usurped the position of schoolmaster or mistress, and caned the smaller children, and that play-school meant more punishment than teaching.

This does not remind us of a young tree overladen with good fruit, but of one with the worm of selfishness gnawing at its root, which would very soon cause it to be withered and spoiled; for selfishness leads to meanness, and meanness often ends in dishonesty. In this sense, the wish, "Oh that I were King!" can only be regarded as evil.

3. My third thought applies, perhaps, rather to older young people, who wish that they had power and influence for the sake of overcoming evil with good. Such a king was David, who had fitted himself to rule a kingdom by having first ruled himself. You remember how generously he treated Saul, his enemy, on more than one occasion, and thus fulfilled the verse, "He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty, and he that ruleth his spirit better than he that taketh a city." Another example is Josiah, who, when only twelve years old, made a strong stand against idolatry, and did much to reform the nation of Israel.

In the history of our own land we may remember good King Alfred, of whose reign we celebrated the thousandth anniversary last year; and, later still, the life and deeds of Queen Victoria are fresh in the memory of us all.

Now it is very certain that a kingdom cannot be composed entirely of kings and queens; otherwise there would be no subjects left for them to rule, and I tremble to think of the amount of jealousy and quarrelling that would arise among them. Yet we may all be royal in disposition, noble in character, and powerful in our influence for good.

Lives of good men all remind us,
We can make our lives sublime;
And departing leave behind us
Footprints on the sands of time—

Footprints that perhaps another
Sailing o'er life's solemn main,
A forlorn and shipwrecked brother
Seeing, shall take heart again.

As I was driving in Hertfordshire one day, I passed a stone monument by the roadside, with an inscription which told how, on a certain date, at that spot, William Clarkson dedicated his life to the abolition of the slave trade. He had been competing for a prize offered for the best essay in Latin upon the subject—"Is it right to make slaves of others against their will?" While studying up the subject, he was so troubled with the wrongs that the poor slaves had to endure, that he knelt down by the roadside and determined to spend his life in trying to secure their freedom, and he worked hard for twenty years, until his desire was accomplished.

It is a good thing to have some definite purpose in your life, and to fix a time and place at which to dedicate yourself to God for its fulfilment. Ask God to show you how best to use the life and talents that He has given you; then, although you may be only a very ordinary little person, you may do more good in the world than many a king.

Six Short Rules for Young Christians.

1. Never neglect daily private prayer; and when you pray, remember that God is present, and that He hears your prayers (Heb. xi. 6).

2. Never neglect daily private Bible reading; and when you read, remember that God is speaking to you, and you are to believe and act upon what He says (John v. 39).

3. Never let a day go by without trying to do something for Christ.—Every night reflect on what Jesus has done for you, and then ask yourself, "What am I doing for Him?" (Matt. v. 13-16).

4. If ever you are in doubt as to a thing being right or wrong, go to your room, and ask God's blessing upon it (Col. iii. 17). If you cannot do this, it is wrong (Rom. xiv. 23).

5. Never take your Christianity from Christians, or argue that because such and such people do so and so, therefore you may (2 Cor. x. 12). You are to ask God, "Lord, what would'st Thou have me to do?" and strive to follow Him (John x. 27; Rom. xiv. 16, 22, 23).

6. Never trust your own opinion; if it contradicts God's Word, ask yourself, "Can what I think be true if God's Word is true?" and if both cannot be true, believe God, and make your own heart the liar (Rom. iii. 4; 1 Jno. v. 10, 11).

"Our Father's Care" (Ps. xci.).

THREE voices speak in this Psalm, which is known to many as the Travellers' Psalm, because it is their custom, on the eve of a journey, to put themselves or their dear ones within its precincts. Young friends, never make a journey without just reading it and standing within its sheltered cloisters.

The first voice is that of the child of God.—Be sure that you have been born again, by faith in Christ, and through the regenerating grace of the Holy Spirit. "To as many as receive Him, He gives the right to become children of God." Only so, may you appropriate this Psalm.

He speaks in the second verse: "I will say," &c., and in ninth (see R.V.): "For thou, Lord, art my refuge." It is not enough to say, as Moses, in the previous Psalm, our dwelling-place. That thought was blessed, but the Psalmist needed something more than a generality; and therefore cannot rest until he has put the hand of an appropriating faith on all that God has and is, saying mine. The word refuge suggests the idea of some stronghold or harbour, on the walls of which storms, floods, tumults spend themselves in vain. The inmates hear the boom without, but they are absolutely secure. We all have tents (10, R.V.); but we need a refuge and fortress (2, R.V.).

The second voice is the re-assurance of the chorus of godly voices.—The first strophe is from 2-8; the second, from 9-13. It may be that there is some reference here to that marvellous immunity from the Plagues of Egypt, which is so often mentioned in the Book of Exodus. It was so remarkable that it attracted the notice of the king of Egypt, who sent once again to inquire.

But suppose one says that this Psalm is not literally true, because many of God's children have suffered from various ills! The answer is simple enough. Before anyone of these could be quoted as proving the failure of these promises it would have to be shown that the suffering child of God had definitely appropriated the protecting care of the Father. Also the question would be whether apparent evil were not really good. "Nothing can be evil which knits me more closely to God." If the water which I have to drink, says one, is bitter, it is at least filtered water, out of which God has strained all the poison, though He may have left the bitterness, for bitterness is a tonic, and all things work together for good to them that love God.

The third voice is the father's; verses 14-16. The Father rejoices to find two traits in His child: He hath set his love upon me, and He hath known My name. The word rendered, "Set his love," suggests the idea of binding or knitting oneself to anything. Let us cling to God, cleaving to Him as Ruth did to Naomi, and so we shall come to know Him intimately, as friend knowing friend.

Here is a sevenfold blessing indeed:—He will deliver, set on high,

answer,
be with him in trouble,
deliver and honour,
satisfy with long life,
show his salvation.

All this is included in the happy lot of those who make their home in God's secret place. And of this I know no better illustration than that afforded of this young king Joash, who, for six years, was actually hidden in the Holy Place of the Tabernacle. Athaliah might fill the land with the spirit of murder; but no weapon formed against him prospered (2 Kings xi.). How blessed are they who never venture forth from their safe and blessed shelter, but live in the house of God all the days of their life. F. B. M.

The Ten Commandments (Ex. xx. 1-11).

Golden Text—Luke x. 27.

REPHIDIM was the next place of encampment for the congregation of Israel, and here again was heard the voice of murmuring for water, and here, too, the Lord proved His presence with them: "Behold I will stand before thee there upon the rock" (Ex. xvii. 6). On the summit of a hill near Rephidim occurred that memorable instance of prevailing prayer, when the uplifted hands of Moses were supported by Aaron and Hur during Joshua's successful battle with the Amalekites, and "Jehovah-nissi" was written on the banner of commemoration (Ex. xvii. 15).

Mount Sinai.

Three months after they had left Egypt, with the Red Sea eighteen miles in their rear, the people encamped on the plain of Er Rahab, which was a stretch of yellow sand some two miles long by half a mile wide, dotted over with tamarind bushes, and surrounded by an amphitheatre of sloping granite mountains, rising towards the south-east in a huge pile of jagged cliffs. For teaching, by sight and sound, an assembled company on the plain below, no spot could have been better adapted for all that transpired on the summit of Ras Sufsafeh, "the mount which might be touched and burned with fire," as all would be easily visible to the furthest limits of the camp.

The first four commandments in the Decalogue contain the law God-ward, while the last six announce the law man-ward. The Lord Jesus summarized the whole ten in one word, "Love."

For several hundreds of years the Israelites had been dwelling in Egypt, and had doubtless copied the people of the land in their heathen worship. Christians do the same to-day, for an idol is that which comes before God in our soul, whether pleasures, riches, fame or friendship.

"Our God will have a whole heart or none,
Yet He will accept a broken one."

The Law and the Gospel.

God is the Source and Origin of the law.
God is the Author of the law.
"God is love," and the law and the Gospel are expressive equally of His love.

To warn against danger is as much an act of love as to rescue one who has fallen into danger. The law is like the code of danger signals, and the Gospel the lifeboat launched on the stream of time for the rescue of the perishing.

Unbelief snapped the cord of communion between God and man (Gen. iii. 1). Disobedience followed quickly (Gen. iii. 6), and fear took the place of love (Gen. iii. 8). The law was broken before the Ten Commandments were written on the tables of stone; man failed (Rom. v. 13, 14; iii. 20); Christ came "to put away sin," to reveal the God of love (John iii. 16), to fulfil the law (Rom. x. 4; Matt. v. 17), to redeem from the curse of the law (Gal. iii. 13; Heb. ix. 12). The at-one-ment (Rom. v. 8). Our example, to unite the broken cord; to lead the sinner to God (John xiv. 6), and to create love to God in each heart that will accept Him. By accepting the Gospel (dropping into the lifeboat), Christ is revealed in the heart of grown people or children, and by His Spirit sheds abroad the love of God there (Rom. v. 5). Law ceases to be a terror, for "Love is the fulfilling of the law" (Rom. xiii. 10; Ps. cxix. 97). James speaks of the royal law Jas. ii. 8). The law is the plumb-line to show how far we have gone astray, or the schoolmaster to bring us to Christ (Gal. iii. 24; 1 Cor. xv. 56). The Gospel, the anchor of hope (Heb. vi. 19). Profanity and Sabbath-breaking—where the love of God rules in the heart no one can speak His name without reverence, or give His Sabbaths up to worldly duties or pleasures. The Sabbath is God's sign between Him and His people.

Illustrations of the Lesson.

God's name first.

SOME time after the rout of the Scottish army by Cromwell at Dunbar, an engraver waited upon the Protector to secure his accurate portrait for a medal to be struck in commemoration of the victory. Cromwell was astonished to receive such a visitor, and remarked that he had come a great journey about a business of little import. After discussion, the Lord-General steadfastly refused to allow his own portrait to appear, and would only agree to the medal being struck on the condition that one side should bear the picture of the army, with the motto, "The Lord of Hosts," placed above it. No other name would he hear of. In giving the commandments to Israel, God said, "Thou shalt have no other gods before Me" (v. 3). His name should be first.

Insulting the king.

King Leopold, of Belgium, who is very partial to long country walks, is said to have had a strange experience on one occasion. He had travelled a distance, and stopping at a farmhouse, asked for a glass of milk. Before it was brought, the King began talking to his companion in English, and the housewife, not recognising her Royal visitor, turned to her husband and made an insulting remark in Flemish about the supposed foreigner. King Leopold finished his milk, and taking a five franc piece from his pocket, gave it to the woman, remarking at the same time in Flemish, "Let me present you with a portrait of the Englishman." The housewife thoughtlessly made light of her king; and many there are who speak similarly of God, not thinking that He Himself is present. "Thou shalt not take the Name of the Lord thy God in vain" (v. 7).

Guarding the day of rest.

The Crown jewels, which are usually kept in the Tower of London, are enclosed, as all visitors may observe, in a strong iron cage. Though the fact is not generally known, the keeper of the regalia has at hand both a bell pull and a speaking tube, so that an instant alarm may be given in case of need. The speaking tube communicates with another warder always on duty, and if the bell is rung twice the whole of the Tower guard is alarmed of the danger of the jewels. The Sabbath day is the crown of the week to be guarded with all vigilance. It is the beautiful jewel of the Lord thy God to be treasured with all care. Remember the Sabbath Day to keep it holy (v. 8).

The beauties of the sabbath.

Henry Ward Beecher once said that "a world without a Sabbath, would be like a man without a smile, like a summer without flowers, or a homestead without a garden. Our Sabbaths should be hills of light and joy in God's presence; and so, as time rolls by, we should go on from mountain-top to mountain-top, and at last catch the glory of the gate and enter in, to go out no more for ever." Wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day and hallowed it (v. 11).

Welsh Notes.

ONE of the best-known Baptist ministers in North Wales, Rev. A. J. Parry, D.D., of Cefnmawr, has presented a library of over a thousand volumes to the Bangor Baptist College. The gift is an exceedingly valuable one.

The Welsh Congregationalists of Carnarvon held their annual Association meetings at Talysarn on June 17, 18. Resolutions were passed rejoicing at the termination of the war in South Africa; expressive of loyalty to the King; and condemning the present Education Bill.

The annual meetings of the North Wales Congregational College were held at Bangor on June 20. The report presented was a satisfactory one. At the beginning of the present term there were twenty-three students preparing for the Congregational ministry. The financial year was most satisfactory. A debt of £310 at its commencement was changed to a favourable balance of £40 in hand at the present time.

At the Executive Committee meeting of the North Wales Temperance Association, which was held at Carnarvon on June 19, the latest reports of the Million Pledges scheme were presented. It should be added that, in Wales, the scheme is to remain in operation until August. At present the returns show a total of 25,694 old abstainers for the northern counties of the Principality. The number of new pledges secured is 6,624. The total, including children, is 45,195.

The North Wales Calvinistic Methodist Association held its meetings at Llangefni, Anglesea, on June 18-20, under the Moderatorship of Rev. O. Owens, of Liverpool. Several matters of connexional importance were dealt with. Amongst the most important of the resolutions passed was one urging the various Presbyteries, District Sunday-School meetings and Sunday-Schools to arrange some effectual means whereby Sunday-School teachers may be trained and fitted for their work.

At one of the meetings fifteen young preachers were ordained to the full work of the ministry. The usual address on "Church Polity" was delivered by Rev. Robert Jones (Rhos). The charge to the young ministers was given by Rev. J. J. Roberts (Iolo, Carnarvon).

The statistics of the county were presented by Rev. O. Parry (Cenmaes), and gave an encouraging view of the position of the denomination. In Anglesea the Calvinistic Methodsits number nearly 21,000. The membership of the other religious bodies in the island amount to the same total. The Sunday-schools have only held their own during the last ten years, and show no increase. During the same period about £40,000 have been spent upon chapels and other buildings used for religious purposes. The number of people as yet unreached by any religious agency is estimated at 8,000.

"His all the More!"

SUCH was the happy description of the director, Rev. J. L. Brooks, of the unfortunate children under his care in the Home for epileptics at Lingfield. "If Christ loved the healthy children, how much more the suffering!" And surely none appeal more to our sympathy than those whose inheritance leaves them the hopeless prey of fits. Their only chance is to be taken hold of young, and brought up out of doors as much as possible, with ample exercise and manual labour. Many thousands of them pine in our workhouses, often for lack of special accommodation, to our disgrace be it said, herded with the insane! Several homes have, however, now been established to meet their need, and that at Lingfield is in connection with the Labour Colony of the Christian Union for Social Service, with a special view to provision for those at present in the care of the Guardians.

On Saturday, June 21, the Earl of Meath, President of the Union, opened an additional Home for them, given by Mrs. Ruston, of Lincoln, expressing the hope that in time there would be developed there a village community of epileptics, such as Pastor von Bodelschwingh has so successfully established in Germany, wherein remunerative occupation could be found for all, surrounded by every care. Miss Sutter, authoress of "A Colony of Mercy," the account of the Germany colony which provoked this English experiment, pointed out that to render it wholly effective, it was essential still to provide increased accommodation—a laundry wherein the girls, as they grew up, could do work, at present a great expense; a separate home for the director in which paying patients could be received, and a hospice for visitors, both of which would help to support the work; a home for inebriates, and a training home for workers.

Mr. Brooks emphasized the need for nurses and "brothers" as the most urgent of all, and his own broken-down health was best proof of this, such undue burdens having been cast on his shoulders.

Rev. F. B. Meyer urged that no higher sphere of Christian service could be desired, coupling with personal work in such colonies the duties of Poor Law Guardians, an opening for men and women of means the opportunities of which he had but recently realized. To this Mr. McDougall, Chairman of the London County Council, added a plea that Christian men and women should become masters and matrons in workhouses, not for the salaries, but for the wonderful scope those positions afforded for real service. Speaking as the representative of a body responsible for the care of some 1,500 insane epileptics, whose reason might have been spared had they been sent in time to an institution such as this, which he considered a blessing to the nation, Mr. McDougall expressed the hope that this effort would receive sufficient support to afford accommodation for all the epileptics now in our workhouses. Many Boards of Guardians are willing to send their protégés, and to pay for their keep if once sufficient room is provided. The London County Council was only prevented from undertaking the provision by having no power to raise funds for such a purpose, but was willing to co-operate. Public bodies, moreover, could only provide officials to do the work, with which as such they could never cope; it remained with societies like the Christian Union for Social Service to provide men and women who, by devoting their lives would accomplish by love what nothing else could.

Dr. Paton, to whom the organization is due, having commended its claims, Mr. Henderson, the vice-chairman, called attento the endorsement it had received that afternoon by the presence of four of the busiest men in London. To set the whole work on a proper footing, at least £10,000 is required, and in view of its national importance, this ought not to be long in forthcoming. Particulars can be obtained from the Director, The Homestead, Lingfield, Surrey.

Tipperary Soldiers' Home.

"MISS, is the Home going to be opened?" Such were the words that fell from the lips of a soldier in the Worcester Regiment, a few days ago, as he saw us standing outside the new Home, which at last is finished and ready for occupation, if only—but, alas! we have no money for furnishing; not sufficient, in fact, to pay in full the builder! What is to be done? "Oh, there is no use asking people for money now. Everyone is going to the Coronation!" This is the cry; but if each reader of The Christian gave only a small sum, the Home could be opened, and all due paid off. When the Worcester Regiment returns from Kilworth Camp in August or September, the men will find an open door and a hearty welcome. Tipperary abounds with public-houses, and there is not a single other place of resort.

The builder still requires £400, and then there is the furnishing. The home is very compact and comfortable, and splendidly situated close to the barracks. Communications may be addressed to Mr. George F. Trench, Abbeylands, Ardfert, co. Kerry, or to Miss E. H. Thompson, Willmount, Sandycove, co. Dublin.

King Lewanika in London.

A DEEP interest was taken last week in a meeting arranged by the British and Foreign Bible Society for the presentation of copies of the Scriptures to King Lewanika, of Barotsiland, and the members of his retinue. In the unavoidable absence of the Marquis of Northampton, the chair was occupied by the Earl of Aberdeen, who in graceful terms expressed the pleasure it gave Christian friends to meet a potentate who had made such strenuous efforts for the elevation of his people. The Bible was, he said, offered as being not only the emblem but the practical foundation of the true welfare of any community. In addition to the king himself, copies were also presented to his son, Emasika; his nephew, Lubasi; his son-in-law and Sesuto secretary, Iwokatile; and the prime minister, Ngambella. All the copies were in the Sesuto tongue.

The sincere thanks of the king were tendered by Colonel Harding, who spoke in terms of deepest appreciation for himself and King Lewanika of the work of Mr. Coillard and other missionaries. The Paris Missionary Society was represented by one of its vice-presidents, Pastor G. Appia, who testified to the gratitude felt by himself and his coadjutors at what they had been privileged to see accomplished by the Gospel in Barotsiland, and at its recognition by the British people.

On behalf of the British supporters of the Society, Mr. James E. Mathieson expressed the pleasure it gave them to be associated with such an effort and fellow-labourers of such a character. In a few closing words Captain Bertrand declared that he would never forget the kindness experienced at the hands of the king when exploring his dominions.

Christian Temperance Campaign.

REV. DR. HENRY'S FUTURE MEETINGS.

The Grange Mission, Bermondsey.—After struggling many years against the difficulties resulting from inadequate accommodation for carrying on the numerous branches of the Grange Mission, Bermondsey, the committee have determined to meet the need by purchasing the freehold and rebuilding the mission hall and Sunday-school. The enterprise is a large one, but the workers feel that He who has led so far will still direct his people in this undertaking also. The treasurer is Mr. E. J. White, 151, Fort Road, Bermondsey.

Charles Fox Memorial Missionaries.

If it die . . . much fruit.

DEAR SIR,—Many readers of The Christian knew and loved Rev. Charles Fox, and mourn his loss to the Church of Christ. Many of them also knew the circumstances which befel his attached congregation, and their further loss of the place of his long and blessed ministry, Eaton Chapel and its adjoining Church Room, both of which have been pulled down.

The scattered congregation have agreed among themselves that the best way of perpetuating his work would be to send out a "memorial missionary" as a new messenger into the heathen darkness, that "living stones" for the great Temple might be gathered, and new life spring out of death. This prospect greatly comforts Mrs. Fox.

The Lord has greatly blessed this thought, and we have now the joy of two, instead of one; Mr. and Mrs. Frank (Livingstone) Wilson, attached friends of Mr. Fox, and who have found in this call the fulfilment of years of missionary hopes. Mrs. Wilson is a daughter of Dr. David Livingstone, and both are alluded to in memorials of Rev. C. A. Fox, pp. 184 and 160.

We write this because we earnestly desire the upholding in prayer of all who will unite in this service. We trust that many whom we cannot otherwise reach will thus share, and take Mr. and Mrs. Wilson into prayerful remembrance as they go forth shortly under the Church Missionary Society to Sierra Leone, also remembering their beloved family who give them.

Meetings of "Benediction and Prayer" will be held for them on July 3 and 9, the latter at St. Paul's Church Room, Onslow Square, by the kind permission of Rev. Prebendary Webb-Peploe, and to which any friends will be warmly welcomed on Thursday, July 9, at 8.30 p.m.—We remain yours sincerely,

Sophia M. and A. St. G. Nugent,
29, Eaton Terrace, S.W. Hon. Secs.

Irish Methodist Conference.

THE Annual Conference of the Irish Methodist Church was held last week in Dublin, Rev. Dr. T. Davison (Handsworth College, Birmingham) presiding. Rev. Wesley Guard was elected vice-president of the conference for a second time, and Revs. C. S. Laird, M.A. and W. Y. Northridge and Mr. Frank Megarry were chosen as representatives to the English Wesleyan Conference which meets at Manchester next month. Rev. Wm. Crawford (principal of Wesley College, Dublin) was selected as delegate to the General Conference of the Canadian Methodist Church which meets at Toronto once in four years; and Mr. Crawford will be accompanied to Canada by Mr. Richard W. Booth, J.P., of Dublin, one of the best and most generous laymen in Irish Methodism.

The church membership showed a net increase of nearly three hundred, and it was resolved to appoint a third general missionary to labour chiefly in the fairs and markets of Ireland. Ten ministers died during the year, nine candidates for ministry were accepted, and seven young men who had satisfactorily passed through their probationary course were ordained to the full work of the ministry. It was decided to wind up the Twentieth Century Fund at the close of the present year. Fifty-two thousand guineas have been promised to the fund, and over £48,000 has been paid.

It was also announced, in connection with the fund, that a farm containing 130 acres, together with the dwelling-house and farm buildings situated near Loughneagh, co. Antrim, altogether valued at £2,000, has been given by Mr. T. F. Shillington, J.P., of Belfast, for an orphan home for boys and girls. The gift was thankfully accepted, and trustees appointed for the property. The reports presented with regard to home missions, foreign missions, orphans, Sunday-schools, and other departments were regarded as satisfactory, and after transacting much important business, the conference closed.

"The Book."—I do not worship the Book, but I so intensely love it, that I can say with David, "My soul standeth in awe of Thy Word." You may speak of me as you please, and I can afford to regard it as I please; but when God speaketh, then every power is hushed to hear what He hath to say, and the whole heart trembles before the Word of the living God. It is no ordinary book. I hate the science of comparative theology. I know but one God, and all the rest are idols. I hate all comparison of sacred books. I know of one, and all the rest are pretenders. They have nothing of the tone, or the majesty, or the depth of this wonderful Book of ours. It stands alone—the sole and only Book of God.—C. H. Spurgeon.

Evangelists at Work.

Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Sims in Ireland.

THE good work accomplished during Cork Exhibition by Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Sims has spread, and now Bandon is being visited, where the meetings are well attended. There are "full houses"—quite an unusual thing for this time of year—ready to "see" and hear the Gospel. The lantern services attract, interest, and retain attention. Praise the Lord, Christ is being uplifted, and sinners led to His feet!

Bellshill, N.B.

A tent mission in connection with the Baptist Church, Bellshill, N.B., has been held with fruitful results. Night after night the Gospel was told forth by a number of well-known ministers. Among them were Revs. G. Whittet (Wishaw), J. Burns (Motherwell), John M'Lean (Govanhill), and the pastor, Rev. G. Harper. The Gospel was rendered in song by Miss Mary Reid, blind soloist. "Quite a number have been brought into contact with Christ, while believers have been quickened."

Race Week in Newcastle-on-Tyne.

The Open-Air Mission Band has visited our city again this year. It was a glorious week; the Lord has done great things in our midst. Meetings were held each day on the racecourse, the town moor, and the Bigg Market. Crowds gathered round, and the attention and reverence were marked. The power of God was manifested, and there were decisions for Christ at each meeting. What a joy it was to hear the bright testimony of one who last year was opposed to God and his work, but who, on the spot where he formerly spoke against Christ, has been pleading with others to accept his Saviour. This trophy of grace is only one of many. E. J.

The Simultaneous Mission, Melbourne.

The central meetings in the Exhibition Building at Melbourne maintained their interest to the close of the mission.

On the last day, the various meetings were crowded, the total attendance being about 17,000. At the midday meeting for business people there was scarcely standing room, and no sooner was it ended than a wild rush for seats for the next, over an hour ahead, took place. The hall was packed, and an overflow meeting was held elsewhere. But all records were eclipsed in the evening, when the building was thronged with perhaps 10,000 people. The doors were closed on hundreds, and they, not to be disappointed, held meetings outside the various entrances.

The meeting was a remarkable one. It commenced an hour before the stated time, and lasted till after 10 p.m. Mr. Geil, one of the evangelists, spoke characteristically on the story of the marriage feast in Luke xiv.

In response to invitations, several hundred people passed into the inquiry rooms. Mr. Geil announced that during the mission between 7,000 and 10,000 people had professed to accept Christ. A fine effect was produced in the singing by the united volume of thousands of voices, fired with enthusiasm, led by the grand organ and a brass band.

Messrs. Williams and Maxwell in Edinburgh.

Last week's services, in continuation of the mission of Rev. E. L. Williams and Mr. H. L. Maxwell, at the Carrubbers Close Mission Hall, Edinburgh, were characterized by an ever-increasing interest and attendance. Many of the large meetings revealed results which were very gratifying. At the close of some of the evening services the workers were kept till a late hour dealing with inquirers, and frequently a very deep impression was created, both in the usual service and in the largely attended after-meetings. At the close of the second week's meetings it was felt that, owing to the continued and increasing interest, this special mission should continue yet another week, and this was entered upon with tokens of blessing.

Our workers have received a great stimulus, and the faithful, earnest, and practical addresses of Mr. Williams have been much appreciated; while the musical part has been very ably sustained by Mr. Maxwell and the large choir which has gathered around him.

The open-air dinner-hour services at the large public works in the city have greatly contributed to reaching large numbers of the working people, and it is felt that some means must be taken for permanently continuing such efforts.

The best comment on the third successive week is that the interest and blessing are so great that it is felt that the meetings must go on for at least another week, and after that, so loud are the calls for help in other parts, of the city, that in addition to an evening service next Sabbath in the large hall of the Mission, the Synod Hall (the largest in the city) has been secured for a great evangelistic service, to link the work with an effort which it is hoped to make in one of the large churches in the western part of the city.

On Monday night a praise-meeting was held, when many who have received blessing gave testimony. Last week several other friends rendered great help, among them Rev. Dinsdale T. Young, whose address on "Now" resulted in many professed decisions; Rev. Jas. Robertson, whose address on "The Holy Ghost" was very helpful to many who had just come into the light.

The Saturday and Sabbath night gatherings were meetings never to be forgotten, so great was the impression created. This week Mr. Wm. Stewart, whom God has so manifestly blessed all over Scotland in recent months, is to co-operate in the work of our American friends. G. A. B.

In connection with the Gordon Evangelistic Mission, Aberdeen, four tents are in use for Gospel work in the counties of Aberdeen and Banff.

Rev. H. Powers, D.D., has just concluded a fruitful open-air mission at Rothesay, Isle of Bute. Mrs. and Miss Powers assisted in the services by singing the Gospel. Much blessing has been the result of the visit. Large congregations gathered at each service.

A gracious revival has taken place at Millom, Cumberland, in connection with the Bible Christians. Scores of persons have been led to Christ, and quite 400 have signed the total abstinence pledge. Rev. W. F. Ellis, the pastor, has received great encouragement.

On Sunday, June 22, at Chathill, Northumberland, Mr. C. E. Barraclough closed a mission which will long be remembered by those who attended it. The prayers of the young people who received blessing during the last mission in December were abundantly answered, and parents rejoiced over some long prayed for.

Dr. Baedeker in Norway.—On Saturday, June 21, Dr. Baedeker arrived at Loon. On Sunday 2,000 people gathered for a whole day's services. On Monday another large gathering was held, after which Dr. Baedeker went on to Nordstrand, to speak in the evening to Sunday-school teachers. Crowds came together on Tuesday at Drommen. Throughout the whole tour there has been abundant manifestation of the power of the Spirit, accompanied by eagerness to hear the Word.

About Books.

DANIEL THE PROPHET.

THE Book of Daniel has fared badly at the hands of modern critics; and the defenders have been fewer in number than the enemies who have so boldly led the attack. Unfortunately, some who have distrusted the general performances of criticism have followed precisely similar methods, with destructive results, in regard to the Book of Daniel, and thus have given little encouragement to students who, on other grounds, have contended for the truthfulness and authenticity of the book. For the third time, Sir Robert Anderson enters the lists with an answer to the objections which, of late years, have been raised against the historicity of the writing.* He has recast the arguments presented in a smaller book issued some years ago; and now replies to the Regius Professor of Hebrew at Oxford as well as to Dr. F. W. Farrar, Dean of Canterbury.

Those who have studied the subject, need not be reminded of the nature of the objections against the book; in a word, they are based on philological peculiarities, and statements which are held to be inconsistent with the admitted age of Daniel the Prophet. In some cases objections that were raised a few years ago have once and for all been disposed of through enlarged knowledge; such as now remain are here examined in detail by one who brings to the operation a mind that has long been exercised in the sifting of evidence and the unravelling of tangled skeins. We have read the pages with peculiar satisfaction, and have little compassion for the men whose misstatements of fact and unjustified conclusions are ruthlessly exposed. We cordially agree with the observation that the writers who have been so ready to decide the question, being experts along special lines of investigation (and not along all lines), are competent to appear as witnesses only, and ought not to usurp the judgment-seat. "When Professor Driver announces 'The verdict of the language of Daniel,' he goes entirely outside his proper province. The opinions of the philologist are entitled to the highest respect, but the 'verdict' rests with those who have practical acquaintance with the science of evidence."

Again and again we have called for the exercise of what is known as common sense in criticism, also for reverential regard to the claims of Scripture and the words of Christ and his Apostles. In dealing with the Book of Daniel, in particular, we would desiderate an acquaintance with chronology as well as linguistic peculiarities, with the body of prophetic teaching of the Old and New Testaments as well as with the actual limitations of cuneiform discoveries. And a modest patience should also find place. Sir Robert Anderson's defence of Daniel leaves nothing to be desired. Were we not already of his mind on the subject, we should yet feel compelled to defer to the judgment of one who, in addition to commanding the technical particulars furnished by a study of the text of the book and the inscriptions throwing light on the period, brings a legal training to bear upon his investigations, and a thorough acquaintance with the book of Daniel in its chronological framework and substantial contents. At any rate, Sir Robert has something to say, and he is entitled to be heard in regard to the wonderful book to the exposition of which he has given many years of studious thought.

Psalms xxiii. and Other Hymns. By C. Butler-Stoney. Here are some forty pieces; they have come from the heart, and are warmly spiritual. (G. H. Hemmel, Langport.)

Mr. Spurgeon's John Ploughman's Talk has reached its 435th thousand. Messrs. Passmore & Alabaster have issued a cheap sixpenny edition, which is a marvel of cheapness.

Rev. John Adams, B.D., Inverkeilor, has added a compendious little work on The Minor Prophets to the Bible-class Primers series, edited by Principal Salmond, of Aberdeen. (6d. T. & T. Clark.)

Mr. C. J. Thyme has brought out a "People's Edition (1s.) of the late Bishop Ryle's Knots Untied: being plain statements on disputed points in religion from the standpoint of an Evangelical Churchman.

Hymns of Consecration and Faith (2s. 6d. and 3s. 6d. Marshall Bros.) This well-known collection has undergone complete revision and enlargement to meet the growing requirements of the Keswick Convention and kindred gatherings. The range of subjects is wide and comprehensive, and reflects great credit upon the compilers both as to words and tunes.

* Daniel in the Critics' Den. A Reply to Professor Driver, of Oxford, and the Dean of Canterbury. By Sir Robert Anderson, K.C.B., LL.D. (3s. 6d. net. Nisbet.)

Alfred the Great: His Life and Times. By George F. Bosworth, F.R.G.S. (1s. 6d. Macmillan & Co.) For a simple sketch, we could desire nothing better. There are portraits, maps, and other illustrations, all of them admirably finished.

In a handsome little book, Near the Throne, Rev. Charles Bullock tells once more the story of Frances Ridley Havergal. There are many illustrations, and selections from the writings of the sweet singer. (2s. "Home Words" Office.)

Many parents have already used Mrs. E. R. Conder's In the Beginning, and the issue of the cheap edition (1s. 6d. E. Stock) makes it possible for more families of little ones to be made familiar with the stories of Genesis by means of it.

The stories of Annie S. Swan are being reissued in uniform series. These have already appeared: The Secret of Dunston Mere, A Blessing in Disguise, and An Only Son. (2s. 6d. each. Hodder & Stoughton.) Four short stories make up each volume.

The very numerous Christian Endeavourers all over the land, will hail with satisfaction a popular life of their much-loved leader, Francis E. Clark (1s. net. Melrose), by Rev. W. Knight Chaplin. We warmly commend this interesting account of the man and his work.

Twenty-six week-night addresses, originally published in The Examiner, have been gathered together by Rev. J. H. Jowett under the title, Brooks by the Traveller's Way. (3s. 6d. Allenson.) Throughout there is that clear Evangelical ring, full of tender invitation and comfort to those who labour and are heavy laden, which we have now come to expect from Dr. Dale's successor in the Carr's Lane pulpit. The addresses are just such as would give to busy men and women that "spiritual lift" which so many need in the middle of the week. They are models of that simple presentation of the Gospel through which the Lord promises to draw men unto Himself.

Dr. Maclaren's sermons are among the good things given by God to his people in the present generation. Volume after volume they have come from the press; they never call for criticism, but always compel warm commendation. The new series of discourses is entitled, After the Resurrection. (5s. Hodder & Stoughton.) Twenty-six in all, the discourses have Christ for their glory and substance. The earlier portion is devoted specifically to the words and deeds of the Lord after his resurrection from the dead. Here we have sound exposition and spiritual application, all in the style that is Dr. Maclaren's own. We trust the aged preacher will long be spared to give of his best, as in this volume, to the Church of Christ.

One of the lives that make history is recounted in Captain John Brown of Harper's Ferry. (6s. Fisher Unwin). By John Newton. John Brown was faithful to duty, even unto death; and the reader is startled to find that not forty-three years have passed since this judicial murder took place under the orders of an English-speaking judge. The vividly-told story is calculated to move any heart softer than adamant. On the other hand, the great revival which preceded the war had begun in the Northern States two years earlier; and it is a very different tale that is told in Christian Work on the Battlefield. (3s. Hodder & Stoughton.) After being out of print for many years, this volume places within reach many striking incidents of the labours of the United States Christian Commission. Probably nowhere else can so many striking instances of the grace of God be found in as few pages. The student will find in these two volumes the key to much of the modern history of the United States. On the one hand, the picture is black as night; on the other, radiant with promise of the coming Kingdom.

Before the recent troubles in China, the attention of the Christian Church had been drawn to Manchuria by accounts of the great spiritual awakening extending from 1895 to 1900, and since the fierce wave of persecution swept past records of steadfast endurance and of unflinching facing of death have astonished the world. The volume published by Rev. J. Miller Graham, under the title East of the Barrier (3s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier), supplies more than "side-lights on the Manchuria Mission," for it puts on permanent record the facts of a movement only paralleled in modern missionary history by the work of grace in Uganda. This was not a revival, in the sense of originating in a deepened spiritual experience within the Church before passing outside; its origin was among the so-called heathen. Mr. Graham hesitates to apply the term "Pentecostal," yet neither was it an ignorant stampede of heathenism into the Church. It was a widespread unrest rather than spiritual concern: but the sowing of the Gospel seed for twenty years had done much to produce it, and it was to the Christian Church they turned for enlightenment. The statement of anticipations as the result of the Russian occupation is the most hopeful that has come under our notice. This volume fills up in most satisfactory fashion one of the blanks in missionary literature, and will win friends for itself wherever it is introduced.

Church of England.

The amount contributed by the congregation of Christ Church, Lancaster Gate, W., to the Hospital Sunday Fund reached the sum of £1,628.

The Parish Church of Stepney, E., has been reopened. In the middle of last October a disastrous fire occurred at the church, and it has taken six months' work, and an expenditure of over £6,000, to make good the damage.

Preaching on Sunday at St. Peter's, Eaton Square, W., in support of the Queen Victoria Clergy Fund, the Archbishop of Canterbury said that he has known parishes where a clergyman could find no means of maintaining himself if he ate any meat at all; he knew one where fluctuation in the price of potatoes made a serious difference; he knew another where it was not possible to give to the children the ordinary education which the whole of the middle-class of our population demanded for their children; he had known men worn out by privation quite as much as by their strenuous labour.

The Duchess of St. Albans presided on Saturday last at a meeting in aid of the Church Army at the headquarters in Edgware Road, Marble Arch. Her Grace occupied a large, comfortable armchair, manufactured by the men of the Embankment Labour Home, the duplicate of one made as a Coronation gift to the King. A letter dated June 23 reached the headquarters recently from Buckingham Palace, stating that his Majesty was very pleased with the chair, and thanking the men for the gift. The duplicate was presented during the proceedings by the Duchess of St. Albans to Rev. W. Carlile. A striking feature of the meeting was a display of burglars' tools, whose owners are now members of the Church Army.

Congregational.

Rev. F. Barnes, B.A., has retired from the pastorate of Northgate church, Chester, where he has ministered for twenty-three years, during which period a heavy debt has been removed, and a large school erected and freed from debt.

The Great Yarmouth church received a visit from Mr. William Forbes, the Evangelist, on Sunday last. He preached at both services and at the P.S.A. In the evening he gave a very interesting account of his work among theatrical women.

The foundation stones of a new church were laid last week at Stainton, in the Furness district. Dr. Anderson, president of the Furness Congregational Union, presided. A long-needed addition to the accommodation for the Nonconformist population of the district will thus be provided by the new undertaking.

Rev. Alfred J. Wookey, who received his ministerial training at Lancashire College, is returning to South Africa as chief reviser of the Bechuana Scriptures. The British and Foreign Bible Society has undertaken to assist the London Missionary Society in providing the necessary funds to enable Mr. Wookey to complete his work.

The board of the L.M.S. has decided that the expenditure of the present year shall be kept within the average of the past two years. This means that a reduction of something like £4,000 will have to take place. It is in view of this circumstance that several students who have just finished their college course have been told that the Society cannot send them out, and that they must seek temporary appointments.

Victoria Docks' Union Congregational Church, E., has been reopened. Pastor A. H. Hills conducted the services. The morning gathering was well attended, and at night the building was crowded. Marked attention was paid. The congregations are composed entirely of poor people, many of them dwellers in "one-room homes." Mr. Hills writes:—"The awful indifference of the people on the one hand, and the activity of the extreme High Church and Romanists on the other, are the two great difficulties which we have to face. I am thankful for encouraging signs; souls are being led to Christ." Mr. Hills seeks the co-operation of Christian people in maintaining the work.

Baptist.

On Lord's Day, June 22, thankofferings and gifts were received at the church at Putney (Pastor T. J. Feltham) from the congregation and outside friends, amounting to £63 3s. 7d. Steps are being taken to reduce to some extent the mortgage upon the buildings.

Methodist.

Bible Christian Local Preachers' Conventions have been held at Tavistock and Winkleigh, the former for a group of circuits in the Devonport District and the latter for the Shebbear District. The first of the series was held at Holsworthy. All have been largely attended, characterized by Divine influences and in every way an inspiration to both preachers and people.

At Eden Street Wesleyan Church, Kingston-on-Thames, the twelfth anniversary festival of the dedication of the building has been celebrated. Rev. J. George Stuart (of Kensington) in the morning preached a helpful sermon from Ephes. v., and in the evening delivered a heart-searching message on "Ye must be born again." At the close an earnest appeal was given, and large numbers immediately responded, filling the Communion rail and adjacent pews; and trophies were won for Christ.

The Primitive Methodist Conference has taken two important steps in relation to aggressive evangelistic work. In the first place it sanctioned the raising of £3,500, the sum required to purchase the freehold of the site on which St. George's Hall, Southwark, stands. The second step was the appointment of Rev. W. R. Bird as Connexional Evangelist. This was the result of two years' discussion, Mr. Bird being the first Primitive Methodist minister to be set free from circuit work for strictly evangelistic labour.

The Sunday-school anniversary at St. John's Wesleyan Church, Manningham, Yorks, was an event of more than usual interest. In February last Rev. Thomas Waugh held a ten-days' mission at St. John's, which resulted in a great revival in the life of the church. The greatest effect of that mission was, perhaps, felt in the Sunday-school, 75 per cent. of the converts being scholars. The attendances have increased, and fresh interest and vigour have come into all the departments of the school, and the return visit of Mr. Waugh had been looked forward to with expectation. He preached to large congregations, taking as his text at both services, "Quit you like men."

Presbyterian.

The first anniversary of the settlement of Rev. W. Harvey-Jellie, M.A., as minister of St. Andrew's church, Cheltenham, has been celebrated. Rev. J. B. Meharry, D.D., of Crouch Hill, preached to large attendances morning and evening. The congregation look back with much pleasure upon the past year's work—the services have been better attended, and the spiritual life of the members deepened.

It is estimated that 4,000 young people annually leave Wales for the great towns of England, yet last year, taking the churches of all denominations, less than 400 could be accounted for. The North Wales Association of the Calvinistic Methodists has decided that it be an instruction to the churches in Wales when young members removed to London, that the authorities at home should communicate the particulars to Mr. W. Evans, Stamford Hill, who will make arrangements for their reception by the London churches.

Salvation Army.

Rev. F. B. Meyer presided at the opening of "The Nest," Springfield, Upper Clapton, a Home connected with the Salvation Army's Social Work among women, and devoted to the reception of young mothers anxious to redeem their character and to support themselves and their children. Thirty women can be accommodated, and a day and night nursery is provided, where the children are nursed after their mothers have left the Home for situations. Mr. Meyer congratulated Mrs. Bramwell Booth (who was present and spoke) that the forty-seventh Home now opened under her direction appeared so splendidly adapted for its work. He added that he found it difficult to restrain his tears when viewing the inmates and hearing particulars of their experiences. The Mayor of Hackney, and Revs. I. Parker and J. J. Ellis, with numerous other friends, expressed themselves warmly on behalf of the institution, which may be inspected at any time.

Mr. J. Switer, evangelist in charge of the "John Philpot" Protestant Van, has just brought to a close a series of lectures on "Ritualism in the Church of England," which have been delivered from his van, near Sherborne Abbey, Dorset. The meetings were well attended, and the lectures much appreciated.

In connection with the Protestant Reformation Society and the Women's Protestant Union, a united gathering was held at Exeter Hall on Thursday week. There was a crowded attendance, presided over by Mrs. W. R. Arbuthnot. The chief speaker was Rev. C. J. Casher, B.D., of Oxford. Taking as the basis of his remarks Jude 3, "Contend earnestly," Mr. Casher gave a cogent and comprehensive review of the present position of the Protestant movement in England, to which he added some practical suggestions as to the future of the work.

Fallen Asleep.

The Woolwich Wesleyan Circuit has suffered a great loss in the decease of its senior circuit steward, Mr. SAMUEL BARNES, J.P. He had been connected with William Street Chapel close upon half a century, and was deeply attached to the old sanctuary. As a trustee of several chapels in the circuit, and in various stewardships, he served Methodism faithfully and well.—Aged seventy-six, Rev. DAVID HENDERSON. For forty years he was minister of the Presbyterian Church at Rock Ferry, to which he was appointed in 1855 as a probationer, and ordained as its first minister in 1857. Mr. Henderson retired from the pastorate six years since.—At Belfast, Mr. J. THOMPSON, a devoted Presbyterian elder and Sunday-school worker, aged sixty-four years.—At Millthorp, New South Wales, Rev. W. T. LINSTER, B.A., minister of the Presbyterian Church, Boveva, co. Derry, aged thirty-three years.—On June 28, Rev. ROBERT BERRY, a well-known Congregational minister. He had just entered a field where children of various denominations were being entertained at Whitworth, Rochdale, and was in the act of handing sweets to a little child when he was seized with illness, and falling to the ground, immediately expired. Mr. Berry was for a long time minister of the Congregational church at Luton, and afterwards for sixteen years at Islington Chapel, N., and was greatly esteemed throughout the Congregational body.

Personalia.

Many friends and sympathisers will be glad to know that Miss MACPHERSON, of the Home of Industry, Bethnal Green Road, E., is making satisfactory progress towards recovery.

MR. JOHN ELLIOTT, the well-known evangelist, of Torquay, who has been laid aside for six months, is now somewhat stronger, and after a change of air hopes to be sufficiently recovered to recommence preaching.

ARCHDEACON ARTHUR E. MOULE is going back to his beloved China. He came home in 1894 seriously ill, and has hitherto been forbidden by the doctors to return; but he has never ceased to long after his old sphere of labour. Now, at length, his health is pronounced so fully restored that he may go out again, even in advancing years, in the hope that it may please God to permit him yet to serve the cause of his Lord among the Chinese.

The Boy Preacher.—From time to time young evangelists who obtain a measure of public attention and interest come to be called "Boy Preachers." A paragraph recently published in the London papers states that such a speaker has lately occupied the pulpit of a Roman Catholic church. He is not to be mistaken, however, for Mr. Jack Cooke, who recently conducted missions at the Great Assembly Hall and other well-known centres. Mr. Cooke is at present resting in America.

Notes & Comments

 Will readers still kindly remember our Day in the Country Fund?

The King. It is a source of thankfulness to the nation that the King continues to make rapid progress toward recovery. The events of the past fortnight have been so bewildering—first the sudden shock and then the suspense—that people have hardly been able to think. Now, however, that the King is out of danger, the chastened spirit in which the nation has regarded the upsetting of all its plans is evident. Christians may well mingle with their praise the earnest prayer that these "better feelings" may not soon pass away.

The King's Dinners to the Poor. Some marvellous figures are given as indicating the magnitude of the Royal bounty on Saturday last. The number of diners was over 500,000 (of which Stepney alone provided 48,000), and 78,000 voluntary helpers gave assistance at the 850 dining centres! This is a "record" indeed, the moral influence of which can hardly be fully estimated. But it is the kind heart lying behind the generous gift that will make the most lasting impression, and will assuredly do much to maintain loyalty among the masses of the people.

Some "Hitches." It is not to be wondered at that here and there local management was at fault, but under the circumstances this can hardly be deemed cause for much complaint; and if some who received the beneficence cannot be strictly called "the very poor," yet so long as it was assured that none of the latter were excluded, there is no ground for regret. It is a painful fact to know, however, that in this, the richest city in the world, there are over half a million people to whom a good dinner was such a godsend!

Another Fact. It is cheering to note the part that Christian missions were called upon to play in the distribution of this bountiful provision. Indeed, the scheme could not have been carried out without their aid. The noble army of self-denying men and women who toil, year in and year out, among their unfortunate brothers and sisters, are as much a safeguard to our country as Army and Navy combined. Christianity is not a failure!

The Rising Tide. In the appeal made by the London Reform Union to the Clergy and Ministers in London, to join in observing October 26 this year as "Citizen Sunday," the Committee say:—

> How many of London's army of 124,000 paupers and vagrants, her 30,000 casual poor in lodging-houses, 20,000 pauper lunatics, 6,000 imbeciles, 40,000 fallen women, and 50,000 criminal population have been produced by drunkenness? Whether it be drink which causes poverty, or poverty which causes drink, it is terribly clear how close the bond is between the two fell evils, and how, together, they work out in disease and crime, insanity, and death.

To lessen these dread figures undoubtedly should be the task of every Christian citizen. It is quite true, as the Union urges, that those who concentrate their energy on municipal control and legislation "can only do so with effect by keeping as their standard and goal the building of personal character"; but it must not be overlooked that the true basis of noble character is personal religion. Those who are born again in Christ will not fail in their duties to their neighbour. The golden rule of Christ (Mark xii. 30, 31) should be the motto of all municipal and Parliamentary life.

The Betting Commission. The House of Lords Commission upon the betting mania, appointed at the instigation of the Bishop of Hereford, has issued its report. While not anticipating that betting can be entirely eliminated from the community, the commissioners pronounce unhesitatingly against the publication of circular and newspaper "tips"; bookmakers who take bets in the street, or outside factories, from men, women, and children; the association of betting with legitimate national games; and they plead that if betting must exist at all, it should be confined to a special notified enclosure, upon the ground where a race is to be run, and there only. Our national life is so complex in its ramifications that perhaps it is hopeless to look for more than this; but will Parliament ever sanction so much? With the object-lesson before us of the reluctance of our law-makers to follow out even the recommendations of the Peel Drink Commission, a forcible public opinion will be needed to exact a tithe of what this last Commission advocates. The recommendations may not be all that Christian people desire, but they are in the right direction. The frank admission that the evil of betting is growing is, of itself, immensely important. When such statements are made by religious papers and people, many regard them as the fancies of fanatics. To have it set down as a fact by such a responsible committee is, at any rate, a point gained, and makes some legislation imperative.

Reeds Shaken by the Wind. As was anticipated, the Government, apparently bending beneath the influence of the alert drink interest, has yielded perhaps the most valuable points of the proposed Licensing Bill. That vested interest in a licence, which the Master of the Rolls recently affirmed did not exist, has now to be created at law for the benefit of the publican-grocer, who in his turn may be taken as representing the wealthy distiller or dealer, who stands out of sight. This action of the Executive is a step backward in the national life, but it is to be hoped that the measure thus altered may yet be defeated.

Return of Lord Kitchener. That Lord Kitchener will receive a right royal welcome on his return home goes without saying. He has made a reputation, not only as a man of war, but also as a man of peace. Perhaps the highest tribute of praise which he has received lies in the fact that he has won, not only the admiration, but also the confidence, of the people he has brought to submission. The King has already honoured him; Parliament has expressed its appreciation in a monetary vote; it remains for the people to accord him the hearty welcome he deserves. It is to be hoped, however, that "Mafficking" will have no further place in our national demonstrations.

A Bishop's Warning. A very solemn note has been struck recently by many preachers who, in voicing the nation's thanksgiving for the peace, have boldly and, in the fear of God, drawn attention to those public evils which unmistakably are corroding the national life; and which, if they are not lopped away, will hasten for England a doom like that of Tyre. One of these utterances calls for special thought. In it the Bishop of St. Andrews, preaching at Perth, said:—

> What is to be the harvest of the seed which has been sown in the life-blood of our best and bravest? Are we to go on satisfied with a religion which involves no effort, which demands no sacrifice, which with coward heart can never speak a single word, or strike a single blow, for the Lord who died to redeem us? Shall we go on without one strong effort to raise public opinion on social questions, about holy marriage, about the sanctity of the Lord's Day, about the treatment of the poor whom Christ has left as his representatives upon earth? Are we still to echo the miserable utterances of those who dare to speak lightly of drunkenness and impurity, as if God had never consecrated our bodies to be the temples of the Holy Ghost?

These weighty words should not be allowed to fall fruitless to the ground. The people of God are set as watchmen in the world, to sound the alarm of impending peril, and, by the testimony of word and consistent life, to warn the world of its danger.

The Curse of Caste. It is very difficult for English Christians to realize the greatness of the difficulties in the way of evangelizing some of our Indian subjects. The influence of caste is, perhaps, one of the greatest of all. The axiom of John may well be applied to those who are bound in its fetters: "If a man love not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?" and caste is, of course, fatal to brotherhood. The amazing precautions taken by some of the Indian princes now in England afford an object-lesson to all of its terrible power over the Hindoo mind. A specially chartered steamer brought over the party, and the most rigid precautions were taken to prevent any work being done by foreigners, i.e., non-Hindoos. Even the drinking water for the entire visit was brought from the Ganges, whilst the very soil necessary for cleaning utensils came from India. The railway in India has broken down much of this feeling amongst the ordinary people, but the "high castes" and the rich can afford to keep up the "luxury" of separation. The modern patrons of "all religions good alike" might devote a little of their genius to examining the difference between the Gospel, which proclaims universal brotherhood in Christ, and the dreadful contradiction of the common humanities which caste begets.

Handfuls of Ashes. The stereotyped heading "Famine in India," continues to appear over paragraphs of the painfully familiar kind, recording the variations in the numbers of those of our fellow-subjects whose daily handful of rice is failing, and whose miserable minimum of food is steadily falling below starvation point. We are being told, however, that for half a million or a million of people to be starving and in receipt of paupers' relief in India, is but a small matter in so huge an empire, and that in view of climatic and other causes, "the condition of things cannot be regarded as abnormal"! The plain fact remains, notwithstanding, that the unhappy and discreditable position is largely due to unjust land and revenue laws, and that comparatively little is being done after all to prevent the growth of poverty in a nation for whose spiritual and temporal well-being the English people are responsible before God.

Scriptures for India. In a letter to Lord Radstock, Rev. S. V. Karmarkar, of the American Mission, Byculla, Bombay, writes:—

We have received orders from all over Bombay Presidency, and the demand for the Bibles is very great. Some of those to whom the missionaries have spoken about the Bibles, are anxiously waiting for them. We are praying that God may put into the heart of the Christian people of England to give this wonderful gift of life to the people of this country. The vernacular Scriptures are in great demand.

This letter affords yet another proof of the greatness of the present opportunity in India, which is limited only by restricted funds.

A Too Frequent Occurrence. We have more than once called attention to the lack of forethought shown by conveners of public meetings, in filling the programme with a surfeit of speakers. Busy men are expected to come long distances to speak "for a few minutes," with the result that none have enough time allotted to deal effectively with any subject. A sharp rebuke was administered at the annual meeting of the Cardiff Baptist College the other day, as reported in the Press:—

The advertised principal speaker was Rev. Charles Williams, late of Accrington. The proceedings had commenced a little after 7 p.m., and it was just after 9 p.m. when the chairman, amid great applause, called upon the veteran Baptist divine to address the meeting on "The Baptists Outside Britain"—a subject specially appropriate, from the fact that the rev. gentleman has just returned home after an extended tour in foreign countries. Upon rising he said: "Mr. Chairman and friends, it is now after nine o'clock, and for forty-two years I have made it a rule never to start to speak in public after nine at night!" And then he resumed his seat.

All appeals to Mr. Williams to alter his decision were in vain, and "the meeting terminated by the singing of the Doxology"! Two hours had been occupied by preliminaries, and speeches from local friends—all excellent in their way, no doubt—but the sharp lesson was badly needed, and we hope its moral effect will reach far beyond its local limits.

Religious Indifference. Rev. Dr. Munhall, who for thirty years has been an evangelist in the United States, has recently summarised the causes which, in his experience, are the most powerful in America in leading men into habits of indifference in regard to religion. They are as follows:—(1) The intense commercialism of the day. (2) The unfaith of the Church. (3) So often receiving from the ministry a stone for bread. (4) Failure upon the part of the Church to conform to the divinely given directions as to its work, and how it should be done. (5) Widespread scepticism, largely produced by the criticisms made of the Bible by many in places of authority in the Church. (6) The natural depravity of man.

The summary, unhappily, is just as applicable on this side of the Atlantic, and so, indeed, is the list of remedies—(1) The preacher should speak as one having authority, and therefore should believe with unquestioning faith that the Bible is the Word of God. (2) The preacher should preach the whole counsel of God—what it says about sin, judgment, and hell, as faithfully as what it says about righteousness, love, and heaven. (3) The preacher should be rid of all mouthings and mannerisms, and tell out the Divine message in a plain, direct, and manly way. (4) The preacher should always prepare and deliver his message in humble dependence upon the Holy Spirit. The preacher who has power with God will have power with men.

Mrs. Besant's Theories. Among many vague statements that Mrs. Besant made at Oxford recently is the following:—

Two great doctrines common to all ancient faiths, and to every faith in its early days, belong as much to the Christian and the Mussulman as to the Buddhist and the Hindoo—the two great doctrines of the evolution of the human soul by a process of successive incarnations, and the fact that these incarnations are made a changeless law.

A missionary of twenty-one years' experience in India assures us that the native Christians there will have nothing to do with the doctrine of so-called transmigration. In fact, they are only too glad to know that they do not have to pass through 87,000,000 births (or nether lives, including all sorts of animal existence), but that there is only one "re-incarnation," namely, the new birth through Christ. Even the common Hindoo greatly dreads this so-called transmigration; hence the glad tidings of but one new birth, and that spiritual, holy, and eternal, is very welcome, and many of them gladly accept Christ on this account.

Another Fallacy. Mrs. Besant also went on to say:—

In our vast Empire of India seven faiths are there battling one against the other. People send out their Christian teachers to stir up strife, and make difficulties for the civil government, and raise angry feelings that turn the hearts of Indian subjects against them because of the insults to the faith they love.

We have only to put over against this statement the testimony of the famous Lord Lawrence that "Christian missions have done more for India than all other agencies combined." Christian missions in India, by what they have done, throw out a challenge to Mrs. Besant to prove her statements. Who have always been at the fore-front in education, reform, help to the famine-stricken, and in every good work? The answer is, the "Christian teachers" sent out by God's people from Great Britain, America, and elsewhere.

The Attack upon the Supernatural. There is an almost feverish rush on the part of many society persons after anything that bears any sort of affinity with the supernatural; on the other hand, certain Biblical critics are seeking to eliminate, little by little, the supernatural from the Bible. It seems as if these latter had chosen an untoward hour for their vandal's work—the hour when, in many ways, people are showing that at the heart of them there is something that the supernatural alone can satisfy—although they are seeking it in illicit ways. This double and contradictory movement is a phenomenon for study. What do men think to gain by explaining away the appearance of the fiery tongues at Pentecost as nothing more than sunlight playing upon the Apostles' heads, and allegorized by them into something else! Theories such as these are trivial to the last degree. Nobody yields an iota of hostility because of them; rather, rationalists become bolder, and think that all supernaturalism will yet be surrendered by Christian apologists. If the supernatural is admitted at all, why try and "accommodate" it whenever possible? Such a policy is bound to yield serious results.

Contending against God. The reality of a person's faith in God is obviously most severely tested in the presence of events which look like a contradiction of Divine Providence. Many, who in fair weather find it easy to exercise what they think is faith in God, are plunged into doubt when the storm begins to blow. It is not every one who rises to the sublime height of the spirit of David, and is able to say, "Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil." But if faith fails here, it fails utterly, for the spirit of doubt is a kind of negative contending against God. An eminent man in the world of art, in his reminiscences recently given, said:—

I do not say that Providence may not be good if we could see everything, but judging from the condition of the world which we see and the misery and suffering which go on around us, I find it difficult to believe. . . . But I think the world might have been much better arranged.

This is a poor way of dealing with life. "If we could see everything!" But is any man conceited enough to imagine that he ever can? But there is One who does "see everything," and that One, infinitely wise and good, ought to be trusted. If we would only look a little more deeply into the things that we can see, we should soon comprehend that what is impiously attributed to a defect of Providence is due solely to the sin, the impaired vision, and the abused freedom of men.

Our Debt to the Navy. Britain's debt to her sons who "go down to the sea in ships, that do business in great waters," is one which the country cannot afford to set aside. Among the organizations which are seeking to promote the spiritual welfare of our seamen, the Royal Naval Scripture Readers' Society has established a worthy position. During the forty-two years of the Society's existence, the navy has more than doubled; hence the necessity which arises for increasing the number of Readers.

With a view to meeting this need, a special appeal has been issued, under the patronage of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales. It is further supported by Admiral F. Leopold McClintock, who writes:—

"Britons are beginning to realize that the Navy is both the foundation stone and the protecting wall of our country's greatness. Is it too much to ask each householder on this occasion to impose upon himself a voluntary tax of one shilling for each member of his household, in order to promote the higher interests of the noble men who serve, and, if needs be, lay down their lives for our security on every sea, and in every climate of the world?"

Unhappy Ireland. We should be sorry to think that anyone judged the Irish people by the outbursts to which certain Irish members of Parliament are periodically given. That country suffers by reason of its representatives; but the Irish people themselves demand our sympathy, for they are an oppressed people—oppressed by drink and priestcraft. Ireland would soon flourish if these two evils were removed from her life. An Irish priest writes to a Dublin paper complaining of the "religious indifference" which emigrants to England exhibit in the latter-mentioned country. He declares that the majority of the Roman Catholic Irish who come to England give up the practice of their religion, although in Ireland they are "practical Catholics." But their religion cannot be very deep if it is so soon abandoned. The fact is that all religions which depend on sacraments and external observances are doomed, in the nature of the case, to lose their adherents when the latter are removed from the externals to which they have become accustomed. The true Gospel, which converts the heart, can never fail, for the regenerated man remains the same, no matter how his circumstances change. This is the Gospel that the Irish so sadly need.

The French Reformed Churches. The Synod of the French Reformed Churches of the Cévennes finished its meetings at Anduze last week. The threatened breach between the two sections, the so-called Orthodox and the "Advanced," has been for the time averted. The president of the commission, in the course of his report, expressed the conviction that, upon the fundamentals of the Faith, all were agreed. Belief in Him who died for our sins, and was raised for our justification, is expressed by all. We pray that the Spirit of life may come into the dead and dying sections of French Protestantism, that it may do valiant battle for the Lord against sin and superstition. France has come to a critical period; the Papacy is losing its hold upon it, and the people are ready to hear the Gospel. The Reformed Churches could do wonders if they were baptized with the Evangelical spirit, and if they gave forth a certain sound of the Gospel. A clear Gospel message and unity between the Churches are urgently needed for that country.

Subject and Brother. The Church Review, in a protest against the acceptance by the Bishop of London of the presidency of the Church Reform League, bases its objection chiefly upon its statement that "the League is simply an organization for turning the Kingdom of God into a Republic." The writer certainly does not seem to have grasped the spirit of the teaching of Christ in Matt. xxiii. 8 and 10. Those utterances of Jesus certainly point to a state in which between God and his subjects there is but the One Mediator—Christ, and in which each believer has been made king and priest by redemption through the blood of Jesus. "Be ye not called Rabbi, for One is your Master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren." In that brotherhood is (Luke viii. 21) the true democracy, and it is not to be found outside the kingdom of God.

The Need for Enthusiasm. Frequent complaints are made by pastors and other preachers of the lack of enthusiasm which is apparent in the ordinary public services. It is rare to hear an "Amen" at the close of a prayer. During the last few years especially, there seems to have developed in middle-class congregations a "correctness" of demeanour, which is marked chiefly by coldness and an absence of response. The effect of this frigidity is anything but healthy or helpful. It tells unfavourably upon the pulpit and the pew. If it is merely a habit that has grown, it is a very unfortunate one: but if it is the result of coldness of heart, it is much more than unfortunate. If the heart is stirred with the thought of God, it is impossible for a worshipper to be cold in his presence; and when a person feels deeply concerning any subject, he cannot speak coldly about it. "Every man," says a French writer, "can be warmly eloquent upon a theme which seizes his heart."

Life in an Evil Day.

THE alarming apathy and indifference of the masses to the things of God is undoubtedly one of the most sorrowful things we meet with in the present day. One cannot but be struck with the painful fact that God is omitted from most of man's thought and reasoning. Careless unconcern marks the world's attitude to things other than what are termed "Cæsar's." Yet "with commendable fidelity" (as such) its pleasures and business are wholly absorbing, to the exclusion of everything beyond; the unenacted future—imminent as events may be—meets with the same stolid indifference and unbelief. Such is the sphere or environment wherein the child of God is to pursue his way.

But maybe some would urge that the greater sharpness of the background should better serve to bring into relief the faithfulness of Christian testimony.

But there is an even worse side to this picture, and one whereby the truth is made ineffective; that is, the religious circle or company in which the Christian moves. The deadly sphere of formalism, into which so many of our churches have fallen, is far more prejudicial to the interests of the truth than all the hostility of the world without. It paralyzes the noblest, as well as the feeblest, service for Christ. The fire is quenched.

But outward things and services are studiously made attractive. Oh for the touch again of that vanished hand that marked the vitality of past days! Of what value is a church membership roll, composed largely of those whose ideas never soar beyond a round of weekly social events, under the auspices of the church to which they are attached? Even worse things than these have been known, but enough has been shown to prove that truth founded upon the death and resurrection of Christ and the coming of the Holy Ghost is not the general basis of Christian fellowship, or love in the Spirit the bond that cements that union.

Some will object, and call it pessimism to view the churches in this fashion. Nevertheless, much of the religion that obtains to-day appeals more to the physical senses of eyes and ears than to the heart or to the new nature.

In view of this state of things, is it not conclusive that the Church as a whole has failed to train up her children in the truth? Having allied herself to the world, she has proved false to the Bridegroom, and she is content with a superficial service where once a holy zeal and love for the Lord marked her steps.

If her spiritual testimony be not in evidence corporately, the Church's responsibility, as illustrated by the candlestick, still continues, and will do so until the Lord comes, as we view Him in Revelation in judicial role, to cast out the nauseous and lukewarm Church.

How comforting to the child of God in such a scene to be assured that God knows the end from the beginning. He anticipated the close of every preceding dispensation. And even in the midst of the darkest day there is a rift. As in the closing days of Malachi, so in Laodicean times, there are to be found, not in any collective sense, individuals who respond to the deep affection and mind of Christ. He presents Himself to the heart's door and says, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock. If any man hear My voice, and open. . . ." The Lord here, it will be noted, does not appeal to Christians as a community, but as individuals who can, in the midst of declension, respond to His appeals, as He pleads with tender persuasiveness. How appreciative He shows Himself to the response of such as turn to Him in a day when all outwardly is marked by failure! Such seasons of fellowship and communion are to be enjoyed here amid turbid scenes of contrariety and change.

Moreover, He was the very personification of Divine love as seen in the wondrous traits exhibited in his pathway here (cf. 1 Cor. xiii.). This path, marked by the footsteps of the Son of God, is the same that we are called to pursue, and the power to quicken and maintain us is the indwelling power of the Spirit alone. Though we may possess but as little strength as Philadelphia, yet we are counselled to hold fast his Word and to be jealous of his Name. This Philadelphian state, if we aspire to it, goes on coincident with Loadicea to the end. Let us seek to be vessels, without ostentation, bearing the treasure committed to us, through good report and evil report.

One thing the Apostle had fixed his mind upon—to press toward the mark (the goal). This was his object, and further, to know Him and the power of His resurrection. If this be our spiritual state, thence comes the power to refuse all fleshly and carnal religion. Let us see withal that none rob us of our crown; let each labour to win the Lord's approval alone in that day when "He shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe (2 Thess. i. 10).

F. H. Ellis.

God is Love.

"God is Love!" Oh, gracious message,
Coming to a world of sin;
Lost, undone, but not forgotten;
Still He waits its love to win.

"God is Love!" How thrills the message,
Every burdened sin-sick soul;
"Love's best gift" is Christ, the Saviour,
To redeem and make it whole.

"God is Love!" How bright the message
To the toilworn and the sad;
Love alone could bring them sunshine,
Lift the cloud and make them glad.

"God is Love!" A tender message,
Like a mother's lullaby;
Restful, soothing, re-assuring,
Hushing every anxious cry.

"God is love!" How true the message!
Ages past its truth confess.
Love unchanging, never failing,
Youth and age alike can bless.

"God is love!" Believe the message;
Trust and doubt not. Howsoe'er
Storms may gather, sorrows press thee,
Thou art ever 'neath His care.

"God is love!" Receive the message;
Let it permeate thy soul,
Lighting up its dark recesses,
Purify and cleanse the whole.

"God is love!" Repeat the message;
Let it fly the world around,
Till all hearts, in every nation,
Hear and love the joyful sound.

A. M. Bennett.

Jesuit Persecution in Bolivia.—A Bible Society colporteur was sent into Bolivia in the latter part of last year to open up new work. At the beginning of 1902 he was able to report very great success, and effected remarkable sales. A La Paz paper says that, having heard of his arrival at La Paz, and of his Bible work, the Jesuits sent a message, inviting him to their convent. He went without hesitation, and had to sustain a discussion before an audience of about three hundred persons. First, he was opposed by the prior, and very soon all the monks united against him. To quote his letter, "I discussed with them; but, glory to Jesus Christ, I had the victory, because I did fight with the shield of faith, and they with the shield of paper." Unable to resist the colporteur's arguments, the monks began to insult him; then the prior gave him a blow, which was followed by many others from the fathers, until they opened the door, and thrust him out into the midst of a mob. Some young men among the crowd, however, rescued the colporteur, and carried him safely to his lodgings.

The Inner Life of Godliness.

By Rev. J. GUINNESS ROGERS, D.D.

I WAS struck recently by a sentence in a very characteristic notice of the "remarkable" book (so even this journalist describes it) of my friend Dr. Fairbairn. "He falls, we think (says this writer, in the confident tone of his class), into the common error of theologians in attaching to theology an importance which, to the man of the world, it scarcely seems to possess." This de haut en bas style sounds as though it were decisive of the point at issue. But the question must surely suggest itself—even to an unprejudiced reader, who may himself have no special interest in theology—what has to do with the matter? What special knowledge does he possess? What claim has he to speak with authority? No doubt he has a right to his own opinion, but the question is as to the value which this opinion may fairly be said to possess. He and the theologian—whether a distinguished expert, or a humble believer whose creed is as short and simple as his faith in it is confident—belong to two different spheres, and cannot be expected to take precisely the same view of the great themes with which theology is occupied.

"We walk by faith, not by sight." "We look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen. For the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal." Here the difference is clearly marked out, and it is only necessary to realize what it is, in order to understand how worthless is the judgment of the man of the world upon theology. For by theology here is intended the whole sphere of spiritual truth, and of this the man of the world, ex hypothesi, knows nothing.

FAITH IS TO HIM A MERE ILLUSION,

and the world with which it deals is dreamland, in which emotionalism runs riot. On that point the believer may meet him and do battle with him, but not on the comparative value of the region which faith reveals. To put it in another form. The believer may have to vindicate his faith; but, that being done, he can admit no right, on the part of one who walks by sight, to pronounce on matters that belong to faith alone. "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are spiritually discerned."

It seems to me very necessary to insist on these points, however obvious it may seem, because of the arrogance with which these men of the world assume to speak on a subject which is really outside their ken. Once let the guidance of faith be discarded, and theology becomes nothing better than a guide-book to a land which has no existence. There is very much in the story of the world which must be an insoluble puzzle to those who deny the existence of any world but that which they can see or taste or handle. But that is for them to deal with and explain. We, at all events, may reasonably decline to accept their verdict upon forces which to us are the mightiest in the universe, but which they have resolved to regard as such things as dreams are made of.

We are quite content that they should esteem us fools, since it is for Jesus' sake, and we are consoled by the thought that so men who were mightier than they regarded the Apostles and even the Master Himself. Festus pronounced Paul a madman; but after nineteen centuries the name and influence of the Apostle are preserved, and are mightier than ever, while that of Festus would have been utterly forgotten but for this unhappy episode.

But we protest against their assumption to pronounce on the value of what they are pleased to regard as the fancies of mystics who are victims of hysteric emotionalism. We know in whom we have believed, and are assured that in Him is to be found the inspiration, the strength, and the power of the only true and enduring life.

A MESSAGE FROM A LIGHTHOUSE.

Let me here give a very striking illustration of what that life really is. A short time ago, there came among my letters a somewhat bulky package, which at once attracted my attention. It was evidently not one of those large advertisements which have become so heavy a burden to the letter-carriers of late, but apparently a veritable letter. It bore a Norwegian postmark, and as I had no correspondent and no friend who was likely to be travelling in that lonely region of the north, I was puzzled. I opened it, and found a long document of several pages written in a clear, bold hand, and from one who was a perfect stranger to me. It was addressed, "Dear and honoured Sir and Brother in Christ." Here was the key to the whole letter. It was an outpouring of soul from an earnest and devout man to an absolute stranger, who was, nevertheless, a brother in Christ. He had something to tell me of the struggle for the simplicity that is toward Christ in his own northern land, but his letter was largely occupied with records of personal experience which to me were specially interesting. He knew me only by name.

It seems to me (he says in his opening sentence) that authors and writers little know and imagine how far their products reach and in whose hands they come; and when in papers they read book notices, and are glad to see that their books are appreciated and have been blessed to some, that is only a small portion of what actually takes place, and that many more receive blessing and spiritual enlightenment, and their hearts thank them for it.

This is only an illustration of the way in which bread cast upon the waters may be found after many days. I must ask to be forgiven the merely personal reference, as without it I could not bring out the self-portraiture of the writer, which to me was extremely impressive.

Yes, but so it is—during the long watchhours in stormy nights, with the roar of the gale in his ears, shaking the high lighthouse, sits a plain, elderly man, reading and pondering some article in "Ecclesia" or in The Christian, by Dr. J. Guinness Rogers, bearing upon that great theme above all themes, the Kingdom of God, and the soul's salvation. Yes, and though never knowing each other after the flesh, never meeting this side the grave, I feel the blessed truth of the communion of the saints; and my heart is warmed, and realizes the truth of John's word in 1 John iii. 17, about all who are born again, and have passed from death unto life, as it is so beautifully expressed—

Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in Christian love;
The fellowship of kindred minds
Is like to that above.

I have many a silent conversation, through their writings, with God's servants, men such as Bishop Ryle, Edersheim, Geikie, Stoughton, Dale, Mellor, H. R. Reynolds, Baldwin Brown, Saphir, Elder Cumming, the Bonars, William Arthur, Agar Beet, Spurgeon, Culross, Grattan Guinness; and American authors—Drs. W. M. Taylor, Storrs, Cuyler, &c.

One other extract will complete the picture:—

Often (he says) when I sit up here in my lonely watchroom, alone with God, how thankful I feel for being a Christian; what comfort, what quiet rest and peace, in realizing being a child of God. As years go, and experience ripens, this blessed assurance is not so much dependent on momentary feelings and raptures, but more on a quiet, sure consciousness, deep down in the depth of the soul, resting upon the facts of what God has done for me, and what He by his Spirit has done in me. And all my thinking and meditating centres more and more in the one fundamental—the Atonement. If any time feelings are awakened, it is when I sing such hymns as "Alas, and did my Saviour bleed," "I gave my life for thee," "Rock of Ages." That bears upon the Atonement; that is solid ground for peace and joy in the Lord.

I have quoted this as a vivid illustration of what theology has done. This is the portrait of a spiritual man, and of a spiritual man of the twentieth century. In the principal part of the letter he deals with grave points of doctrine in such a way as to show his intelligent conception of the Gospel. But it is on these self-revelations of his soul—

Where faith and love combine
To make a life whose hidden springs
Are sacred and divine,

that I chiefly dwell. There could not well be an outer life with fewer attractions. Alone he dwells in the watch-tower of a lighthouse on the North Sea, with no music but the play of its wild waves; he has to seek all his consolation within his own soul. And he finds it, because he knows the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge. The man of the world may sneer at the value we attach to the spiritual truth which creates such lives, and which are found in numbers all through the centuries. But they have been the salt of the earth, and while they are inspired by the Gospel, we can glory, as Paul did, that it is the power of God unto salvation. But I must reserve the further consideration of this life for another article.

Is Missionary Interest Declining?

A SERIOUS QUESTION FOR THE TIMES.

I HAVE been for a long while unwilling to believe the pessimistic statement of some writers that real missionary enthusiasm is surely declining, but from several correspondents there has come of late a clear and unmistakable conviction that something is radically wrong.

To-day I receive a letter from a missionary friend (at present in England), who writes as follows;—

The missionary interest at home is at very low ebb at present. All missionary societies are complaining, and yet there are plenty of openings for meetings.

It is this latter fact which has made me ponder, and the sooner we face the whole situation, the sooner shall we be able to find out the real cause of this seeming lukewarmness.

We do not desire to live in a fool's paradise, by thinking the Church of God is alive to all her responsibility, when, perchance, she is neither cold nor hot; and my sole object in introducing this subject is to arouse thought and earnest prayer. May God guide each one of us to a right solution of the difficulty.

In thinking the matter out (as before God), we need to keep prominently before us these simple facts mentioned.

I. There are many openings for missionary meetings on all sides.

II. There is "a very low ebb" interest among the home churches.

Do not let us run away from these humiliating statements if they be really true. Because, if the latter fact be correct, then the many openings for missionary meetings may mean very little. And I am sorry to add my conviction that I personally think many missionary gatherings begin and end without any lasting result.

I should much like to see a correspondence on this subject, for I am convinced something good might emanate from expressed convictions.

I do not write as a pessimist. On the contrary, I am thinking if we could more and more get into line, and seek the Divine blessing and presence upon future missionary effort, there would not only be many openings for testimony, but there would be increased interest in missionary proceedings, and the thought of stewardship, personal responsibility, self-sacrifice, &c., would become a living reaction of flood-tide importance in every church.

Many a missionary, who knows anything of deputation work, will bear me out when I say, the lukewarmness of many gatherings is simply deplorable. Take a typical illustration. The usual announcements have been made, as a matter of course, that the annual missionary meeting will be held. The most important man in the neighbourhood has been secured as chairman. The missionary is asked to don native dress. As an extra draw, two or three others in the town are asked to make the missionary speeches. It is urged that the collection should be better than on the last occasion. And if it happens to be 2s. 6d. more, everyone is elated. The meeting is closed in the usual fashion, and the audience disperse.

This, I may say, is the usual thing, and largely accounts, as I imagine, for the low ebb of missionary enthusiasm. In place of all this deadness, let there be a true realization of "debtorship." Instead of seeking to get up a meeting, let there be a getting down of the Divine blessing. Ask that the missionaries themselves may be fired with living zeal. It is as easy to get into a miserable rut of formalism in India, China, or Africa, as it is at home.

May each one for himself and herself ask the solemn question—why this "low ebb" of missionary love and fire? If there is no power, may God wake us up, until we see a true "flooding" of pentecostal showers.

C.I.M. Chefoo. JOHN A. STOOKE.

"The Real Deficit."

DEFICITS have been the rule in the financial experience of the Churches and Missionary Societies which have recently made their annual reports to their friends and supporters. The great Church Missionary Society feared a deficit of £80,000; it turned out to be £27,000. The old and still vigorous Baptist Missionary Society has had now, twice in succession, a deficit of almost £10,000. The well-known and greatly blessed American Board at the end of last year had a debt of £20,000. And some of the Continental societies are in little better case.

DEVELOPMENT OF LOCAL RESOURCES.

What bulks large and palpable is the deficit in money. The man on the street can understand this. It takes some trouble for people to inform themselves of the conditions under which mission work is carried on, so as to be able to judge of the struggles and successes of the missionaries, the difficulties and requirements of their fields of labour. A deficit in the funds supplies a ready criterion, and suggests at once bad business on the part of missionary committees. The imputation of reckless management may sometimes be well-founded, but nineteen times out of twenty it is unjust. In the experience of most missions, it is not so much a shortcoming of contributions as an increase of expenditure that creates the deficit. By all means exact fees, cultivate self-support, and develop the resources of the native churches. But let us do this for their advantage, and not to save ourselves. It is a great responsibility to allow a thriving mission to be arrested in its proper development, for lack of funds. At present some of our missions are confronted with this peril.

A GREAT DANGER TO THE CHURCH.

More serious than the deficit in money is the deficit in missionaries. This is an experience which many of the missionary societies are encountering at the present time. When there is a scarcity of labourers to meet the pressing requirements of the home field, we need not be surprised that there is a lack of men for the foreign field.

The shortcoming in the supply of missionaries from the home churches may, as noted with reference to money, be a providential direction to press forward the training of a native ministry. But the time is certainly not ripe for the curtailment of home-provided agency. And what a loss it would be to the Church at home to be without the stimulus and sympathy awakened by the dedication of so many of the best and most earnest of her sons and daughters to missionary service abroad. What would a well-filled exchequer be worth, if there were wanting "the living sacrifices," with their faith and love and hope, and their power of spreading the enthusiasm which has kindled themselves? The deficit in men is a serious deficit, and may well occasion searchings of heart in all well-wishers of the Kingdom of God. For this there is a Divinely offered remedy: "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few; pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest, that He send forth labourers into His harvest." "I will yet for this be inquired of by the house of Israel, to do it for them; I will increase them with men like a flock."

SERIOUS LACK OF ELASTICITY.

The deficit in missionary interest and zeal is after all "the real deficit." The deficit in money and the deficit in men are symptomatic of this deeper, more momentous deficiency. The providence of God, by the opening of the doors, and the lifting up of the gates among the nations, by exploration, conquest, and colonial enterprise, is beckoning the churches forward, and leading them to greater victories for the Gospel than ever. And yet there is this scarcity of missionary candidates. There is also this serious want of elasticity in the resources of the missions. "This is the great, perilous, momentous deficit, the deficit in spiritual power, in the Holy Ghost. A river cannot rise higher than its source; a feeble stream is swallowed up in the desert. Only a steady flowing river can force a channel for itself through the waste, and transform it, as it flows, into a garden of the Lord." So says a writer in the May issue of the Allgemeine Missions Zeitschrift, and his judgment is just. We need a fresh outpouring of the Holy Spirit to fill all the channels of our activity, to quicken faith and hope and self-sacrifice among us. This will supply our spiritual deficiencies. His mighty power will give us consecrated lives, devoted to the evangelization of the world. His grace will repeat for us the experience of Pentecostal days, when "the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul; neither said any of them that aught of the things he possessed was his own"; and the treasury of the Lord for the extension of His Kingdom will be filled with the cheerfully-bestowed offerings of His people. Meanwhile, let us pray for the gift of the Spirit, and the entire consecration of gifts, and faculties, and possessions, to the service of our King. This is the message of Pentecost. This is the true remedy for every deficit.—T. N. in Life and Work.

A Life of Faith.

THE life of faith is a life of Rest
And heavenly balm:
No anxious thought disturbs the breast,
Nor fears alarm.
The soul that fully trusts is blest
With perfect calm.

The life of faith is a life of Joy
And real delight;
Of pleasure pure, without alloy,
Gladsome and bright.
Heart-melodies the lips employ
Morn, noon, and night.

The life of faith is a life of Love,
To love's own King;
Whose yearning purpose fain would move
On swiftest wing,
Its fervency and depth to prove
In everything.

The life of faith is a life of Power
And strength Divine;
Of triumph in temptation's hour
For soul of mine.
O precious life! God's priceless dower;
Is this life THINE?

Homes for Motherless Children.—In the course of the sixth report of his work, Mr. R. T. Smith (The Roystons, Grove Park, Chiswick) writes:—"Our first Home was opened on March 5, 1896, and at the present time we have accommodation for 105 children—motherless boys and girls. The total number that have benefited is about 300. In six months, application has been made on behalf of more than 100 bairns without a mother's care. Our most pressing need is that of a suitable building to accommodate fifty boys—such a place could be purchased for £2,000."

The Individual and the Nation.

"ONE sinner destroyeth much good," wrote the Preacher (Eccles. ix. 18). It is a truth which we see daily proved in many ways, notably in families where the drunken husband, the contentious wife, the gambling son, or the idle daughter, does much to break up the harmony and the happiness of home life. And it is just as true, although less apparent, with regard to nations.

There is at the present time a striking similarity between the position of this country and that of Israel at the time of the Ai disaster. Israel had just been granted victory over their enemies, Jericho had been delivered into their hands, and they rested from war. They had won their victory under God's directions against an enemy that would have taxed their utmost strength, and perhaps even then would have proved too strong for them by themselves. To God they owed their victory, and doubtless songs of praise ascended up on high.

But God was displeased. He had been disobeyed, and

THERE WAS SIN IN THE CAMP.

"To obey is better than sacrifice;" and although God was no doubt pleased with their thanksgiving, He would have been more pleased had He been fully obeyed. Failure in this brought upon the nation affliction and disaster. Ai was only a small city, and its inhabitants were but few, yet they proved strong enough to drive back the men of Israel that were sent to take it. It was a disaster for Israel, but it was not a great disaster; it was only a small force of Israel that was defeated. A much greater force, ten or twenty times as great, could easily be sent up, but the people recognised in the disaster the corrective finger of God. They realized that God was speaking to them, and they humbled themselves before Him.

England has just been finally granted victory over her enemies. It was God who gave us that victorious termination to the war, and we had our day of public thanksgiving, and publicly attributed the success to Him. But to-day we are sorrowing under a fresh cloud of affliction, and we cannot help being conscious of the fact that and rebuking us. Shall not we, like Israel, recognise the corrective finger of God, and humble ourselves before him?

But Israel not only humbled themselves before God, they also took steps to ascertain and to remove the cause of God's displeasure. And what was this cause? It was one man's sin, and that one man was an obscure and unknown individual. Now we are but single members of the human race; we are nothing more than countless atoms, and yet we possess great influence. No one of us passes through this world without leaving it the better or the worse for our sojourn. Each one of us influences, to a greater or lesser degree, those around us, and, therefore, the nation.

What then are we to do at this time of national trouble? Clearly our first duty is to examine ourselves, to see if there is any sin being treasured up in our hearts; and if so, in God's strength to expel it. Are we bringing God's wrath upon the nation, or are we helping to do so? Let us clear up that matter first, and then let us, having cast out the beam in our own eye, proceed to cast out the mote from our brother's eye. It is the duty of God's people at all times to do their utmost in His strength to remove the cause of His displeasure—sin. And should not a time like this make us ask ourselves whether we are doing all we can that way? Are we Christians doing all we can to check Sabbath-breaking, drunkenness, immorality, gambling, and our other national besetting sins? We pray for ourselves, for those around us, and for work in which we are specially interested, but do we pray enough for our nation as such? Thank God, although "one sinner destroyeth much good," yet "the effectual, fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much" (Jas. v. 16). H. W. H.

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, July 13. Deuteronomy xvi.

THE month Abib corresponded to the end of our March and the chief part of April. With it the Hebrew year began. The deliverance from the house of bondage took place at this season, and was also kept in mind by the institution of the Passover; just as the Christian Church commemorates continually, in the face of a scoffing and unbelieving world, that still greater deliverance, when the Lord Jesus became the Lamb of God, bearing away the sin of the world, and making propitiation for our sin by the shedding of his precious blood. Let us cleanse out the old leaven! (1 Cor. v. 7).

Seven weeks (i.e., 7 × 7) were to be counted from the time of putting in the sickle to the fields of standing corn, which took place about the time when the Passover was celebrated, and another great feast arrived—Pentecost (the Greek word for fiftieth). Joy at the finished harvest was specially prominent at this time, and was evidenced in the presentation of the loaves of bread before the Lord. On this anniversary, the Holy Spirit was given. Notice that special injunction to rejoice (11). The fruit of the Spirit is love, Joy. Too many Christian people are apt to be gloomy in their home-life. It is there that we ought to be our sunniest and best. Thou shalt rejoice, and thou shalt see that widows and strangers share thy joy.

The Feast of Tabernacles was the third great feast of the Hebrew year. It took place when the toils of the year were ended; and so the history of the Church is to close in the Feast of Tabernacles, described in Rev. vii. We look back to a finished deliverance we live in the dispensation of the Holy Spirit, we anticipate the time when the Tabernacle of God will be with men. Let there be no empty hands (16). With the gifts of love and faith—yes, and of ourselves—let us appear before God.

MONDAY, July 14. Deuteronomy xvii.

We must give God our best. Defaced and crooked coins should never be placed in the collecting basket. We should give God that which costs us something, such as we would set apart for our king.

In the old time, those who went to worship other gods, and so broke the ancient covenant, were rigorously dealt with, and put to death. The spirit of Christianity does not demand such treatment. We should rather turn the sinner from his error. But we should not admit into our inner friendship those who blaspheme the Holy Name by which we are called. Let us be sure, however, always to make searching inquiries before coming to a conclusion as to the true character of others (see v. 4).

The ultimate appeal among the Jews was to the Sanhedrim, composed of priests and elders; ours must be to our fellow-believers. When there is a quarrel between Christian and Christian, how good it would be if each had grace to refer it to the arbitration of the Church; but before the Church can give sentence, she must be very specially prepared to exercise her office of binding and loosing, by the cleansing of the blood of Jesus, and the teaching of the Holy Spirit (1 Cor. vi.).

There is a sad anticipation of the inevitable demand for a king which would arise, and which did arise in the days of Samuel. Notice the restrictions imposed by the King of kings; and remember to class v. 16 with Zech. xiv. 20, 21. The time may come in your life when you may have horses, which in themselves are innocent enough, but holiness to the Lord must be engraven on their bells.

TUESDAY, July 15. Deuteronomy xviii.

If God has chosen you to give all your time to his service, He will not be unrighteous to forget your work of faith and labour of love. The Lord will be your inheritance. He may supply your need directly, or through His people. But the Master will provide for His servants, who have surrendered other means of livelihood for His sake. Oh, that we may ever come with all the desire of our minds unto the place chosen for God's worship and work! If we have the mind, we shall have the place for ministry among the rest that stand before the Lord, and we shall have our portions to eat (7).

We are as much bound to refrain from all communications with the spirit-world as the Israelites were. God's children can have no part in spiritualistic séances, or in palmistry and the like. Saul, the first king of Israel, was rejected for this very cause (1 Chron. x. 13). And what need have we to have recourse to such, for teaching on the mysteries of life or death, or the life beyond? Have we not the Divine Prophet, ready to answer all our lawful questions, and reveal the way of God?

This blessed prediction is expressly referred to our Lord by Peter (Acts iii. 22, 23); and it is for us all to avail ourselves of His willingness to speak to us in such wise that we may know the will of God. Speak to me, O Prophet of God, with thy inner voice in my heart, that I may hear, and obey, and live! Let not Moses speak to me, lest I die! The one test of truth for the Israelites was that predictions came to pass; for us the corroboration of circumstances, and the consistency between the inner voice and our deepest convictions of what is right and good, will always indicate the voice of our Lord, who is Prophet as well as Priest and King.

WEDNESDAY, July 16. Deuteronomy xix.

Thus says the penitent, "Ah, my Lord, I am too often hurried, if I may dare say so, into grievous sin unawares. It is not by premeditation or by presumption, but suddenly, when off my guard, as though hurried forward by some strong, over-mastering and evil influence. I would not extenuate the sin which I commit under such conditions. It is sin, my sin, my grievous sin, for which I am responsible, and for which I need the cleansing of Thy blood and Spirit. But it seems to stand in a different category to the sins of wilful presumption, from which I dare not say I am altogether free. It is as Thy holy Apostle puts it, that I am 'overtaken in a fault.'

"How greatly I grieve Thee by these sins! I dare not think of the way in which I repay Thy patient, loving care. Oh, woe is me that I grieve Thee, my dearest Friend, and trample on the blood of Thy cross! What is this strange maze of things in which I am entangled, and in which I do the things which I would not? But Thou hast provided a refuge. When the wrath of the avenger is hot, there is a safe hiding-place in the cleft of the Rock. Thou art my Hiding-Place, my Place of Defence, my Strong Tower. From myself I fly to Thyself.

"Help me, who owe so much, to be very careful for others—not to invade their inheritance, not to bear false witness, not to do aught that would increase the sin or anguish of the world. Make me sensitive, not only for Thee, but for those who have been created in Thy likeness."

THURSDAY, July 17. Deuteronomy xx.

In our battle against the wrong of the world, we shall be constantly confronted with horses, and chariots, and a people more than ourselves. You cannot attack the power of the prince of darkness without arousing almost overwhelming odds, when judged from the human standpoint. But look not at the serried hosts; look up into the face of Christ, who has overcome, and who waits to go with you, and fight for you against your enemies and His, to save you (4).

The conditions of battle were made as light as possible by the regulations of vv. 5-9. The builders of new homes, whose hearts would always be turning back to them in thought and desire; the planters of new vineyards, who would be eager to get back to their young vines; the newly betrothed; the fearful and faint-hearted—all these were released from service. This was a wise provision, because no one who was influenced by such considerations would do his best on the battlefield. He could not be absolutely given up and surrendered to the campaign. As the Apostle suggests, no man can please Him who has chosen him to be a soldier, if he entangles himself in the affairs of this life. So we learn that absolute consecration to Christ is the chosen condition of a successful conflict against evil within and without (2 Tim. ii. 4).

The Lord ordained that His people should eat the spoil of their enemies (v. 14). Is there not a counterpart in this for us? We not only conquer, but derive nourishment and sustenance in the affray. Our faith, patience, and courage increase greatly as the conflict calls them into exercise. We are thus "more than conquerors through Him that loved us."

FRIDAY, July 18. Deuteronomy xxi.

A man might not be murdered in the land of Canaan without there being a strict inquisition of blood. In a valley, through which a brook was ever flowing (v. 4, see R.V.), a solemn service was held, in which the elders of the nearest town most solemnly protested, on the behalf of their fellow-townsfolk, that they were innocent of the crime of murder; and the blood of the heifer removed the stain of the sin from the people of the contiguous country. Oh, think how many crimes have been committed in the world, for which no such protestations have been made. The greatest blessings enjoyed by our world are due to the precious death and blood-shedding of Calvary; otherwise it had sunk, overwhelmed by the weight of the crimes which none have confessed, none have been punished for.

The Hebrews were allowed to take to wife the captives of war. Probably it was impossible to break them at once of the evil customs that were rife in the world around. To have edited at that time the Epistles of the Apostle John, or the Sermon on the Mount, would have been absolutely in vain. But, little by little, a higher, and still higher, ideal was set before them. It is thus that God educates us still. The interposition of a month, and the shaving of her head, at least checked the immediate indulgence of passion, and gave time for the growth of a nobler sentiment.

Is there not comfort in seeing the strict justice of v. 15, &c.? We are not to be governed by caprice; for God is not. "He is a just God, and a Saviour."

SATURDAY, July 19. Deuteronomy xxii.

There was much mercy in the old law. Notice the silver strand as it runs through the present chapter. We are not "to hide" ourselves from our brother's troubles and perplexities, but must bear his burdens, looking not only on our own things, but on his. How often we have hidden ourselves (see vv. 3 and 4). Ruthless cruelty was restrained, so that a mother-bird's life was not to be sacrificed, when the eggs were needed for the support of human life. The ox and ass were not to be yoked together, because of their unequal paces.

There was the foreshadowing of a greater separation, which was to characterize God's people. The vineyard was not to be sown with divers seeds, and garments were not to be made of linsey-woolsey. Perhaps we have not been careful enough in our teaching and preaching, or in our habits. There has been too much mixture of the world and God, of the sensuous and the Divine.

Let us not forget to build the battlement around the roof of our house—the battlement of our words, and especially of our example, so that we may not have to blame ourselves in after years, that any have come to their destruction through our failure to warn them.

In judging sin, we are taught by the closing paragraphs of this chapter to distinguish between a voluntary and an involuntary participation in an act which is in itself wrong. Alas, how often they cry and there is none to save! (v. 27).

Elijah: The Prophet of all Time.

By Rev. F. S. WEBSTER, M.A., All Souls, W.

X.—On Mount Horeb.—1 Kings xix. 9-18.

GOD dealt very tenderly and graciously with his discouraged servant. The physical exhaustion and strain under which Elijah was suffering were important contributing causes to his sad distrust, and like a physician, wise and kind, God dealt with these first of all. Elijah's nerves were soothed, and his whole system steadied and refreshed by rest and food. It was probably in the evening that the angel first awakened him from his sleep of exhaustion, that he might be nourished with suitable food; all that night the angel would watch over his slumbers, and with the return of day another meal was ready to further comfort and invigorate him. Happy are they whose sleeping and waking are thus sweetened by angels' visits, and whose strength is renewed with regular meals of heavenly food. There would be fewer breakdowns in the faith of God's people, if we always enjoyed this Divine nourishment, if we could say, "He wakeneth me morning by morning" (Isa. l. 4).

And yet on reaching Horeb the gloomy spirit of unbelief was still in possession of the once brave heart of Elijah. The vigorous air, the majestic scenery failed to exorcise it, and Elijah, like the moody Achilles, took refuge in a cave.

(1) The Lord came to him there with A SEARCHING QUESTION. Elijah was familiar with God's voice; but it was in a strange unknown tone that God now addressed him. Every word went home to him with rebuke. "What doest thou here, Elijah?" This is a time for action, the work of reformation is only begun; the elders of Israel must be encouraged and led in their protest against the State-idolatry. Thou art a man of action; what doest thou, the champion of Mount Carmel, the protagonist in this holy war, thou Elijah, whose name declares that the Lord is thy Strength? What doest thou here, hiding in this gloomy cave far away from the scattered flock, who sorely need thy watchful care?

Elijah shrinks from a direct reply. Self is still uppermost in his thoughts. He almost boasts of his loyalty to God. He deeply laments the infidelity and apostasy of the nation, and he complains that his own life is in danger. His eyes are on himself. What did his life matter? Was not that still, as ever before, in God's keeping? And if God should demand the sacrifice of his life as a martyr for the truth, would it not be a matter of congratulation rather than complaint? Moses had had an interview with God in that same Horeb under very similar circumstances. It was after a time of national apostasy, it was accompanied by striking manifestations of the Divine power and glory, but Moses had no thought of himself. He was consumed with pity for the erring multitude. His only thought was to make an atonement for their sin, even at the cost of his own inheritance. But Elijah is concerned for himself, and thinks his valiant championship of God's cause should have received different recognition. Child of God,

NEVER PITY YOURSELF; PITY OTHERS.

All heaven cares for thee; it is wrong to have any care for yourself.

When you begin to pity yourself, and to complain of other people, you may be sure that you are out of touch with Christ, and that Satan has driven you into a cave.

(2) After the searching question, came A SOLEMN COMMAND. God said, "Go forth, and stand upon the Mount before the Lord." Elijah was to leave the place of darkness and gloom, and stand upon the Mount, where Nature, in her majesty and stillness, might heal and soothe his fevered soul. He was to stand before the Lord. Was not Elijah always there? Certainly, when walking by faith, it was his common formula, "As the Lord of Hosts liveth, before whom I stand." But he ceased to stand before the Lord when he fled from Jezebel. No; when his faith failed in that critical moment, he was standing before Jezebel, dismayed at her implacable hatred; when he hid himself in the cave, he was standing before faithless Israel, angry at their supineness and neglect. He had ceased to stand before the Lord.

(3) After the solemn command came A DIVINE MANIFESTATION, which was a marvellous display of the majesty and power of God. A great and strong wind rent the mountains, scattering the splintered rocks like the chaff of a threshing-floor. An earthquake followed, and the whole mountain rocked and trembled at the presence of God. Then came a fire, and the whole desert was ablaze, like the thorn-bush that Moses saw. All this time Elijah remained in his hiding in the cave. He was awed and solemnized. He felt his littleness, his absolute nothingness in comparison with God. He realized that there is no want of power in God, that no difficulties are any hindrance in the way of Divine omnipotence.

And in the pains God took with His moody servant, moving all creation, as it were, to teach him lessons, we learn how very dear to God Elijah was. But all this time Elijah remained unmoved. For God was not to him as the hurricane or the earthquake or the fire. After the fire, however, came a still small voice, like the trembling notes of a great organ filling the cathedral aisles with soft delicious sweetness, and

THEN ELIJAH'S HEART MELTED.

The barrier of resentment and self-justification was swept away. Elijah wrapped his face in his mantle, and stood before the Lord.

It was a parable, surely, of the variety of Divine operations. God works sometimes by tornado and earthquake and fire; but these are only to prepare the way for the more effectual working of the still small voice. It was a rehearsal of the great truth taught to Zerubbabel: "Not by might, nor by power, but by My Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts." It explained God's dealings with Israel. Just as the still small voice drew Elijah from his cave, so would the gentler drawings of the Spirit of God entice out of their hiding-places the seven thousand loyal ones who had not bowed the knee to Baal. And just as hurricanes or earthquakes prepared the way, making the still small voice the more impressive and subduing, so Elijah's ministry had done its work. He had been sent with famine and fire and sword, and now all Israel was awakened, and all the more ready to hearken to the still small voice.

(4) But after the Divine manifestation came THE DIVINE COMMISSION. God had more work for Elijah to do. He was not to be cast aside or superseded. He was to be strengthened and cheered by but Elijah was still to be God's honoured servant, God's chosen messenger. It would, indeed, be a grievous thing if a sudden failure of faith should have disqualified him for future service. God had still confidence in Elijah. He would again use him to denounce Ahab's sin, and to bring down fire from heaven. There is no parallel here between Elijah and John the Baptist. The Baptist's voice was hushed when Christ had come. The friend of the Bridegroom was glad to stand aside in the presence of the Bridegroom. But Elisha was only Elijah's servant. Elisha was silent, and took no part in Israel until Elijah was taken up. And with the renewed commission came the cheering assurance that his testimony had not been in vain. He thought himself left alone, God's only faithful servant in the land. It was not so, there were 7,000 secret disciples who had not apostatized from God.

Learn then these practical lessons. Never take a gloomy view of the condition and progress of God's Church.

Never think yourself indispensable, nor pity yourself when you have to suffer reproach. Stand always before the Lord, and have unlimited faith in the quiet and secret operations of the Holy Spirit.

Hyde Park Services.

A RECORD SEASON.

NEVER have such immense numbers gathered in Hyde Park as this year, and never have there been such opportunities to declare the glorious Gospel to these cosmopolitan crowds. On Sunday evenings the vast concourse of people is phenomenal, visitors from the country, the Colonies, and the world having poured into this pleasaunce by tens of thousands.

Last Sunday evening, Rev. Francis Paynter and Mr. Chas. Cook conducted a splendid meeting, assisted by the devoted choir. The order and attention of the vast crowd was remarkable, lasting for two hours.

The far-reaching influence of these services may be understood by the fact that during the meeting, Mr. Cook was spoken to voluntarily by five Swedish friends (one an officer in the army), four Frenchmen, and a Spaniard.

Mr. Cook writes:—"We have been encouraged in the past thirty-one years of meeting in Hyde Park, by seeing some represented in the converts; and trust it may please God to add to the number this year, and give us at least one convert from different nations for as many years as we have toiled here. Parsees, Mohammedans, and others, are constantly seen in the crowd, and the last convert I dealt with was a Colonial from New Zealand, who had heard Dr. Harry Guinness there only a month or two ago.

"On Wednesday week we had a remarkable week-night service near the Marble Arch, when a very large crowd—principally men—listened to a solemn appeal on the importance of deciding for the Lord Jesus Christ in relation to eternity.

"There are many indications that recent public events have fallen out for the furtherance of the Gospel, and that the people are more willing to acknowledge God. There is 'an hearing ear;' and if such effort is continued to attract and hold the masses, the Gospel will, as ever, prove the power of God unto salvation.

"May I thank the readers of THE CHRISTIAN for their help in past years, and seek their fellowship and prayers as we continue our thirty-first year in these services for God and for souls, supplemented as they are by the meetings in the Metropolitan Theatre and Hyde Park Hall? Our small hall, which is close to the Park, is in need of cleaning and repairs, and any help would be gratefully received." Mr. Cook's address is, 11, Walpole Gardens, Chiswick, W.

Oxford Notes.

ARRANGEMENTS are being made to hold a conference for ministers in Oxford from September 1 to 5. Rev. R. J. Campbell, M.A., of Brighton (himself a graduate of Oxford), is to preside. The idea of the Conference is to help ministers in preaching and pastoral work.

Great regret is manifest in Oxford over the death of the venerable Dr. Chase, Principal of St. Mary Hall. Matriculating as far back as 1838, he was appointed Principal of the Hall in 1857. Widely read in all literature, he was one of the most familiar figures in Oxford. He heard the famous sermon of Newman, in St. Mary's Church, on the "Parting of Friends." He was eighty-two years of age, and the last Principal of St. Mary Hall, which now passes into Oriel College.

The Ocean of His Love.

I LAUNCHED my boat upon an ocean wide—
My soul upon the love of Him who died
And ever lives—but feared to trust the tide
That swept me on beyond the sight of shore;
Clung home and furled my sails, nor plied my oar;
Home I could see, and could not trust Him more.
But night has darkened all the land to me,
And storms my craft have beaten out to sea—
Thy sea, my God! Whom have I left but Thee?
Thy storms have severed all I loved behind,
Thy night upon my landscape made me blind
To all but Thee; and now my boat I find
Afloat upon the bosom of Thy love.
Quick-oared, thro' every storm and calm I move
To where Thine ocean meets Thy sky above.

Quaint Texts from Queer Places.

By Mr. CHARLES COOK.

THIS ESTABLISHMENT — IS UNDER —
ENTIRELY NEW MANAGEMENT.

I WAS glad to see it, for there was reason and room for it. It was a city restaurant, and bad at that; and I had more than once wasted twenty minutes waiting for my dinner. We had objected before to having yesterday's joint served up as "just cooked," and fried plaice passed off as "Dover brill," and we were right glad to see the above bill in the window.

But what an improvement! An energetic manager, whose eye seemed everywhere; a neat and clean waiter, whose deft hands brought the order within three minutes! Well, my friends and I were all delighted, and certainly the new management was a splendid success.

When we take the right step in life, and declare ourselves servants of Christ, resting on His finished work for salvation, we come under the power and sway of the Spirit, the Lord of Life, "for it is God which worketh in us to will and to do of His good pleasure."

How often one hears the words, "I could not continue," or "I should not hold out." Reader, is this your thought? Let not this trouble you. "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creation." "The Spirit of the Lord will come upon thee, and thou shalt be turned into another man" (1 Sam. x. 6). He will live in you, and dwell in you, and enable you to glorify God by a consistent, holy life. Accept the Lord Jesus Christ as your justification, rest in His work which is outside of yourself, and then yield yourself to the Holy Spirit for your sanctification, who will be in you—and you will understand the meaning of our text — "Under entirely new management."

Before I was converted I was passionately fond of dancing, and my friends asked me, after my conversion, "Do you not now wish to go to a dance?" I replied, "My heart dances now, and I have no desire for my feet to dance." "Oh, it's not natural," said they. "You are right!" was my reply, "it's spiritual." I was, and have been since, "under entirely new management."

NO ADMITTANCE EXCEPT ON BUSINESS.

IT was on the door of a large hoarding in front of the new bank in course of erection. Sounds of hammering could be heard, men were busy running to and fro, and everybody concerned seemed "up to the neck in work." What a good thing it would be if such a notice could be exhibited on the doors of the Church of God, for our Lord has given "to every man his work;" but, alas! some folks look upon the church as an infirmary rather than a workshop. The Lord is building His temple from stones gathered from Nature's quarry, and polishing and fitting them into their places, and "the labourers are few." The need is great; millions in our city alone are careless and indifferent, and never was there a time when men with messages were more urgently required.

A fatal distinction is sometimes drawn between "Christians" and "Christian workers." Every Christian should be a worker. "Ye shall be My witnesses," is our Master's mandate.

A Bishop once asked a returned missionary, "How many missionaries have you now on your station?" "Three thousand," was the reply. "I did not ask you how many converts you had," said the Bishop, "but how many missionaries?" "I quite understood your lordship;" and again I reply, "Three thousand, for all our converts are missionaries."

If all Christians were workers, what results, under God, might we not expect! Does an English prince need to cry, "Wake up, England"? So we need to hear our Prince of Life cry, "Awake, thou that sleepest!"

Are we, as Britons, in danger of "go-ahead" America shrewdly taking our biggest businesses from our city and from our shores, whilst slow-going old-fashioned England looks on, and wonders "What next!"? Oh, let the energy displayed by the great Transatlantic nation shame us, as workers, into launching out into wholesale schemes to boom the old, old Gospel!

Brethren, do we not see that the enemy is busy with the souls of men, whilst we are idling or "losing time" in the great business of winning souls? Many of us seem to be "out of work," or "on strike," or "pensioned off"! Surely we who are now "under entirely new management," should seek to "do and dare" in the service of our new Master.

"If any will not work, neither should he eat." It is said that, in a certain German workhouse, if the inmates will not work, they are put in a large cage, and suspended over the table in the dining-room. All they get is the smell of the dinner! Surely all who are privileged to sit at the Father's table should be willing to obey His injunction, "Son, go work in My vineyard."

Watch for souls, for men are dying,
They are hurrying to the grave
Without a thought about the future
Or the Christ who came to save.
Watch for souls, for Satan blinds them
As he lures them on to hell;
If they're lost they're lost for ever;
Oh, that loss!—Ah! who can tell?

Josephiana.

THE chapters in Genesis embodying Joseph's romantic history, as recently dealt with in "Day by Day," were radiant with gems of thought from "F. B. M." I can only supplement them with some homely commonplaces, but there have been borne in upon me very forcibly two or three teachings from that marvellous life that I would fain share with the readers of The Christian.

I. PARENTS AND CHILDREN.

In God's school of life He is always the Head Master, and has often to set right in very startling fashion the inadvertences and omissions of His subordinate teachers. Jacob was one of these—as all parents are. To him there was committed for training, in addition to his coarser-fibred elder sons, a child peculiarly fitted for a unique destiny.

Physical charm, mental acuteness, a disposition of extraordinary sweetness and high moral purpose, were among his characteristics; and Jacob, had his spiritual vision been keener, might have discerned, in all these rare endowments, a call of God to high service. But the foolish old man, instead of further emphasizing that call, did his best—or worst—to spoil the lad.

The many-hued coat was but typical of a course of false tenderness that would inevitably have made its wearer effeminate, in addition to its immediate consequence of creating bitter jealousy among the elder brothers at such flagrant partiality. The Head Master had to interfere in a manner that seemed hopelessly cruel, and the pupil was removed from these enervating influences to a sterner but far more salutary discipline.

Let fond parents take heed lest, by unwise indulgence, they prepare some very trying tonic treatment for the children whom they alternately pray for and spoil. Some of us older people look back on what would now be sneeringly called a "Puritan" training, and oh, how we thank God for the braced nerve and toughened, developed sinew, that early lessons on duty, as grander and more imperative than pleasure, have, to some extent, wrought within us.

II. FALSE CONCLUSIONS.

We see the danger of being guided solely by circumstantial evidence. We who are behind the scenes, and "have seen the end of the Lord," almost smile at poor Jacob's dogmatic conclusions. "Joseph is, without doubt, torn in pieces." "Joseph is not, and Simeon is not . . . all these things are against me!" "I shall go down to the grave mourning."

And all the time the wheel of Providence was carrying Joseph to the very zenith of human greatness; Simeon—though enduring a little salutary discipline, which was much needed by his rough nature—was alive and well; and Jacob's last years were spent in the gorgeous sunset splendour of loving filial care and domestic comfort. Let us take care how we doubt God. When He has said to us, as He did to Jacob, "I will surely do thee good," let us be very chary of pronouncing hasty judgments on His dealings, however mysterious they may be. He is His own interpreter, and He will make them plain.

III. STEADFAST, UNMOVABLE.

As to Joseph himself, the central figure in this thrilling drama, we almost hold our breath in admiration at his majestic repose and endurance, his uncomplaining dignity and deportment, in circumstances that would have driven an ordinary man to madness. Surely his is one of the sublimest instances on record of a man, young in years, suddenly cast forth from a most sheltered home life into the very teeth of fierce trial and temptation, calmly "resting in the Lord, and waiting patiently for Him." And, as the outcome of this steadfast faith in God, what skill in duty and adaptation to circumstance, whether in Potiphar's house or in the dungeon, in his initial interview with the King, or in his organization of the most colossal scheme of finance and national preservation!

In the parts he had to play, as a special providence to his brethren, there was certainly an appearance of temporary sternness; but it only serves as a lovely type of our Divine Joseph's disciplinary dealings; for throughout it all there is clearly manifested a heart of tenderest love. And as our last glimpse of him reveals his filial devotion to his dead father, and his magnanimity to his repentant brethren, we can only say, with a hush of awed feeling, "Take him for all in all, we ne'er shall look upon his like again!" Is there not a lesson here for any to whom life brings sore stress and trial? What energy is often wasted in complaint! Shall we not rather learn to suffer and be strong? As the athlete courts resistance and glories in endurance for the sake of physical development, let us, spiritual gymnasts, regard the crosses of life as lessons from God.

IV. "BEYOND ALL WE ASK OR THINK."

Out of the thoughts that crowd to our pen from this magnificent story, space restricts us to the mention of only one other. "When fully He this work hath wrought that caused our needless fear," our heavenly Father always proves Himself better, not merely than our fears, but than our most sanguine hopes. "I had not thought to see thy face, and, lo, God hath also showed me thy seed!"

No wonder that Jacob was ashamed of his narrow thoughts of God when thus standing by the river of His broad, loving will! And has it not thus happened over and over again with us, when dire forebodings have been exchanged for songs of deliverance, and, instead of "grey hairs brought in sorrow to the grave," we have been loaded with benefits and crowned with loving-kindness? From a Beloved Invalid.

NEARING home is very sweet—the meeting of the Revival friends. Quite a few of us are on tiptoe listening for the Master's voice.

While waiting the home-call, the "cheer-ups" are of daily occurrence. Young men and women tell of the blessing of the Lord resting upon their work.

Let us have more love among Christians, and more nights of prayer among the children of God. Then will our songs be all praise and blessing.

THE LATE

Rev. Dr. Barnes, of Folkestone

By Rev. J. B. FIGGIS, M.A.

THE late Dr. Barnes, of Folkestone, came of a family many of whom were officers in the army. But he chose the scholastic profession, and graduated at Cambridge. He was a cousin of the Hon. and Rev. Talbot Rice.

It is said of the man healed through Peter and John that he was "above forty years of age when this miracle of healing was shown." Just about that age was Dr. Barnes when God met him, and turned his face toward heaven. The vicar of St. Paul's, Southsea, Rev. W. H. Denovan, was preaching on the words, "Roll ye away the stone." Dr. Barnes, who was present, was deeply impressed. In the night God's Spirit told him to get out of bed and pray; he had not prayed for years. At first he would not listen, but the Holy Spirit would not let him go. At last he yielded, and then he found he could not pray. After a time he threw his arms across the bed, and sobbed, "God be merciful to me a sinner;" and all at once, he said, he felt that every sin had been forgiven; such a sense of relief came.

Great was the surprise next morning when he was found reading the Bible. He did not put it away when his wife went in, but told her what had passed between him and God. A lady, informed of what had taken place, said, "I knew I should live to hear him preach Christ"—she had prayed for him for twenty years with unwavering faith. Asked to give an address to the inmates of a Home which this lady superintended, he did so with fear and trembling, but with marked impression.
